an eight-room building in the Second district; an eight-room building in the Sixth district; an eight-room building in the Fifteenth district; a twelve-room building in the Sixteenth district; a twelve-room building in the Nineteenth district; a twelve-room building in the Twentieth district; a twelve-room building to accommodate jointly the Eighth and Thirteenth districts; a four-room addition to the Eleventh district school, and an eight-room building for the old eleventh and Twenty-first districts, on about twelfth East street. This schedule was estimated to cost $501,000. Reckoning all available assets, a deficit of about $100,000 was apparent, which it was supposed might be made up from the sale of unused and abandoned sites. But it is evident that such sales cannot be made to advantage at this time, and a considerable debt faces us on this account, unless the people shall be willing to vote more bonds. I recommend under this head great caution in the letting of contracts, that the board may get all possible accommodations for its money and that the public burdens be kept to the lowest limit. I do not wish to be understood, however, as hinting at an abandonment or curtailment of the building programme adopted. On the contrary, knowing that this programme was formulated after the most painstaking endeavor to cut the expenditure to the least amount that could be made with any sort of fairness and heed to the absolute needs of the school population (double the sum, in fact, should be spent almost immediately, and there would yet lack a complete supply of pressing needs), I earnestly recommend that the buildings estimated be all constructed, with the least possible delay consistent with good construction.

THE SCHOOLS.

The enrollment of pupils and the average attendance of the schools within in the city were as follows for the past year compared with the year previous:

	1901.	1902.	Increase.
Total enrollment.....	6320	7718	1398
Average attendance.....	3315	4058	1453

This is gratifying increase, which will be yet further aided to, no doubt, the ensuing year, with the occupancy of the new schools in process of construction and yet to be contracted for. A word of commendation is due the superintendent and the teachers who have worked with him in the schools. He has been diligent, faithful and expert in his duties. He has treated all openly and with fairness. His aim has been solely, the betterment of the schools; he has labored with an eye single to that end, and I congratulate the board on the justification of its judgment in electing him. The teachers have been intelligent and earnest co-workers in all the plans for the advancement of the school; they have not spared themselves in forceful labor, taking much time aside from their school hours proper in meetings, in preparations, and in assistance to pupils.

There are yet some titles to old school district property not secured by the Board. I recommend that no further delay be had in this matter, and that the remaining old district school sites be secured to the Board, as contemplated by law, and as consummated in the case of most of the old school district properties. Thanking you in my own behalf and in the name of this city school district for your excellent work in a position which has yielded no remuneration to any member, I close this, the second annual report of the President of the Board of education for the City of Salt Lake.

R. N. BASKIN,
President Board of Education.

NEW BUILDINGS.

To meet this growth there are already in process of construction some eight or ten new buildings, which in their approach to the highest demands of modern school architecture will not be surpassed in this country. Upon the completion of these buildings, it is not unreasonable to expect a larger renewed accession of pupils from those who are now attending private schools, where the attendance is not so large as to be a source of dissatisfaction to patrons.

HIGH SCHOOL.

The high school has experienced a steady growth in numbers and influence. When it is remembered that this department is but a little more than one year old at the present time, and that in the city there are about ten other schools doing, in part, the same work, the present enrolment of 103 in the public high school is certainly a creditable showing.

The value to the school system of a strong, efficient high school cannot be over-estimated. In furnishing an incentive to good work in lower grades, it is invaluable. In affording a reasonable complete elementary education in the department of English and foreign languages, history and sciences, it is the necessary consummation of the work of the grammar schools. In fitting the young people of the community for intelligent business life, or for the higher studies of the college and university, it is the crowning feature, the cap-stone of our municipal educational system, without which the whole would be shapeless and incomplete.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

Before concluding this report I beg to offer certain recommendations, the adoption of which will, I am convinced, enhance the interests of the schools.

First.—That at the earliest practicable date, physical culture be introduced into our curriculum as a regular class exercise. In some rooms where sufficient space can be had for it teachers are already doing some work in this direction; but under present conditions very little can be accomplished, and that in an unsystematic way. That the importance of the subject is great should need no further proof than that seen a hundred times a day in the round-shouldered, narrow-chested, near-sighted boys and girls who walk the streets to and from school, without grace of carriage or elasticity of movement. In growing youth injurious results which arise from attitudes more or less constrained and from enforced quiet can be prevented only by exercises carefully adapted to this end. Many of the so-called cathectic drills seen in schools are worse than profane. I have therefore no hesitation in saying that I believe the importance of this subject to warrant the special attention of the board as soon as needed space can be had.

Second.—I desire to recommend the purchase of small reference libraries for use in the various schools. At comparatively small expense it is possible to beget in our pupils the habit of searching good books for information and entertainment and to arouse in them an interest in literature which will prove to be one of the most valuable acquisitions made during their school career.

Third.—Before the day appointed for the planting of trees under the designation of Arbor day, I hope that our new buildings and grounds will have been placed in such condition as to make possible the observance of this custom.

Fourth.—In view of the rapid growth of the high school and the great demand on the part of the grades now located in the Fourteenth building for all the space that can possibly be used for class room, I should consider it wise to begin soon the planning of a permanent building for the high school. Our enrolment next year in that department will unquestionably reach 250; a number large enough to rightfully claim a building of its own. The continued prosperity of the high school demands therefore that this subject be given careful consideration and that action be taken promptly.

The school system is new and it would be unwise to proceed with undue haste in the matter of engraving upon it too large a number of new features, excellent in themselves. Under this class belong such enterprises as public kindergartens, manual training departments, commercial schools and so forth. These additions to the work of the schools must be delayed until matters of more immediate importance can be given opportunity for more complete development.

CONCLUSION.

In closing my second annual report of the schools, I wish to again express my thanks to the members of the board of education for their unfailing courtesy and generous encouragement; to the principals and teachers for their cordial co-operation in all efforts to promote the welfare of the schools; and to the friends of education in general for the interest shown in all the enterprises which have been undertaken and the work which has been done.

The report was placed on file without reading.

HEATING AND VENTILATING.

The committee on sites and buildings reported that they recommended the Hendy & Myers Engineering Company be given contracts for heating and ventilating of the following buildings: Addition to Bryant school, $2,300; Lincoln school, $2,400; Jackson school, $3,225; Washington school, $3,200; Lowell school, $3,200. The company asks no compensation for their work until it is proved to be satisfactory. The lowest bidders were James Spencer-Bateman company, but want one-half the price as the work progresses.

Mr. Pike moved to postpone for one week for the following reasons:

First.—That said Hendy & Myers Engineering company had not furnished plans and specifications as required by the committee.

Second.—That the proposals of said company are indefinite and unsatisfactory.

Third.—That the purported plans remained with the board only a few days and are now in the hands of the agent and not in the custody of the board.

Fourth.—That the committee had no opportunity to discuss which of the two competitive systems is the best.

Fifth.—That the difference in cost is more imaginary than real.

Sixth.—That the cost of operating one system will more than outbalance any additional cost of first construction.

Seventh.—That the plans submitted propose to bring the air into the Ninth and Twentieth buildings through the stone steps and solid rock wall which I do not deem practicable.

Eighth.—That where the main air ducts are conducted into the basement there will not be sufficient head room left.

Ninth.—That the plant will take up without providing any means for the escape of foul air.

Pike's motion was voted down.

Mr. Young then moved that the Lowell building be accepted, and Mr. Pike moved to also to accept the Sixteenth and Nineteenth ward school buildings.

Mr. Pike's amendment was lost.

Mr. Young's motion was adopted by a vote of 5 to 4.

The adoption of the report as amended was then voted down, 7 to 2.

The committee also recommended that the contract for the erection and completion of the Washington school be awarded to F. M. Wright, whose bid was $6,500.

Three other recommendations were that the old house on the Isaac site be sold for $60; that the Hooper building be rented at $100 per month, provided no charge be made for July and August; that the request of the committee of the county court, asking for the use of the school house on August 15th, for the purpose of holding an election, be denied.

The recommendations were concurred in.

The committee also reported on bids received for the erection of the Jackson school building. The following were the bids:

A. Henegren$45,975
William Lister44,660
F. M. Wright48,000
W. H. Jay48,800
H. F. Redfield49,975
Salt Lake Building and Manufacturing company50,005

The committee asked for one week's further time.

Mr. Newman moved that the bid be awarded to Mr. Lister.

Mr. Ballin moved the contract be let to the lowest bidder, provided the committee found the bidmen reliable. This motion was carried.

The committee on sites and buildings made its report for the year ending June 30. It shows:

Sites purchased and buildings$ 71,994 21
Funds available686,191 65
Out of which has been paid140,741 91
Leaving a balance545,449 74
Of this amount the following sums have been expended77,151 54
Contracts entered into470,197 48

This is $33,745.84 more money than is available.

The financial committee's report was read and placed on file. It showed:

Total receipts$106,444 33
Disbursements163,310 05
Estimated revenue$245,591 84
Estimated expenditures229,000 00

Leaving a balance of$ 6,206 84

The clerk was ordered to ask the county clerk and the city auditor for totals of the assessment rolls of 1890 and 1891, in order that the board may have data essential to the correct checking up of the accounts.

The committee on school work reported the number of pupils in the city of school age, 10,039, and 7715 of these were enrolled, with an average attendance of 4968. There are forty-one school buildings, of which twenty-three are rented; 27 teachers, 21 principals and two instructors in the night schools.

THE JUAB STAKE.

Since the 18th of July I have employed my time in visiting the different settlements in the Juab Stake of Zion in the interest of Church history. I attended the quarterly conference in Nephi on the 18th and 17th inst. and subsequently, in connection with President Wm. Paxman, held special meetings in Levan, Mona and Eureka.

The Juab Stake of Zion embraces all of Juab county, Utah, and consists of five organizer wards and two branches. The wards are: Nephi First or South ward, presided over by Bishop Wm. H. Warner; Nephi Second or North ward, with Thomas H. G. Parkes as Bishop; Levan ward, with Bishop N. P. Rasmussen at the head of affairs; Mona ward, presided over by Bishop James H. Newton; and Juab ward over which Elmer Taylor presides as Bishop. The branches are at Eureka and Wellington, John Beck presiding over the first and Thomas Ozell over the last named place. The whole Stake consists of 3073 members, or 625 families, and Elder Wm. Paxman, favorably and extensively known from his successful missionary labors in Great Britain and New Zealand, is the president of the Stake; Charles Sperry, one of the first settlers of Nephi, acts as his first and James W. Paxman as his second counselor. Jacob G. Bigler, the first ordained Bishop of Nephi, and David Usseli, formerly Bishop of Nephi, Second Ward, are the Patriarchs of the Stake.

Nephi, the headquarters of the Stake and the county seat of Juab county, is beautifully situated on an elevated tract of land at the mouth of Salt Creek Canyon, and is one of the most enterprising and prosperous towns in Utah Territory south of Salt Lake City. Were it not for the limited water supply for irrigation purposes Nephi would have been a large city years ago, as there is any amount of land adjoining the settlement which could be brought under cultivation if there was only water for it. As it is, Nephi has gradually grown since its first location in 1851 until it now contains upwards of 2200 inhabitants, of whom 1977 are Latter-day Saints—nearly two-thirds of the "Mormon" population in Juab county. Of this last number the Nephi First ward contains 943 souls, or 203 members, and the Nephi Second ward 1084 souls, or 217 members. Nephi has a fine tabernacle, large enough for all local and Stake purposes, two Relief Society Halls—one in each ward—where all ward meetings are held, two more district school houses, a Church academy, a beautiful court house, a number of respectable stores, a bank, lumber yards, shops, etc., and numerous comfortable dwellings, nestling mostly in the midst of thriving orchards and shady groves. Nephi is the only place I have visited, so far, where the sisters of the Relief Society furnish houses for all the members of the respective wards to hold meetings in; and be it said to the praise of the sisters of the place that they are workers, and have been eminently successful in their labors. Sister Mary Pitchforth is the Stake President of the Relief Societies.

Levan, situated eleven miles south of Nephi, contains ninety families or 801 members of the Church, including children. Also here the sisters of the Relief Society, backed by the brethren as a matter of course, have erected a fine and commodious hall, in which the ward meetings are being held. Levan, first settled in 1888, is an outgrowth of old Chicken Creek, which dates back to 1860, but is now defunct, while Levan is growing, its water increasing and its resources being developed. Could dry farming be made a success throughout Levan and Juab valley, like it is in Malad valley (described in a former communication), hundreds of thousands of acres would be added to the limited area of country now under cultivation in this neighborhood.

Juab ward consists of sixteen families or one hundred souls, who are mostly employees on the U. P. railway at and around Juab station, which is fourteen miles southwest of Nephi and five miles of Levan. There is scarcely element enough to keep up a ward organization.

Wellington branch consists of 11 families, or 49 souls, belonging to the Church, who live in a scattered condition on or near the Sevier river above Mille Station, nine miles southwest of Juab. The place formerly belonged to Millard county and was known as Sacker Town.

Mona ward consists of the village of Mona, pleasantly situated on sloping ground at the base of Mount Nebo, which points its three snow-capped peaks heavenward immediately east of the settlement; the altitude of the north peak is about 12,000 feet above the level of the sea, and is considered the highest point in the whole Wasatch range. The people of Mona, owing to their close proximity to the grand old mountain, have more than one our less sunshine every day the year around than most of the settlements in Utah; in the middle of winter it is 9 o'clock in the forenoon before "King Sol" peeps over the lofty summit. Mona ward contains 61 families, or 309 souls, including a few scattered families living north of the town. The place is eight miles north of Nephi.

Eureka branch numbers 28 families, or 137 souls; the grown up male portion of these are mostly employed at the Bullion-Beck and Champion mine, at Eureka, a mining camp situated near the summit of that range of mountains which separates Utah from Tintic valley, or in a canyon which about a mile below the town opens out into the last named valley. The Saints in Eureka have recently built a neat and commodious meeting house, which is perched on the side hill immediately north of the Bullion-Beck and Champion hoisting works; meetings and Sunday schools are held regularly, the latter under the superintendency of Elder John O. Freckleton. Robert Gillespie and Lorenzo Fuellenbach act as counselors to President Beck, who only spends a small portion of his time at the mines. At present there are over 200 men employed at the Bullion-Beck and Champion mine, from which the output is about 3000 tons of ore per month. Dennis Sullivan, one of the ablest and most successful miners in the West, is foreman of the underground works, and Frank Y. Taylor is the general superintendent of the mine, having recently been appointed to that position. The main shaft of this renowned mine is now 930 feet deep, and for each one hundred feet there are tunnels or drifts running in all directions, some of them over two miles in length. It is estimated that there are nearly twenty miles of drifts in the mine, and about fifty shafts, or winzes, each one hundred feet deep, which connect the drifts on different levels with each other. These mines serve a double purpose, as they not only give ventilation throughout the mine, but are also a means of communication between the nine different levels. The ore is found in large bodies on all the levels, and to all appearances there are mountains of the precious metals in this mine alone, which in due course of time will find their way to the "outside" world and augment the wealth of our country. There are underground connections between the mine I have endeavored to describe and the Eureka mine, the Caroline, the Keystone and others, thus making it possible for the miners to escape, should the hoisting apparatus at any of the mines thus connected become disabled, or any other accident happen cutting off the regular communication. The Bullion-Beck and Champion ranks as one of the most profitable mines in Utah, and the present activity in Eureka is principally due to the operation of the owners of that mine. It may be worthy of note that Eureka this year for the first time in its history, honored Pioneer day by unfolding the Stars and Stripes to the breeze from a number of its most prominent business houses and hoisting works. Eureka is 84 miles by rail from Salt Lake City, and about 35 miles, via Goshen, from Nephi. There are two railroads running into it, namely, a branch of the Union Pacific and a ditto of the Rio Grande Western. The last named road was recently constructed, at a great cost, over the mountains, and represents a fine piece of engineering. In climbing the mountains it makes a number of very interesting curves, passes through three tunnels, and forms one complete loop.

ANDREW JENSON.

EUREKA, Juab County, Utah, July 25, 1892.

"LIBERALISM."

About one hundred and thirty persons attended the law and order meeting in the Wasatch Hall last night. Of that number not a few were saloon men.

Ex-Councilman Hall called the meeting to order and nominated A. F. Colton as chairman. That gentleman was unanimously elected and came forward and spoke as follows: I am in hearty sympathy with the object of this meeting. No one who has children can feel a lack of interest in such a gathering. We are not here to ask the enactment of more or stronger laws but to demand the enforcement of those already on the statute books passed there by men in authority many years ago and which have met the approval of all good citizens during that time. Again I say enforcement of the law is all we ask.

Mr. A. L. Graves was elected secretary of the meeting and read the call of the meeting, which was as follows:

The undersigned, citizens of Salt Lake City, and heartily in favor of the vigorous enforcement of our municipal laws, hereby invite their fellow citizens who are legal voters and who are in sympathy with the law-enforcing policy of our worthy mayor and chief of police, to join in a citizens' meeting on Monday evening, August 1, at 8 o'clock, in Wasatch hall (former Federal court room), to take such steps as patriotism and duty may require in backing up our city government in the work of enforcing the laws against gambling and the illegal liquor traffic.

L. E. HALL.

I am somewhat interested in this called meeting. My home is here; I have property and a family here who

I love as my life. When traveling away from this city and when I place my name upon a hotel register, I do so with the just and conscious pride that I come from a city with a fair reputation. It has been asked, what necessity exists for calling such a meeting. To that I will say, the necessity is great. It is to sympathize with those officers who have done and are doing their duty. The same thing has been done in commemoration of meritorious deeds of the heroes of battles. It takes brave men to act as Mayor Baskin and Chief Paul have done, and we want to honor them in the heroic course. It is said that the Liberal party will lose 500 or 600 votes by certain members of that party taking the position they have with reference to the saloon man. Individually I care nothing for that. I think more of law and order. (Applause.) Good ordinances were long ago put on the statute books by men who owned the property of this city and who had all their interests here. To me it does not make the slightest difference what a man's political or other faith may be. I care not whether he is a Liberal Democrat or Republican. He has a perfect right to demand that the law should be enforced. For that reason I want to see representative men of all these parties express themselves here tonight. It seems that some kind of an agreement has been made by the Liberal party with the saloon men; they seem to have some kind of a string on us which they seem prompt to pull when it suits their purpose best. It has brought and is bringing shame and disgrace upon us; I denounce it as the unhonored of alliances and refuse to be a party to any disreputable scheme. (Applause.)

I cherish the Sunday of my forefathers with a reverence that is all sacred. It is a day of rest and worship. It is the poor man's day. The rich man can rest when he pleases. We work six days for the rest and quiet promised on the seventh. On that day above all others the law should be enforced, and criminals given to understand that they must obey the law or leave our midst, or be taken care of at government expense. It is a bad thing for so many of our men to squander their hard earned means in saloons on Sunday—money that should go to the support of their families. But the city licenses saloon men to do business six days in the week. To this we hold our peace, but when the seventh day is broken in upon we object. Violators of the Sunday liquor law should be taken down to the hall of justice as the criminals they are and punished according to the enormity of their offense—not as they are now by the assessment of paltry $15 fines. If the police justice does not do his duty—and he certainly does not—then remove him and fill his place by a responsible man. Let it once be known that Salt Lake City is the Mecca of thieves, tramps, gamblers, prostitutes and vagabonds, those elements will flock into our midst to carry on their lawless traffic. I say as our has said before, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." We must awake to the seriousness of the situation in our city. We have families to raise here. As for me, under the present system I am alarmed. I feel that one of our Main street gambling houses can and will, if the opportunity is offered, undo all that I have done for my boys in endeavoring to rear them in the paths of rectitude and right. I realize, too, that in one of those dens of evil on Franklin and other avenues, all the virtue and purity instilled by the mother of my children into our daughters can be destroyed in a single night. I tell you such a spectacle is a horrifying one. It is our duty to prepare to meet it. Criminals must be driven from the city. The mayor and chief of police are doing their duty, but it will be easier for them if they know good men approved of their actions. We have votes as well as the saloon men. (A voice. But you'll vote for the saloon man's friend at the next election.) We must act as sentinels all along the line of the law. (Applause.)

moved that a committee of three be appointed to embody in resolutions the sentiments of the meeting and the chair appointed Dr. H. C. W. Croxson and Walter Lyon as such committee, and they withdrew from the hall to prepare the resolutions.

MR. SHORT

a saloon keeper took the floor and after considerable effort succeeded in being recognized by the chair, after which he introduced himself as one of the "titillating vendors of distilled damnation." He said I will bear with my brothers in the conguity of crimes without any fear of the law. Of course we (ironically) are champions of crime, ignorance and depravity; we are the embodiment of all evil and the opposite to all that is good. Vindicate your mayor and chief of police. We will not object to that; it may do them some good and it won't hurt us. I am willing to live by the law and within the law. All that I ask as a first class rum seller is that I be given protection. That is all any of us ask who are willing to obey the Sunday law. Chief Paul says that he will close all the saloons Sunday, but let me tell you, friends, he doesn't do it. Mayor Baskin says he is in favor of all saloons suspending business on the same day, but his favoritism is shown by allowing some saloonkeepers to carry on business on that day and compelling others to shut up shop. I proclaim to you this is not fair. I pay $1,200 a year to sell to you; I have done so for five years and when the officers arise up on Sunday I always close. I am in for a square deal, treat us all alike and I am with you. The hotels sell liquor on Sunday unmolested. Everybody knows that. Justice, gentlemen, and all will be O.K. But if you do not do what is right in this matter then understand I will sell liquor on Sunday.

W. S. EARLS.

I think the chances for Mr. Short closing on Sunday are good. While walking along Second South street west a few days ago I saw a beautiful picture in the show window of a saloon. I never wanted to be an artist so bad in my life as when I beheld that painting entitled the "Jury of the plains." It showed a band of majestic buffalo gathered around the fallen remains of a hunter with an arrow in his heart. Oh how I wished I could paint a companion picture equal to it, and show the thousands of human wrecks made by saloon men of their fellow beings. In bold letters I would then ask the question on the same canvas: "Who slew thee?" We do not ask the saloon man to close his shop all the time, but we want him to obey the law. A man who broke the law was not long in asking protection from the law when an officer broke in his door. If it is determined that the officer broke the law we, of course, will have to punish him. In the Y. M. C. A. rooms on Sunday, I have heard the clink of glasses and heard the revelry of drunken men on the floor below many times. Intemperate men amble in and out without the slightest regard for decency. Let the police justice be a man and do his duty.

MORE TALK.

Rev. B. F. Clay wanted the meeting to say that it would stand by the chief of police; that it would stand by these officials that the law be enforced, cost what it may. If this man, who is a saloon keeper, believes in the law, he should lend his moral support to the enforcement of the law. The saloon keepers have only asked to sell liquor six days in the week; why in the name of reason should they ask for it for seven days in the week? (Applause.) Why is it that any of these men should ask that the laws be trampled under their feet on Sunday? I think the city authorities should see that the men who do close on Sunday are protected from those who violate the law. We want the city officials to understand that when they become violators of the law by failing to enforce the law, we will vote them out of office. So help me God I will never help a man back to office who has betrayed his trust, for I cannot do so without becoming partner of his crime. (Applause.) Even the calling of this meeting has had its good effect. We cannot afford for the good reputation and character of this city, to allow anything of this kind. All we ask is the enforcement of the law and these men will come to see that it is better for their reputation to obey the law.

A PERTINENT QUESTION.

A voice from the audience asked: "I should like to know what you intend to do with the Alta and Union clubs who constantly break the Sunday liquor law and which are two of the greatest drinking and gambling institutions in the city?"

HALL'S REPLY.

Mr. L. E. Hall immediately responded: "I understand that the barbers of this city have a union for their own protection. If a non-union man or other barbers do business on Sunday, the matter is at once reported by the union and the transgressor prosecuted. Now, I also understand that the liquor men of this city have some kind of a protective association. My advice to them is, do as the barbers do; employ a detective to watch the Alta and Union clubs on Sunday and when violations of the law are discovered prosecute the offenders.

was loudly called for and came forward and spoke as follows: I am a plain blunt man and say plain blunt things. (Applause.) I always strike things from the shoulder. (Applause.) It is said the "Liberal" party was brought into existence because it wanted to enforce law; and that it still exists for the same purpose. Shall it go down to posterity that the "Liberal" party are authors and abettors to crime and lawlessness? Were I a member of that party I would say: "Hurl back the reproach that is fast coming upon it." (Applause.) It is said that four years ago (I was not here then,) no saloons were permitted to do business here on Sunday, and we should see that they are as hermetically sealed now.

The speaker then spoke glowingly about a mastodon back bone that the Mayor does not in reality possess. He said, "No such a back bone was ever made by the Homestead workmen in Pennsylvania. I wish that a surgical operation could be successfully performed on his honor the Mayor, and a piece of his back bone extracted and grafted into the flimsy and limping spinal column of the half-hearted police judge. (Great applause and laughter.) What we want is to enforce the law against "Mormon" and "Liberal" alike. Make no distinction in favor of the saloon man, gambler and hide up. If the police judge doesn't do his duty, cut him from office.

REV. M'NIECE.

I agree perfectly with what Mr. Anderson said. "The Liberals have no excuse, unless they stand up by two such efficient officers as Mayor Baikin and Chief of Police Paul. We have men in the Mayor's office and at the head of the police force who are antagonized by members of the City Council. When a member of the saloon power comes here and says he is in favor of closing the saloon on Sunday I think the members of the City Council should be ashamed of themselves. What a farce it is to have men arrested and have a petty fine of $15. I will not take my words back because I see the police justice here. I want to say here that I will endeavor to bury the Liberal party beyond the pale of the resurrection if it continues to perpetuate itself with the liquor element." Applause.

THE RESOLUTION.

The secretary then read the resolutions as follows, which were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The present city government was placed in power by a party which was organized for the express purpose of securing the enforcement of the law, and

Whereas, There is a strong tendency to set at defiance at the present time some of our most important municipal laws, we join in the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we hereby express our hearty approval and appreciation of the brave and faithful efforts of Mayor Baikin, Captain Samuel Paul and such members of the City Council as are in sympathy with them in securing the enforcement of the laws against gambling, social immorality and the illegal traffic in liquor. That we pledge to them our support in their noble work of securing for us a well-governed city, in whose reputation we can take just pride.

Resolved, That we hereby call upon the members of the City Council to do their duty by so using the power lodged in their possession as to strengthen the hands of the mayor and chief of police in the work of enforcing the laws; and to this end we call upon the Council to remove from the important position of police justice a man who virtually offers a bribe to law-breakers through the imposition of such trifling fines as to make his administration of justice a public farce.

Resolved, That we remind the members of the City Council that it is just in proportion as they are active and united in enforcing the laws that they can secure the confidence and support of law-abiding citizens.

Resolved, That we hereby appeal to the City Council to revoke the license of any saloon keeper who violates the statutes by selling liquor to those of illegal age, and by keeping open on Sunday.

Resolved, That we call upon the members of the City Council to be prompt in using the resources of the city in the defense of any municipal officer who is involved in litigation as the result of performing his sworn duty to the government and the people.

TO THE CITY COUNCIL.

On motion of Dr. McNiece the same committee was appointed to wait upon and present the resolutions to the City Council at its meeting to-night.

DR. HILFF.

Dr. Hilff was called for and said that it was not a pleasurable thing to do to take issue with our neighbors and men who have been our friends for many years. "Indeed, I suspect some of you think I have been too much interested in the Liberal party which is responsible for the administration. I want to remind you as I was an American citizen long before I was a minister of the gospel, and as far as convictions go I feel that it is my duty to break with a party that champions the cause of the saloon man. I will be slow to believe that this party in its leadership wants to go in with the worst interests of this city. Only two years ago we said that the Liberal party can render odious those who live by the violation of the law; to uphold virtue and charity. That is the doctrine that I was willing to stand by, and I cannot any longer as a Christian citizen be held by it unless it holds by its original declarations. The fight is on." And it looks as if every citizen of Salt Lake should stand by God and home and country forever.

Adjourned.

BENARES, the religious center of all India since many generations before Christ, is described as a city which bears the same relation to Hinduism (or Buddhism) that Bethlehem did and does to Christendom. Its origin can not, it is said, be traced by man; it was occupied by hundreds of thousands of people over six centuries before our Christian era.

THE case against Bannon and Policeman Carson, of this city, investigated by Commissioner Greenman, is one of the most revolting of its class in the annals of crime. The Commissioner did exactly right in holding the defendants to the grand jury. The reasoning of the court on the evidence was clear and logical, and the facts elicited, in our opinion, would not have warranted any other conclusion and action than those arrived at. Should the trial result in establishing the guilt of the accused, surely no person who has a spark of interest in the protection of society from moral monsters will object if the extreme penalty of the law shall be imposed.

THE LAW AND ORDER MOVEMENT.

UNFORTUNATELY the law and order meeting held in Wasatch Hall last night was comparatively small. There were less than two hundred people present. The gathering was entirely out of proportion with the importance of the subject.

Those who issued the call were, as we pointed out last evening, largely responsible for the limited character of the assemblage. They confined the invitation to one class of the people—"legal voters." The resolutions passed by the meeting would have had more potency had they been adopted by a larger and more generally representative body of the people. This meagre aspect of the movement was entirely unnecessary, as the great bulk of the inhabitants of this city are in hearty sympathy with the subject, upon which should be brought to bear all the popular strength available.

In the speeches that were made, as well as the resolutions adopted by the meeting, it was asserted that the Mayor and Chief of Police had taken a decided stand against three conspicuous evils that have increased alarmingly in the community during the last few years—illegal liquor traffic, gambling, and social immorality.

For the cause of the people named among these officials have emphatically declared themselves and have taken steps to enforce the ordinances in reference to it. On reflection, it occurs to us, however, that neither of them has taken a stand against the other two demoralizing conditions, either by special declaration or enforcement of the laws. We think that these gentlemen ought to have credit for what they do, and no more. It is their duty, so far as their power extends, to enforce the ordinances of the city against all classes of law-breakers.

In connection with the attempts made to enforce the laws in relation to illegal liquor traffic, the meeting did the proper thing in placing an important portion of responsibility upon the City Council. The Mayor and the Chief of Police and his aids are comparatively powerless to correct the wrong if, when lawbreakers are arrested, a police justice blocks the way by inflicting nominal fines, enabling the sal on men to conduct their trade on Sundays, in defiance of law, at a clear profit after satisfying the trifling penalties imposed by the magistrate who tries their cases. If the Council shall permit an official to retain his position who thus perpetrates a parody on justice, that body will virtually give encouragement to habitual breakers of the law. The prerogative in the removal of the police justice referred to in the resolution lies with the Council.

The call for last night's meeting was issued, we believe, exclusively by members of the "Liberal" party, and most of the speakers belonged to that political body. Many of those who have affiliated with it are necessarily humiliated and chagrined at the lawless record it has made since it assumed control of the municipal government in the spring of 1890.

Broad hints were expressed by speakers last night in relation to contracts which had been entered into between party managers on one side and saloon men and gamblers on the other, under which the "parties of the second part" were, in consideration of political support, to be allowed to break the laws with impunity. The speakers might just as well have come out in terms more flat-footed on that part of the subject, as everybody conversant with the local situation here knew what was meant. It is more than likely that the combination consisting of these contracting parties will be heard from soon in some shape if the determination to enforce the laws is followed up by practical work. And those officials who insist on doing their duty will not have a peaceful time.

It is gratifying to note that some of the better class of members of the "Liberal" party are exercised over the demoralized condition of the city, brought about by the action of the same organization who are not so respectable—to state it mildly. The latter, however, constitute a strong contingent. Take the gamblers and the saloon element out of the party and no intelligent person believes for a moment that it could, by any possibility, hold together for twenty-four hours. Unfortunately that class hold the bulk of power of the organization—the greater number of votes. This being the case, the prospect of inaugurating what Mayor Baskin called "a clean administration," is somewhat remote.

The situation is anomalous, because if the bulk of the party support lawlessness and vice, which has been proved to be a fact, the more respectable portion of the party is necessarily controlled by that element. More than that, by their continued allegiance to the party they virtually sustain the situation against which they indignantly proclaim. Any other view than this is illogical and absurd.

SHOWING HIMSELF UP.

If anything were lacking to show up what kind of person is the "Liberal" boss, it was furnished in the exposure made by Attorney Critchlow in the Parsons vs. Nelson libel suit, particulars of which will be found elsewhere in this paper. For once the sleek and evil-like Powers found himself in a strait from which he could not wiggle out, and subjected to a scorching such as he delights in inflicting upon others. He was positively stumped for an answer, and so had to "take his medicine" without talking back or attempting an excuse.

The entire manner of conducting the defense in this case is characteristic of the man. First he suggests a transfer to another court, then he pleads that the transfer is illegal and states that it was done at the suggestion of the court. Next he tries to compel the County Attorney—for obvious reasons, to conduct the case, and furnishes to the Tribune, which he is defending, the letter he wrote to the County Attorney. Then he objects to the conduct of the case by an attorney well known to be experienced in prosecuting, and files into tantrums when it appears that the gentleman has been duly and legally appointed. Whatever may be the issue in the case, the manner in which the defense has been carried on will furnish one more illustration of the unscrupulous methods of the attorney, who rules the faction that is running its head against the rapidly approaching force which is to give liberty to Utah. And it all helps to show him at his real weight, size and value. The people are taking notes.

A RELIC OF BARBARISM.

It is to be hoped that Private Tams of the Pennsylvania militia will gain his case for damages against the officers who had him tied up by the thumbs and one side of his head shaved, besides inflicting upon him other personal indignities. In expressing this wish, we have no sympathy with him in the offence he committed. It was bad enough for him to express endorsement of the murderous attack on Manager Frick, especially as he was one of the soldiers called out for the maintenance of law and order. But we consider the conduct of the officers who inflicted the brutal punishment much worse than his. Justice ought to be done in this case and cruel officers be taught a lesson which would be of benefit to their subordinates.

Public opinion has had the effect of abolishing many of the barbaric methods by which discipline used to be maintained in the army. The cat-o'-nine-tails has been cast aside with the thumbcrew and the rack, the straight-jacket and the branding-iron. The stocks is an obsolete penalty, and so is the pillory and the cart-tail lash. But the vindictive and cruel spirit which invented the instruments of human torture and suggested brute force as the proper means of correction, still exists and crops out on board ship and in the army.

The men who serve in the ranks, whether it be in the army of workers or in the army of fighters, have rights which must be protected. The spirit which prompts the Fricks to force laborers to their terms, and the Hawkins and Streator's to maltreat soldiers is the genius of barbarism and oppression. It ought to be banished from this land in this century. If law is violated, let the law be executed. If military law permits such penalties as that inflicted upon Tams, it ought to be repealed. And if it does not, the brutes who used their official authority in such a manner ought to be cashiered as well as mulcted in heavy damages. And if they acted within the limits of military dictation, it was contrary to humanity, justice and right, and they ought to learn a lesson in civilization and the rights of man.

THE ELECTION IN ALABAMA.

POLITICIANS have been, for some time, looking forward to the election which came off yesterday in Alabama. All the State officers from Governor to Constable were elected. The situation there was somewhat complicated. The straight Democratic ticket on the one hand, was antagonized on the other by a fusion of recalcitrant Democrats—People's party men and Republicans. The disaffected state that in yesterday's election color lines cut no figure. Numbers of Africans voted for Jones, the regular Democratic nominee. It is conceded that Jones is elected by at least 20,000 majority. Gen. Weaver might as well omit Alabama from his list of People's party certainties.

In contrasting yesterday's election with former ones, it is observed that it is not all a victory for Governor Jones and his party. In 1890 he received an aggregate of 189,910 votes for Governor of Alabama. His opponent Long, on the Republican ticket received only 42,440, while the Prohibition candidate, Coulton, received 1880. From the figures we see that Jones in 1890 received a plurality of 97,470 votes over the Republican candidate. This year he received only 20,000 over the fusion candidate, Kolb. In addition to this, color lines are partly abolished. This proves that conditions are changing in Alabama. In 1888 Cleveland's plurality over Harrison was 61,123. November will tell something different.

North Carolina is another State that is occasioning much alarm to Northern Democrats. Cleveland carried the State in 1888 by a majority of 18,000 out of a total vote of 285,512. Fowler, the Democratic candidate for Governor, carried the State by 12,000 over his Republican antagonist, Docherty. It is conceded by all that this is the stronghold of the People's party in the South. But it is admitted that it has no chance of carrying the State, though it is working aggressively. Just at present a fusion seems imminent between the Republicans and Populists. If this should be effected, Democrats concede North Carolina to the fusionists. In the event of this fusion not taking place, the Democrats assert that the Populists will gain nothing but that they will probably throw the State to the Republicans.

A SCHEME TO SETTLE THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

As a settlement of the liquor problem, perhaps the most moral proposition comes from the city of Sioux Falls, South Dakota. In that burgh the city council recommends, with a dissenting voice, that the municipality own, operate, and regulate the saloons within its limits. The proposition as outlined by the councilmen is, that the saloon business be made a department of the city government, to be presided over by a superintendent, who will be held responsible for the proper working of this bureau. Under the guidance of this official, a saloon will be opened in each ward, and placed in charge of bartenders hired by him, who will become city employees the same as policemen, or waterworks officials. Beer will be sold at five cents a glass, but whisky will be retailed at twenty-five cents a drink, and it is possible that the drink will be measured by the bartender. The idea in thus discriminating is to discourage the drinking of ardent liquors and divert the taste to what is deemed a less harmful liquid.

It appears that this scheme is being received by the general public without opposition. Even the saloonkeepers do not antagonize it. South Dakota has a strong prohibition element in its population. Perhaps the people are willing to see the project carried into practice by way of experiment. However we view it as improper and something outside of the functions of government national or municipal.

IT SMACKS OF HUMBUG.

PLAIN, blunt people who think actions speak louder than words and do not look upon all that glitters as gold, make some caustic remarks about the verbal endorsement of the Mayor's course by certain preachers who helped the party of liquor and lust to gain control of this city. It does look funny to see ministers of religion paw the air, and shout that they will never support men who support Sunday liquor selling and other evils, and remember all the time that they joined in supporting those very men at the polls, knowing just as well as they do now, that they were pledged to do all they could in favor of it. The whole manner of the alleged protest against local lawlessness and encouragement of the Mayor conveys the idea of insincerity and buncombe. Talking one way on the platform and voting the other way at the polls may be satisfactory to some sectarian consciences, but it does not pull the wool over the eyes of the discerning public. Humbug is the word that lingers on many lips in comment on the ministerial protest.

"SALARIED HORSES."

MR. HARVEY, city watermaster and Mr. Hines, supervisor of streets, have each applied for a dollar a day—which means $30 a month—for a horse and buggy. The Council did not seem, last night, to be in favor of providing salaries for any more horses belonging to municipal officers. The people pay more than enough money now for that purpose. Doubtless Mr. Hines and Mr. Harvey have as much claim in this line as others who are now sporting around in buggies at the popular expense, but this does not make the matter right in any case. According to statements made by members of the Council, the salaried horse expense account ought to be cut down and should by no means be augmented. We will see what the committee to which the applications of the supervisor and watermaster were referred will say when it shall report upon the subject.

THERE are said to be 25,000 idle workmen in Chicago.

CANON LLOYD ON BETTING.

A FEW weeks ago an article appeared in this journal which commented deprecatingly upon the fact of the leading business houses of this city closing on a special day to enable employees and others to attend a horse-race. We took the position that such a public demonstration in favor of horse-racing would have the effect of giving an impetus to that sport and its committeants that would be injurious, because they were spreading all over the Territory—even the smaller settlements being affected—without any special incentive, such as the holiday incident, being necessary. What we mean by the committeants of horse-racing is betting, or gambling, evil associations and other conditions liable to influence young people especially in the direction of wrong.

The position taken in the article in question was, to our knowledge, heartily endorsed by numbers of good people who are not in unison with the popular trend in the direction of pleasure-seeking and the evils associated with some phases of that pursuit. One of that class has kindly handed us an English newspaper containing a synopsis of an address recently delivered in the city of London by Canon Lloyd, Vicar of Newcastle, on the subject "Why should men not bet." The gentleman handed in the paper because he observed that the Canon's views were in line with those expressed in this journal. We quote from the report of the address:

"Why did men bet, he asked? Was it not to get money out of their neighbor, and to get money out of their neighbor's ignorance, an ignorance that was no shame to him, and a little bit of knowledge which was no credit to them. But they might say it was all fair play. His neighbor wanted to get his money, and he wanted to get his neighbor's. Well, was that an honorable position for Christians? Where was there any noble feeling in the transaction of a bet? Where was the consciousness, after the miserable transaction was over, of having done one little iota of good to a brother? The man who bets was nothing better than a covetous animal, and a man who was utterly regardless of his brother's interests. The old apple woman on the race-course was a bet or person than the gambler there, because she gave money's worth for the money given to her, but the bookmaker did not give value. They might say they did not bet merely for the sake of the money they laid down. Now he considered that that was all 'waddle. Why, if that was the case, did they not bet with tables, or even stones? Then there were those who said that horse racing and betting improved the breed of horses. This again was utter nonsense. What did the great majority of those who bet know about the breed of horses? He was not going to say that horse racing in itself was wrong, but he did mean to say that since betting and gambling had entered into horse racing it had degraded what might have been an innocent and a beautiful sport, and turned the racecourse into a very pandemonium on earth. He had his fault to find with betting and gambling, quite apart from horse racing, and whatever it entered into spoiled it; it absolutely spoiled and was spoiling their old English games. One of the games that Englishmen used to be most proud of was the old-fashioned game of wrestling, but that game had gone out simply because of betting and gambling. They in New-castle used to be proud of their river, and the men who rowed on the Tyne could row with any men in England, or the world. But that was gone, and he should not be far wrong if he said that betting and gambling, which had spoiled the old-fashioned northern game of wrestling, had also spoiled their northern game of rowing. And what it had done to the racecourse, and to wrestling and rowing, it was on the high road to doing in football. They might depend upon it that, whenever betting and gambling entered into a game, it brought professionalism, and when that entered into a game they might bid good-bye to it as a game. This professional element had entered into football, and was stealing over other games, and was spoiling them."

THE PLANET MARS.

THE attention of astronomers is at present directed to the planet Mars. On the 5th of August this luminary will be only about thirty-five million miles distant from the earth. This will afford a opportunity for taking observations which it is hoped will throw new light on many subjects about which scientists are still in the dark.

One of these is the so-called canals on Mars, observed by Signor Schiaparelli fifteen years ago. He found the surface of the planet on the northern hemisphere marked with streaks, some of which measured nearly 2000 miles in length and from fifteen to twenty miles in width. They were clearly visible at the end of the winter season, as was natural enough, since the cloudy atmosphere in the winter would hide them partially or totally from our view.

In 1881 this astronomer again directed his attention to these "canals" and found that many of them were double. They had their parallel marks at some distance, although at first he had found only one. This discovery was considered very surprising and seemed at first to upset the theory that these canals are rivers on the planet. It is thought, however, that the duplication must be some optical phenomenon, and it is hoped that light will be shed on this subject during the present favorable opportunity for observation.

New discoveries are also confidently looked for. Mars presents conditions so much analogous to our own planet, that the question of its being inhabited is hardly any longer a matter of doubt. It has an atmosphere, snow-covered poles, it is supposed, volcanic energy, mountain ranges, continents and oceans, mists, rains—in brief, all conditions favorable to life.

The red y hue of Mars, which is a noteworthy characteristic of the planet, Flammarion supposes to be due to the soil, atmosphere and vegetation. Others hold that it is entirely due to the supposed fact that Mars at present is in an age of existence in which red sandstone forms the chief stratum of its continents. The apparent change of color would then be accounted for on the presence, at intervals, of mists and clouds in the atmosphere.

This planet has always been an object of interest to students of the heavenly bodies, and it will become more so as our knowledge increases regarding the nature of the conditions under which it exists.

LOT SMITH IN LIFE AND DEATH.

THE tragic death of Lot Smith startled and grieved his friends, who are numerous throughout this Territory as well as Arizona. The particulars of the event were quite meagre, the dispatches being very brief and barren of details. We have learned of some incidents in the sad affair which we believe will be interesting to our readers, and therefore print them as related by G. W. Palmer, of Farmington, a son-in-law of Lot Smith, who has recently returned from the scene of the tragedy.

A short time previous to the unfortunate event, a "Gentile" trailer came to the neighborhood of Lot Smith's residence, at Tuba, Arizona, to obtain the wool clip from the Navajos' sheep. He ingratiated himself with the Indians, and among other things told them they had as much right to the grazing lands outside their reservation as the white men had, and their sheep were as free to pasture as the white men's cattle. The Navajos, particularly the young bucks, became very saucy and brought their sheep off the reservation intruding upon the lands taken up by white settlers. This man has the reputation of having incited Indians to drive off a rancher, some time ago, that they might have a good place at which to wash and shear their sheep so that he could get the wool.

On the morning of the day when the shooting occurred, an Indian told a man named D. Claws and others, five miles from Tuba, that "my be pretty soon, Navaj kill and clear out some white men," and that they had "talked about it two days." Claws laughed at him and made fun of his threat, and he said, "we kill one white man, any how." Two hours after this, Lot Smith was shot.

It appears that the Indians had let down the bars of his pasture and turned in their sheep. Lot went on horse back to his grazing grounds and tried to turn the sheep out, but they "bunched" up and he could not succeed. He went back to the house and returned, this time having a revolver in his belt. He got off his horse and tried again to drive them out, but falling again he became angry and drawing his pistol fired twice into the flock, killing six sheep.

In a room at his a dozen Navajos, who had been riding, arose and fired at his cows, shooting five, and other Indians appeared in the hills. Lot started back home on horseback, and had just passed a point where there was a large rock, when an Indian, who had been riding upon the hill with a rifle on his shoulder and had watched for him till he passed this rock, fired from behind it, striking Lot in the back, the ball going through his body in a glancing direction. The wounded man rode on, and seeing a white man at a distance beckoned to him. The blood was running in a stream as he rode rapidly to his house. He alighted, entered, unbuttoned his belt and went into another room without a word. The man he beckoned soon arrived, and when he and the family went into the room the stricken man exclaimed, "This is the last of me." His dying words were: "God bless the wives and children!"

The older Navajos greatly deplore

the act, which has taken from them a good friend. They declare to the family that they are sorry and do not want to fight. Squaws have come to the house and cried over the death of Lot Smith and consoled with the bereaved. The deed is charged by the Navajos to the one Indian who fired the fatal shot, and the trespass and shooting of the cows to young and unruly Indians, who think they can defy the United States. But it is believed by many that there was a conspiracy among the Indians to kill Lot Smith, and that much of the feeling of recklessness and lawlessness among them is due to the pernicious influence of the wool trader referred to.

A lieutenant with a squad of soldiers came from Fort Wingate to investigate the matter. He was told by the Navajos that the Indian who did the shooting was hiding and the soldiers could not find him, but they promised that if the officer would go with them, alone, into the hills he should see and talk with the Indian. This he declined, fearing treachery. However a determination is expressed to track, arrest and try the assassin for murder.

For some weeks before his death, Lot Smith was greatly excited at intervals over small affairs, being very irritable at the slightest provocation and much disturbed over some of his financial complications. However, at other times he was unusually kind and communicative to his family. Many of his neighbors entertain for him the best of feelings, and notwithstanding this infirmity of temper, regard him as a noble man and a friend to all who stood in need. We here append a letter from C. L. Christenson, a Navajo interpreter and a missionary among the Indians for fifteen years, which he earnestly desires to be published for the satisfaction of many good people who recognized in the valiant Lot Smith much to admire and esteem:

Editor Desert News:

As a number of journals have made disparaging reference to Lot Smith, for the consolation of his family and friends I wish to say, there never was a man that held the life and liberty of man more sacred than did Lot Smith. During the Echo Cañon war Lot Smith played a brave and noble part, and did it well under the circumstances. He had instructions from President Brigham Young to "shed no blood" and not even to fire a gun unless absolutely in self defense. Lot was so prompt in carrying out this advice that several men in his charge left him and went home, they having a desire of gaining fame otherwise than according to the advice that Lot held and kept most sacred. I am conscientious before God in saying that he shed no blood while he lived, except in the defense of his rights as the U. S. Indians, during the battle near Provo City an early day, with which all are familiar who read the history of Utah.

Lot served his country in the fear of God and with good will to man in the Mormon Battalion. He has said, "I think I was the youngest man that bore arms, being only sixteen years of age, but as I was large in stature I was accepted." He gave the following account of himself, which I think worth reading:

"One day when we had marched a long distance without water, and nearly finished, we came to a dry lake at a distance, sometimes called a mirage. It looked so much like a lake of water to those who never saw one that we had full assurance of speedy relief. It no doubt had this effect, at least it stimulated us to press on, but to our horror it was only dry land, and we traveled fully six miles across this delusion and still found no water, and night had fully come." The writer does not remember whether it was a willow or willow grass that was the only sign that gave them still hope, but "digging down about eight feet," Lot said, "we found abundance to supply all our wants. After this was attended to, I was selected to go back with a keg of water on a mule to help those who had fallen by the way, who numbered quite a few. I had instructions not to give any one any water till I got back to the last man, and then I was to work back to the company, having very particular instructions how to administer this sacred, life-saving fluid. I soon met a man who was anxiously enquiring for water, distance, etc. I put him off, also the second, third and fourth, I think, but I could not go on. I could no longer stand their pleadings. I watered them all and had some left, so I had a drink when I got through a distance of twelve or fourteen miles. I was careful in giving them water, though many drank quite heartily. The Lord anointed my little keg of water with a marvelous power. For my disobedience to orders I was tied behind a wagon and made to walk in trying circumstances which rather humiliated me, but I felt I could not have done less. This was the act of a small official by the name of 'Lot.'"

When God rewards those who give the least of his children a drink of water, I think this hero will not be tied behind a wagon, and I think there are still some living now who were thus saved from death who will kindly remember him.

I have traveled hundreds of miles with this good man. If any were sick he was sympathetic and ready to help; if any were weary he was ready to rest, and if he rolled up his sleeves to lift, dig and push, if any were sick he was an expert. He was extremely fond of a good horse. When camping time came, noon or night, animals were the first to receive his attention; then meals were attended to and all must fare alike. And you would always find the camp called in order and prayer offered to God and if he himself did the praying it was an earnest, thoughtful appeal to his Heavenly Father; but he never alighted his brethren, they too must take their turn.

He was very kind, though he could not look upon the deeds of his fellow-men with that charity and forbearance that some men can. He rebuked rather sharply, being of a quick temper, or, rather, he hastily put his foot down on all manner of iniquity, and his rebukes were generally kindly received as all knew they were intended to elevate and better mankind. And this is how his friends looked upon him. His earnest desire was to have all things go right, and nothing short of this would satisfy him, hence his peculiar mode was considered and his advice generally adhered to.

The poor he never passed by unnoticed or uncared for. Feed, grain, seed, grain, flour and other provisions have been amply furnished by him to hundreds without any return. He was kind to the stranger and amply adapted to entertain them; Jew or Gentile, all were treated kindly. He was very interesting and entertaining, both in public and in private, and any one could depend upon him for sound doctrine. He was a wise man in general things, though he had not much school learning, but the book of Nature, both in regard to man and beast, and all the wonders of God were studied by him and his experience was world wide. He enjoyed life well. He had the love and the biases of a pioneer, the downs, and many sore trials, but he despised none of God's dealings, but a teacherous man was to him a loathing and the only thing I have ever known him to hate.

Brother Lot was tried sorely in the latter part of his life and none but the angels can tell this story correctly. He had his leg crushed into a pulp in a horse power, and had a whole year or more of suffering through this painful calamity. This had somewhat of a tendency to impair his once strong memory. He lost two beautiful boys in the last few years, one drowned and one scalded with lyse water till he died. An enemy of his hired a man to kill him but failed, and various and rapid were his trials.

He was a good provider and has a number of his children on a fair way to becoming thoroughly educated. He was a large man in stature, over six feet in height when in the prime of life but was not quite so tall latterly. He weighed from 320 to 350 lbs. He drank no tea nor coffee, used no tobacco and drank no liquor. While with him in St. George I have seen him refuse to drink a drop of wine with his old-time friends. He never profaned, and always rebuked those that did. However, he would sometimes wear a houseful of those who desired it to the amount of $20 to $50. He was a good frontiersman, active and ambitious and performed noble work at Sunset in the interest of the Arizona mission and its final success.

His policy toward the Indians was that of Young: "Feed them, don't fight them," and many were the good and instructive letters he received from President Young in that early day which he would read in public and always advise the people to carry them out punctiliously. Lot said at one time in my hearing: "All we feel like cursing an Indian and saying the only good Indians we ever see are released to go home." He meant all he said, and hundreds of them came down and farmed at Sunset and he was not a whit behind in showing them all about farming. He visited the different tribes often and always enquired of their welfare and asked if any of our people were intruding on their rights, often enquiring if we were welcome in their land. He was a fairly good Spanish interpreter and always gave them good advice, encouraging them to allegiance to this great Government, etc. He was kind to them, feeding them and aiding them where needed, and he stood high with the Navajo chief.

When Sunset was abandoned he moved in part to Moencoppy where he found a different stripe of Navajos, a people who know no law, a people who were not subdued by the Government at the last big battle. He lived near the Navajo settlements where live those who committed the depredations in Southern Utah and killed Whitmore and Geo. A. Smith, Jr., and stole many sheep and horses. The writer has seen many horses valued at from $100 to $250 each stolen in Utah, and came nearly losing his life for making mention of the fact at one time.

While I lived at Moencoppy eight years, I saw them let their sheep into gardens and orchards, breaking fruit trees till they died, and all we could do was only to plead with them kindly, sometimes with good effect for a time, but they did not fail, and they would steal fruit, melons, grain in the shock, corn in the field, ride on our horses, stealing the bells from their necks, the hobbles off their legs, etc., breaking the dams in our reservoirs, destroying our crops and causing the loss of our water, and a hundred other things. Brother Lot Smith pursued them this and more also, and I will assure you that Lot Smith died defending the right.

SCHOOL LAW DISCREPANCIES.

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 3, 1892.

Editor Deseret News:

Will you please help the district school trustees to get a correct understanding of the ideas conveyed in Article V, Section 30 and Article XIV, Section 147, in relation to trustees at our November election? Also Article V, Section 32, and Article 14, Section 91, in relation to calling meetings for voting and 1 bonding a school district?

We have read them over many times and fail to make them harmonious. In fact, to our mind, as well as that of some others, they conflict badly.

If you can give us any light on this subject, you will greatly oblige.

Yours truly,

There is in section 147 in Article 14 but we suppose our correspondent meant Article 18, in which appears the following:

"Sec. 147. The terms of office of all school trustees now in office, except the trustees of school districts situated within the limits of cities of first or second class, that would expire in the years 1891 and 1892, are hereby continued until the full terms of office for which they were elected have expired and their successors are elected and qualified, and the terms of office of all county superintendents now in office, are hereby continued until the expiration of the full terms of office for which they were elected have expired."

This is cited in connection or contrast with Section 30 of Article 5 which is as follows:

"Sec. 30. On the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1892, there shall be elected by the registered voters residing in each school district, except in school districts provided for in Article XV of this act, three school trustees, to serve for the term of one year, and until their successors are elected and qualified. On the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1893, and biennially thereafter, there shall be elected by the registered voters residing in each school district, except in school districts provided for in Article XV of this act, three school trustees, for the term of two years, and until their successors are elected and qualified. Said trustees shall qualify by taking and subscribing the oath of office, and giving bonds to the county in which they reside, in such sums and with such sureties as the probate judge of the county or a justice of the peace in a precinct where in some portion of said school district is situated, may approve, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of their office; said oath of office and bonds shall be filed with the clerk of the county court. The ballots used at such election shall state the names of the persons and the length of the term voted for."

There is no such discrepancy between these two sections as will render it difficult to proceed with the election. The trustees can be elected at the regular November election now provided, and the trustees who were elected under the old law whose term of office expires in July will continue to hold on until the trustees elected next November have qualified. We are of the opinion that the framers of the new law, in copying from the old law the provision for extending the term of incumbents from July to November, overlooked the figures "1891," which ought to have been expunged because they refer to a date that was past when the new law was enacted.

Let the trustees whose term expires in July, 1892, hold over until the trustees who are elected next November have qualified, and the difficulty, so far as it appears to us, will vanish. Trustees elected under the law of 1890, whose term of office does not expire this year, will, as we understand the law, go out of office next November unless re-elected.

Now as to the other discrepancy. Section 32 provides that:

"Sec. 32. Meetings for the election of trustees, for voting on the rate per cent. of taxes to be assessed, and on the question of issuing bonds, shall be called by the trustees, causing notices to be posted in at least three public and conspicuous places within the district, at least twenty days before the time for holding such meeting. Such notice shall state the time, place and object of such meeting, and if the polls are to be opened at any such meeting, to determine any question, the notice shall state the hours at which the polls will be opened and closed. All business transacted at such meeting other than that specified in said notice shall be void. The voting at such meetings shall be by ballot."

But section 91 makes these different provisions in relation to the call of a meeting to determine the question of issuing bonds:

"Sec. 91. Before the question of issuing bonds shall be submitted to vote in any school district, the trustees shall call a meeting of the voters of such district, by notices, to be posted in at least five public and conspicuous places in said district, not less than ten days before such meeting. Said notices shall state the time and place of meeting, the amount of bonds proposed to be issued and for what purpose, and the time in which they shall be made payable; the voting at such meeting shall be by ballot; all ballots deposited in favor of issuing bonds, shall have thereon the words "bonds, yes," and those opposed thereto shall have thereon the words "bonds, no;" It is a majority of the votes cast shall be in favor of issuing bonds, the trustees shall forthwith proceed to issue bonds in accordance with the vote; but if less than a majority of the votes cast are in favor of issuing bonds, there shall be no further action on the question for one year thereafter."

The mistake of the Legislature, in our opinion, was in not striking out of the general provisions about calling meetings and voting on school matters in article 5, all reference to the issuing of bonds, as special provision for this is made in article 14. But taking the two sections together and acting on the provisions of both, all difficulty may be avoided and the legality of the proceedings will be preserved. That is, let the trustees, when desiring to bond a school district, post notices in five public places, as required in section 91, and give at least twenty days' notice, as provided in section 32, and it appears to us that once more the difficulty that arises will vanish.

Of course one part of a statute should be perfectly consistent with another. Great care should be taken in the preparation and revision of the laws. And when a former statute is revamped, or a law of another Territory or State is adapted to local needs, close comparison of new provisions with the old ought to be made so that there shall be no conflict between them. However, when there is a disposition to conform to the meaning and intent of the law many ambiguities may be overcome, and apparent inconsistencies may be softened if not reconciled, and made practically subservient to the public interest. We are of the opinion that this may be done in the case under present consideration.

THAT VETO WAS RIGHT.

We endorse the action of President Harrison in vetoing the bill passed by Congress in relation to land claims. His objections to the measure were well taken. There is no need to transfer land disputes from the land office department to the courts. The latter are, as a rule, loaded up with other business. Without wishing to cast any reflection upon the judiciary, we are satisfied that the people, especially the poorer classes of them—feel safer to leave the adjustment of disputed claims in the hands of the land office, which has, of late years, been conducted efficiently and fairly. If land claim disputes were to go into the courts in place of being adjusted as at present, moneyed claimants would have opportunities to cause cases to drag their slow length along until the poorer contestants on the other side were worn out by waiting and large expenditures which they might be unable to meet. Besides all this, the land office department has to deal exclusively with land questions. Those having their attention thus centralized are much more capable of comprehending cases of this character than officials whose duties are more adverse and multifarious.

It appears that a prominent objection to the bill was the ambiguity of its terms. This is a fatal objection to any measure. Legislative acts should, above all other statements, be clear, concise and specific, that they may afford no opening or warrant for strained and diverse judicial construction.

There is no need for the change the bill was intended to create and therefore the President did a wise thing when he killed it.

TRUTH CONDENSED.

In these times of local agitation on the liquor question, the following resolution on that subject, unanimously adopted by the Young People's Baptist Union, of Detroit, Michigan, a few days ago, is appropriate reading:

"We recognize in the liquor traffic the inveterate enemy of the civilization we love and the religion we revere. It lies across the path of every reform and seeks by means foul or fair to silence the tongue and still the pen of every one in position to do it harm. It even reaches over the sacred desk and by indelible means formed in the chambers of organization more dangerous than the Mafia, attempts to throttle the voice of the pulpit. It enters the domain of civil government and seeks to besow even the chief magistracy at auction to whoever will bid the highest in subservency to it.

The liquor traffic brings poverty, degradation, death to hundreds of thousands of homes which would otherwise be happy. It blasts the lives of countless wives and children who have no hand in its perpetration. It glutts the almshouses, insane asylums and penitentiaries with those who but for its existence might be honored and self-respecting citizens. We regard it a crying disgrace of our century that the nobles of this world flatter over our homes, and that the poor are compelled to shelter and protect a business which does such infinite mischief. We hold that the true attitude for the Christian to take toward such a monstrous evil is that of uncompromising hostility, and we call upon all Christians to use their voices, influence and energies to bring about its speedy extermination."

THE HEAT IN NEW YORK.

The following from the New York World of last Sunday ought to cause the people of this part of the country to feel well satisfied with the atmospheric conditions here:

"The protracted period of excessive and violent heat has had the effect of producing the very large mortality of the week just ended, said Dr. Nagle, registrar of vital statistics, yesterday. The deaths, which numbered 1,081 for the week ending July 21, rose to 1,134 for the week ending July 30. This is 333 more than the number reported last week and 108 above the corresponding week of the year 1891, and 439 above the average of the corresponding week for the last five years. It represents an annual death rate of 40.83 per 1000 of the population, which is estimated at 1,832,475.

"This is the highest number of deaths since the memorable week in the annals of mortality of this city which ended July 6, 1872. The deaths reported reached then the astonishingly large number of 1,592.

"The deaths reported for the twenty-four hours ending at noon today averaged 47.5 per 1000 of the population. The highest daily death rate in the city was on July 3, 1872, when the total deaths were 251. The nearest that this has been approached is the number reported for today. The deaths reported Friday were 223; Thursday, 198; Wednesday, 171; Tuesday, 187, and Monday, 180.

"The extended period of hot weather has shown its effects more particularly on the little ones. Yet the adult population seems to have suffered severely from its enervating effects; this was most noticeable among those who were not in good health or those who were given to excesses.

"The number of deaths which was due directly to the effects of heat was 80. For the week of July 6, 1892 the deaths from sunstroke were 212. Probably there were 634 of the deaths for the past week accelerated by the heat or hastened by its effects when the powers of resistance of the aged and infirm had to succumb to its depressing influences.

"The sufferings of the very poor as they crowded and sweltered in their stuffy apartments in the wretched and overcrowded tenements, where they can be seen on any warm night crowded on the fire-escape trying to get a breath of fresh air, is pitiable. Their condition appears very forcibly to the more fortunate and wealthier citizens to submit.

"It is undeniable that the country is indebted for the defeat of free silver in this Congress to the straightforward course of the Republicans of the House of Representatives, who put aside everything but the question of public welfare and backed their principles with their votes. In doing this they made a record for their party which ought to strengthen it in the confidence of the people."

SAN FRANCISCO has an earthquake-proof hotel. It is constructed of iron and in the form of two hollow squares, one within the other, arranged so as to brace each other.

THE U. P. TELEGRAPHERS.

It seems tolerably clear that the railway telegraphers on the Union Pacific system will either have to submit to the existing conditions against which they have entered complaint, or leave their keys. Their committee met General Manager Dickinson, to whom they submitted a modified schedule. He refused to agree to it. They purpose now to appeal to President Clark. This will likely be useless, because, as a matter of course, Mr. Dickinson doubtless consulted with that gentleman before reaching his decision in the matter.

If the telegraphers conclude to succumb, they will not be likely to do so with a good grace, as they will, from their standpoint, work under the disadvantage of feeling that they are imposed upon. Labor performed under this condition of mind is done reluctantly and is much more exhausting than when executed in a cheerful spirit. Such a situation is against the interest of both employer and employed. A feeling of that nature could, in questions of this character, be modified, if not avoided, by a recourse to arbitration, which takes the power of decision out of the hands of the principals, thus excluding a serious cause of antagonism between them. It is a question whether or not the disputants in labor and capital controversies could be compelled by law to submit their difficulties to arbitration, as a statute of that nature might be declared antagonistic to American institutions on account of its tendency to abridge individual liberty. There is nothing in the way, however, of sensible people mutually agreeing to be governed by that civilized method of adjusting differences.

Should the telegraphers decide to strike, the situation will be another addition to the social turmoil that is keeping the country in continuous commotion. There will be the effort of the company to secure non-union telegraphers, consequent bitterness between the two classes of the profession as well as the strained feeling between employers and the previous employees, all of which ought to be avoided by any means available and consistent. The disturbance of business and public inconvenience that would necessarily ensue, and which would affect an extensive area of country, is another part of the subject of much importance. Arbitration is the only feasible means of ameliorating the situation.

SPENCER ON VERACITY.

HERBERT SPENCER, the noted English philosopher, expresses in the Popular Science Monthly for August, some thoughts on veracity. Mr. Spencer is a remarkable writer. He deals largely in assertion, which he fails to support by elaborate reasoning. This is evidently because his statements are the result of matured mental analysis, which he does not appear to think need be given to the reader. He relies upon the self-evident correctness of his averments. On this basis he seems to anticipate their unquestioned acceptance. The present article is not up to his usual standard, as he says but little, if anything, beyond what ordinarily observant and intelligent people are aware of. His opening sentence is a sweeper. Here it is: "Complete truthfulness is one of the rarest of virtues."

Such a statement as that is strikingly true if not specially comforting. If truthfulness is viewed from the standpoint of fine lines, many persons who pride themselves on their freedom from falsehood will have a little of their self-appraisal eliminated. It includes overrating a matter, for the purpose of giving it an intensity that does not belong to it, or understating in order to modify it below its real standard of importance. Then there are the cases innumerable in which people are influenced to deviate from precise truth, by personal considerations such as the desire to inflict injury; the desire to gain a material advantage; to escape punishment or other threatened evil; the desire to get favor by saying things that please. Re-asserting the idea embraced in the opening sentence, Mr. Spencer says: "In mankind at large the love of truth for truth's sake, irrespective of ends, is but little exemplified."

The writer of the article in question furnishes numerous examples of human races among whom untruthfulness was a conspicuous trait, and others—comparatively few in number—with whom telling the truth was a prominent virtue. The whole paper indicates that Mr. Spencer did not differ much from the Psalmist David when the latter said "All men are liars."

The philosopher's deduction is to the effect that untruthfulness prevails most among peoples who are subject to coercive governments. There is no system of rules that equals that of this country in its embodiment of the genius of freedom. In the face of this fact and of the inference of Mr. Spencer, the American people are credited with having ability to evade the more exact lines of truthfulness beyond most other inhabitants of our globe. Their reputation is to the effect that their ingenuity in this respect amounts to adroitness, which enables them to escape the odium which attaches to blunter departures from correctness. This tendency is so strong in the ordinary American mind that most of the humorous literature of the country is composed of pure hyperbole. It will hardly be denied that the exaggeration in earnest keeps steady pace with the disposition to magnify for fun.

This object lesson hardly comports with Mr. Spencer's theory that freedom from coercive rule, and truthfulness walk hand in hand.

To operate in unison with a high standard of personal truthfulness ought to be one of the chief objects of every man.

TWO WAYS OF LOOKING AT IT.

It is funny to see how partisan motives and feelings enter into the discussion of all public questions, whether they are in anyway related or not. A local silver mine has never been conspicuous for consistency, has endeavored to make it appear that the Democrats were responsible for the defeat of the silver bill, and has made that alleged action a reason why the Democratic party should be defeated in November. But another paper, which is strongly Republican, insists that it was the Republicans who defeated the measure, and claims this as a big feather in the cap of the Republican party and on reason why it should be successful in November. The following on this matter appeared in the Omaha Bee. (Rep.)

"Ex-Speaker Reed having claimed for the Republicans of the House of Representatives the credit of defeating free silver legislation, some papers have questioned their right to the claim, holding that the credit belongs rather to the sound money Democrats. Nobody will withhold from the latter the commendation they deserve for earnest and persistent work against free silver. They labored wisely and well through every stage of the fight the course of their convictions. But the cause which they battled could not have won without the help of the Republicans.

"When the question of considering the free silver bill was last before the House the Democrats opposed to it mustered 94 votes, while those favoring the measure numbered 117. Had the Republicans refrained from voting the Stewart bill that passed the Senate would have been considered and without the votes of Republicans against it would have passed the House.

"It is well remembered that when the question of considering the Bland bill was up in March, there was a general feeling of anxiety regarding the action to be taken by the Republicans. Many members of the party in and out of congress believed that it would be good politics for the party to allow the Democrats to make their record and give the President an opportunity to veto a free coinage bill. They might have given valid reasons for such a course, but after due deliberation it was decided to be the duty of the party to vote its convictions. The view that prevailed was that expressed by ex-Speaker Reed when he said: "What we must do is that which is best for the country, and that we stand ready to do under all circumstances." Being opposed to the free and unlimited coinage of silver because that policy would be disastrous to all interests, the Republicans of the House of Representatives manfully stood by their convictions and defeated free silver.

"Without denying, therefore, whatever credit belongs to the anti-free coinage Democrats for their sturdy fight, fair-minded men must concede that the greater share of the credit for the defeat of free silver principles, and to the publishers of the House. Had they been governed solely by considerations of political expediency; had they been disposed to let the Democrats make a record on silver regardless of the possible effect upon the financial and business affairs of the country; had they, in short, subordinated every other consideration to the of making political capital, unquestionably a free silver bill would, before this time have been in the hands of the President. But the Republican party is a party of principles. It was established, as Mr. Reed well said, for the purpose of carrying out principles, and there has never been a time in its history when it failed to respond to the call of duty or to courageously maintain its convictions of right and its judgment of what is for the best interests of the people.

THE proprietors of all theatres at Washington, D. C., have been notified by the commissioners of the District of Columbia that their houses must be fitted throughout with electric light.

PITIABLE AND CONTEMPTIBLE.

"THE DESERET NEWS is particularly vicious on certain clergy in this city because they have actively interfered in behalf of what they consider the morals of the city."

Of course that is from the Salt Lake Tribune, and of course it is utterly untrue. The person who wrote it knew he was stating a falsehood. He intended it to malign and misrepresent the DESERET NEWS, and form an excuse for pouring out a stream of slanderous matter which indicates the depravity of his heart and the bitterness and venom which are concentrated there. He has been exposed so much lately in the light thrown upon him by some of his former friends, who have helped him in need and upon whom he has turned like a viper, that it has filled him anew with such rage and mortification that he had to say something vile about someone, and after a few days rest he has returned to his favorite work of vilification of the DESERET NEWS. All we have now to say in answer to his deliberate lies is that we pity him just as much as we despise his course.

REWARDED FOR IT.

HERE is a paragraph from the Chicago Mail: "Samuel Tarwater of Ray County, aged ninety years, is paid a pension by the State of Missouri for wounds received in the Mormon war. The pension was granted by a special act of the legislature in 1841, and is just enough to keep Mr. Tarwater in fire-water—though not enough to keep him in hot water as to what use to make of it."

The "Mormon" war in Missouri consisted of murderous mobocratic assaults upon the Saints in that State. Some of the defenseless victims were assassinated, others whipped, outrages were committed upon women and children, their houses were burned, they were robbed and driven from their homes. We presume it was for taking part in this lawless and merciless business that Mr. Tarwater receives from the State a pension of $200 a year. Our opinion is that the attacking participants in the alleged "Mormon" war would have received what they deserved had they been tried and punished for their offenses against law, order, civilization and humanity.

CHOLERA MOVING WESTWARD.

ACCORDING to recent dispatches from France it is now conceded that Asiatic cholera has obtained a foothold in Paris. A family of four persons died there yesterday of cholera, and six others are known to be afflicted with the fearful malady. During the week twenty-two deaths from cholera were reported within the city limits and eleven on the confines.

The business and trade of the gay French capital are suffering seriously from the panic occasioned by the presence of the disease. It is estimated that there are at least 75,000 American tourists now in Europe. They are leaving out Paris in their round of European cities. This means a great loss to the traders of that city, because the American custom is looked for as one of the richest harvests reaped from tourist travel.

Every country in Western, Central and Southern Europe is preparing for the dreaded scourge. Quarantines are being established, sanitary regulations are being enforced, and a general cleaning up is going on. Cholera is something that is never spoken of with levity. A great European authority says: "At one o'clock you see your child as blithe as a bird; at 2 it is seized with vomiting; at 3 it is quite prostrated and almost voiceless; at 4 you fail to recognize it, and at 5 it is quiet in death."

Unlike former epidemics of this kind the origin of the present cholera affliction cannot be traced to India, and the country adjacent to the lower Ganges. The plague of today seems to have begun on the confines of Russia or in Persia. Formerly Bengal was the starting point, traveling thence into Persia, thence to China and Russia, thence into Northern and Central Europe, and finally into England and America.

The fearful epidemic of 1826 originated in Bengal, moved westward as already stated, reaching England in Oct., 1831. It spread over the British islands and in 1832 over 53,000 persons were carried off by it. Another outbreak originated in Bengal in 1840, and finally reached England, where it carried off some 56,000 persons. The first visit to the United States was in 1832. The first cases appeared in Quebec and Montreal, next in Detroit, from which place it spread over this country. There was no Fourth of July celebration that year. In 1849-50 there was a second outbreak. There have been two other visitations of the disease in this country since, but the evil effects were comparatively harmless. It is supposed that, owing to superior medical knowledge and sanitary science, a cholera scourge at the present time is denuded of its worst horrors.

A MONTANA LEGISLATOR ARRESTED

PETER BREEN, the miner now incarcerated in the Wallace (Idaho) prison, is a member of the Montana Legislature. He was brought from Montana on a requisition from the Governor of Idaho. He is charged with murder, committed during the late Coeur d'Alene troubles.

Mr. Breen is prominent as a Democratic politician in Montana. He is very popular with the laboring classes generally. He was present in Idaho during the labor excitement, but it is doubtful whether he urged the strikers to resist the authorities to the extent of murder. The labor element in Montana is inclined to espouse the People's party, and it is said that Breen was opposed to that party. It is hinted that political complications are at the bottom of Breen's arrest.

ARE there going to be some startling earthquakes in this country soon? Shocks occurred yesterday in Wisconsin and in parts of Mexico. These may be but symptomatic disturbances—forerunners of some severe convulsions.

TOMATO SEED.

THE Irrigation Age for August list has the following in reference to the best method of preserving tomato and other seeds:

"The time for saving tomato seed is about at hand, and there are always choice varieties that the gardener does not wish to lose. Tomato seed are not so easily saved as some other products, so we give a method used by many seed men. The tomatoes are sliced in an equal bulk of water and set away for two or three days to ferment. At the end of that time the seeds will all have settled at the bottom and the pulp and water can then easily be poured off. More water is added and the seeds washed till all the refuse matter has been removed. The seeds are then spread thinly on a clean cloth and put in the sun to dry. If dried by the stove the seeds become black and are more liable to stick together. Melon, cucumber and squash seed may be treated in the same manner, except it is not necessary to put the entire pulp of the melons in the water to ferment."

BRUTAL ARISTOCRATS SNUBBED.

THE rebuke administered to the Duke of Rutland, who is an aristocratic snob, by Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, is quite interesting. Rutland and party, while engaged grouse shooting, obstructed the public highway. A working man objected, and the gamekeeper knocked him down. The person assaulted appealed to the Duke's son, Lord Edward Manners, who has no more manners than a bear. The sprig of nobility told the man to go to his Satanic majesty and informed him that if he should be shot his life would be upon his own head. The workman sued Rutland and the case went in his favor. The Lord Chief Justice raised himself in the estimation of all good, consistent people when he said, for the benefit of aristocratic ruffians, that the time had gone by when the rights of the people could be trampled upon.

Many of the titled English aristocrats are polished and gentlemanly in their deportment toward all classes of people. When exceptions to this rule are encountered it is refreshing for them to be taken in hand by a man like Lord Coleridge and stingingly rebuked for their brutal conduct toward poor people. Anyhow, Lord Chief Justice Coleridge is, in heart and brain, a natural prince among men.

THE GERRYMANDER MUST GO.

THE "gerrymander" as a factor in party politics has received a severe setback within the past six months in this country. The State Supreme Court of Michigan recently decided that the apportionment for legislative districts made in 1890 was unconstitutional. A similar decision was rendered in Wisconsin a few months previous.

This "gerrymander" business—of which Utah has had a sample—was assuming such proportions that in a short time the object of the legislative and even the congressional district would have been destroyed. It began to form a feature of the tactics of party strategy. Immediately after one party obtained control of a State Legislature, a new apportionment bills was introduced. This provided for districting to the best advantage of the party in power. Little regard was paid to natural or divisional lines. Counties and even townships were sliced and shoestringed so that the party would profit. The charge cannot be laid solely to any one party. The decision in the Wisconsin case said that both the old parties were equally corrupt in this matter.

There is one measuring feature in these decisions. The Supreme Courts of both Wisconsin and Michigan are composed of Democrats and Republicans, and in both cases the decisions were unanimous. This indicates that both parties are desirous of abolishing the hated "gerrymander" by which strips of territory wholly disconnected were often joined together to make a legislative district in the interest of some party movement.

RENEWAL OF RUSSIAN ENCROACHMENT.

THE wires bring news to the effect that Russian troops have re-occupied the Pamir region as far down as Hindu Koosh, from which Col. Yancoff, of the Russian army, was compelled to retire over a year ago. The Pamir is, owing to its great height, sometimes called "the roof of the world." It is contiguous to British India, and the Russian encroachments are in line with the Muscovite intention to some time invade and conquer that country.

Previous to the late British elections this journal stated that in the event of Gladstone being successful the result would be followed by encroachments by the great powers upon British prerogatives and interest. Dispatches giving information about the latest Pamir incident state, in connection with the facts, that it is believed that in taking the step Russia is encouraged by Mr. Gladstone's recent success. Indicating the correctness of our view.

The basis of this situation lies in the fact that Lord Salisbury—who is a statesman of the Beaconfield school—believes in operating what Disraeli was wont to call "a spirited foreign policy." Besides, a Conservative government is, on general principles, much more watchful of the outside interests of the empire than is a Liberal administration. If we mistake not the near future will develop numerous incursions upon the interests of Great Britain, in the event of a Gladstonian government being established, as they can be made with comparative impunity under Liberal rule, which lends in the direction of the dissolution of the British Empire, while the effort of Conservatism is to hold it together intact. It is difficult to understand how an intelligent English patriot who is anxious to see the prestige of his country preserved can be a member of the Liberal party.

A ROBBER MET HIS MATCH.

HIGHWAY robbery is fast becoming a flourishing industry in this country. Exploits connected with this pursuit make up a formidable daily record. As a rule the article engaging in them are successful in making large hauls. Instances of their being baffled by the courage and intrepidity of proposed victims are rare. A case of that kind occurred, however, near Virginia City, Nevada, on August 2nd. The details are interesting and we therefore present them as given in a San Francisco Chronicle dispatch:

"James H. Kinkadee, superintendent of the Occidental mine, accompanied by a driver, while en route this afternoon in a buggy with $10,000 in coin to pay off the employees for the month of July, was suddenly ordered to halt at a turn in the road leading to the mine by a man wearing a black mask and a rubber coat and holding a pistol in his hand. Mr. Kinkadee had a shotgun charged with buckshot across his knees, and replied by firing at the highwayman, the charge entering the latter's right arm and disabling him. After receiving the wound the highwayman ran and was pursued by Kinkadee, who succeeded in capturing him after a race of half a mile, and brought him to town in his vehicle and placed him in the custody of the sheriff. While endeavoring to escape the highwayman discarded his rubber coat and mask, and Kinkadee discovered, on capturing him that he was one of the Occidental mill named William Hurd and aged 24 years.

"Hurd had inquired of Kinkadee a few hours previous to the attempted robbery at what time he would pay off and was told at 2 o'clock. Hurd had the sum of $100 due him for wages for July, included in the effects left by Hurd was a gunny sack double lined with canvas, evidently intended to carry away the coin he expected to secure.

"Although of medium stature and slight physique, Mr. Kinkadee has a record of being one of the gamest men in the State, which he acquired while deputy sheriff of Washoe county in 1871, when he captured, single-handed, Parsons, Gilchrist and J. H. Squires, leaders in the Verdi train robbery in that year. Prior to that event he arrested two desperadoes near Steamboat Springs for a robbery at Reno, both of whom fired at Kinkadee, without effect, and in returning the shots Kinkadee wounded one of them.

"Subsequently he captured a man at Peavine, Washoe county, charged with stealing diamonds valued at $2500 from Truckee. While seated at a dinner table the night of the arrest his prisoner leaped through an open window and was followed by Kinkadee. As the prisoner jumped into an open mine shaft and attempted to drown himself in four feet of water at the bottom, Kinkadee leaped into the shaft after the prisoner and kept the latter's head above water until both were rescued."

A PECULIAR CASE.

MISS MITCHELL of Memphis, Tenn., who murdered her friend and companion, Freda Ward, was declared insane by a jury in the Shelby county criminal court, on the 30th ult. The verdict does not absolve Miss Mitchell from trial at a future time should she be declared sane. The question at issue was her sanity at the time of the trial, not at the time she killed Miss Ward. The law prohibits the prosecution of any person not of sound mind for any offense, hence by reason of the insanity of Miss Mitchell the indictment against her for murder stands until she is pronounced sane.

The story of this remarkable case dates back to January last, when Alice Mitchell murdered her friend Freda Ward on one of the principal streets of Memphis. Both young ladies were fairly educated, and both were of good parentage. The former was twenty years of age, the latter only eighteen. The friendship between the girls originated at school. Miss Mitchell was a pronounced character, impulsive and sanguine. Miss Ward was modest, retiring and even timid. By her force of character the Mitchell girl assumed a sort of protectorate over her weaker sister. The girls became inseparable, so that at school the teacher endeavored to disrupt the association but failed.

In 1890 both girls left school, Miss Ward going home to Arkansas, and Miss Mitchell going to her father's place in Memphis. They corresponded, and the letters which passed between them savored more of the feeling and sentiment of opposite sex lovers than of two young school girls. In 1891 Alice Mitchell visited Freda Ward in Arkansas. The intimacy of school days was again renewed. Miss Ward's brother noticed the peculiar character of the Mitchell girl. He saw that she became insanely jealous when his sister conversed or joked with any male person, young or old, single or married. He spoke to his sister about the strange conduct of Miss Mitchell, and advised her to sever her association with her.

It appears that during the time of their intimacy it was agreed that they should get married. Miss Mitchell assuming the role of bridegroom. Whether the Ward girl entered into the scheme merely as a sort of romance, or in earnest, was not clearly shown. However, she accepted an engagement ring from Miss Mitchell and wore it in the usual way. This ring she subsequently returned to the donor. After the Arkansas visit the association between the girls was entirely sundered. Miss Ward, when visiting Memphis, ignored her former companion, who resented the abandonment with almost insane fury.

On January 25th last Miss Ward and her sister visited Memphis. Miss Mitchell learned of their presence in town. She took a buggy, called on a young lady named Johnson, and asked her to ride. They went towards the river, Miss Mitchell telling her that she wanted to say good-bye to the Ward girls, who were to depart on the Arkansas steamer. Miss Mitchell, when she saw the Wards, left her buggy. Drawing a razor from beneath her cloak, she attacked the girls. The sister retaliated with an umbrella, but a slash from the razor soon disabled her. Miss Mitchell then pursued Freda and catching her, struck her three times with the keen-edged weapon, laying her throat open. Miss Ward bled to death. Arrest followed.

The case attracted the wildest attention. Learned doctors of all the sciences have since written about it, and among the German medical specialists it is still a subject of curious consideration.

Ever since the time of the terrible tragedy Miss Mitchell has been in jail. During the trial nothing was developed beyond the fact that she cherished an insane love for Miss Ward, and finding that the latter did not reciprocate her love, murdered her by reason of pure jealousy and rage. Such attachments are not love but ebullitions of irrational passion and disordered sentimentality.

ABSURD CITY ORDINANCES.

THE City Council passed a sanitary ordinance last night the provisions of which are difficult to comprehend. We doubt very much if the members themselves can explain fully its meaning and intent. As it stands, it is a mass of absurdities and if carried out according to its language it will increase the evil which was suppose it is designed to remedy.

We hope the Mayor will carefully examine this ordinance before he gives it his official sanction. We need an ordinance regulating the disposition of waste matter in this city, but it should be one which every sane person can understand and with which every decent citizen can comply. We are of the opinion that it will need some modifications and corrections at least before he can consistently append to it his signature.

It is an improvement in some respects on the ridiculous thing for which it is a substitute, to which we drew attention some time ago. This city attorney is not a signal success in drafting ordinances, and either needs some assistance or a vacation.

We are informed that he privately pronounced illegal the detective ordinance, which was killed last night and which he framed for the Council. He heard it discussed but, it is said, never uttered a word officially against its legality. Another vote in its favor last night would have secured its passage. And yet, believing it to be illegal he framed it and allowed it to go upon its passage, and we are told officers as an excuse that he would draft any ordinance the Council wants whether illegal or not.

It is the duty of the City Attorney not only to frame ordinances but to act as the legal adviser of the Council, and one of the chief objects in employing him to draft bills for ordinances is to have them sound in law and consistent in language. An attorney who will frame an ordinance that is illegal, no matter by whose orders, without expressing officially his opinion as to its illegality, is a poor legal adviser and in our opinion is unfit to be a public officer.

REFUTED ITSELF ONCE MORE.

THE inconsistent and befuddled organ of the "Liberal" faction accused the DESERT NEWS of being "particularly vicious on certain clergy in this city b cause they actively interfered in behalf of what they considered the morals of the city." To this we made a brief response showing that the charge was utterly untrue. The organ now comes back with a quotation from the DESERT NEWS and asks "which is the liar?"

There is no need for us to reply; the charge and the quotation on which it was based answer the question, and show how dense as well as false the Tribune is. For once it has quoted this paper almost correctly, and in doing so has destroyed its own case.

THE DESERT NEWS has supported every movement to purify the morals of the city, whether it has been made by the officers, the clergy or the public. What we have opposed is the hypocrisy which shouts against the party of immorality on the stump, and votes for it at the polls.

The Tribune writer knew this, as is evident from his quotation of our words, and knowing it, deliberately falsified and misrepresented our endeavors, as is his almost daily custom. And in quoting from our columns he has proven his depravity and answered his own question to his own discredit.

"OUT OF ITS OWN MOUTH" AGAIN.

THE subject of free silver was thus referred to in the Tribune on Wednesday:

"We have never treated the silver question as a partisan question."

This whopper was told to evade the question of a correspondent as to the vote in the House on the Stewart bill, which, when correctly given, shows that members of each party voted against it, the greater proportion of its opponents, according to relative numbers, being Republicans. Let us put against this claim of the Tribune some of the utterances of the Tribune. In the same issue of the paper in which is the claim of unpartisanship this appears:

"The party in the majority always is, and it is right that it should be, held responsible for the passage or failure of any measure that comes up."

"With President Harrison re-elected there is possibility of having something effective done with silver."

"With Mr. Cleveland re-elected President, we do not see the slightest hope for silver for the next four years."

On Tuesday last it said:

"We have the plighted word of Grover Cleveland that if elected he will use his utmost influence to cause the taking off of the tariff from all raw material."

"We have further his repeated assertion that silver should be abolished as money altogether."

"What has any man to hope for—we mean any man in the West—in case he shall be elected?"

"What man in the West expects any help in case a Democratic President shall be elected?"

On Monday, speaking of the Stewart bill it remarked:

"We do not think the effect of it would have been good had it become a law, but no matter about that. It was killed in the House of Representatives, although it has nearly a two-thirds Democratic majority, nearly every one of whom was pledged to free silver; but they voted against it."

In the meantime President Harrison has obtained the consent of all the prominent European powers to meet in a silver conference to try to make such an adjustment of the question as shall restore silver, and just now a Democratic House is withholding the necessary appropriation for such a conference. That ought to be another inducement to cause them to vote a Republican ticket."

On Sunday it said:

"If added to that the silver conference should reach a basis of settlement whereby silver as money would be restored his [Harrison's] election would be sure."

On Saturday, June 30, it gave some quotations from the Philadelphia Record endorsing the defeat of the bill and added:

"The Record and papers of the same kind represent nine-tenths of the Democratic party in the Eastern States."

On Friday, June 29, it charged

"Not one kindly word regarding silver has been spoken by Mr. Cleveland in eight years."

"There has never been a word spoken by President Harrison looking to the repudiation of silver."

Now if these statements—which are only samples out of scores and scores which we could reproduce if necessary—do not treat the silver question as a partisan question, what do they signify? It is true that the paper that uttered them has stated that "the silver question is not a partisan question." But in the very next breath it has endeavored to show that one party and its candidates are the enemies of silver, and that the other party and its candidates are the friends of silver.

We do not care to take up the question of the correctness of the statements of fact contained in the above quotations. We do not want to defend one party or attack the other. But we cite these discordant sayings to show that the Tribune will say one thing today and deny it tomorrow, and that it is unreliable and reckless, and unpossessed of that good memory which the class to which it belongs ought certainly to have and cultivate.

FULFILLMENT OF PROPHECY.

THE condition of affairs on our earth is becoming more and more critical. The times are perilous. The Saints should observe the signs, according to the admonitions of the revelations given to the Church. To do this they must keep themselves informed regarding current events, and compare the record of them with the predictions of the prophets relating to the conditions that were to be precursory of the coming of Christ.

Those who become absorbed in the things of the world, the pursuit of riches and attendant cares, are not likely to be fully alive to the importance of the times in which we live. These who treat life as a perpetual joke by devoting themselves to earthly pleasures are still less likely to view the realities of our period from the standpoint of what has been revealed from the Almighty concerning them.

If the observant course recommended be pursued, those who take it will readily see how powerfully the claims of Joseph Smith to having been raised up and inspired of God for a divine purpose are sustained by the present situation of human affairs. Through him came light into the world concerning the future. His prophecies are more or less verified by every existing condition, whether it be moral, social, terrestrial or atmospheric.

He gave to the world the Book of Mormon, a history of God's dealings with the ancient peoples who inhabited the American Continent. It not only contains a record of the past, but many predictions of prophets relating to our day. Although these prophecies are not the direct utterances of Joseph Smith, they were brought to light through his agency, and therefore prove the genuine character of his mission. One of the most prominent of the Book of Mormon prophets was Nephi, son of Lehi, the head of the colony of people who left Jerusalem 600 years before Christ, came to this continent and established themselves upon this favored land. Nephi was a great man, having strong characteristics, one of which was the plainness of his speech. He made many prophecies in relation to our times, knowing that the record would come forth in the latter days for the benefit of all who should receive it. He depicted the present situation of the world in the following succinct and unmistakable language, as recorded on page 113:

"But, behold, in the last days, or in the days of the Gentiles; yea, behold all the nations of the Gentiles, and also the Jews both those who shall come upon this land, and those who shall be upon other lands; yea, even upon all the lands of the earth; behold they will be drunken with iniquity, and all manner of abominations."

"And when that day shall come, they shall be visited of the Lord of Hosts, with thunder, and with earthquake, and with great noise, and with storm, and with tempest, and with the flame of devouring fire."

No one will deny the correctness of Nephi's delineation of the moral situation of the inhabitants of the world, without respect to nationality. Such a denial would be useless, because the daily record of crime of the most horrible character, and embracing every known phase of it, proves the faithfulness of the appalling picture. That the most abominable offenses against the laws of God and man are increasing alarmingly is a fact that can be easily demonstrated by the process of comparison. If the insane race for wealth, pleasure and power be thrown in, it will be seen how clearly are the words of the prophet fulfilled—"They will be drunken with iniquity and all manner of abominations."

The prophecy embodied in the quotation is multum in parvo, being a striking illustration of condensation. A number of elemental disturbances are named. They were to be, in our times, conspicuous for frequency and intensity. It not there would have been no special point in naming them in connection with the peculiar conditions of the latter days. Thunder is first on Nephi's list of visitations in this particular prophecy. Accounts comedily from all parts of the earth giving descriptions of thunderstorms unprecedented in the regions where they occur. The reverberations are depicted as deafening and terrorizing, while the accompanying lightning is not only intensely vivid, but frequently destructive of human life and property, it being the means of setting buildings on fire, and performing many eccentric operations.

Earthquakes accompanied by great noises, as if the earth were groaning, are more or less frequent and exceedingly destructive, the latest being that recorded in the dispatches as having destroyed a town in Mexico.

The frequency and destructive character of storms and tempests is a matter of remark in the public journals. The situation is such that in some places, where they are especially common, the people are kept to some extent in a condition of dread. It is nonsense to say cavalierly that such things have always been and are therefore but a continuation of what has occurred in the past. Where is there the information that would justify an assertion to the effect that such atmospheric disturbances have ever been as prevalent as now? Take our own loved country as an example. In some parts of it, so often have tempests and storms of great violence and destructive force appeared—almost annihilating towns and villages—that storm-cellars have become a part of residential architecture. This provision of means of refuge in connection with dwelling houses has been almost unknown until within the last few years. In connection with this subject it may not be amiss to mention a fact of which we have been informed. When the Elders of the Church go out into the world, a part of their proclamation is to warn the people of coming calamities. In some parts of the Southern States, where districts have been visited by terrorizing storms, numbers of the people, not connected with the Church, have sought out the Elders so they could be near them at such times, believing that they would thus be safe from injury during the elemental war. As an object lesson in relation to the prevalence of storms in the present period, we need only refer no further back than to the tempestuous condition of the oceans—notably the Atlantic—during last winter.

The last of the visitations named by Nephi in the prophecy quoted in this article is that of "the flame of devouring fire." It is only useful in this branch of the subject to direct attention to the daily record, which is appalling. Numbers of towns and cities are being practically swept out of existence by the devouring element in the various countries of our globe. As stated some time since in the press dispatches, the question was recently raised, in a meeting of insurance people held in Liverpool, whether it was advisable for European companies to operate in the United States, where fires increased with such phenomenal rapidity during the last few years that the American business had been conducted at a loss.

There are many predictions of the Prophets, especially those of Joseph Smith, which relate to the present time that are receiving a literal verification in the present condition of the world, but this article has extended already to greater length than was intended. Consequently, further treatment of this subject must be deferred. There is enough to show to the Salate, at least, that the days in which we live are momentous.

CONGRESS ADJOURNS.

THE first session of the Fifty-Second Congress came to a close at 11 o'clock last evening. After a long fight an appropriation of $2,500,000 was made for the World's Fair at Chicago. The session will not figure in history as one remarkable for any large and important legislation. Perhaps the bill which attracted most attention was the Chinese Exclusion measure, the full text of which was published in these columns at the time of its passage. The other bills of note passed during the session just closed are the Human Registry bill, the Blackhawk and Seminole Wars Pension bill, the Eight Hour bill, the Army Nurse bill, the Intermediate Pension bill, the bill to increase the pay of members of the life-saving service, and the bill enabling the President to enforce reciprocity canal arrangements with Canada.

The great topics of the time were free silver coinage, the tariff, and dealing in options. Nothing has been done in either. Measures relating to all three were killed. Next to these in importance were retrenchment in appropriations and the World's Fair bill. As to retrenchment there does not seem to have been any reforms effected in that line. And as to the World's Fair bill, Congress can hardly be censured for its reluctance to pass that measure. When Chicago was selected, a distinct and emphatic assurance was given by the people of Illinois that Congress would not be asked for any aid beyond the funds necessary for Federal exhibits.

The total number of bills and joint resolutions introduced in the House was nearly 10,000 and in the Senate 3804. The House passed 475 bills, 284 of which passed the Senate and went to the President. The Senate passed 681 bills, 113 of which passed the House and went to the President, who vetoed two of them, namely the McGarraban claim bill and the bill to amend the Court of Appeals Act. The President permitted three bills to become law without his signature.

Of the measures passed by the House 151 were private pension bills, 48 to remove charges of desertion, and 41 private bills of a miscellaneous character. Only about 220 measures of a really public nature were passed, and a number of these related to the District of Columbia, so that out of the 10,000 bills and joint resolutions introduced in the House only about 200 measures relating to the Nation at large were passed.

MARS, AT HIS NEAREST POINT TO THE EARTH TODAY.

E. M. CONVERSE, in the Boston Herald, has the following in relation to Mars, now the prevailing topic both for astronomers and newspaperers:

"Mars is morning star until Aug. 4, and then evening star. He stands foremost on the August 1st; for his grand opposition with the sun occurs on the 4th at 1h. 21m. A. M. The ruddy planet then rises in the southeast just as the sun sets in the northwest. He looks down from the meridian at midnight, and continues to be visible until his light is quenched in the glow of the approaching sun. Nothing more can be said to draw attention to the favorable conditions for observing our celestial neighbor when circumstances bring him comparatively near to the terrestrial domain, or to the importance of making the most of the opportunity for the closest examination of his surface.

"Southern astronomers see him to better advantage, but northern astronomers have larger telescopes. Time will determine where the greater honors will be won. Every one will earnestly wish that the sky may be free from clouds and the atmosphere clear and pure when Mars, marvelous in size and brilliant in color, bends low in the heavens and invites a closer view of the features that diversity his surface, and bring into service the highest physical and mental powers of observers who long to know more of this interesting planet, and some of whom are imaginative enough even to hope for proof of the existence of a malicious life.

"Mars at opposition on the 4th is 35,000,000 miles from the earth. He comes nearer on the 6th, when he is 34,900,000 miles away. The distance between the two planets increases after the 6th. As in July, he was approaching the earth and growing larger and more brilliant, so in August he will be receding and decreasing in size and lustre.

"He nearly reaches perihelion in the present month, which will give August observers an advantage. Mars is retrograding or moving westward, as those who carefully note his path in the heavens may easily see.

"The right ascension of Mars on the 1st is 21h. 25m., his declination is 23 deg. 20m south, his diameter is 5.2 sec., and he is in the constellation Capricornus.

"Mars rises on the 1st at 7h. 41m. p.m. On the 31st he sets at 2h. 16m. a.m."

A VALUABLE TRAIN.

A DISPATCH from San Francisco states that $60,000,000 in gold is on the way across the continent, loaded in five cars, and guarded by fifty-one men armed with Winchester rifles. At first sight it seems rather a foolish idea to publish to the world that so much wealth is now in transit through the Rocky Mountain region. It is a bid to the lawless and desperate. Trains are wrecked nowadays because they are supposed to contain treasures.

This transfer of the precious metal from the Pacific to the Atlantic means something in the financial world. The steamships which sailed last week from New York carried away $4,000,000 in gold. And yet the balance of trade in favor of the United States is enormous. Eastern banks tried to prevent the draw, but they failed. The gold-ites claim that the agitation relating to free silver has a demoralizing effect on American securities held in Europe, and that they are being sold by nervous holders. The free silver men, on the other hand, attribute it to the mono-metallic standard in this country. It seems strange that gold should be leaving this country in such vast quantities with a balance of trade of over $200,000,000 in our favor for the past ten months.

COLONEL PARKER'S LECTURE ON: "THE CHILD."

An audience of not less than 7000 people assembled at the Tabernacle August 7th to listen to Colonel Francis Parker, of the Cook county school of Chicago, lecture upon the subject of "The Child." He was listened to with the profoundest attention from first to last. There were present on the stand President Angus M. Cannon, Counselor Charles W. Penrose, Professors Maeser and Talmage, Bishop W. B. Preston, Bishop Elias Morris, Elders B. H. Roberts and W. B. Dugall. The ladies on the stand were: Mrs. Colonel Parker, Zina D. Young, Sarah N. Kimball, Emmeline B. Wells, M. Isabella Horne, Dr. R. B. Pratt, Mrs. W. B. Dugall and Mrs. Talmage.

The meeting was presided over by President Angus M. Cannon.

"The choir sang 'Light and truth, the world is waking.'"

Prayer was offered by Dr. Karl G. Maeser, after which the choir sang the anthem: "God of Israel, thy Lord is our Redeemer."

Colonel Parker, who was introduced by President Angus M. Cannon, said the child was the sunshine of the world. This generation owed the little one an everlasting debt of gratitude. That debt could only be liquidated by properly educating these little lumps of flesh who were constantly breathing life and singing immortality. They were the fruit of the past and the seed of the future. Philosophers of all ages had asked the question "What is the child?" The query had never yet been answered and he would not more than partially attempt to do so now. Suffice it to say the child was a natural born savage—not a regular barbarian, but a savage, because it loved what the savage loved. As soon as it was old enough it wanted a bow and arrow; it longed for tents and wigwams and would dig caves into the earth. When a child he had done so himself on the banks of the picturesque Merrimac, and with his toy weapons he defied the fleets of the world to bombard the crude castle where he reigned as king. One of the greatest stories for children was Robinson Crusoe. The narrative of the desert island and the savage life to youthful ears was always pleasant. Again, like the savage, the child loved the myth and the fairy tale. How often in fancy it had peopled the invisible world with inhabitants that never existed. Some people say that children should be told nothing but facts. This was a mistake. They should be given proper food for fancy and imagination. Myths were not lies but beautiful truths. By means of myths the savage when he looked at the stars, moon and sun learned more of God. Myths had ever been the shining pathway that led from this earth to heaven. The child should not be robbed of the fairy tales of youth. Every child loved nature; every child loved flowers. A good farm was the best primary school ever invented. Knowledge was power. The child should not be denied the strength it can acquire from knowledge. When we would come to know children better we would treat them better. Light, honesty and truth were ever beaming from their inspiring and glowing countenances. We should not crush their natural aspirations.

The speaker had a theory that there were no really bad boys. There were bad men and they frequently spoiled good toys. He accepted the parable of the lost sheep as being all truth. Ninety-nine boys out of a hundred were all right. It was the one hundredth that should be saved. This done all the world would be well. The mistake was too often made in attempting to save the child with the dry husks of knowledge which found no response in the soul—and that when the world was full of love.

This universe was the expression of God's thought, and when a child turned to nature he asked God for a knowledge of His laws that he might obey them. What was nature? Those of us who had lived the last fifty years little knew what it had done for man. More had been accomplished for humanity during that period than in all the centuries preceding it. When a child turned his eyes upon the flowers or upon the moon he was asking the Father for knowledge that was his by heritage. No one could study these great valleys set like emeralds in the tops of the mountains without bowing in sincerest admiration for the one who sculptured them from nature.

There was no such thing as a natural born lazy child. It only became indolent as the parents would persist in doing for it what it should do for itself. Every child was a born worker. One of the greatest sins of the day was laziness. The desire of getting something for nothing was spreading with alarming rapidity. The erstwhile curse upon man, "By the sweat of thy brow thou shalt earn thy bread," was his greatest blessing. The college bred student was too often a useless ornament, good for nothing but to have clothes on. A practical education was the only one of great value and benefit. The thinking and working scholars of the day almost invariably came from the farm and workshop.

The speaker then paid a glowing tribute to the sincerity and intelligence of the teachers and students he had met at the late Institute at Provo. He said: Last winter myself and wife and another person were invited to come to Utah and hold an institute at Provo. We came and I am glad of it. Let me say right here that we met five hundred of the shrewdest thinkers, most earnest and intelligent teachers and students that I have ever seen in the United States and I have held a great many institutes in my day. We were astonished beyond measure. What is the cause of this intensity of purpose and concert of action? I will tell you. It is because the people who came to this Territory had a terrible struggle for existence and surmounting all trials they turned this bleak waste into a veritable paradise and transmitted the love of industry to the present generation. From such an experience and school will come the greatest mental giants on earth. Don't neglect manual training. No people can become great without it.

Education costs money but it will fill the banks of eternal life with imperishable treasure. The best book on earth from which the mother can teach her child is the New Testament. The choir sang "Zion prospers, all is well."

Mrs. Parker was to have followed her husband on a dissertation on "Dress Reform," but owing to the lateness of the hour she announced that she had decided to postpone her lecture for a future date, and if satisfactory arrangements could be made she would probably deliver it within the next two weeks.

The choir sang "By Babylon's Wares," and the meeting was brought to a close by Elder B. H. Roberts pronouncing the benediction.

CITY OF MEXICO, Aug. 9.—The board of health a Vera Cruz telegraphed here yesterday in relation to the yellow fever scare in that city that there has not been five cases of the malady all told.

HUNTING THE PICTUREQUE.

Nine hours from Salt Lake City via the Utah and Northern brings you to Market Lake, the meanest place on earth for mosquitoes. Lucky are you if you are provided with netting to protect yourself from the pests, the smallest and most persistent bores that ever afflicted humanity. Get away from this point in the night if you can, or very early in the morning. A rough and tumble hotel will take care of you for the night if you have to stay and do not want anything to eat. It is, however, mosquito proof, which is worth the trifling charge for a good bed. Market Lake station is a short distance from Idaho Falls, and is located on Snake River. It may yet be a place of importance if the mosquitoes permit.

The traveler who has not visited the north country for the last few years will be amazed at the immense strides in the opening and settling of the country along the line of the railroad. Miles and miles of gigantic ditches are constructed to irrigate the land bordering Snake river. Ere long the one barren stretch known as the Snake river valley will teem with hundreds of towns and villages; irrigation is doing its mighty work, and the silt in this region will never fail, for Snake river is one of the largest, deepest, and most turbid of our western rivers and draws its supply from an immense water shed, from lofty peaks, chilling glaciers and snowy reserves of unknown depth, in mountain chasms as yet unexplored by man.

The distance from Market Lake to Rexburg is twenty-two miles, part of the way over lava beds and deep sand. On the way you cross Snake river on a very well constructed bridge. Grass abounds everywhere, and where ever the hand of man has turned in the water, fine crops of heavy grain are seen. It is six miles from the bridge to Rexburg and the whole country on each side of the road is under cultivation. Ditch digging has been reduced to a science, but the immense amount of work necessary to construct them shows the labor of the pioneer to be no child's play. A long, weary wait, awaits the man willing to open up a new country. A good deal of self denial must be practiced; hard work and hard fare are the stepping stones to the royal independence of a pioneer farmer.

Rexburg is a scattering town with a post office and four or five stores, and is the centre of an immense farming region along the banks of Snake river. I should judge the elevation to be a little over 5000 feet. Tomatoes ripen, and other tender plants do well. The soil is very rich, and the vegetable growth is look strong and luxuriant.

A splendid grist and saw mill is also seen, which attests the fact that the future of Rexburg is metropolitan. The next thing in order should be a woolen mill, then a foundry and machine shop and so on. The one solitary saloon is enough; no one wishes an increase of liquid death dispensatories.

What is now known as the Bannock Snake consists of thirty-two settlements. In 1832 the assessed value of property now covered with these settlements was $10,000; last year it was $1,225,000. The principal settlers are "Mormons," although there are many non-"Mormons" in the different villages. In 1832 about 6000 bushels of grain were raised; this year's estimate puts it at 750,000. These facts show the region to be well suited for the sustenance of life, although timber is a long way off, and the winters are cold and long. The hills surrounding the valleys are covered with fine bunch grass, making a splendid range for stock.

From Rexburg over rolling hills covered with fine grass, crossing Moody and Canyon creeks, the road to the bridge in the Teton Basin is 32 miles. The grand old Teton peak in the range looms up at times in their solitary grandeur. The road is excellent for a natural one. The views to the north are grand and commanding. Away to the northeast is the Yellowstone Park, while in the valley is the north fork of Snake river. At Canyon creek the settlers have been constructing a canal for the last five years to bring out the creek waters for watering the beaches around Teton city.

Herds of antelope use it to roam these hills, but they are no more to be seen; a solitary badger was all that was visible on the entire stretch of the road when I crossed it. Everybody visiting these parts has notions of hunting and fishing; very many will be disappointed. The game get out of sight and are only to be found in the unfrequented parts; the same with fish. Both Indians and white men do the work of clearing out the streams, so that fishing becomes tedious unless you go a long way. It is a grand view when you get an unobstructed view of the Teton basin. I had pictured in my mind a narrow valley with mountains on each side, of the most romantic character; but, like many other mental visions, it was all brushed away when I saw the real basin.

To the east (most of it in Wyoming) is the Teton range, with the four noted peaks that suggested to the Frenchman a name for them. South is the Palladian range of mountains. On the west is a lower one bearing the comparison of our west mountains with the higher Wasatch peaks. The north end is open like unto Cache Valley. The length is about 35 miles, with varying width of from 12 to 18 miles. Long streaks of timber show the location of different creeks that pour their waters into the Teton river—which becomes in midsummer a large one. This river at the south receives the streams from Game, Moose and Trail Creeks, all of the large streams. Not a wedge of salable land is to be seen. Grass abounds as well as immense bodies of timber in the mountains nearby.

There are about 100 families now in the basin, most of them Mormons, and plenty of room for more. Many faces familiar to Salt Lake are to be seen, but there is no rust on them. Boys who did not know of what kind of material they were have built log homes and corrals; they are fencing in their claims, hauling timber, and are now finding out what they are able to do. Wherever the land is cultivated everything does well. Vegetables grow fine and large, but I saw the potatoes nipped with frost on the morning of July 22nd; not much damage, however, was done, although in localities near the mouth of canyons they were not touched. Corn was thirty inches high, which was a fine showing for an elevation of 6000 feet—the highest point in the basin under cultivation is 6300 feet above sea level. The highest marking of the thermometer recorded was ninety degrees in July, and the lowest thirty-one below zero on the 10th of last January. For these facts I am indebted to Mr. Gideon Murphy, who kept observation by spirit thermometer.

The leading men of the State seem disposed to treat the "Mormon" people with fairness—why should they not do so? In my opinion they are the backbone of the State. Wherever they settle improvements are manifest. They go to stay, and stay to work, to found homes, build up communities and develop the resources of the country agriculturally. Large bodies of bituminous coal are said to exist in the mountains adjacent to the valley; in fact, nature seems to have fixed up this basin for a large population, and it will not be very long before the people will fill it up. Feed is everywhere abundant. There are no barren places in sight. With proper arrangements for winter feeding this promises to be one of the finest places for stock raising in the West.

As a matter of course it is a long way from a market. There is nothing you can sell on the grounds but live stock, and a poor market for that at present. There is no money in circulation, because there is none paid out. The man who intends to settle there must go provided with necessities for at least one season, must also have a team, otherwise he will be put to great disadvantage.

It is the story over again of the settling up of Cache Valley and other elevated points. The ambitious young man must have determination and endurance and be willing to turn his hand to any kind of work; he will be sure to succeed in the long run.

I witnessed the celebration of the 24th in a large bowery. I heard as fine music, I saw as fine a body of people as I desire to; they had turned their backs upon city life and were making new homes in this lovely valley, and all felt happy over it.

So much for the granger side of my story; the rest pertains to the scenic, and to another part of the great interior West, little known. I started for the Jackson Lake country and found here in the Teton basin that it was some sixty miles further to the eastward, into a country without a wagon road, over a range of mountains hard to climb. Securing the services of Mr. Gid. Murphy I started. He had been over the part I desired to visit. Our road followed Trail creek to the summit, 8,500 feet, one of the very worst roads possible to get over with a wagon. The last pull near the summit was 1200 feet in three quarters of a mile. Millions of horse flies abound, also grand bodies of fine timber. Game is plentiful up the canyon away from the road. Once at the summit the view reaches away to a great distance to the east. Mt. Bonneville and Jackson's Hole as well as the South fork of Snake river are spread out panoramically, almost at your feet. From the summit down to Fish Creek the distance is about four miles, very steep and sidling. I had to hang on to a pole to keep the wagon from upsetting for a long distance through the wet grass and weeds which drenched me to the skin, an experience I shall not forget very soon.

At Fish Creek a large camp of Banock Indians had been located for a long time. This means that the fish are cleaned out from the streams and the game either killed or frightened away; this I found to be a fact. All our efforts to capture the flinty prairie were a failure until we reached a point beyond the line of their predatory rambles. Our road, such as it was, followed north, and kept on the east side of the Teton range. As soon as we reached Lake Creek the three Tetons appeared more majestic than ever; in fact, the picturesque side of the range is the east one. I saw for the first time in America a glacier in a huge crevasse of the Grand Teton.

The trail keeps on the west side of the river and as soon as we had reached a point 20 miles north of our Indian friend, the game began to appear. Large herds of elk were standing in the water on the banks of Snake river, and groups of antelope were visible all around us, while to my surprise and delight I saw a fine specimen of a moose standing in a little lake. Here was indeed the sportsman's paradise. Here nature seemed supremely grand, for no man lived near by to interfere with the four-footed beauties that roamed in the grassy plains unmolested by the hunter's rifle. I deplore the barbarity that seeks to destroy from off the earth such beautiful creatures, and that wantonly shoots them down just for sport. I am proud of a government that has decided to preserve one part of our natural domain in all its primitive grandeur and where the wild animals that roam our plains may live unmolested. Through this wise policy the buffalo have increased from a small herd up to nearly 500, other game also.

It is a long, weary pull of 35 miles from Fish Creek up to Jackson's Lake, so named after a government official who died here, but the grandeur and sublimity of the mighty peaks and the placid lake make up for the long haul. Jackson's lake is formed by the Snake river entering at one part and leaving it at another, forming a beautiful sheet of water fifteen miles long and as many broad in the widest part. There are pretty islands here and there in the northern part and long promontories jutting into it. On the western border are the grand peaks, foremost being Mt. Moran with its beautiful glacier and a vertical shaft of a dark colored rock above it. This side of the range is grand, the other the reverse; this is the artist's side, the western the granger's. The elevation of Jackson's lake is 7000 feet, the height of the Grand Teton 13,899 feet; the other peaks run between 12,000 and the highest marking given.

Some day thousands will look upon this scene; a railroad will penetrate these wonderful regions. Then will the game depart, as the Iron horse puts in an appearance. Camped near this lake the wild swans and cranes, geese and ducks hold high carnival; not a soul lives on the stretch from Fish Creek to the lake; only on the northern banks a Mr. Taylor lives with a squaw wife in true mountain style. The whole road was through a meadow of rich grass, willow timbered ridges fringe the steep mountain sides. Away to the east are fat valleys, inviting thousands of settlers and but sparsely inhabited with cattlemen and trappers.

Who has ever heard of the Big Horn basin with its 9,000,000 acres of tillable land at an elevation of 3500 feet that is found 150 miles northeast of the Jackson Lake country and is as yet untouched by the feet of the settler? This serves to show that there is room for millions yet in the vast basins that are now the best spots where the wild game abounds, and the appearance of the country has but little changed. All down the eastern slope of the South fork beautiful valleys are found, the famous Jackson's Hole being a deep, warm valley covered with a rich growth of fine hay. Thousands of elk live in these rich valleys; so much so that a stack of eighty tons that was put up in Jackson's Hole was consumed by them one very hard winter.

There are two other lakes smaller in size that are found south of Jackson's, notably Jennie's Lake and Lee's Lake. The first is three miles long, the other six. These have their outlet in Lake Creek and receive the waters of the Tetons and other peaks.

Having secured some souvenirs of the scenery, and running short of provisions, the retreat was made for the basin. I found the ascent of the Teton Pass more difficult from the east, requiring four hours to climb two and a half miles, but, like all troubles, the end came to the weary climb which will prove an inseparable barrier to the settling up of the South Fork valleys unless a good wagon road is made over it. It is talked of as the point over which the Burlington road will come in its western stretch, but this is talk. One thing is certain; there are more natural advantages to help a road in the region described than was found on the Union Pacific. It only needs a small stretch of the imagination to see the valleys peopled with thousands who now need homes and who will be glad to seek them in so fertile a region.

Before leaving the subject I may say that there are two postoffices in the basin, Fox and Haden; that the greater part of the tillable land is in Idaho and mountainous in Wyoming. Very strict laws are enacted to prevent the shipment of lumber from one State to another. None but actual settlers are allowed to kill the game at all seasons of the year.

If any of my readers want more room for their strength, more inducements to work, better foundations for their large families, more health and physical vigor, less luxury and a more natural life, I think they will find it in the regions I have tried to describe.

C. R. SAVAAGE.

This beautiful ex-Queen Natalie has another grievance against the Serbian government. Her book, "The Mother," recently published in Europe, has been suppressed in Belgrade, so that the booksellers dare not import copies of the work. The book, as is partly indicated by its title, gives an account of the Queen's unhappy life, and attempts to retain control of her boy, the young king of the country.

THE HOMESTEAD RIOTS.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., Aug. 3.—The arrest of Yardmaster James Dovey and Superintendent McConnell of the open hearth department on a charge of murder this afternoon was attended by turbulent scenes, necessitating the interference of the militia and the additional arrest of a striker, when Constables Stewart and Geisler reached Homestead with four warrants, two for the above Carnegie officials and the others for Superintendent Potter and George A. Foray.

Rumors of the prospective arrests spread through the town, and hundreds of lockedout and striking met gathered at the different stations. At Marshall the crowd numbered two hundred. The trains on which the constables and prisoners were to be taken to Pittsburg was a few minutes late, and when the constables and prisoners arrived at the depot the crowd surged around the station door as the prisoners were hurried into it. The patrol and militia strove to KEEP THE MEN BACK, but the force was unequal to the task. Every minute the crowd increased, while they uttered threats, especially directed against Dovey. As the time passed the crowd became more turbulent, and word was hastily sent for a company of the Fifteenth regiment.

On their arrival at the depot the soldiers pushed back the crowd, which returned in a surly way. One striker named Thomas Bowen because obstreperous, and yelled, "Three cheers for Dovey, dam him."

Before the crowd could give them the soldiers hastily seized Bowen. He was hustled into the station and placed in charge of two deputies. This stern measure

QUELLED THE HOSTILE DEMONSTRATION.

Bowen will be charged with unlawful assemblage and disorderly conduct, and with inciting to riot.

The turbulent demonstration has convinced General Wyle that it would be useless to remove the militia from Homestead at present.

PITTSBURG, Pa., August 3.—Secretary Lovejoy, Vice-President Leishman and Treasurer Curry of the Carnegie Company, appeared before Judge Ewing in the Criminal Court this afternoon, to surrender themselves. They were released on $10,000 bail each. Messrs. Frick, Nevin, McConnell, Berry and Potter were represented by their attorneys. Hearing on their application for bail was postponed. They will appear tomorrow. Judge Ewing said:

"I think if the story in the newspapers is true, one of the men charged in the information can be held for murder. Certainly not in the first degree. The men in the barges had a right to use all necessary force to maintain rightful possession of this property."

Dovey and McConnell were arrested at Homestead and taken to jail at 1 o'clock and locked up for the night. The statement that Potter was arrested and later released on bail is denied. It is not probable that he will surrender himself until tomorrow as it would necessitate remaining in jail over night. It is said the reason Potter did not surrender this afternoon was that the evidence against him was stronger than against the others, he having been on the barge with the Pinkerton men, and it is claimed gave the orders to fire.

The strikers' case received a black eye from the coroner's jury this afternoon, when a verdict was rendered in the cases of seven strikers to the effect that Silas Swain, one of them, had been killed by a missile from a cannon while in an unlawful assembly.

In the case of one of the Pinkertons the jury found that T. J. Connors was fatally wounded by a party or parties unknown, and with felonious intent.

Henrich Bauer, the anarchist charged with being an accessory to the shooting of Frick, was released on $15,000 bail today.

Judge Ensch refused to accept bail in the case of Anshrist Knoll, as he said there was evidence that Knoll had shown Bergman the Carnegie offices.

Carnegie, it is said, will make an attempt to start the Duquesne plant next Monday.

HOMESTEAD, Aug. 4.—Moral suasion of clubs and stones was adopted by a few desperate strikers at Duquesne today. Yesterday it became evident that a break was imminent, a large number of strikers having gone back to work. Foreman Milesage of the mechanical department was ordered to report with thirty men this morning. A number of strikers determined to stop them, and twenty men went from Homestead to assist. By 7 o'clock this morning 300 men gathered about the gate and as fast as the boys arrived they were ordered home. Foreman Milesage made some resistance and was stoned and beaten. The deputy sheriffs were hemmed in by a crowd and were unable to help him.

Hugh Boyce, the boss carpenter, managed to run the gauntlet and got in in safety though sharply chased. Another man also managed to get inside and then the strikers proposed to storm the works. A telegram was hastily dispatched to Brigadier-General Willey, and the Sixteenth regiment was sent on a special train. As soon as the soldiers marched up the street the strikers fell back and further violence ended. None of the repairmen would go to work this afternoon, however, being too frightened. Treasurer Curry of the Carnegie company says many old men at Duquesne wish to go back to work. There is nothing new at Homestead.

A locked-out worker, one of the committee which went to Duquesne to investigate the trouble, returned this morning. To an Associated Press representative he said it was no use disguising the fact that the men were all ready to go back to work; in fact, the poorer paid were scrambling to get the fifty or sixty places vacant. The mill will not start till Monday but 800 applications have already been made. The arguments of the committee are without effect, and operations in the mills here are affected by the arrests caused by the strikers. Edward Burk, one of the locked-out men, was arrested at noon on the charge of inciting riot. He was taken to prison. The reason for ordering the militia to Duquesne was because several persons who tried to go to work were held back by a mob. No violence was offered but threats were made, and the superintendent feared bloodshed. Captain Hines of the Pinkertons, who was shot in the Homestead riot, is still in the hospital in a critical condition. It is feared he will die.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 6.—Mr. Oates, chairman of the sub-committee of the H. use which is investigating the labor troubles at Homestead and the connection of the Pinkerton detectives therewith, submitted his report to the committee which was not agreed to. No member questioned its correctness, but the Republican member would not assent to what it said upon the tariff and the majority of the Democratic members of the committee thought it impolitic to make any report until the entire investigation shall be completed which could not be done before the second session of Congress. Therefore the postponement of the report was made until next winter.

The report says the Pinkertons who surrendered were brutally and outrageously treated, principally by women and boys, and Oates is loth to believe that any of these women are native Americans. He says the indignities to which they were subjected was a disgrace to civilization. Mr. Oates asks whether the Carnegie firm was justified in equity and good conscience in proposing a reduction in wages. Frick declined to state the cost of a ton of Bessemer steel billets, and the labor cost. The men were paid satisfactory wages, but the work much abbreviates the natural period of life and should be well paid for. Mr. Oates condemns the McKinley law for its failure to protect the American workmen. Had Frick stated the bottom facts to the committee they would have agreed that the proposition to reduce wages was justifiable, but they took issue with him in his conclusions that the tariff did not cause a decline in prices.

Oates finds further that the conduct of the company towards its employees was kind in many respects. It loans them money at low interest to build homes and never foreclosed mortgages; but in wage negotiations the officers did not exercise patience, and Frick seems to have been too brusque and somewhat autocratic. Mr. Oates is persuaded that if Frick had appealed to the reason of the employees and shown the state of the company's affairs, a reduction might have been made and no trouble followed. Pennsylvania law contains nothing to prevent Frick from employing Pinkerton men as watchmen at Homestead, but he says under the circumstances he should not have done so. Frick made overtures to the Pinkertons before the negotiations with the men were interrupted and did not appeal to the county or State authorities in the first instance for protection. Oates asserts that Sheriff McClary is a very inefficient officer, but says had Frick aided him and joined in his appeal to the governor instead of employing Pinkertons the State would have furnished sufficient force to protect the property.

Mr. Oates condemns as unlawful the acts of the workmen in turning away the sheriff. He says it was the purpose of the amalgamated association to prevent the employment of non-union men, and declares that the organization has no right to enforce its wishes by strong-handed defiance of the law. The men had no legal right to resist the coming of the Pinkertons, and are answerable to the Pennsylvania courts. In conclusion Oates finds that Congress had no power over the question involved.

HOMESTEAD, Aug. 7.—As a result of the secret mission of Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, the entire strength of that organization will be utilized to help in the fight. The 700,000 members of the federation will be asked to contribute money and especially be vigilant in the boycott of Carnegie's material and prevent workmen from going to Homestead. Gompers said: "We shall certainly leave nothing undone to bring victory to these gallant workmen."

There was a Sunday quiet both here and at Duquesne. Battery B will go home tomorrow and the Fifth regiment will follow Tuesday. The Fifteenth and Sixteenth regiments will be left. The advisory committee tonight gave out that a roller received a letter from Manager Potter stating that if he would return the charge of murder would be withdrawn and he would be given his old position.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 7.—There is no practical change at Homestead, excepting that the company has more men at work. Outwardly the strikers are firm as ever but many privately express a desire to return to work and say they are only deterred by the influence of the majority. An attempt will be made to start the Duquesne plant Monday morning. The residents of Duquesne are greatly excited tonight and fear trouble.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 8.—Tomorrow afternoon a committee representing the local iron and steel manufacturers and workmen will resume deliberations over the wage scale. The question of settlement is uncertain. It is generally understood that the men do not favor arbitration and that it will not be considered. The sensation of the day at the Upper Union mills was the resignation of Night Superintendent and Puddling Boss Richard Nichols, who was one of the most trusted workmen about the mill. The acquisition of Nichols greatly encouraged the strikers. Nearly 200 men were taken to Homestead today.

The eleven men charged with rioting at Duquesne had a hearing today. Two were released and nine held in $1000 bail each. Workmen will make no information for inciting to riot today, but it will be done some day this week. Among the men now working in the Homestead plant are four well known and at one time wealthy oil brokers.

SAYS THE N. Y. POST: Much is said just now about the need of stricter definitions of incitement to commit crime, and it would be well to consider the question of newspaper responsibility in that matter. Some of the papers which are crying out about the dangers of anarchy are lending their best efforts to its extension and glorification by the absurd importance they attach to the personalities and utterance of individual anarchists.

THE SUMMER SCHOOL.

The summer school opened on Monday, August 1, at the Brigham Young Academy at Provo. Dr. Maeser opened the session by prayer. Professor Claib introduced Professor Parker of Boston, who has recently closed a week's session at Chatsaugu. He has been a teacher for thirty-six years.

There were about 350 teachers present, who received him with applause. After some remarks from him as to the purpose in visiting Utah, a recess of ten minutes was had for social conversation.

On re-opening Professor Parker gave an outline of subjects for study and investigation, and the manner of handling them. There are to be instructions in drawing, clay modeling, history, civil government and practical methods of teaching.

In the afternoon Professor Parker lectured on geography as a basis of all the natural sciences.

Mrs. Parker lectured on the Delsarte system of physical culture.

Miss Heffron illustrated and explained free hand drawing by use of the blackboard.

In the evening Professor Parker lectured on "Artist or Artisan."

On Tuesday Mrs. Parker gave another lecture on the Delsarte system.

Professor Parker followed on geography.

Miss Heffron continued her lessons and illustrations on the blackboard.

In the afternoon Professor Parker deanted on number work.

Mrs. Parker followed with a short lecture on articulation.

On Wednesday the forenoon was occupied by the following programme:

Mrs. Parker on Delsarte and his system; Colonel Parker in teaching reading; Miss Heffron on modeling in clay and sand, and the German professors in music.

The little historical sketch Mrs. Parker gave of Delsarte intensified the general interest in the discoveries he had made; and the deductions from those discoveries.

Colonel Parker opened up new thought for the guidance of the teacher in this branch of education. Quite a discussion was maintained on the question of wholes vs. elementary parts, decided in favor of entitres. In conclusion he said he was the best understood man in America, and that there was something in this mountain air that shortened time.

The clay modeling was so applied as to illustrate the relative values of weights and measures, and as an aid to comprehensive illustration of many other studies is used both to stimulate observation and impress retention.

The music lesson progressed from that of yesterday, and instead of being an obscure and difficult science, out of the reach of common mortals, music seemed to be easy of access.

It was announced that the citizens of Provo would tender a reception at the Tabernacle to Professor and Mrs. Parker for the entire class—teachers teaching, and teachers studying.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The library was crowded to suffocation again this evening to hear Colonel Parker's lecture on "The Child."

The Colonel in a very easy and finished speaker, reminding one, but for the difference in theme, of Charles Ellis.

The subject of having the stenographic reports of Mr. Parker's lectures published in pamphlet form was laid before the students, and decided affirmatively.

The following is an extensive synopsis of the lecture:

Fellow Teachers:—The unrealized possibilities of development in the child is a theme for our earnest consideration, and that development we owe to the next generation. The whole question lies in the education of the little child, and there is no work too good, no thought too great, no desire too deep, no endeavors too noble to be concentrated in this one grand effort. It means better homes, higher morals, nobler aspirations, the love of God and the perpetuation of our Republic.

The little child lies cradled in its mother's arms; its life a dream of bliss, earth its servant, the sun its toy, its surroundings a sign and symbol of the universe. My life has been spent among little children, and I think I have learned to read them a little. I say that the child is a born savage. Do not be startled by the assertion, for when we have become better acquainted with our ancestors we will respect them more. Much of our mental strength and vigor, the spiritual fervor, as well as physical superiority, we inherited from a savage ancestry.

Have you ever known a little boy who did not wish to dig a cave and live in it? Who did not take unbounded satisfaction in making himself proficient with the bow and arrow, and dearly hold in his heart an ideal of savage seclusion and independence? I remember one boy who dug a cave in an island and there defended himself against all intruders—though there were none. He fortified his island and built a fort at the most exposed point, determined no vessel should pass up or down without hearing from him and his tin gun. The fact was no boat could pass because the water was too shallow. But there he fought imaginary battles, revelling in the expression of his savage instincts. How children delight in "Robinson Crusoe" because of its savagery.

The properly constituted child lives a mythical life. Just as soon as it begins to get a little light it begins to create and people a world of its own, a world in which it is the central figure, living, moving and having an exalted being. Can you not remember when with a few broken bits of plate and two shingles under a tree you kept house, received and entertained visitors, delighted with your shadowy guests? Then there are the mother's stories, told to the happy child as it closes its eyes in slumber; and some have forbidden this, and tell you if a child could not break the bonds of reality he would be a brute. But he breaks these bonds, looks beyond, and he sees a future life and a world outside of his present surroundings.

There are those who forbid fairy tales to children, saying, tell a child only the truth. Of all such I would ask the question, "What is truth?" I can fancy the halo of glory around the head of the Lover of mankind when Pilate asked Him, What is truth? Our good old Puritan fathers insisted on truth, but failed to see and understand the truth in rich imagination, with its inspiring, humanizing, beautifying effects in crude humanity. The old geographer Peter Parley, refusing beautiful truth through imaginative symbols, gave us a map—I studied it—with a country called Ethiopia in the centre of Africa; I learned to "bound it." There is no such country. He gave the children absolute falsehood clothed in the classic drapery of knowledge with the forged seal of truth burned into her brow.

Have you ever contemplated the sweet truths hidden in the parables which He gave to those not strong enough to bear naked truth? In the holy sympathies, the expectant, living inquiry awakened for the smallest of God's creatures by the fairy tale told the little child? They help us to learn of the exquisite purpose in the most minute of God's creations, to hate nothing, to love all things.

The earth confronted savage man and said: "What am I?" And man replied: "Thou art God!" But the stars confronted him with the same question: "What are we?" And he said, "Surely thou art God," and worshipped. But the sun with power and glory asked the question once again, and He said: "Thou art God," but through his consciousness there stole the thought of a power beyond all this, and his soul reached out through boundless space, to commune with the infinite.

Little children worship everything. The stars are nail holes in the floor of heaven. The grandeur of nature stirs the divinity within the child which his tongue cannot express. The mythical is to him the beginning of religion. Why have we become a race bound to the sordid and soul-slaving realities of life? It does not matter what our lips utter, our faces speak the spiritual death, killed when the mythical was destroyed in the child life.

This same condemned faculty is the beginning of science; it gives us the treasures of the ages. The crystal fragments of wisdom left in islands of the sea and upon continents come to us this way. Germany has its folk lore that every child knows. The child is a born naturalist. He loves flowers. In Boston once, up a dark and dirty street, I saw a neglected child, on an equally neglected doorstep, but upon that begrimed face was a divine smile. Curious to know what had stirred the divinity within the little soul, I approached, and found that it held in its hand a clover blossom. That smile is sometimes seen on the faces of old men who have led unselfish, childlike lives.

Every child has a love for nature unless some teacher kills it off. I knew a very ordinary boy, on a little rocky farm, who pursued the study of geography with burning zeal, and never knew that he was learning anything. Every swamp, hill, slope, stone, brook, he explored and knew. He studied botany. No tree, nor plant nor flower but he knew its time of opening, its habits of leaf and bud, the situations it loved best; and when that boy became a man, he taught school for twenty years before he knew that the New Hampshire farm had been a tutor in these sciences, so far as the theory of books wandered from nature.

He studied bugs, and knew those that shurried away when he lifted a stone, those that flew and those that crept, and those that were good for fish-bait. He knew also the partridges and woodchucks. Out of many a hole that his dog Tim has dug he has dragged the woodchuck with a hay hoe.

He studied physics. He could tell what the weather would be by nature's barometers. No music was ever sweeter than the patter of rain on the attic rafters two feet above his head that he himself had predicted. It meant no work and a long day fishing, for if it rained, of course, he could not work out doors.

All this road of natural studies ended in the little cross-road school house, where with half a pair of frozen dinner forks, if that teacher had said to me: "You have been studying on the farm what some kind person has here put in books, yours is the true education, come let us see how near these books are right, if they have more or less than we have already learned," it would have enveloped that old farm in a blaze of glory and made that log house the ante-chamber to heaven.

The starved faculties and repressed activities sought expression in drawing, for which the child had a decided talent. Just as he was putting the finishing touches to a lifelike portrait of the teacher, the teacher drew something else. Whack! whack! and the boy drew no more.

I tell you that was a crime, a sin, in crushing out with cruel blows, and bitter hate a God-given talent that pointed only to the good and true, through the brutal ignorance of a man calling himself a school teacher. Oh! the undeveloped energy and opportunity battling against sin and sinking, dying beneath the effort.

A boy looked out upon an orchard that lay in a death-like sleep beneath the winter's snow. He knew that the resurrection would come, and exulted in his little heart in the knowledge. All nature speaks of the resurrection. One day he saw the tree bark shining with the glad blood that mounted up beneath it. He watched the swelling buds, and saw the first pale tint of the green leaves. The final glory of their banks of pink and white bloom, filled with delicate fragrance, seemed to his unaccustomed soul like the voice of God speaking in a new creation. He was so grateful to God for doing it that he got a sheet of paper and tried to put his emotions into words. With eyes glowing and cheeks aflame, he took this story of his soul not very well written—to the housekeeper, (for he has no mother) and looked up into her eyes for a smile of approval and response. She was a good woman, but she said: "If I could not write better than that I would not write at all."

That is the way that we crush the divine out of children, and afterward when they go wrong we call it total depravity. I tell you it is total neglect. Can we save the bad boys? Yes, if you have ninety-nine good ones they must be used to save the one bad. Oh, there are in our schools today, and some in days past, teachers with great souls! They may never have money or fame, but they are loving, earnest, splendid teachers, helping in the grand work of saving this one bad boy, and believing in inspiration, and inspiration comes to everyone who tries to bless and save. Study ways and means after you have studied the peculiarities of the child, and if nothing else will save him love will save him. Love if he can feel it, and a terrible crime has been committed if a child has been so caloused by hatred and ill-usage that his heart no longer responds to tenderness. The clenched fist, the bent brow and set jaws, with eyes glaring hate that we sometimes see in cities, are not total depravity, but the settled conviction that his species hate him—and in return he hates all mankind.

A boy was thrown into a school-room and told to get knowledge, with a brutality and a sneer that were blasphemy against all that makes the dignity of manhood when properly directed. The conviction was in his soul that nobody cared for him. He sat sullen and lowering in a corner, a secured Ishmael, caged but defiant. He had a teacher, not a jailor. She determined to save him. She studied him, and learned that he loved birds. He knew every little feathered songster, their time of nesting, their favorite haunts, their notes were a familiar song, and she found the gateway where love entered his soul. She called all the other children around her, and got them to tell her all they knew about birds. The sullen scowl relaxed. Was this about birds, knowledge? He grew eager, for he knew more than they. "Come, John," said the teacher, "tell us what you know about birds." He found sympathy, companionship, his heart dilated, he felt himself a man, he was saved. Go bless such teachers. It is the whole end of all religion; save a hundredth and you have saved the world.

In the fifty-three years of my life the world has wonderfully changed. There are better times coming for all humanity; yet do not forget while seated in this beautiful room, surrounded by all the blessings that are yours, that there are millions living still in loathsome cellars, debarred from all that makes life a blessing. There are millions still unborn doomed to a like fate. If it is ever bettered it will be through the discovery and proper application of energies and forces. The world is bound together by iron bands and intelligence speeds, and it is on the wings of lightning, and progress should be equally rapid.

There are teachers who aver that there is no moral phase in those three studies with which children are belabored—reading, writing, "rithmetic." I tell you a child may read him- self to damnation, either himself to Canada, a refugee from his country, and write the seal of his own doom, unless in all these studies he sees the thoughts of God expressed on the universe. They are worse than nothing unless intrinsically good. Every child begins the studies of the sciences; it is for the teacher to continue it in the same lines that God points out.

The child is a born naturalist. There is not one step of that but is intrinsically moral, and it is the finger of God pointing the way to true education. Every child is a born worker. I see you differ from me. You are thinking of the child of six or seven years, whose mother has waited on him until he sinks down, educated into laziness. Why will mothers make slaves of themselves to their own injury and the ruin of the child?

Just watch a baby. How eager to touch, taste, tear; how much they learn. Think of learning a language in one year. Hundreds of words requiring five or six different positions of the vocal organs. We who are twenty-two would consider it a terrible task. Thank God no teacher has discovered a system for teaching babies to talk. See how hard they work while learning to walk; how happy when they conquer. Have you a family sand pile? It is indispensable to a well regulated home. All day these little ones will build and dig and work. I would not give a fig for the boy or girl who never made mud pies. Their active energies are crying out for an opportunity to work out their salvation; while teachers and mothers are continually telling them to "hold still while we pour something into you."

The curse of the East and middle West is laziness, and the prevailing sin, wanting to get something for nothing. Look at the children of wealth and idleness; they have defied God's law of labor and there is nothing for them but death. War has saved many a nobleman's son; it was fashionable, and gave exercise to perishing faculties. From the forge and plow, the field and workshop, have come the heroes who have ruled the world. Our Presidents, railroad kings, bankers, would all tell you that from the schools of hard manual training they have brought the stern endurance, the brain and brawn with which they have achieved success.

The farmer makes a mistake who says "My boy shall not work as I have done," and sends him to college. If he gets the education he works, if not he is a lost soul. There are those who point to the fact that the graduates of our New England schools in former days were mere giants, and think the schools are to blame. Not so. It is the home life that differs, and the athletic sports introduced cannot supply the place.

I plead that every child shall be trained to work with its hands. I plead that every school house shall have its workshop attached, and its garden also.

Music has marvelous powers to educate the human being; yet some trustees consider it non-essential. No victorious army was ever led on to victory without it; no pilgrims ever found a way through frosts and flames of martyrdom a Zion unless led by the songs of Zion. When we who fought for the dear old flag felt all our bravery and patriotism had oozed out through utter human weariness, and we were looking for some fence to hide behind, or wagon to crawl into, some brave soul began singing "Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord," and as voice after voice caught it up and it swelled and rolled a very battle anthem, by the force of its inspiration we marched on to victory. That is the effect of music.

My fellow teachers, I see a violence of a time when there will be no violence, no bloodshed, no intemperance, no sin; earth shall become a palace home, and a little child shall lead you. Do not meet them with the spirit of hate and selfishness, but lead them to a higher spiritual life, by developing their spiritual power. When the Savior, bearing the agony of a world of sin, asked His disciple Simon, "Lovest thou Me?" and he answered, "Yea Lord," His reply was "Then feed My sheep."

"The congregation arose and sang "America" and the session closed.

On Thursday afternoon, at Provo, Colonel Parker gave another lesson in progressive numbers. This was followed by the drawing lesson, accompanied by modeling in clay. The music lesson, also progressive, was next given.

The evening's work was a lecture by Mrs. Parker on dress reform, a synopsis of which is appended.

In substance, Mrs. Parker said: I have a delightful subject, and one in which I feel you will be interested. It is common for gentlemen to point with scorn to the one thing of which they say women have had absolute control; and what a mess they have gotten it into. Now, I am going to tell you something new. Women have not had control of even those great essentials to their happiness—beauty, well-being and usefulness. Behind every large pattern and designing establishment there is a man, and our garments have been modeled more or less upon the masculine pattern, with the long waist, ignoring the oval lines of woman's form as God made it. In looking over the fashions of the twelfth century I find that the dress of men and women was essentially the same—feathers, jewels, ruffs, long skirts and all. The change in the garb of man was an evolution, brought about by the necessity that the dress should conform to the needs of the occupation. Those who have closely examined the statues of Hercules, Juno and the Greek elates will have observed the vast difference between the male and female figure; and yet the clothing modeled for us by men is shaped to the bodies of men and not of women. The long waist is only acquired by actual deformity. Again, the clothes which we wear express very plainly what men think our occupations should be. Only such things as purring, cooking, etc., can be done in these conventional garments, and those not with any degree of comfort. They injure the lower limbs and deny their uses. They ignore the fact that many women are obliged to go out in all sorts of weather, engaged in all sorts of occupations, and their dress must be sensibly adapted for the same reasons that brought about the reform in dress for men. In 1857 the first effort in this direction was made. It was unfortunate in the place and people among whom it originated, and resulted in the ludicrous and ridiculous "Bloomer" costume. They made a very serious mistake in ignoring the lines of beauty and grace in their efforts to secure the useful. One of the originators who wore the costume for some time finally discarded it because it interfered with her usefulness to be so remarked. They made another mistake in getting nearer to men's wear, while that is the very thing the matter with our clothes now. This costume consisted of boots, as ugly and heavy as they could obtain (again imitating men), a short skirt of stiff heavy cloth (whenever women try to reform they invariably select men's clothes). This skirt just cleared the boot. The upper garment was something like a sack coat, a man's coat again, as ill fitting as possible, and that exceedingly uncomfortable garment, a white stiff shirt bosom. Now, you could not expect such a costume as that to become popular, but it did leave an impression that has been a guide and assistance to the later movements. We did need a reform in dress, and we are for the first time putting our brains into our work. We know that we must adapt the clothes, and not the contrary, that we must be suited to our business, and that beauty is an essential part. Is it not strange that these men who must seem to desire reform in these matters, and who talk the most sensible on these subjects, are the first to ridicule the practical efforts that are made. You set all your newspapers at work and the result is a flood of sarcastic criticism that nearly sweeps us off our feet. I gave a lecture on this subject once in Chataqua and a bright newspaper reporter got hold of it, and said that there was to be a great dress reform and so on, and other papers took it up and made such a stir about it that Bishop Vincent felt obliged to state the facts in public, and this year he would not have a lecture; for, as he said, he "could not have Chataqua injured by such things."

But there came a reformer who had beauty, wealth and influence to assist her, as we will do it, and leisure. She saw their mistakes and added the element of beauty. The costumes she has designed and worn combine, at once, common-sense, beauty, grace, economy, health and comfort. Where we used to wear as many as fourteen articles I now wear but four. These Jeness-Miller costumes have the union under garment, which is woven all in one piece, and can be purchased now at any large dry-goods place in Chicago. Their costumes are made so that they can dispense with the dozen more or less of skirts with their accompanying bands about the waist. The man made models required that the woman should fit the dress, and in order to do that the corset was brought into play. The body is compressed into an unnatural form; the weight of the garments is made to rest upon the very parts where they should not, and the greater part of our clothing is heaped up in ugly bands and folds about that part of the body where the furnace is located, and leaving the extremities inadequately protected.

Chicago is a city of clubs, of women's clubs, and the men are in favor of women taking part in all public work, and I think that is one of the reasons why the women are progressing so. We organized a Jeness-Miller club. We have culled knowledge from every possible source and made it the property of all. We have planned, and modeled and criticised. We have interested dealers in the movement, and educated dressmakers. Our members number 230, and are of all classes—the professional women and the house-keeper reaping equal benefit. We have conquered custom, and that is a great victory, I assure you. Some of the questions that have been handed in, I will answer. It does not improve the looks of a fleshy woman to wear a tight dress.

Such a woman should make her dress waist very short, and let the skirt flow, giving a tall appearance, and in a measure blending the curves. The short, thick neck should be dressed low, and the long, thin, piked chicken neck, should have these high Josephine collars, to give it a thick appearance, making it look as though it would support the neck. The shoes have engaged our attention as well. I wish the man who wrote: "Her little feet like mice peeped in and out beneath her skirt" had died before he wrote it. Every woman since has wished and believed that she must have a little foot. My husband wears a No. 8 and does it very complacently; why should not I wear a shoe that will comfortably fit my foot, so that I can use my foot for what it was intended? If I were going to climb these mountains I would put on the gymnasium costume. I would go so I could climb or I would not go at all. My time is exhausted and I will continue on another occasion.

On Friday morning Mrs. Parker occupied the first hour, giving a few finishing touches to the lecture of the previous evening. She repeated the feather movements, but the principal part of her talk was on voice and tone.

Dr. John R. Park and Dr. Mills-paugh came in and were greeted with a round of applause. At the close of the regular exercises they addressed the audience on the importance of the occasion, but more especially on the educational feature to be introduced at the annual Territorial fair, and reproduced at the World's Fair.

On Friday afternoon Colonel Parker, resuming his series of addresses at Provo, said he wished to continue the subject of reading, to illustrate the principles of learning to teach reading. Teachers have always believed, said he, that there was something better about it, and have always been searching after methods. The Germans left the a, b, c method 300 years ago, and went to the phonetic; and it is good for them, because they have a phonic language, and we have not. The French discovered the word method somewhat later; the so-called word building method followed; the sentence method had its day; and all these were the work of teachers who were in search of something better than they had. But method is not altho there is danger in methods used in a mechanical way, as an end instead of as a means. Method is not a finality, it is only a device. I protest against a system of petty details which are not the outgrowth of principle in the soul of the teacher. Blind following of some one else's method makes him an artisan instead of an artist, and a true teacher must be an artist. When one presumes to believe he has a perfect method, he commits a sin. Let every superintendent teach his teachers to be free to investigate divine truth for themselves. I plead for the independence of the teacher. If all do just alike, no one could help another; therefore their peculiarities are valuable. "Each for all and all for each" is the true rule. It is difference which gives opportunity.

ty to improve. Too many teachers are working out the details of method and losing sight of principle; that is the trouble.

Taking a word letter by letter is not right. It has been believed right, and today in Massachusetts nine-tenths of all the children learn to read by the alphabet method. Give a whole word, for that is the symbol of an idea, while a letter is not. What is interest and what arouses it in a child? Interest is a questioning attitude of mind, and the eagerness of the questioning measures the depth of the interest.

There is good in phonics, but it does not belong to primary classes. They care nothing about it. We must arouse in them feeling and emotion if we would open the understanding. God has so ordered it that the child must have the best and truest materials of thought. Which is better, mechanical reading of a high grade or an active power of thought?

Both are desirable, but I place power of thought first, last and all the time. Teach morals every moment. We lay the foundation of immorality when we fail to teach in all available ways that all and every part of our being should be used for its best and highest purposes. I would not have a book on morals nor preach long sermons.

Is it possible to apply a method without understanding its underlying principle? No. It is hardly possible to apply a method at all, or to have one. It is almost sacrilege to say "I have a method;" but rather say, "I am searching after infinite truth." However, every one must have some method, but what I condemn is slavish adherence to perfunctory form. Principle is what I lay stress. A teacher is emphatic who binds himself even to his own methods. Do not teach arithmetic to the child, but train the child in the direction of number. Unity is life, but uniformity is death. Mechanical work will be the result just as long as we pursue method instead of principle.

LETTER FROM NEW ZEALAND.

The first European settlement founded in New Zealand was Wellington, which is now the seat of government, and the capital of the colony. The city is located on the harbor of Port Nicholson, and was settled in 1840, by a company of colonists from Australia. It is now one of the most important shipping ports in the South Seas, and has a population of about twenty-five thousand people. Vessels reach it from Cook's Strait, named after the great navigator, which separates the North Island from the Middle or South Island. A narrow passage affords a safe waterway into the harbor of Port Nicholson, which is one of the most commodious in New Zealand, and affords secure anchorage. Vessels from all parts of the world may be seen at anchor, with the flag of various nations floating from the mastsheads.

The city was formerly located on a narrow strip of land at the foot of the hills, but, during the past few years, a vast area of land has been reclaimed by filling in the harbor, and large business blocks have been erected where formerly vessels were anchored. Amongst these, the most imposing structures are the Harbor Board Building, and the general post-office. The last named is a credit to the colony, containing postal, telegraph, money order and savings banks departments, all of which are controlled by the colonial government. The most notable structure in the city is the Government building, which is said to be the largest building in the world. The ministerial and colonial offices are located in it, and it is a complete working hive of civil services. Parliament is held here and, when in session, the city is crowded with visitors. The suburban residences are to be found on the hillside, behind the central part of the city, where a series of terraces are dotted with gardens and villas. From the harbor these dwelling houses appear as though they were piled upon each other, waiting for an earthquake shock to roll them into the street below.

The business streets are lined with mercantile houses and shops, where goods are displayed for sale in true English fashion. Saturday is market day, and the visitors soon observe that all the customs and business methods are "English you know." Many of the residents are from the "old country," and they are extremely loyal, as was recently observed on the arrival of the new Governor of the Colony, Lord Glasgow. This august representative of Queen Victoria was received in royal style at Wellington on the 7th June, having been appointed to guard the interests of the Crown. In this colony at a salary of $25,000. A special steamer had been fitted up, and splendidly furnished, to escort his lordship from Australia, and great preparations were made prior to his arrival. Wellington put on its holiday attire. All business was suspended and the streets festooned and decorated with flags. The steamers in the harbor also hoisted their flags, and bunting was displayed from stem to stern. All the bands were out, filling the air with strains of music, and one of the finest was a Maori brass band and the natives proved conclusively that they possessed musical ability of no mean order. The militia, soldiers and marines were in uniform and the municipal and naval officers occupied a space reserved for the reception ceremonies on the Queen's wharf. The uniforms of the naval officers were almost covered with gold lace, and it was quite interesting to watch them strutting around and commanding the common herd to be crowded back. The onlookers crowded the decks of vessels and the wharves and the lordship approached from the vessel amid the cheering of the multitude and the booming of cannon. Lord Glasgow, accompanied by the Countess and family, was conducted to a platform, and listened patiently to elaborate addresses of welcome presented by the municipal authorities, friendly societies, ministers of various religious bodies, and temperance societies. Pre-arranged acknowledgments were handed to the governor by his private secretary, which he read to the various delegations.

Ministerial dinners, assembly balls, government house receptions are now the order of the day, and all entertainments and operas are announced under the patronage of "his Excellency Lord Glasgow."

The colonials are passionately fond of sports, the most favorite being regatta, boating, cricket, foot ball and hunting. They have a novel way of "fox" hunting without foxes. A horseman goes out trailing a sheepskin for the scent alongside of the railroad track. Shortly afterwards the hounds are started and the hunters follow, the ladies vying with the gentlemen in leaping fences and following the trail to discover where the improvised "fox" is hidden. A special train is run to accommodate all who wish to watch the sport, and it is usually well filled. National holidays are of frequent occurrence, and the people evidently agree with Punch that "holidays are the grandest invention of modern science."

Complying with the request of President Stewart, the Elders of the Manawatu district recently visited the Wairarapa Valley, in order to attend the district conference.

A government railroad has been constructed from Wellington and it passes around the harbor at the foot of the cliffs, and through the beautiful suburban towns of Petone, Lower Hutt, &c.

At last we commence to ascend the Rimutaka range of mountains, and the road winding along dugways and through tunnels forcibly reminds the writer of Marshall's pass, on the R. G. W. The steep grade necessitates a centre rail, rising about eighteen inches above the level of the other two rails, and the wheels of the engine are constructed so that they grip the centre rail, thus affording an effective brake.

The scenery on the Rimutaka is marked with picturesque beauty and rugged grandeur. The train moves slowly up deepside cuttings and dugways, turning and winding around numberless curves. The massive forest-clad Tararua range towering above, and a stream rippling far below in the bottom of the gully. We descend into the Wairarapa valley through scenery almost equal to that of our own dear mountain home.

The valley is quite extensive and is very similar to Utah County, with its clear, fresh water lake between the mountains.

Wairarapa lake is very shallow and affords good facilities for hunting, as wild ducks and black swans abound in that vicinity.

At Greyton President Stewart and Elders G. C. Dunford, J. G. Kelson, W. Douglas, P. P. Thomas, B. Giddard and W. Gibson met and traveled together to Kohunui, a distance of thirty miles, in tugboats furnished by our Maori brethren. We received the usual hearty greeting and were well provided for.

Conference was held two days, and reports of branches were given by the presidents.

The meetings were well attended, and instructions were given by the Elders. On the Sabbath three candidates offered themselves for baptism.

The Maoris sustained their reputation for hospitality and the Elders were excellently cared for. After spending nearly a week with the Wairarapa Saints the Elders continued their journey on horseback over the mountains. A ride of fifty-seven miles enabled them to reach Porirua late in the evening, tired and jaded.

The Saints of Porirua branch are exceedingly hospitable and have always had the reputation of being earnest, faithful workers.

The settlement is about fourteen miles from Wellington, and is located on the Parirua harbor, which abounds with shell-fish.

Some trouble existed in the branch through the gambling and horse racing proclivities of the members, but this has all been adjusted and a good spirit now prevails.

The Saints are diligent in performing their duties, and many are earnestly praying for the time when they can gather to Zion.

A neat little meeting house has been built and furnished in modern style, where Sabbath meetings and daily "Karakia," or prayers, are held. It is customary with our Maori members to assemble at the meeting house, morning and evening, for prayers. In this branch we are roused by the bell ringing at half-past six in the morning, and as this is winter season it is scarcely daylight at that hour.

Half an hour is allowed for dressing and washing, and at seven o'clock the second bell rings. The Saints may then be seen wending their way to the meeting house; mothers carrying their babies on their backs in true Maori style. The services usually last about half an hour. A hymn is sung and a chapter read from the Bible or Book of Mormon, after which the members chant or recite what they term the "Rongo Pa" or Gospel.

This consists of passages of scripture on the various principles of the Gospel, and most of the members have memorized all the scriptural references to the first principles of the Gospel, the scattering and gathering of Israel, restoration of the Gospel, tithing, etc. All present take part in the exercises, from the aged and feeble to the children who can only lip the words. Some of the little ones, yet unable to read, will repeat correctly many of the scriptural passages. After prayer, the members disperse to attend to their daily duties, but at five we are summoned together again by the ringing of the bell. This routine is continued summer and winter, and the inclement weather does not affect the attendance.

The Sabbath services are always interesting but were especially so during the visit of the Elders above named. In the Sabbath school most of the classes read in Maori, and a large class is studying the Book of Mormon. There is, also, what is termed a "Pakeha" class. The term "Pakeha" distinguishes all foreigners from the natives, and in this case refers to the books in use, which are in the English language.

Enjoyable meetings were held while President Stewart and the visiting Elders were present. After a few days rest the company continued their journey northward to attend the Manawatu conference. A heavy rain was falling as the Elders rode forth on horseback which continued till nearly noon. We traveled around Porirua harbor and through the valley till we reached Paekakariki hill, nearly two thousand feet above the level of the sea, from the summit of which we obtained a fine view of the ocean and the west coast, and also the bluffs on the South Island, across Cook's Strait. On descending to the beach we put spurs to our horses and galloped along till evening, when we reached Katihiko, where a family of Saints reside. Comfortable beds were provided for us and we were made welcome to a supper of hot water and bread. Next morning we continued our journey along the coast, passing a number of wrecked vessels which had been tossed on the beach during heavy gales. One of these was a large ironclad sailing vessel having a tonnage of over 2000 pounds, and originally cost $70,000. It is in good condition and a company are now at work trying to float it again.

In the afternoon of the second day we reached Porotianwha, where an aged Maori sister resides. We were affectionately greeted and the poor widow did what she could to make us comfortable. A good fire was built in the middle of the whare, or house, and while we warmed by the fire we lay on the ground under the smoke.

Our good sister spread our supper on the floor, consisting of potatoes and salt seasoned with love and esteem.

The following day we reached Awapuni, where conference was to be held, and great preparations had been made by the Saints, who were waiting to greet and welcome us. All corners were made happy and comfortable, and the Maori sisters had evidently been busy cooking several days, judging from the abundance of puddings, sponge cakes, etc.

Our dining table was loaded with meats, vegetables, jellies, jam and cakes, all prepared by the native sisters of the branch, who are excellent cooks, and it would be difficult to excel them. As we had been traveling in the rain all day we appreciated our comfortable quarters and the warm fire, and when called to supper we proved our appreciation by doing justice to the luxuries spread before us.

On Saturday, July 2nd, 1892, the Manawatu conference was called to order by Elder P. P. Thomas and opened with the usual ceremonies. Reports of the presidents of branches showed a satisfactory condition and that the work was progressing. Elders Douglas and Dunford addressed the congregation and exhorted the members to diligence. A Priesthood meeting was held in the evening, when President W. F. Stewart gave instructions on the duties and responsibilities of the Priesthood. He dwelt, also, on the evils of gambling and horse racing, after which questions on various subjects were asked and answered.

On Sunday morning the attendance was largely increased, and in the forenoon Elder J. G. Kelson and President Stewart addressed the people on the principles and restoration of the Gospel. In the afternoon a large number of European visitors were present, and the services were conducted in both languages. Maori hymns with English choruses were sung, after which Elder B. Goddard addressed the Europeans, explaining the first principles of the Gospel and testifying to the mission of Joseph Smith the Prophet. Elder Duxford addressed the Maoris on the same subject. Our evening meeting was characterized with great enthusiasm, as it was a testimony meeting, and four Maoris solicited baptism, which was attended to the following day.

All the Saints desired to bear their testimony and our meeting continued until 2 o'clock in the morning.

On the Fourth of July we did not forget to show our patriotism to the "land of liberty," and it proved to be a memorable day in Maori-dom. The brethren decided to celebrate Independence day and appointed a committee to draft a programme. Material was obtained and a sewing machine was soon at work and soon we had the "stars and stripes" flitting to the breeze, to the great surprise of passers by and to the great delight of the Maories. Our programme was quite elaborate. The marshal of the day, P. P. Thomas, conducted the ceremonies, which were opened with music by the Harmonical band.

Patriotic selections were rendered by the Columbia Glee club, including the "Star-Spangled Banner," "Battle Cry of Freedom," etc. Hon. W. T. Stewart was the orator of the day and delivered a vigorous address in the Maori language, and no silver-tongued orator in "the land of the free" had a more appreciative audience or was more uproariously applauded. Stump speeches, songs, etc., completed an excellent entertainment and all the participants were gratified with the novel but loyal celebration.

True patriotism was evidenced by our cheering as the star-spangled banner was floated to the breeze, and we were all as proud of the "dear old flag" as were the noble pioneers who unfurled it in Utah's valleys in '47.

PALMERSTON, North N. Z., July 11, 1892.

RAILROAD PROPERTY.

The following important opinion from County Attorney Murphy was delivered at the meeting of the County court at five o'clock Friday afternoon:

Mr. William Lynch, Assessor Salt Lake County:

Dear Sir—You have submitted to me the question, whether when a special school tax has been ordered and duly certified under article twelve of the school law of 1890, it is your duty as assessor to assess for the purpose of such tax the property of railroad companies situate in the district in which the tax was ordered; or whether, under the act of 1892 creating and prescribing the duties of a territorial board of equalization you are precluded from making any assessment. In the case upon which this question arises, the territorial board has in point of fact made no assessment of so much of the railroad property as lies in any particular one of the school districts.

The act does not require the territorial board to do so. It requires the board "to assess and value all the property in the Territory of Utah owned by railroads, etc., companies," and provides that "the assessment and valuation thereof shall be final for all purposes of county and territorial taxation."

The only provision for an apportionment of this value by the board is that it "shall be apportioned by the board of the several counties, in proportion to the value of such property in each county. Section 6 of act.

This board derives all its powers from the act in question. It is a specially created body, of special powers, and has none other than such as are expressly granted to it by the statute and such as are necessarily implied from those expressly given. There is nowhere any necessary implication in the act that the board shall have power to apportion the value of railroad property between school districts, or any other species of municipal or quasi-municipal districts subordinate, territorially, to counties. The board, therefore, in my opinion, has no such power. It cannot be said that such a power must be implied, for otherwise there would be no method of assessing for special district school taxes, because, as I shall endeavor to point out, such is not the case.

Powers not clearly given in such an act will not be read into it. Thus it will not be implied that such a board may raise or lower any individual assessment.

Wells, Fargo & Co. vs. Board of Equalization.

San Francisco, etc., railroad company, vs. Board of Equalization, 60 Cal. 12. Where the statute directs an equalization among the congressional districts it will not be implied that it may equalize among the counties.

All of the cases are to the effect that the authority of such boards must be strictly pursued, and that their powers will not be extended by implication.

It may well have been the intention of the legislature to provide that the property of a railway company in the Territory should be assessed as an entirety by central authority, and that the same authority should equitably apportion the total value between the several counties through which the line extends. This much the legislature has clearly expressed. It may have been the further intention of the legislators that the same authority should make a like apportionment among the various school districts, towns and cities. Or it may be that if the legislature had only thought of that part of the subject, it would have so legislated. But the act contains no trace of legislation, and neither the assessors nor the courts can supply it. "If we depart from the plain and obvious meaning, we do not in truth construe the act, but alter it. We supply a defect which the legislature could easily have supplied, and are making the law, not interpreting it. A casual omission can in no case be supplied by a court of law, for that would be to make a law." It will make no difference if it appears that the omission on the part of the legislature was a mere oversight, and that without doubt the act would have been drawn otherwise had the attention of the legislature been directed to the oversight at the time the act was under discussion.

The territorial board therefore had no power to make an assessment except for the purposes of territorial and a county taxation. School district taxation is no more territorial or county taxation than is the taxation in and by cities and towns for their municipal purposes. A school district in this county is a part of the county only in the same sense that Salt Lake city is. The act renders it impossible that the board should legally assess for special school district taxes, because it has withheld power to make the necessary apportionment. The act has also in expressed terms indicated the kinds of taxes for the purposes of which the board may assess, viz: "Territorial," and "county" of which school district taxes are neither.

You, as assessor, are given explicit authority, and it is made your duty to assess for this purpose by a statute which was passed and went into force subsequently to the act providing for the Territorial board, viz., the school law of 1892. Section 83 of that act (p. 119, laws of 1892), provide for the voting of a special district school tax, not exceeding 2 per centum, "of all the taxable property in the district." It will be contended that railroad property in the district is not taxable. The section further provides: "The assessors and collectors are hereby constituted the assessors and collectors of all district school taxes." Section 84 provides that: "The county assessor shall assess for such special tax at the time and in the manner provided by law for assessing Territorial and county taxes."

This does not limit you to such property only as you are authorized by law to assess for Territorial and county taxes. It limits you only to assessing at the same time and in the same manner at and in which you assess property in general for Territory and county taxes. Nothing could be more definite and explicit than the language of these sections in making railroad property subject to the special school taxes and in imposing upon the county assessors the duty of assessing that property. If it were not so, the legislature would be guilty of providing for the ordering and collecting of taxes for which it had created no means of assessing. The legislature is presumed to be acquainted with its previous legislation and at the same time it enacted the school law of 1892 it knew that in the act creating the Territorial board it had conferred no power on the board to assess for special district school taxes. Aside from the explicit language of the act, therefore, it is to be presumed that the legislature intended to vest this power in the county assessors, in order that its legislation might not be nugatory.

It is true that in the case of the Union Pacific railroad company vs. Ryan (113 U. S. 5, 516), under an act providing for the assessment of railroad property by a territorial board of equalization, it was decided that a city under its charter power to assess and tax for its municipal purposes all property within its limits, had no power to make its own assessment of railroad property, but that such assessment could legally be made only by a territorial board for all purposes. But what were the provisions of the act creating the board? They are thus stated in the language of the supreme court: "It places the power of assessing the value of the whole line (so far as it lies within the Territory) including the rolling stock, in the hands of the board of equalization; and after they have fixed such valuation, and ascertained what it amounts to per mile for the whole length within the Territory, such valuation per mile is certified by the territorial auditor to the clerks of the several counties through which the road passes, specifying the number of miles in each county, so as to give to each the proportionate share, and then the county commissioners divide and adjust the number of miles, and the amounts, falling within each taxing precinct, township and school district, to be entered on their respective lists of taxable property."

The act contained, in other words, precisely the provisions which are absent from our act, viz: For an apportionment of the territorial boards, valuation among all the "taxing precincts, townships and school districts." The court held that a city was, under the law of Wyoming, a "taxing precinct" within the meaning of the act in question, and that, therefore, of course, the assessment made by the territorial board and the apportionment made by the county commissioner was binding.

In the Wyoming case, moreover, the railroad assessment act, containing a general repealing clause, was passed subsequently to the city charter; while in the case at hand the act providing for the assessment of special school district taxes of the county assessors, was passed subsequently to the act creating the territorial board.

Yours very truly,

WALTER MURPHY,
County Attorney.

ANALYSIS OF THE LABOR AND CAPITAL QUESTION.

THERE appeared recently in the New York Telegram an article from the pen of Moses Oppenheimer, on the labor question. It is remarkable for the clearness of its statement of the situation, while its prescription for the cure of the evils it depicts is conspicuously absurd. It is here reproduced:

"Homestead is but an incident of the tremendous struggles for a new adjustment of the relations between capital and labor. Within less than one year we have witnessed the violent outbreaks in Tennessee, in Cesar d'Alene, in Homestead, occurring among a class of toilers drawn largely, if not mainly, from the native-born element supposed to be much more law abiding and conservative than the much abused 'ignorant foreigners.' Within the last decade we have seen tremendous strikes and lockouts among the railroad men, the miners, the iron workers, the telegraph operators, the dock laborers, the building trades, and so forth, all indicating to the student of social relations the growing unrest of the working masses in this country, all emphasizing the fact that the political institutions—if truly free they are—have not as yet secured to the toiling millions that happiness the pursuit of which is guaranteed to them as a sacred and inalienable right.

"The events at Homestead show with a glaring light the present capital class successfully call on the whole civil and military force of the State to back it up against its striking employees. The letter and the spirit of the laws plainly sustain that position. Mr. Frick, the chairman of the Carnegie Company, represents but the logical and consistent position of his class. Capitalists go into business for profit—the more the better. Everything else is subordinate to this highest aim. They buy the necessary labor power according to the law of supply and demand. They claim the right to make the terms and conditions according to circumstances, with the sole view to the success of their business. They are buyers; if the sellers try combinations against them they seek to outwit and overcome them. All this is but consistent from their point of view, an integral part of our industrial and economical system. If this produces an satisfactory result, then the system itself should be attacked, not the single individual representing it.

"On the other hand the vendors of labor power, dimly realizing that they must sell themselves in order to gain a livelihood, are casting about for ways and means by which to improve and strengthen their position in the market. Hence that tremendous movement toward organization, hence the discussion of methods of reform.

"After half a century's effort, trade unions have some results to show; but they have also brought about the natural sequence of capitalist counter combinations. The strike and the boycott are answered by the lockout and the blacklist. Thus production is carried on in a sort of latent warfare among its chief factors, interrupted only by patched up truces. The weakest point in regard to labor organizations is that a large portion of workers remain outside, serving as a club by the use of which organized labor may be downed whenever capitalists are willing to pay the cost of the fight. No less an expert than John Burns, the famous English labor leader, frankly admitted this in a remarkable address recently delivered before a large audience in London. In all great strikes and lockouts the workers are thus made to fight against themselves, and the forces that ought to stand united in a common interest remain hopelessly disrupted. The so-called scabs, against whom the wrath of the strikers is directed, find protection at the hands of their capitalist employers, and ultimately the machinery of the State. To strikers it makes practically little difference whether they are overawed by Pinkertons, or by the police and militia. Pinkerton Winchesters, police night sticks or militia rifles are weapons, different in name only, but, as a rule, working toward the same end.

If we realize, then, that trade unionism is not satisfactory as a remedy, let us examine some of the propositions frequently made. Would the stoppage of immigration effect a cure? Look to Italy and Spain for an answer. These countries are not suffering from an influx of laborers, and yet their working classes are in a pitiable condition, resulting every now and then in violent outbreaks.

"Then there is the cry for arbitration, for laws imposing that method of settlement. As things are, it would only mean interfering with the buyer and seller of labor power. Both sides instinctively resent such meddling. In our own State, where a board of arbitration legally exists, its results are very meagre indeed. During the memorable strike on the New York Central railroad the impotence of the board was made manifest to every onlooker. The commissioners were snubbed by the spokesman of the road, and there the matter ended. It is extremely doubtful whether any law for compulsory arbitration could ever be framed in such a way as to be tolerably fair to both sides. And then, how are we going to enforce a decision considered unjust on either side? Can you make the employee go to work by force? Can you prevent the employer from shutting down his mills or mines? The working people will always think of legal arbitrators as a part of the political machine, and treat them with the suspicion and distrust in which they hold the whole class of professional politicians.

"Therefore, nothing will avail but a new adjustment by which a harmonious working of our economic order may be achieved. The conflict will last as long as the worker is not master of his tools. Between him and them stands the capitalist, taking the lion's share of the product and ever on the lookout for an increase, no matter at what cost. The capitalist as employer is a historical result. He was absolutely necessary in order to perfect production on a large scale. He is necessary no longer. He may stay in Newport or in Cluny Castle while his subordinates carry on his business or fight his battles. He becomes more and more simply an idle cost. Like the feudal system, capitalist production has outlived its usefulness, and it soon must give way to co-operative production and distribution in the interest of society.

"But then you attack the sacredness of property upon which civilized society rests! Nothing is more absurdly misapplied, than the phrase of the 'sacredness of property.' What is the object of attacks on private property in the means of production. Let us bear in mind that such property is created by organized society, and changes its forms according to the needs of society. To say that the present form of property is unchangeable is to deny historical progress. Property in slaves, property under the feudal system had their day, and ceased when no longer serviceable to society. Necessity is a strong master and will make the change regarding the property in means of production. The days of our present industrial system are numbered once the masses clearly realize that co-operation must take the place of murderous competition. In a country where the right of revolution is fundamentally recognized no change in the interest of the public well is impossible or illegitimate.

"Such is the lesson of Homestead."

The article is analytical and logical until it reaches the remedy, which is revolutionary. Our disagreement with it does not apply to the principle of co-operation as a remedial means. Our exception relates to what Mr. Oppenheimer inappropriately calls co-operation. He applies the term to what would be a species of coercive communism, the basis of which would be seizure of the means of production and their subsequent distribution to be conducted co-operatively for the benefit of society.

The first step toward such a system would be the direct opposite of co-operation—confiscation. Such a movement would precipitate the bloodiest revolution on record. The Amalgamated Trades Union at Homestead seems to be possessed of Mr. Oppenheimer's socialistic ideas, as, in a manifesto issued by it, the claim was made that the workmen had a property right in the Carnegie works because they had, by their labor, helped to produce them, and the government was asked to sustain, by its powers, this proposition. To apply the term co-operation—which implies mutuality—to a condition which involves a conflict between the parties in interest is ridiculous. If ever the time shall come when labor shall make the demand and insist upon it, by force if necessary, that the capitalists shall surrender possession of the means of production, then will a sanguinary struggle be precipitated that will throw ordinary civil strife into the shade of forgetfulness. Instead of co-operation it would be class against class, and man against man. The race is not educated out of selfishness into self-denial yet. Until that time shall come social affairs will be in perpetual commotion. Such ideas of co-operation as those of Mr. Oppenheimer cannot become realities at present. Attempts to enforce them would lead to indescribable woe and disaster.

A CHANGE DEMANDED.

WITH Kesler on the Justice's seat and Powers at the bar, the acquittal of the two saloon men who were charged with violating the Sunday ordinance is not remarkable. And yet the evidence was very clear and straight. A number of men testified to having bought and drank intoxicants on the premises of the defendants on Sunday, July 24th. If there were some trifling discrepancies developed under the cross-fire of attorney Powers, they were insignificant in the light of the undisputed evidence of other witnesses. But when the palpable errors of the defending attorney were adopted and repeated by the court, it was evident that the prosecution had little chance to gain the case.

This is all in line with the tender policy exhibited towards convicted saloon keepers, and shows that if the work inaugurated by the Mayor and Captain of Police is to be carried on effectually, some other magistrate will have to hear complaints and impose penalties. The prosecution of lawless saloon keepers at present amounts to very little more than a song-and-dance performance.

THE SCRIBE AND THE ATTORNEY.

THE Ordin Standard contains a strong yet respectful article from the trenchant pen of J. R. McBride in response to the two-column assault upon him by C. C. Goodwin. Although the latter is an experienced writer and in a certain class of literature has achieved some success, he does not come near in force and keenness, in pointed yet polished sentences, in sarcastic and well turned arguments, to the practiced lawyer and debater who shows him up so effectively in the Standard. His opponent intimates that he will keep up the fight as long as he continues to assail and slander him. Discretion is said to be the better part of valor. We have had mud-slinging and vituperation enough from the journalist; a little of the better part of valor will now be the right thing and may save him from being utterly used up by the lawyer.

RETURNED ELDERS.

Elder Brigham Johnson, of Provo, returned to this city today from the Sandwich Islands, for which part of the world he left to fulfil a mission on May 24th, 1899. He labored constantly and faithfully among the natives of the islands until released. Elder Johnson returns home in good health and spirits. He took the afternoon train for Provo.

Elder Nepht Edwards of Beaver City left his home for a mission to Europe on February 16th, 1891. He traveled in the Scottish Conference the first ten months, at the expiration of which time he was transferred to the Birmingham Conference where he labored until released. His health was not good during the latter part of his mission and he is glad to get home.

RELIGIOUS.

Sunday Services.

Religious services were held in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, July 31, 1892, commencing at 2 p.m.; President Angus M. Cannon presiding. The choir sang the hymn:

How are Thy servants blest, O, Lord!
How sure is their defence.

Prayer by Elder Aurelius Miner.
The choir sang the hymn beginning:

Though deep'ning trials throng your way,
Press on, press on, ye Saints of God.

The Priesthood of the Twenty-third Ward administered in the ordinance of the Sacrament.

ELDER B. H. ROBERTS

addressed the congregation. He said that the Gospel of Jesus Christ was very fruitful in subject matter, and the current history of the world—with which we might make ourselves acquainted through the medium of the press every day—brought forth new evidence that the world was really in need of the Gospel as a panacea for those ills with which mankind was afflicted, and which, in truth, offered the only remedy for the evils of which men complained. The other day a noted public speaker made the assertion that over the counters of the 241,000 saloons in the United States there passed last year, in round numbers, $1,507,000,000; and when we were confronted with facts of that kind, it seemed to him pretty clear proof that the world was in need of that part of the Gospel known to the Latter-day Saints as the Word of Wisdom. The direct word of the Lord was that wine and strong drinks were not good for the children of men. But this was not the only item out of the very long list of evils that the Gospel of Jesus Christ would eventually cure.

Of late we had many manifestations of a very serious disease in the body politic of the United States. The speaker here referred to the labor troubles in Idaho and Pennsylvania, and said that these were symptoms of the great disease which was reaching out the vitals of one of the grandest States that had been brought into existence in modern times. If there was one thing more than another for which our age would be accounted remarkable it was, perhaps, the rapid accumulation of wealth in the hands of the few. The fortunes of many of the private citizens of the United States far outstripped the wealth possessed by princes and kings in former times. Many of these vast possessions had been obtained within the past quarter of a century; and this wealth brought power with it, as we had seen by recent events in Pennsylvania—such power that its possessors might pass by the constituted authority of the State and employ what was equivalent to an armed soldiery of itself, and by such force guard that which they had accumulated. On the other hand, the masses—men who were compelled to earn their livelihood by the sweat of their brow—were to be observed organizing into labor societies and creating a bond of sympathy, that they might not be completely at the mercy of this aggregated wealth. On their part was seen a very unwise disposition to resort to violence in order to resist what they conceived to be a pressure of capital upon labor, and unless some fortunate circumstance should arise to restrain both these forces in the resistance of each other, this generation was promised a conflict with which the great rebellion of a quarter of a century ago would be, by comparison, a summer breeze to a tempest. The people who were thus arraying themselves on either side had need of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. This great conflict between capital and labor confronted the statesmen of our age and sorely perplexed their wisdom. It had been beyond the power of the philosopher to grapple with it, so far, or to give us any intelligible solution of the problem presented.

Those who had already undertaken in other countries, France and England, to cope with the difficulty had failed in the accomplishment of their good designs. They seemed to have forgotten that it was a world that had gone wrong, and that it would require the wisdom of a God to set it right—that these problems were too much for human effort. The socialists and communists would settle the difficulty by changing conditions. They believed that all the evils which exist had grown out of our social conditions, and that if these were changed the result would be changed also, making the world if not absolutely good at least much better.

In his humble opinion, these men working from the outside, through their organizations, had begun at the wrong end; he believed that the Gospel promised to be much more successful, for the reason that while it did not entirely ignore the influence of conditions upon the children of men, it realized the fact that one must begin with man himself instead of at the conditions which environ him. If the man were corrected and placed right, conditions would regulate themselves or be easily met; while if the man remained untouched it would be found impossible to create the conditions desirable.

The Gospel of Jesus Christ began by correcting the evils which exist in the world by teaching each individual repentance of his sins and transgressions, by undertaking to make him righteous; and in connection with the improvement which should come to our race through repentance the conditions would gradually change for the better. It must follow as clearly as the day follows the night that if the individuals in a community or in a nation became righteous, then the nation itself would become so. He believed that the ancient Prophet understood the value of righteousness when he said that it exalteth a nation, but that sin is a reproach to any people. If half the inhabitants of the United States were righteous, and were not proud, high-minded, disobedient, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God—if they loved justice and truth, and possessed the great virtues of charity and brotherly kindness—it would be found possible so to adjust the question of the remuneration of labor, that labor, on its part, would be willing to act for the advantage of those who employed it, that there would be no friction between the two forces—no need of strikes on the one hand and lock-outs on the other. If each man loved his neighbor as himself, and each one sought his neighbor's good rather than his own—the high standard of moral virtue contemplated in the Gospel of Jesus Christ—then those conditions which now portended great evil to the nation of which we formed a part would not prevail. That prophet of ancient times was very wise who said, "Make me not rich lest I be proud and high-minded; make me not poor lest I be tempted to steal"—recognizing that between these two extremes was a happy means that was desirable for the children of men to attain.

"Mormonism," as it was called by the world, was no dead religion dwelling upon the problems of past ages, but had in it those principles which could operate for the redemption of mankind from the evils by which we were surrounded. We were driven to the conclusion that our Heavenly Father had provided abundantly for His children, but that in the distribution of the gifts and resources which He had placed upon the earth there was something fundamentally faulty. In one of His revelations to this Church He said, "There is abundance in the earth, and to spare, for the wants of man;" and yet we found the unreasonable accumulation of wealth on the one hand and the direct poverty on the other.

The solution offered in the Gospel began by recognizing God as the Author of the earth and the Possessor of it, and that which we held was merely a stewardship of those things committed unto our care. In the control of that stewardship individuality was to be preserved. It was not intended that a man should lose his agency as in the schemes contrived by communists and socialists, but that his stewardship should be given to him and he be held responsible to God for its management. There should be something higher in view than mere personal aggrandizement.

The principle of reforming mankind had a wider application than they had yet given to it. It would not only reach men in their social conditions, and in the industrial system that should obtain, but even in the sphere of civil government. The fountain of righteousness was the power that should undo the gordian knot which now troubled us.

We talked sometimes of centralized power in government and the dangers which were threatened from it; in fact, the experience of the world read us a sad chapter upon that subject. But if the world could be assured always of righteous kings, ministers and judges, it would make no difference how much power should be centered in them. One of the old Nephite kings (Mosiah) comprehended this subject when about to advocate a change in the form of the Nephite government from a kingdom to a republic. Said he, "If you could always have righteous kings, then it would be meet that you should have a king to rule over you." But he recognized the difficulty of securing righteous men to rule; and therefore it was his judgment to put it out of the power of a king to lead the people astray. So he advised the people to do away with a kingly form of government and establish instead a government of judges elected by themselves. If righteousness prevailed over the earth it would matter but little what form of government was adopted. But the difficulty was that men were not righteous, that kings would constantly abuse their power, that classes would have power and grasp it wherever they might and by whatever means were at their disposal. Hence it became necessary that this power should be restrained and circumscribed, and that they should be demanded to remain within constitutional lines, that the liberty of the people might be preserved. The Prophet Joseph Smith recognized the value of this principle when he said, "Let a government by good men live for ever;" because in a government of that kind the rights of the people would be assured, the authority of the government would be respected, and there would be no evil that should come upon the people.

The chief corner-stone of the edifice of peace and good will should be the principle of righteousness. The doctrines of Christ were as necessary in the working out of problems in the future as they were in the present and had been in the past. The principles of faith and repentance were eternal, and, clinging to these, let us go on unto perfectness.

DEATH OF WILLIE D. JOHNSON.

Will you please publish the following for the satisfaction of the father, relatives, friends and acquaintances of the late Willie D. Johnson, who, as was stated in your publication of July 27th, died on the 8th day of July, from the effects of a bite from a coyote received the night of the 3rd of June, an account of which has been previously given. The article referred to says "and on July 8th" expired, after having experienced all the frightful sufferings attendant on that most dreadful of all maladies. The date of his passing away is correct; the remainder of the quotation is somewhat inaccurate. It has been stated by those who have witnessed several cases before that this was of the shortest duration, and lacked some of the more horrible features of hydrophobia that they had ever seen or read of.

Willie told us that on awaking on the morning of the 7th of July he felt "quite miserable," and had never felt so queer before. At breakfast he tried to drink, but could not swallow water. Being on the range some twelve or fourteen miles from home, after stock, he was obliged to ride and drive cattle that distance. Riding through water first caused indescribable feelings of melancholy to come over him. He soon became very thirsty, but could not drink. Arriving home about 4 p. m. he was still nearly choked for want of a drink, but could not swallow. He then took to his bed. His companion, who was with him all day, knew nothing of his being unwell. He seemed to realize the cause and final outcome of his sickness, yet exercised much faith in the laying on of hands by the Elders for the healing of the sick. He seemed to suffer only occasionally from an obstruction of some kind in the throat, and from thirst. We now sent a messenger after the father, who was absent, and could not possibly reach home before about noon of the 9th inst., although every arrangement was made to speed him on his way. On the morning of the 8th Willie appeared much better, and by drawing water through a straw he managed to swallow some. We felt quite hopeful of his recovery. He occasionally said something in a peculiar way, or laughed at something spoken by those around him.

He so continued until about half-past three p. m., when he began to feel very bad. This was due to the obstruction in the throat. He made efforts to force this up and spit it out, but he grew gradually worse, until his sufferings at times seemed unbearable. When occasionally he became easier, he would beg of us not to hold him here by our faith, but to let him go. About a quarter-past seven o'clock, all hope of his recovery being gone, we felt to ask the Lord to be merciful, and, if He designed to take the sufferer to Himself, to release him from pain. Therefore all present were asked to unite in prayer to this end, which they did, and received immediate answer; for ere the prayer was ended Willie ceased his struggles and lay perfectly calm and quiet until eight o'clock, when he passed away without a struggle. All felt that the Lord had indeed been merciful and kind. Willie did not lose consciousness until he ceased to suffer. We had the sympathy of the entire community, and many were there to witness it. I hope I may never witness such a scene again.

The father did not arrive until about 3 p. m. on the 9th, worn and weary with travel and the great strain of mind. It was a heartrending scene, witnessed by numbers of sympathizing friends—an almost heartbroken father gazing upon the lifeless form of a beloved son. Who can realize the feelings of the bereaved parent? No one but those who have passed through the same trial, surrounded with the same train of circumstances.

The funeral took place at the meeting-house and was largely attended. Discourses were delivered by Elders J. A. Little, Chas. Richens, and J. H. James. The longest procession of vehicles I have witnessed in this land followed the remains to their last resting-place.

Willie Derby Johnson was the eldest child of W. Derby Johnson, Jr., and Lucy Annie Salisbury Johnson. The latter was one of God's noblest women. She departed this life on the 26th April, 1885, under distressing circumstances, during the absence of her husband in Mexico.

Willie was born September 20, 1870, in Salt Lake City. The same fall his parents moved to Southern Utah, where he remained until the fall of 1885. Since then he has lived in Mexico. For the past two years he has attended the Brigham Young Academy at Provo, and returned home in May. He was a young man of promise, was popular among the young people of his acquaintance, and a great comfort to his father. He expected to go upon a mission the coming fall. He was preparing himself for it, and felt glad to be considered worthy. During his sickness he exhibited the utmost faith in the principles of the Gospel. We feel that there was work for him on the other side of the veil, and that his mother needed his help; for he said she came to him and told him he must come to her, as she needed him.

Some of our young people made the remark after Willie had gone to rest, that it was the greatest testimony they had ever received of the efficacy of prayer to see how suddenly he was relieved from pain, by the blessing of God.

COLONIA DIAZ, Mexico, July 31, 1892.

A REMARKABLE TRIBE.

"A remarkable tribe of Indians," said Mr. Childs, who was recently in South America, "are the Napos, who live in the northern part of Chile. Instead of wearing scalps at their belts as trophies, like the American savages the heads of their enemies dangle at their girdles. By a mysterious process known only to themselves they remove all the facial and cranial bones without cutting the skin or destroying the interior. The head is then reduced, without maiming any of the features, to the size of a man's fist."

Mr. Childs brought one of these heads with him, and his students put it in the museum of the Carnegie library here, says the Pittsburg Dispatch. In San Francisco he showed it to the County Medical society, and the doctors offered him $1000 for it. He said no sum of money would buy it. He thinks there is one in the Smithsonian institute, and outside of his own he doesn't believe there is another in the United States. The Indians discovered they could sell the heads to whites at a good price, and to prevent them from luring people into the mountains and killing them or murdering the aged of their tribe and preparing their heads, a law was passed forbidding their sale. Through the kindness of Gen. Casmano and Gen. Soroby, the American consul-general to Ecuador, Mr. Childs secured the head. He says Gen. Soroby has eight orders for heads from museums and colleges in the United States, and he is afraid he will not be able to get them.

The head and face that Mr. Childs has is not as large as a baseball. By the secret process the bones were removed and the features reduced. All the hair on the original head is still there. It is long and black, and probably reached to the shoulders. The Indians put a string through the lip for every enemy they have slain. This head has four strings in the lip, and the mouth is drawn out of shape. The microscope reveals the pores of the skin, greatly crowded together.

The head was cut off even with the shoulders, and there is a hole in the wind pipe directly under the chin, evidently where the victim was stabbed.

A number of people have looked at the head, and all are puzzled how it was prepared.

Geo. Caamano thinks that immediately after the bones are taken out red hot gravel is put into the head. The heat reduces the size, tans the skin and makes it hard and tough, then the gravel is removed.

CITY COUNCIL

The City Council met in regular session last night. President Lofbourn in the chair.

The councilmen in attendance were: Rob, Folland, Hardy, Moran, Horn, Bell, Lawson, Ewing, Evans, Beardsley, Wantland, Heles, Simondli. Absent—Karrick.

In the absence of Recorder Stanton, his deputy, Elmer Elsworth, performed the clerical labors of the session. The minutes of the last meeting were read, amended and approved, after which were read and referred as follows:

Kelsey & Gillespie asked to be allowed to construct their own sidewalks. B. W. of public works.

Mrs. G. W. Snell, by her attorneys, offered to compromise her damage suit against the city. Committee on claims.

J. A. Benton and others asked that certain highways be repaired.

Miller & Miller asked for an extension of watermain on Windsor avenue. Committee on irrigation.

The Oregon Short Line & Utah Northern railway asked permission to construct an additional track on Fourth West street. Committee on streets.

John R. Smith offered to sell a twelve and one-half acre farm with water right to the city. Committee on public grounds.

John Robertson and others asked that Second North street, between State and Arsenal streets, be graded and widened. Committee on streets.

H. Dinwoody and others asked permission to construct their own sidewalk. Committee on streets.

James Flowerly and others asked that the Council take steps compelling Watson Bros. and R. O. Shewell to pay the petitioners certain amounts of money alleged to be due them for work performed on North Temple street. Referred to the city attorney.

A PLEA FROM OVER JORDAN.

I. A. Benton and fifteen others presented the following:

To the Honorable the Mayor and City Council:

SALT LAKE CITY,

Your petitioners would respectfully call your attention to that strip of country which lies west of the Jordan and within the city limits and north of North Temple street. That part of the city pays a large city tax and necessarily it receives none of the advantages of a city government; city police have never been seen there, and indeed are not considered; no city lights are extended there and none of the benefits of city government are within the scope of the enjoyment of the residents of that part of the city.

The only thing the city can do for us is to improve our highways. They being within the city, the county does not consider them within its jurisdiction and does not aid them with county funds; under these circumstances it appears to us, the subscribers of this petition, that it is only just and fair that improvements should be made in that part of the country on the highways and in building bridges across the Jordan to connect that part with the rest of the city.

There is no good or suitable road or bridge north of North Temple street. At Ninth North street there is a bridge without any side rails, and the whole bridge is not in a suitable condition for crossing. That street should be extended westerly to the city limits and other streets should be opened. There are no streets running west of the lane or east and west streets at all north of North Temple street; two or three streets should be opened up through that part of the country. In that manner the population of the city would be largely increased as the lands there are eligible for fine building sites. All it lacks are roads and bridges to make the premises accessible and the result would be that the taxable property would very largely increase in value within a short period. Large public improvements are now being contemplated within that region. The building of these roads would not only invite others to improve but would enhance the city's revenue by giving increased valuation upon which to levy taxes.

In view of these circumstances we ask that a committee be appointed or that this matter be referred to some standing committee to see how best the country west of the roads can be built up, and that the money paid for city taxes from said property be expended in building bridges and streets beyond the Jordan.

W. E. Hubbard asked that Tenth South or Raper street be graded and otherwise repaired. Committee on streets.

E. G. Hiller sent in a bill for $400 for extra work in auditing assessment rolls for 1890 in regard to the Clute shortage matter. Committee on claims.

H. P. Lythe sent in a bill for $100 for twenty days work performed in the same matter. Committee on claims.

ADDITIONAL HUNGRY GRAES.

Watermaster Harvey asked that he be allowed $1 per day for the use of his horse and buggy and road cart from May, 1892, up to the present time. Jordan Canal and Irrigation committee.

Frank L. Hines, street supervisor, sent in a similar request.

Moran—I move that the claim be not allowed.

Rich—I second the motion. I do not know why it is that the city should pay for the keeping of that gentleman's horse.

Bell—The city does not feed the horses belonging to these gentlemen but in the review of city salaries it was thought best to allow them a horse and buggy each at the city's expense.

Moran—About three months ago we passed an ordinance reducing the salaries of the heads of those departments from $2400 to $2000 per year. Now, it looks to me as if those gentlemen were trying to get that $400. But their scheme will not carry if I can help it.

Lawson—I am unalterably opposed to granting this request.

Wantland—I think the matters should go to the finance committee.

Moran—Such reference is only folly. That committee made the reduction from $2400 to $2000.

Rich—The city is now boarding twenty-six horses of heads of departments. That is enough.

Evans moved to amend to refer to a select committee of five.

Moran moved as a substitute that it be referred to the committee on streets. Carried.

RECONSIDERED.

The reference of both communications was reconsidered and referred to a select committee of five, consisting of Evans, Moran, Lawson, Hardy and Simondli.

SUNDAY SPRINKLING.

Street Supervisor Hines recommended that East and West Drives and First West Street be sprinkled on Sunday; also that the streets leading to the depot be sprinkled during the night time. Committee on sprinkling.

WHERE SHALL THEY BE PLACED?

The city engineer announced that paving would soon be commenced on First and Second South Streets, and that plans and specifications could not be perfected until steps were taken as to the location of telephone and other poles.

Moran moved that the matter go over until Friday night and be made a special order of business.

Lawson—Thought the question an important one and should be thoroughly considered; he was in favor of Moran's motion, which carried, taking with it the proposition that the city engineer furnish each member of the council with a copy of the plans and specifications.

MASS MEETING RESOLUTIONS.

On motion of Moran the rules were suspended to allow Dr. Hild to present and read the resolutions adopted at the meeting held in the Wasatch Hall on Monday night and published in last evening's News.

Moran—I move that the resolutions lay on the table until later in the evening. Carried.

On the recommendation of the city engineer and city attorney the Saltair Railway company was instructed to remove within ten days, from South Temple street, all obstructions that impede travel thereon, such as the houses lately erected there, etc. Adopted.

THAT TROUBLESOME HAND ORGAN.

Chief of Police Paul submitted a communication from Mr. Eccles of the Union Pacific asking that the hand organ grinders at the corner of Main and Second South streets be removed.

HE ALWAYS WANTS HALF.

Galiezzi, the dog man, reported that he had paid $14 for the removal of dog cages from the city hall to the canine pound. He asked that the city pay one half.

Lawson—I thought that the time would come when this man Galiezzi's greed would be exhausted, but it seems that I am mistaken, for like Tennyson's brook it runs on forever. I therefore move that the claim be rejected. Lost.

On motion of Moran the claim was referred to the recorder.

THE CANINE MAN'S REPORT.

Mr. Galiezzi sent in the following report for the month of July:

Number of dogs destroyed.....	72
Number of dog registered.....	146
Amount for registration.....	$346
Amount of pound fees.....	17

Amount due for killing dogs..... 36

Half of the amount collected was voted to the appropriation list in favor of Mr. Galleazzi and the rest of the report was referred to the city recorder.

GRADE OF CENTRE STREET.

The committee on streets recommended that the city grade Centre street under the supervision of the city engineer, the Salt Lake City railroad to put its tracks in the center of the street. The committee said the railway company had agreed to pay $500. It was moved that the report be referred back to the committee.

Mr. Lawson favored this action and said that Mr. Wantland was very eager to grade a street for the railway company at the public expense.

Mr. Wantland—I rise to a personal explanation, as I am getting somewhat weary at listening to that gentleman's objectionable personalities. I am not here as champion of the railroad company but as a representative of the people.

Hardy—I think the committee's report should be adopted, as a matter of justice to the company and taxpayers in that part of the city and as a matter of economy to the city.

More discussion followed, and Moran moved to defer action for one week. Carried.

LIQUOR LICENSE REFUSED.

The committee on license reported adversely on the petition of Frank Monroe for a retail liquor license in his saloon adjoining the People's Theatre on Commercial street. Adopted.

MONEY FOR CLUTE.

The committee on finance recommended that the city return to E. R. Clute the amount overpaid by him in 1910 to the municipal treasury of $314. Adopted.

PAUL'S AND DONOVAN'S ACTIONS DISAPPROVED.

The committee on police reported as follows in the matter of the petition of Jacob Moritz and others asking for the removal of Chief Paul and Captain Donovan for breaking in the doors of certain saloons:

We learn from the testimony given before the committee that the officers referred to did not have warrants for the arrests of the parties in the case mentioned in the petition, and while we do not know that their action in breaking in the doors without necessary warrants for the arrest of parties was in accordance with the law, yet we disapprove of such action on the part of the officers, though we do not recommend their removal. Adopted.

EIGHT HOUR ORDINANCE.

Moran introduced an eight hour labor ordinance which passed to its second reading.

No action was taken on the resolutions presented by Dr. Huff.

The City Council held a special meeting last night to discuss the proposal, specifications and contract for curbing and paving East Temple Street from South Temple to Fourth South Street, First South Street from State to West Temple Street and Second South Street from State to West Temple Street.

President Loofburrow rapped for order at 8:45 o'clock, three quarters of an hour after the time fixed by ordinance.

The members who were in attendance were: Rich, Folland, Hardy, Moran, Horn, Lawson, Ewing, Evans, Beardsley, Simonds, Wantland, Helms. Absent—Karrick.

After the minutes of the previous session had been read and approved, the following from the city engineer was read:

Gentlemen—As contracts for paving East Temple, First and Second South streets are now about to be let and the question of what width from the curb and stone portion of the pavement shall be made to extend has not yet been determined, I respectfully ask for instruction in the matter in order that I may complete my plans accordingly. I suggest that some portion of the same streets should be designated for the erection of telephone and other poles so that the present poles may be removed before the work of paving is begun.

Moran—I move to lay the paper on the table until later in the evening.

Carried.

SANITARY ORDINANCE.

On motion of Beardsley the substitute sanitary ordinance was taken up. The measure was read the third time and caused considerable discussion, most of which was rambling and unimportant.

Hardy moved that the matter lay over until next Tuesday night and that instead of the ordinance embracing the entire city that the committee on sanitation reduce the district and define the same by metes and bounds. The motion was lost on a vote of 3 to 2.

On motion of Hardy the district was defined as designated in the body of the ordinance.

Minor amendments were made and the measure passed. It stands as follows:

A BILL FOR AN ORDINANCE

Providing receptacles for ashes, garbage, manure and sweepings of sidewalks and providing for protection from paper and other refuse matter and for the disposition of night soil and prescribing penalties.

Sec. 1. Be it ordained by the City Council of Salt Lake City that it shall be the duty of every owner, tenant, lessee and occupant of any and every building or place of business within the business district described as follows: Beginning at the northeast corner of First West and South Temple street and running thence east on both sides of South Temple street to Second East street, thence south on west side of Second East Street to Third South, thence west on both sides of Third South to First West street, thence north on east side of First West street to point of beginning and all streets within said boundary. Also on both sides of South Temple street from First West to First East Street. On both sides of Third West street from North Temple street to Third South street and on both sides of Second South street from First West street to Sixth West street and on Sixth West street and on Fifth West street from First South street to Fifth South street and on both sides of First South street from First West street to Fifth West street, to provide or cause to be provided and at all times to keep or cause to be kept and provided within such building or place of business a metallic vessel, with cover of same material and with handles, or a fireproof or brick bin for receiving and holding, without leakage, all ashes, sweepings and other non-combustible rubbish that may accumulate in said building or place of business. That said receptacles shall be emptied promptly when filled, and shall be placed in a position easily accessible to the scavenger. It is further provided that property owners shall have sidewalks in front of their respective places of business swept each morning, Sundays excepted, before the hour of 8 a.m.

Sec. 2. A separate suitable vessel shall be provided for garbage and liquid refuse, said vessel to be free from leakage and provided with handles. All receptacles for garbage and liquid substances shall be placed in an accessible position for the scavenger and emptied daily. When placed in front of premises they shall be so deposited before the hour of 7 a. m. and removed within the premises as soon as emptied.

Sec. 3. Within the limits of Ninth East and Sixth West, and Third North and Seventh South, and from State to T street in plat D, and all of plat E south of Peach street, and outside the business district hereinbefore described, there shall be provided and kept by the owner or occupant of every building, a suitable vessel free from leakage, in which shall be placed all garbage and liquid refuse that accumulate in said building or premises, said receptacles shall be emptied not less than once during each week in summer and not less than once in two weeks during the winter, in each case oftener if so directed by the sanitary inspector.

Sec. 4. Within the limits described in section 3, ashes and noncombustible rubbish shall not be deposited or kept in the same vessel or receptacles with garbage or liquid substance.

Sec. 5. No house slops, rubbish, ashes or garbage shall be deposited within the limits except as hereinbefore described in section 3.

Sec. 6. It is hereby made unlawful for any person or persons or firm, agent, clerk or servant of any person or firm to sweep or deposit into any of the gutters or ditches within said city limits any manure, sticks, stones, dirt, dust or any other rubbish of any kind or to wash or empty pit-tons or slops of any kind in any canal, ditch or flume within the city limits or to sweep, throw or deposit upon any of the sidewalks, within the limits of Salt Lake City, any papers, sticks or other rubbish of any kind.

Sec. 7. No manure shall be allowed to accumulate in any premises within the limits, described in Section 3, to any quantity greater than one cart load and shall be removed as provided in the ordinance.

Sec. 8. No night soil shall be deposited or buried on any premises within the limits, described in section 3.

Sec. 9. All garbage, manure, night soil, ashes and other refuse and offal shall be removed to a place directed by the sanitary inspector, provided that all carts and vehicles for carrying any nauseous or offensive substances other than night soil, shall be strong and tight and that the sides shall be made so high above the load or contents that no part of such contents shall fall, leak or spill therefrom and either the vehicles or vessel carried by it shall be so covered as to be inoffensive, provided further that no part of the contents of any privy, vault or cesspool, except substances other than excrement, shall be removed therefrom, nor shall the same be transported through any of the streets of the city except the same shall be transported by means of an airtight vessel or in such a manner as shall prevent entirely the escape of any noxious or offensive odors therefrom, and by order of the Board of Health. All dead animals shall be removed in such a manner that they shall be covered from view during the process of removal.

Sec. 10. No person shall empty or attempt to empty any vault, privy, sink or cesspool in the district described in section 3, except pursuant to a permit therefor received from the board of health.

Sec. 11. Any person or persons failing to comply with or who violates any of the provisions of the foregoing sections of this ordinance shall be fined in any sum not less than five ($5.00) dollars, nor more than one hundred dollars ($100.00), and shall in addition to such punishment be fined in the further sum of five dollars ($5.00) for every twenty-four (24) hours of failure or refusal to comply with the said ordinances.

Sec. 12. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force thirty days after its passage and approval.

THE PAVING PROPOSITION.

It was nearly 10 o'clock when the sanitary ordinance was disposed of and the paving proposition taken up.

Moran inquired if Utah cement was specified in the contract.

Wentland—No, it is not.

Moran—Well, I certainly think it should be.

Lawson—I agree with Mr. Moran. The favoring of imported material to the exclusion of the Utah product is unjust to our citizens and taxpayers.

Hardy.—Nobody favors the raising of home products more than myself. I expect to pay for some of this paving to the extent of a considerable amount of money. But my experience with the Utah cement has been such that I would as soon have the ordinary dust of the streets for a road bed.

The city engineer was called upon and said that hydraulic cement was the standard. There were two kinds of cement, viz: Portland and natural cement. The former was an artificial preparation made from a variety of ingredients uniformly mixed and tested. The latter was an article taken from the mines from various strata. There were fifty kinds of Portland cement?

Moran wanted to make it incumbent to use Utah material.

To this the engineer replied he would feel it his duty to file a written protest against the use of any kind of cement until it had been thoroughly tested.

Moran—Mr. Doremus, what kind of cement is the best?

Mr. Doremus—As a professional man it would be unfair for me to answer that question as I do not want to advocate the use of any particular kind.

We have received as many as ten car loads of Portland cement which we have been obliged to reject. Some of the Utah material will stand the test but a great proportion of it will not.

Moran—Is it not possible to procure enough of it that will?

Mr. Doremus again explained that he was not a representative of any cement company and hesitated in answering the question, but being pressed by Moran he said "No," very emphatically. He did not believe that it was possible to get ten barrels of good cement out of a shipment of 100 of the Utah product.

Lawson—We should certainly use home material. Some people say that it has not been sufficiently tested.

Well, who is going to test it for us? We cannot expect to import it to California, Portland, England or elsewhere. We import too much material. That is the cause of the hard times in this city. I wonder when that practice is going to cease.

CURBING.

Considerable discussion occurred on the curbing question.

Wentland offered the following resolution which was adopted:

That the city engineer and board of public works be requested to arrange the specifications for street paving so as to allow the use of curbing three feet in length.

A SEVENTY POUND TEST.

Lawson moved to make the test seventy pounds per square inch instead of 100 pounds.

Folland thought that the Utah cement should be as thoroughly tested as any other. To reduce the test simply to encourage the home product was poor economy. He moved that all natural cement used shall be equal in quality to the best Rosendale, and when mixed with two parts of sand to one of cement, and after having been in the air one day and in the water six days, it shall stand a tensile strain of twenty pounds per square inch. Carried.

HOME PRODUCTS.

Mr. Rich offered the following:

Resolved, That it be the sense of this Council that all material used in the paving of streets and sidewalks shall be of home products as far as practicable, and home labor shall have the preference on all public work.

The resolution was adopted.

THE DETECTIVE ORDINANCE.

Three or four motions were made simultaneously by different members to adjourn, but Lawson took the floor and demanded that the ordinance creating a detective bureau be taken up. Carried. He offered the following amendment, which carried:

Be it further ordained by the City Council that the marshal and chief of police shall have the power, whenever in their judgment necessary, to call upon the chief of detectives for assistance; also that the chief of detectives shall have the power to call upon the marshal and the chief of police whenever necessary, for assistance.

Ewing said that he was opposed to the proposition on general principles. It would create a jealousy and add additional expense to the city government; besides it would conflict with present arrangements.

Folland wanted it distinctly understood that it would not be an additional expense. The city had maintained such a force, but without a head for sometime.

Wentland wanted to know how many detectives the city had.

Folland replied that there was but one left, some of them had been discharged and another had been sent to the penitentiary. (Laughter.)

Heise—I move that this matter be referred back to the city attorney with the request that he report this council at its next meeting as to the legality of the ordinance.

Folland—That is the most ridiculous proposition a man could make on this question. This ordinance has just come from the hands of the city attorney; to ask him now if it is legal seems to be child's play. He is employed by this council as a legal adviser. If he has drawn up an unlawful measure then for one I am ready to ask him to resign now and here. As councilmen with constituents to serve we cannot allow a man to make a fool of us in the manner intimated.

Heise—Oh, you need not get hot about it.

The Chair was obliged to rap order after which Lawson insisted that the ordinance be placed upon its passage. The vote was 7 ayes and 8 noes, but eight votes being necessary for the passage of any ordinance, it was declared lost for the want of the necessary majority.

HEISE'S FAILURE.

Heise took the floor in order to offer a resolution calling, it is said, for the removal of Police Justice Keeler and the appointment of Justice Gee as his successor.

The motion to adjourn was pressed so strongly that he was not recognized. Adjourned until Tuesday night.

PRIESTHOOD MEETING.

The Priesthood of the Salt Lake Stake of Zion convened in the Assembly Hall, Salt Lake City, today (Saturday), August 6th, 1892, at 11 a.m., President Angus M. Cannon and Counsellors presiding.

The meeting commenced with singing and prayer, after which the roll was called and responded to by a goodly number of the presiding officers of the various quorums of the Priesthood.

All the wards of the Stake were properly represented excepting the Second and Thirteenth city wards, and Riverton of the country.

Eleven young brethren, upon the recommendation of their respective Bishops, received certificates authorizing their ordination to the office of Elder, on condition of their promising to honor and magnify their office and calling if ordained.

Bishop John R. Winder, of the Presiding Bishopric of the Church, gave a detailed report of the progress being made upon the Salt Lake Temple. He stated that this building would be completed by the time specified, viz, April 6, 1893. Two hundred and twenty-five men were now employed, and they were working with a vim and zeal seldom if ever witnessed by such a large body of men. They were doing faithful, honest and reliable work. The amount required to finish the Temple has been greatly under-estimated. This is owing to extra work and finishings overlooked at the time the estimate of expense was made. But the greatest care is taken with the means furnished by the people, every cent being made the most of.

President C. W. Penrose referred to a misunderstanding that prevailed in one quorum of Elders as to the ordinance of administering to the sick. The idea was entertained that there must be two or more Elders in officiating. The error arose from a mistaken idea as to the letter of the revelation concerning those who had lost faith. They were to be nourished with herbs and mild food, but not by the hand of an enemy and two Elders or more were to lay hands on them. But in the case of those who had faith it was different. One Elder or more might administer according to circumstances. Even those who had no priesthood might lay hands on the sick in faith. It was through faith that the sick were healed.

President Joseph E. Taylor endorsed these remarks and spoke of the prevalence of disease, the abuse of medicine, the proper rearing of children, the selection of suitable food and the necessity of a closer observance by all, old and young, of the Word of Wisdom, also the cultivation of faith and obedience to the law and counsel of the Lord.

President Angus M. Cannon elaborated on these subjects, showed the folly of the idea that one Elder could not administer to the sick, related some of his personal experience of God's answer to prayer and administration, inveighed against the employment of unknown doctors and reliance on man instead of God, deprecated man worship and advised dependences upon the Lord through faith. He spoke also of the evils of too much amusement and unrestricted dancing, and advised greater care in the supervision of our young people, in the observance of the Sabbath.

Bishop Winder read a letter from the First Presidency to show that the Temple could no longer be open to visitors.

Meeting adjourned until the Stake Conference, Saturday, September 3rd, at 10 a. m.

Benediction by Bishop J. R. Winder.

WASATCH STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of the Wasatch Stake of Zion convened in the Stake house, Heber, July 30 and 31. Present on the stand President Hatch and counselors, members of the High Council, Bishops of the various wards and counselors, Patriarch Hicken, President J. M. Murdock and Elders C. J. Fjelsted, of Logan, and Andrew Jensen, of Salt Lake. President A. Hatch presided.

President Hatch referred to the favorable condition of the Stake. Elder Fjelsted made some good remarks to young boys and girls who wanted to leave home and go to mining camps and other places in order to make more money than they could at home. He showed the evils that beset their paths and temptations that would likely be placed in their way, and gave some excellent instructions.

At 2 p. m. Elder T. H. Gilles spoke on the mission of an Apostle and referred to the necessity of the Saints being punctual in attending meetings and partaking of the Sacrament. Elder Andrew Jensen, of Salt Lake, adverted to his travels through the various counties, gathering information with a view of writing a history and record of this people. He made some interesting remarks on the first setting of this Territory and compared it with the present day. He impressed upon the minds of those present the importance of keeping family records of births, deaths, marriages, ordinations, etc. President Hatch and Bishop Murdock having spoken, conference adjourned till 10 a. m. Sunday.

On Sunday morning President Hatch and Elder Fjelsted made some excellent remarks, the latter on the difficulties that exist sometimes in families, and how to avoid them. Elder Jensen occupied the remainder of the time, speaking on the following subjects: the necessity of keeping the friendship of the Latter-day Saints, of being kind one towards another, the principle of tithing, relating the history of the same in its organization in these last days, explaining the proper way of paying tithes.

At 2 p. m. the clerk read the statistical report of the Stake; the Bishops reported in writing the conditions of their various wards, which showed that health, peace and prosperity prevail. Elder Wm. O'Neil of Uintah county, lately returned from a mission to Ireland, bore testimony to the truth of the principles of the Gospel. Elder Jos. Lambert, late missionary to Holland, gave some good instructions to those who had yielded obedience to the Gospel, and exhorted all to live according to its precepts. The Stake authorities were presented and unanimously sustained. President Hatch spoke on the subject of tithing and advised the Saints to be liberal; God would then bless them.

Conference adjourned for three months. HENRY CLEGG, Clerk.

MORAN'S EIGHT HOUR ORDINANCE.

The following ordinance was introduced into the City Council at Tuesday night's session by Councilman Moran, and passed to its second reading:

A bill for an ordinance making eight hours a legal day's work on public contract work.

Be it ordained by the City Council of Salt Lake City, Territory of Utah, that in all contracts made by the City of Salt Lake for the erection of buildings or repairs on public buildings, bridges, viaducts, street paving or grading, and all work on waterworks or sewerage there shall be incorporated the expressed agreement that said city and contractor or contractors shall not require or permit any employee or laborer between the hours of 6 a. m. and 6 p. m. each day to work more than eight hours upon any such building, bridge, or viaduct, or street, or other public work, and that the eight hours shall be a full and legal day's work; the provisions of this section shall not apply to work required under said contract to be done at the factory, foundry or shops of the contractor or contractors, but shall apply only when employee or laborer is engaged directly at work upon the premises where such public work is being constructed.

AT COLONIA PACHECO.

The most remote "Mormon" colony in Mexico celebrated the twenty-fourth of July in good style. There was a salute of guns at daybreak, another at sunrise and the hoisting of the Mexican flag by Joseph A. Moffett. The people gathered in the public square at 9:30 and formed in procession under direction of the marshal of the day, A. P. Spilbury. Following the music of the Sierra Madre band, led by Brother J. T. Whetten, came Apostle George Teasdale, Patriarch Henry Lunt, on the lead, followed by Bishop J. N. Smith, Jr., and the Priesthood of the ward in their order; then the Relief Society and Sabbath School. They marched to the school house, which the sisters had nicely decorated, and all very much enjoyed the following exercises: The choir sang, "Come we that love the Lord;" prayer by the chaplain, Brother John Rowley; choir sang, "High on the mountain top;" oration by the orator of the day, Bro. F. Spencer; "Standard of Zion," by the choir;

Pioneer addresses, by Father J. G. Hardy and Bro. John R. Young; German song, by Sister Anna Naegle; representative of the "Mormon" Battalion, Bro. John C. Naegle; music by the band; stump speech, "The Parson and the Miracle," by G. W. Hardy; song, "There's a good time coming, etc.," by Jos. Spencer and Sister N. E. Durfee; "The Dutchman's Snake," by the Dutchman, Geo. C. Naegle; song, "I'll love you, if you'll let me," by Hyrum Cluff and wife; sentiments, by Apostle Teasdale and Patriarch Lunt; The choir sang "Nearer Home;" benediction by W. R. R. Stowell.

The day was a most favorable one. The afternoon sports comprised foot-racing, wrestling, base ball, etc., with dancing for the little folks. The day wound up with a pleasant social party, interspersed with songs, recitations, etc.

The health of the people is good, and after a long season of drought we have had refreshing showers of late. The grass and crops promise well, and we anticipate fair returns to both the farmers and dairymen.

ABOUT PRESERVING FRUIT.

We have noticed articles lately in several papers regarding the preserving of fruit by the California Cold Process. Some write as though it was a patent and difficult to obtain the right to use; but such is not the case. The material employed is the compound extract of salts which any druggist, if he does not have it in stock, can easily obtain. It has been used for years, so that the system is well established.

It is not necessary to heat or seal the fruit, but just to put it in the vessels you wish to keep it in and pour the solution over the fruit and it will keep its natural color and taste for years. You can keep currants on the stems, green corn on the cob, and fruit or vegetables of any kind in a perfectly natural state. The cost is only about one cent per quart, and the labor is almost nothing. A bushel of berries can be put up in ten minutes easily. We have put up hundreds of packages of fruit by the California cold process, and we never knew it fail to give satisfaction, and have shipped fruit to all points of the United States. The salts is made especially for preserving fruit and vegetables, and the druggist from whom it is bought will give complete directions for using. We have berries, cherries, grapes and pears kept this way, and we do not believe any one could tell them from fresh pickled fruit. Beside the plan is so cheap and so little trouble is involved that any one can derive great benefit by adopting the California cold process. We feel that any person who once tries it will never put up another can of fruit or adopt any other method.

LEGENDS ABOUT THE POTATO.

When potatoes were first introduced into Russia by a Mr. Rowland (the exact date of the introduction of the tuber into that benighted country being a subject of controversy, but usually set down at 1791) the people would neither plant nor touch them. They declared them to be the devil's fruit, and that they were given to his satanic majesty on his complaint to God that he had no fruit. God told him to "search the earth for food." Whereupon the poor devil fell to digging in the earth and found potatoes growing therein.

A similar legend seems to have obtained credit among the staid Britishers in Berwickshire, England. In that shire the introduction of potatoes is popularly attributed to Sir Michael Scott, once known all over Britain as "The Wizard of the North." According to story, Michael and the devil formed a copartnership and took the lease of a farm on the Merlo town estate, called the "Whitehouse." Michael was to manage the farm; the devil the capital; the produce was to be divided in the following manner:

The first year Michael was to have all that grew above the ground, and the devil all that grew beneath the surface; the second year shares were to be divided in just the opposite way. His satanic majesty, strange to say, was badly beaten by the wily Michael, for that personage, with true Scottish foresight, sowed all the land to wheat the first year and planted it all in potatoes the second. So the poor devil got nothing but wheat stubble and potato tops. How these absurd legends originated, no one seems to know, but the fact remains that the peasantry of both Russia and England even to this day frequently allude to potatoes as "Devil's Fruit."

THE establishment of one of Herr Krupp's plants within Russian territory is not without significance. Europe may not be, probably is not, on the eve of a general war, but when such outbreak comes the Czar means to be ready.

DISCOURSE

Delivered by President George Q. Cannon, at the Parowan Stake Conference, Parowan, Monday, June 20, 1892.

REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.

As I see a good many of the youth present, I would like to give you boys a little chapter of my experience. My hair is growing white now, and although I do not think I am old, I suppose everybody else would call me old. I therefore may say something that if I were younger might not be deemed proper. When I was a boy I made up my mind that I would be just as good a boy as I possibly could be. When I was quite a young fellow I had a very dear friend. He was the most brilliant young man, of his age, that I ever knew in this Church. Some of our associates would drink whiskey when they could get it, and he found fault with me because I did not drink whiskey. Said he, "George, you are unsociable. Why can't you drink a little whiskey with the boys? It won't hurt you. I don't care anything about whiskey, but I like to be sociable; and it don't look well for us to refuse to drink with them." I said, "All right, so far as you are concerned, but I don't drink whiskey." And I refused to taste it. Well, I know that it made me an unsociable young man with them. He was a man of fine promise and occupied prominent position; but when he was thirty-four years of age he filled a drunkard's grave, and left this reputation as a dreadful legacy to his family. When I talked and reasoned with him he did not think that he would ever become a drunkard. He said that he did not care about liquor. But that was his fate.

Since then I have been in a great deal of society where wine drinking has been common, and where smoking has been the rule, and it is my experience that I was always more respected than if ever I had either drunk or smoked. I lost no credit in any society that I have ever been in for not partaking of these things. On the contrary, I found that I had more influence, because men will respect others who are firm in these matters. There is no man who drinks that does not in his soul feel that he would be better off if he did not drink, and he admires a man who does not drink. Now, I am at my present age and I have never drunk a glass of liquor in my life. I made up my mind when I was a boy that I would neither smoke nor chew tobacco, and I never have. I made up my mind also that I would not drink tea or coffee, and I have observed that through my life, and I know I am healthier and better for it.

I started out in life in that way. I wanted to be a Latter-day Saint, and I wanted to be an Elder in this Church. That was the highest ambition I ever had. I never wanted to hold any other office; but I did desire exceedingly that I might be considered worthy to preach the Gospel of the Son of God. When that office was conferred upon me, that was all I desired. I have shrunk from holding office. I have besought my brethren not to choose me to fill positions. I knew when I was a boy that I should be chosen out of the Apostles, and I have gone out more than once in secret and besought the Lord to choose somebody else, for I did not want to fill that position. I dreaded it, for I knew how serious a thing it would be to hold so sacred an office as that of an Apostle. I have asked God, if I could be saved and exalted without that office, to choose someone else. When I was chosen one of the First Presidency I besought President Taylor and my brethren not to choose me; that there were others who were far more capable than I to fill the position. But it was so ordered, and I have endeavored to the best of my ability, in humility, to fill that position.

I do not speak in this strain to excite in your minds ambition for office, but to encourage you to put yourselves in positions where you can be useful. Do not acquire these miserable habits. Do not allow intoxicating beverages to touch your lips. Do not fall into the destructive habit of smoking cigarettes and chewing tobacco. Do not give way to drinking tea or coffee and other things of this kind. Be Latter-day Saints. Be firm wherever you are, and set an example to everybody.

I want to say that much to the young boys. I need not say it to the girls; for it is a remarkable thing that women, as a rule, do not drink liquor nor use tobacco. They are not given to these evil practices, and in this respect they set an example to their brothers, to their sons, to their husbands, and in some instances, no doubt, to their fathers. The women in this Church are worthy of all praise. They are more attentive to their meetings, more faithful in the observance of the duties that devolve upon them, and have proved stauncher advocates of the truth and shown less treachery in our recent troubles than the men have. I know that God is exceedingly pleased with the women of this Church, for they have shown characteristics that are worthy of the angels in heaven. I know that God will bless the mothers and the daughters of Zion for their fidelity to the Gospel and for the devotion that they manifest. And the men of this Church might take lessons from the sisters in the way they attend to meetings and perform the other duties that devolve upon them. Therefore, I say it is not necessary to talk to our sisters about drinking. I do not know a woman in the Church, of any standing, that ever touches any intoxicating drinks.

I do not know a woman in the church that smokes or chews tobacco. A young man would think he was courting a queer sort of a girl, when he went to visit her, she should pull out a cigarette and commence smoking, and ask him if he would not take a smoke; or she should produce a bottle of beer and ask him if he would not take a glass of beer with her. And why have they not just as much right to do that as the boys have? Why have not the girls as much right to drink liquor or beer and smoke or chew tobacco as the boys have? I cannot see why one sex should have liberties of this kind that it is considered improper for the other sex to take. I think if a man drinks he should not be startled if his wife does the same; and if he makes a drunkard of her by his example, he will have a great deal to answer for.

These are things, my brethren and sisters, that enter into our everyday lives. I would like myself to see a generation of young men growing up that would abstain from these vices. And we who are fathers should set examples of this kind. I know it is not necessary to be talking to our families all the time about the Word of Wisdom, if we set a proper example ourselves; but if we do not set such an example, then we have to be continually talking in order to counteract the influence of our own example. I feel that fathers will have much to answer for in these matters; for if a man takes a correct course in this direction, his wife and his children will follow his example. God has said that those who will observe this counsel shall have wisdom given to them, even great treasures of wisdom. And these are the men we want—men of wisdom. And will you have wisdom if you take this counsel? Just as sure as God has said so; for His word will not fail. And those who observe the Word of Wisdom will be distinguished among this people because of the wisdom that God will give them. God will give them the blessings that He has promised, and He will preserve them. When you go as Elders to administer in a family that observe these words of God, you will have faith to lay hands on the sick and to ask the blessings of God in their behalf, and to heal them through the power of God; whereas if they are living in violation of these words, the faith of the Elders and of the persons themselves will be weakened, and they will not have enough to claim the promises that God has made. This is a gripe and other diseases that are going through the country are merely precursors of the pestilences that will yet sweep through the nations of the earth, and we are required to stand in holy places that we may escape these destructions; and God has given unto us these counsels that we may be fortified, so to speak, against these scourges. You know what they did in Israel. The Lord commanded them, through Moses, to sprinkle blood on the thresholds of their doors. They did this, and the destroying angel passed them by and did not slay the firstborn of any of the Hebrews; but every firstborn of the Egyptians was slain. In the museum at Berlin, I believe, there is a record in stone, found in Egypt, which sets beside the fact in the minds of Egyptologists that the King of Egypt himself lost his firstborn on some occasion, and it is made plain, they think, that it was when the destroying angel passed over Egypt. Not a Hebrew lost his firstborn, because they observed the necessary requirement. God has, in His revelation to us, used this fact to bring home to us the importance of this counsel and what blessings will follow the observance of it. Therefore, we should have faith in God in these matters, believe that which He says, and claim the promise. Not that we can altogether escape death, or death in the world; but we may escape these pestilences and judgments that are going forth among the nations of the earth. A ready excuse as though the elements had been let loose with a violence that has not been known for generations. Read the accounts of the floods, the fires, the earthquakes, the tempests and the awful destructions that has come upon the people in various places. God has predicted this through the mouths of His holy prophets, and He has commanded us to gather out from the nations of the earth. He has given unto the people a wonderful spirit of gathering. He has done this for the express purpose of separating us from the wicked world and preserving a righteous seed in the earth, that when the judgments of God go forth there shall be some that will be spared. But how few there are out of those that have received the truth who have maintained their integrity! And kept the faith! It is sad to think how large a number of people who once knew the Gospel have fallen away from it, and are not sharers now in its blessings. You men of middle age can think of your former acquaintances and can recall the families that you knew in your early life—the friends probably of your youth—and where are they now? Some have gone here and there. Some have died out of the Church. Others have lost their faith, and go no more where there is a sad thing to be contemplated how many have received the Gospel who have lost the Spirit of God and become aliens to the covenant, having no name or place, nor their children among the people of God. Why is this, brethren and sisters? Is it because God has withdrawn His blessings and power from them out of caprice? Is it because they were predestined to lose the faith? Do you think there was any fatalism about this, and that these people could not help doing what they have done? Why, no; it is as plain as the light that shines through these windows that that is not the case. It is because they themselves have laid the foundation for apostasy. They have grieved the Spirit of God and caused its withdrawal from them.

Now, if we who are here today do not prove faithful and retain the Spirit of God, we shall be to blame, and not God. We cannot blame the Presidency of the Stake, nor the High Council, nor the Bishop, nor the Presidency of the Church, nor the Twelve; for we ourselves will be individually responsible for that which we have brought upon ourselves. How is the Spirit of God grieved? Why, in many ways. But there is one fruitful cause, and I wish to call the attention of the young men of Parowan Stake to it. The Lord has given in two revelations His express word concerning sin that is fruitful in apostasy. He declares that any man that will look upon a woman to lust after her shall deny the faith, unless he repent; and I want to say to you young men that as sure as you live God will fulfill that word. If you look upon woman to lust after her, you will deny the faith, unless you repent, and that is why. You cannot indulge in this dreadful sin without grieving the Spirit of God and causing its withdrawal from you. And if we cannot look upon a woman to lust after her without grieving the Spirit of God and being in danger of losing the faith, is it much more serious would it be if any of us should act towards one of the other sex in an improper manner. I say to you, in the name of the Lord, there is no more fruitful cause of apostasy than this, and you had better be warned; for God has spoken with the greatest plainness on this. The thought of doing anything that would cause me to apostatize from this Church is the most horrible that ever entered into my heart. It has filled me with a dread that my language is unable to express; and if I thought there was anything that I would do which would lead to such a dreadful result as that, I would fling it all with all my might. The Lord does love purity and chastity, in women and in men. Why should our sisters, or our daughters, or our wives, be required to be more pure than we are? Are we not subject to the same law? Do we not expect to receive the same exaltation? Certainly. Then why should a man think that he can do a thing with impunity which his wife cannot do? When he thinks that he deceives himself. Yet this is the growing sin of the world. Men indulge in these passions and think they are justified in it, until virtue is almost unknown among our sex. Under such conditions, of course, the other sex become the victims of lust, and are preyed upon by liberties. It is this that is bringing destruction upon the nations of the earth. And it would destroy the Latter-day Saints; they gave way to it. God will have a pure people. He will have a virtuous people. He will have a holy people. He will have a people in whose tabernacles the Spirit of God will dwell; and it will not dwell in unholiness, in tabernacles. The whole history of our people is a proof of this. Oliver Cowdery, who stood side by side with Joseph, who was ordained by an angel from heaven, who was the second Elder in the Church, who beheld the Son of God himself, who saw many wonderful things, and was blessed of God as was Joseph—this man whom one would think would have stood if any man in the flesh ever could, indulged in sin. Joseph warned him against that which he did, but he persisted in it, and the result was his priesthood was taken from him, and the crown that he would have had was given to another. Hyrum Smith received the blessings that Oliver Cowdery had had bestowed upon him, and which he had forfeited by his impure conduct. Ought not this to be a warning to all of us? What man is there in the flesh who can calculate upon being secure from committing sin if he could not? This is the fate of other men who received great gifts from God. Apostle Lyman Johnson had great manifestations. Angels ministered unto him, and he was the first man in this generation to be chosen one of the Twelve Apostles. Yet he apostatized, denied the faith, and became an enemy to the Kingdom of God. These are illustrations of the truth of what God has said, and our history is full of such illustrations. You see men of great promise—I have watched them in my life—all at once wither up, lose their power. They lose the life that was in them. What is the cause? Why, they have committed sin. They have probably gone on missions, committed themselves while there, and come back destitute of the Spirit of God. They are mistaken, or so to speak, on the road, to show how fast the Church has traveled and left them standing. Do you not know of numbers of such cases in your experience? I am sure you do.

There is only one way, brethren and sisters, to be safe and to obtain salvation in the presence of God, and that is in keeping the commandments of God, in being pure in our hearts as God is pure, to be like Him. It should be our aim to gain a knowledge of godliness as fast as we can; to know what godliness is, and then endeavor to make our lives conform to it. I ask myself, is there anything that my brethren—the most favored of them—are doing that I do not do? Then I want to do what they do. I want to be like them. And I ask myself, is there anything that my Savior does, or that the angels do, which I can do in my mortal state and yet not do? Then I would like to know if, for I would like to be like Jesus, and like the angels. I want to be like our Father and God, as far as it is possible in this mortal state for men to be. That is my desire, and always has been; for I want to dwell with God. I want to gain celestial glory. And I know all of you do. What is there that we have not done for this Gospel? Is there anything that we would not do for it, and for the fulfillment of the promise of celestial glory and eternal lives in the presence of God and the Lamb? Why, many of you have forsaken everything on earth for the sake of this Gospel. Therefore, I know that your desires are the same as mine in these matters; and it is a desire that we should cherish and cultivate as fast as we can to get a knowledge of godliness, so that when we are called hence we can go with perfect assurance that we shall go into the society of the holy and the pure, to mingle with prophets, apostles and mighty men who have been faithful in the flesh, who have fought the good fight, and who have been willing to lay down their lives for the truth of heaven. Heaven would not be heaven to you, nor to me, unless we could get into such society. Well, to reach there we must be pure in our hearts. We must be free from sin. We must keep the commandments of God, we must walk uprightly before the Lord, practicing these heavenly principles which are revealed in the Gospel.

Brethren and sisters, I am not speaking to you something that is theoretical, that is unattainable. I do not want to talk about things that are beyond your reach. I want to talk about that which we can do, and that which is within the reach of every one, within the reach of these little boys that are old enough to comprehend my words. Let us be pure, and be instruments in establishing a reign of righteousness on the earth. Each man, each woman, each child, has his and her influence in the earth. Children have influence when they do right; for their example has a good effect. However obscure we are, we have some influence, and can from to righteousness in the earth. Every man in this Church that gives way to Satan and yields to his influence is an enemy to God and to the Church of God, and he retards the growth of righteousness and the spread of truth. It is said of Cain that he loved Satan more than God. How did he love him? By doing as Satan told him. And Satan is seeking all the time to make all of us do what he wants us to do. He is an enemy to God, and he is our enemy. He is seeking continually, in every possible manner, to gain influence with us, to darken our minds, to mislead us, and to hold up the pleasures of the world as an incitement for us to do what he wishes us to do. On the other hand, God, through His angels, through His Spirit, and through the words and the counsel of His servants, is endeavoring to induce us to serve Him, to keep His commandments, and to walk in the straight and narrow path; and He promises unto us exceeding great joy. And do we not have it? I told you that all men and women that serve God get rewarded as they go along, in the happiness that they have. There is no happiness that equals it. The pleasures of sin are not to be compared to the pleasures of righteousness. The favor of God is priceless; it is beyond all earthly value.

Allusion has been made to the reluctance of the teachers to visit the people in their homes. If it is possible I would like to say something that would inspire you, my brethren, with a desire to magnify this calling. I want to say in confirmation of all that has been said on this subject, that it is a very important calling, and one that the Lord will hold those responsible for who receive it. We can go on missions, and be gone two or three years, and we do not think very much of that. Many of our brethren take missions without much reluctance. They feel that it is an honor. Now it is just as honorable in the sight of God, and is as productive of reward, to act as a teacher in a ward, as it is to go abroad and preach the Gospel. Your name may not be published in the papers; nevertheless the Lord, who is the Rewarder of the children of men, will reward you if you labor wherever you are appointed, and do so faithfully. You should not allow your manual labor to prevent you from doing your duty as teachers. Let me exhort you this afternoon on this point. And let me say to the sisters, when the teachers come to your house, gather your families together. If you know beforehand that they are coming, take pains to keep the children at home. Show the teachers proper respect when they come to visit you. The man of the house really surrenders, for the time being, his family into the hands of the teachers; and if the teachers are wise men, they leave the household in a far better condition than they found it, because they will say words of encouragement, and will teach the children; and the words of the teachers when aided to the words of the parents will have great influence with the children. Therefore, to have well-governed households you must have teachers. And teachers should go forth with the Spirit of God. They may be able by the influence of the Spirit to say something that will cause some young person in the career that is likely to lead to evil. Boys and girls may be out late; they may not regard the entreaties and counsels of their parents. Teachers could help create an influence with these children that would be of great assistance to the parents. It is proper that parents should gather their families together when the teachers come. I make it a rule, as soon as I know the teachers are at my place, and I am there, to gather all my family together, and I sit with them; and if the teachers do not ask questions that are searching enough to bring out what I want, I suggest to them certain lines of inquiry; for I want my children to be benefited by the visit of the teachers. I know it of great good, and I am here always when they come to my house. I try and give them all the honor I can, and I thank them with a grateful heart for their visit, because I know that they come at inconvenience to themselves very frequently. I do not care how searching they are in their inquiries. Of course, I would not want them to ask impertinent or indelicate questions. No wise man will do that. But those questions that are necessary to find out my true condition I want them to ask, and I want them to ask each member of my family, and search them, and find out their true feelings. Teachers do come to my house and ask me as freely as they would a member of the Church that held no office. They ask me concerning my faith—whether I sustain the authorities of the Church, whether I believe President Woodruff is the man to lead the Church, what my feelings are concerning the principles of the Gospel, whether I attend to my family and secret prayers, whether I help the poor and pay my tithing, and whether I attend meetings regularly. My Teachers are encouraged by me to ask these questions of me and my family, to find out our true condition; and if they see anything in us that is not right, that they may check it and tell us. This is the way Teachers should do. If men will follow this up, they will get a spirit, a power, a light, and a testimony from God that will be of immense advantage to them. I would like to see the Teachers in all the States and all. Wherever the Teachers are active there is a good condition. In this way the Teachers maintain the morale of the ward; that is, they teach a standard of purity that everyone with right feeling will strive to attain to.

I pray God to bless you, my brethren and sisters. My heart is full of blessing, and with the authority that God has given me I bless you all, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

COLUMBIAN PORTRAITS.

NUMBERS of newspapers are publishing, cut up, supposed to be representations of various portraits of Christopher Columbus. They are as different as they are numerous, and therefore suggestive of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde. In one he is given the appearance of a round-featured person with a high forehead and passive, reflective expression worthy of an astute philosopher. Another represents him as a fat, pluffy man with a double chin and the appearance of one at peace with himself and the rest of the world, and as if he had just satisfied his inward cravings with a generous meal which he had the capacity to digest. A third presents Mr. Columbus as an individual with a long narrow face, adorned with a short beard, pointed at the chin, the cap being set into an immense Flemish ruffled collar. In this picture he has the aspect of a sharp and somewhat rascally man of affairs with a tendency to lose everybody within reach. If anybody wishes to make a selection of these alleged portraits in order to assist in forming a definite idea as to how the great philo-sophical discoverer of America looked there is no statute on the books to prevent him carrying out his desire. However, neither of the pictures would be taken as a likeness of the same man as the other. As the showman said when asked which was the lion and which the tiger: "You pay your money and you take your choice."

UGHT TO BE STOPPED.

NUMBERS of citizens are complaining about boys and young men being allowed to break the ordinance in relation to the Sabbath by engaging in base ball games on the public streets on Sundays. An instance of this kind was brought to our attention Monday by a resident of First North street. On that thoroughfare, Sun ay afternoon, a few blocks west of East Temple street, a number of lads ranging from thirteen to eighteen years of age, played a game of baseball, and attracted a number of other youths to the locality as spectators. People residing in the neighborhood were not only annoyed by the noise that was created, but their sense of propriety was opposed to the performance.

This is but one instance among numbers of others that occur nearly every Sabbath day in the eastern part of the city. They are breaches of a city ordinance, and we presume that the people who are subjected to the annoyance caused by them can easily have the nuisance abated by first requesting the offenders to desist, and should they fail to heed the caution, communicating with the police, whose duty it will be to arrest the law-breakers. The practice ought to be promptly stopped.

COLONEL PARKER'S LECTURE.

THE audience which gathered at the Tabernacle Sunday night to hear Col. Parker lecture on "The Child" was large. There were probably over 7,000 present. The lecturer, who is a big, portly man, of impressive appearance, kept the attention of the assemblage from beginning to close. He has a slight huskiness of voice, which is not a natural defect, being the result of a bullet wound in the throat, received while fighting to preserve the Union, in the war of the rebellion. This slight vocal disadvantage is compensated by a charming style of oratory. Col. Parker has the rare faculty of putting the action to the thought he is engaged in enunciating, while his facial expression changes in harmony with the sentiment. Some passages of the lecture were somewhat labored, but this did not detract from the charm of it as a whole, as they served to vivify with greater intensity his frequent outbursts of eloquence.

The lecture was, in the main, decidedly practical, and, being delivered with earnestness which often rose to the height of enthusiasm, the lessons it embodied made strong impressions upon the listeners. Many valuable suggestions were conveyed as to the proper management and training of the child, so as to economize and develop its activities. It seemed to embrace the genius of the writings of Samuel Smiles and the philosophy of the late Theodore Parker and join them in one. The idea of the former was emphasized in his high estimate of the value of labor, while the thoughts of the Colonel's illustrious namesake were seconded in the views enunciated with regard to nature in all its varied forms being the expression and embodiment of the thought of God. The lecture was both entertaining and instructive.

THIS IS ANARCHY.

It is announced as highly improbable that the Wyoming cattlemen and their Texas auxiliaries who are imprisoned at Cheyenne on a charge of murder will ever be brought to trial. The reason assigned for this prospective failure to apply the law to people charged with the most heinous crime on the calendar, is that there are not funds on hand with which to meet the expense of the prosecution.

Taking it for granted that the prosecution will lapse, not for want of evidence but for lack of cash, what is the logical aspect of the situation? Simply this: That it has come to a point in the history of our country when an organized band of armed men, aided by assistants from another part of the country, can invade a neighboring country for the purpose of killing a class of the population, and can do actual murder with impunity, providing there are not sufficient funds to pay the expense of bringing them to justice.

This is rather an anomalous situation in a civilized country. There ought to be no situation, financial or otherwise, that would be a sufficient obstruction to the trial of persons accused of serious crimes. The only justification for such a condition would be a showing, based on a careful investigation, that the parties charged were innocent of the allegations made against them. But no such claim is made in this instance. The only basis of prospective discharge is want of funds. This is anarchy, being a condition of lawlessness.

SALT LAKE HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

THE report of the health department of this city for the month of July, 1892, has been received. The total number of deaths for the month was 66, in an estimated population of 60,000. There are 31 different causes of death enumerated. Cholera infantum comes first with a list of 28 victims, consumption next with 8, general debility 2, exhaustion 2, abscess of the liver 2, cerebral meningitis 2, endocarditis 2, carcinoma of the uterus 2, accident, alcoholism, appendicitis, concussion of brain, burn, convulsions, cerebral congestion, senile debility, chronic diarrhoea, dysentery, gall stones, gastroenteritis, heart-clot, heart disease, strangulated hernia, hydrothorax, icterus, cirrhosis of liver, marasmus, pericarditis, septicaemia, fracture of the skull and suicide, one each.

Not included in the death rate are two accidents at birth. There were physicians in attendance at 48 deaths, and not in attendance at 18. There were received for interment from points outside of the city limits 17; of the deceased within the city 57; were residents one year and over, seven under one year and two unknown. According to nativity Utah furnished 35, other parts of the United States 16, England 7, Denmark 2, Wales, Ireland, Germany, France, Hungary, one each, and one unknown. O. the total deaths thirty-six were males and 30 females. The births for July numbered 71—36 male and 35 female. There were 48 marriages reported.

In contagious diseases the report makes a good showing. Three cases of althieria were reported. Scarlet fever and smallpox are represented by cyphers.

THE PROHIBITION PARTY.

AN incident has occurred which is helping considerably to advertise the Prohibition party. General Bidwell of California is the nominee for President, and J. B. Cragg of Texas is the nominee for Vice-President. The Boston Journal of a recent date published the following:

"For twenty years the individual who now heads the Prohibition ticket was next to the largest wine and brandy producer in California. It was in this business that he accumulated the millions which will go to lubricate the wheels of the Prohibition machine this summer. For the first time probably in all its history the third party now has a reformed distiller at its head. For Gen. Bidwell did reform. He reformed to please his wife, and he now sells the products of his 150-acre vineyard in the open market, instead of converting them into spirituous fluids on his own premises."

This charge has brought Bidwell into such prominence that he is being talked about all over the United States. On the one hand he is denounced as a hypocrite who made money by the manufacture of liquor, and is now seeking fame or notoriety by means of ill-earned money. On the other hand, his followers give a fair explanation of the circumstances.

Bidwell, it appears, has been and is a grape grower in California. In 1864 he began the manufacture of pure wines, in the belief that a pure article would be conducive to temperance, and also that it would be needed for communion purposes in the churches. An expert wine maker was procured and the necessary plant established. Meantime Bidwell was elected to Congress, spent two years in Washington, leaving his vineyard in charge of overseers. On his return he found one thousand gallons of wine in the vaults, and several thousand more in preparation. He gave the matter personal study and investigation. He found that instead of helping in the cause of temperance he was only making drunkards. Being at that time a strong temperance advocate he concluded to abandon the wine making. What remained in the cellars he presented to the hospitals of San Francisco, and the unfinished stuff he had turned into vinegar. He raises grapes still, but sells them in the open market to be used either for table purposes or for raisin making.

A little abuse and falsehood have done more to advertise General Bidwell than whole tomes of eulogy. Furthermore, this advertising has helped to bring out the real character of the man, his enemies thus virtually doing him a favor.

SILVER THE TALK OF THE NATIONS.

A DISPATCH from Washington states that President Harrison has selected as United States delegates to the International Monetary Conference, Allison of Iowa, Jones of Nevada, McCrary of Kentucky, Walker of Massachusetts and Cannon of New York. They are all men of national repute. In political circles Walker and Cannon are perhaps not so well known, but in matters of finance they are recognized authorities.

The British Empire will be represented at the conference by five delegates, two representing the Indian government and three the home interests. We have not seen it officially stated as to where the conference will be held, but it is surmised that either Paris or Brussels will be the place, and the assembling will occur about September 1st. There will be ample time to ascertain European opinion of free silver coinage before the November election in this country.

It is noticeable that in the appointment of delegates President Harrison has been strictly impartial. Walker of Massachusetts, is a pronounced anti-free silver Democrat, McCrary of Kentucky, is a free silver Democrat, Jones of Nevada, is a free silver Republican, while Allison of Iowa, it is thought, is a Republican with opinions the other way. Cannon's record on the issue is said to be more or less neutral.

BENEFIT AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

In this city a few days ago quite an excitement was occasioned by the arrest of certain persons in relation to a secret and benevolent society, said to be fraudulent. Wild-cat schemes of all kinds multiply, thrive and for a time prosper in this country. Finally the vast majority come out losers. Schemes to get rich—insurance plans, benefit advantages, etc., are held out in various forms, under the cloak of passwords, signs and vows of fraternity and so forth.

The Iron Hall endowment order, the working of which is now being ventilated by the courts and the press, is a fair illustration of this class of schemes. Many prominent men in New York, Boston, Cincinnati and other cities belong to this order, and fall to see anything wrong in it. Speaking of the Iron Hall, and of the reputable members connected with it, the Springfield (Mass.) Republican says:

"We refer to this fact merely to show the length to which reputable men are sometimes willing to go in the feverish rush of these latter days to get rich. Probably a large majority of the 65,000 members of the Iron Hall in this and other States have no very clear idea of how the huge returns promised on their assessments are to be acquired. It cannot be so, however, with such men as we have referred to. They must know, of course, that a promised and expected return of one thousand dollars in seven years for about three hundred dollars paid in cannot be obtained in any legitimate way. They are aware that it is actually obtained from the money paid in by those who have dropped out before the maturity of their certificates (a practice pronounced unlawful and dishonest by the Massachusetts statutes in relation to regular insurance); and from the money paid in by members who have joined the order at later dates, which amounts to no thing more than a deliberate steal. They thus recognize it to be a gambling affair. They have dipped into it as they would dip into any chance venture hoping to get out with their 300 per cent profit before the collapse. Being in a business experience and intelligence and not given to investing their money without scrutinizing carefully the ways and chances of getting a return, they are thus made to appear in the light of persons who are willing to prey upon the credulity and foolishness of others."

SHALL WE BOND THE COUNTY?

EVERY taxpayer in Salt Lake County ought to know that an election will take place shortly, for the purpose of deciding whether the county authorities shall be empowered to contract a bonded debt of $300,000. This is a serious matter. Which ever way it shall be decided it ought first to be seriously considered. We have city bonds nearly to the limit, school bonds in a heavy amount, and now it is proposed to bond the county.

Improvements are needed, no doubt. But are those that are contemplated such as the people want? Are they of pressing necessity? Do the majority of the citizens want the present officials to expend the money? Can we manage to make proper progress without piling on this financial burden?

The annexed ticket, which has been prepared by the county officials and to which the voter can append the word "Yes" or "No" according to his choice, tells the purpose to which the money is to be devoted if it is borrowed.

"Shall negotiable coupon bonds of Salt Lake County, to the amount of $300,000, in the denomination of $10.00 each, payable twenty years from date, redeemable ten years after date, and bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, be issued for the purpose of constructing the new county court house and a new poor house and infirmary, and poor relief farm for Salt Lake County, and for making other permanent county improvements?"

Before deciding, it seems to us that the taxpayers should become acquainted with the intentions of the county authorities in regard to sites for the infirmary and poor house farm, and other particulars that ought to be understood. Is it really necessary that bonds shall be issued for the county's part of the new city and county building? Is not that the only really pressing work at present? Do we need a more extensive establishment than we have now or can make by proper additions for a county poor house?

The election is to take place on Monday next, August 15th. The resident taxpayers of the county are entitled to vote on this question, which is only proper, seeing that they are the interested parties.

Is it not time that every voter should get sufficient information by which he can make up his mind whether he wants the county bonded at present or not? We think so and advise all our friends to put on their questioning and thinking caps.

SALT LAKE WEATHER IN JULY.

July, 1892, had 23 cloudless days and 8 partly cloudy. The report shows no trace of frost for the month.

PROMPT ACTION WANTED.

THE City Council ought to make close inquiry into the alleged inefficiency of our present sewer management. Is it true that a large quantity of sewage is emptied into the Jordan river? If so, this ought to be stopped. This was one of the evils we opposed when the sewer question was first discussed. Our position was purposely misrepresented by "Liberal" advocates of the system. It has since been falsified in the same way. We never opposed sewers or any sane sanitary measure, but we did oppose emptying the waste matter of this city into the Jordan river, or the lake, where it would do damage to residents or land owners and become offensive and injurious to the city.

It is a fact that from some of the man-holes in town come up fumes that are full of poison and that are sickening in the extreme to persons near by. If this is in part occasioned by lack of flushing, the sewers should be drenched from the hydrants. If it is the result of sewage backing up from the outlet, as we are told it is, that ought to be remedied at once. And, anyhow, the city has no right to empty the foul matter into the Jordan, and is likely to reap trouble by so doing.

This calls for immediate investigation. Will the Council please take it up without delay, for it is a matter of life and death as well as of injury to health and property.

"LIBERAL" PROSPECTS.

TOOELE county was the first "Liberal" stronghold. It was there that the genius and methods of Utah "Liberalism" received their first striking exemplification. The county was carried by fraud, wholesale and palpable. The effects of "Liberal" rule were speculation, waste and the depreciation of county warrants from par to ten cents on the dollar. One dose of "Liberalism" was enough. The county has, ever since its redemption, kept itself out of "Liberal" clutches though some members of the faction have always remained there. But it appears they have come to the conclusion that they also have had enough. The party has disbanded there in spite of the Powers-conference resolutions. It is probable that this example will be followed by other county organizations, and that little, if anything, will be left of the faction, except in two or three cities. The prospects in Ogden are treated on in another part of this paper. They are not very cheering to the "Liberal" managers, and the whole outlook does not promise much future profit to those flies who have heretofore lived on the "Liberal" carcass.

MISSIONARIES MOBBED IN THE SOUTH

We have been courteously permitted to peruse a letter from Elder William Winder, son of Bishop John R. Winder, now on a mission in the Southern States, to his wife. He gives in it an account of some interesting experience with a mob, who were determined to run the Elders out of Stanley County, N. C. The letter is dated July 31st, and the following is the substance of the statement in reference to the operations of the mobocrats: The Elders had an appointment to hold a meeting at the house of Mr. Dick on the Sunday previous, and arrived in the locality a few days before, in order to visit friends. When they arrived they found the people in the district in an uproar about the missionaries, and a number of them conspired to take them out of the meeting and put them over the river into an adjacent county and demand that they remain away permanently. They also threatened Mr. Dick. The latter stated that as he had agreed to allow the brethren to hold meeting at his place he would stand by it if they desired, no matter what might come of it. It was concluded, however, to give up the idea of filling the appointment.

The mob did not learn of this intention and about seventy-five of them gathered at the place appointed for meeting. Subsequently they procured a warrant for the arrest of the Elders, on a charge of committing a breach of the peace. The brethren did not evade the issue, being innocent, and were placed under arrest. While in custody and on the way to Albemarle, J. B. Simpson, the complaining witness, approached the brethren and tried to induce them to leave the county and the charge would be withdrawn. They refused to do so. This disappointed the accuser, who knew the mob had no case. About fifty men were gathered on the road to take the prisoners from the custody of the officers and drive them out of the locality, but their courage did not reach the "sticking point," and Albemarle was reached in safety. Friends were on hand to give bonds for the appearance of the brethren to answer to the charge, but they deemed it safer to remain in prison and did so, sleeping on a straw pallet on the floor during the night. The sheriff treated them kindly. A committee of three deputized by a large mob, who remained at a distance, called at the jail and demanded that the sheriff deliver up to them the "Mormon" prisoners. The officer declined, saying that that force would be used if he did not comply, he still refused to surrender his wards. No effort was made to carry the threat into execution.

When the trial came on the court house was crowded. The two features of the charge were that the Elders had been the means of a man and his wife separating, and that they had preached false doctrines, and therefore committed a breach of the peace. It was shown that there was not the slightest ground for either allegation, and the defendants were discharged, and the costs were taxed against the complainers.

Subsequently a mob gathered and informed the Elders they were going to take them out of the county. The latter talked the matter over with their persecutors and finally agreed to leave of their own accord, preferring that method of departure to being accompanied over the border by an escort. Thus the matter ended.

THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

The first session of the new British Parliament was opened yesterday. According to the dispatches so far no clear idea can be obtained as to the procedure to be followed. The Duke of Devonshire, however, stated that the present government would remain in office until it became certain that the various sections of the Opposition united to maintain a new government. Lord Herschell contended that the Liberals should withhold their programme until after a Liberal ministry was organized.

It is certain that the first question to be considered is Home Rule for Ireland. The House of Commons consists of 670 members. Of these 314 are Conservatives and 356 Liberals, giving the latter a clear majority of 42. But it must be noted that of the 356 Liberals 16 are Parnellites and Labor men. These might virtually be classified as Independents, and in Home Rule matters they are likely to prove refractory. Taking England, Scotland and Wales conjointly they gave a majority of 25 against Home Rule, so that Gladstone's 42 come entirely from Ireland. Should the Liberals undertake to form a ministry, a large measure of Home Rule for Ireland must be granted or else the Irish contingent will kick. Then if this large measure is proposed will the English Liberals support it?

If the Irish members act wisely they will either content themselves with a moderate measure of Home Rule, or else forgo the demand altogether for another year. If they prove refractory, the chances are that another general election may take place within the ensuing year, and in that they might not fare so well as in the last.

STRIKES AT THE ANTIPODES.

AUSTRALIAN news brought by the "Mariposa" to San Francisco on the 4th inst. states that in the silver mines of New South Wales 8000 men are on strike. The issue is somewhat similar to that at Homestead and in Idaho. The owners want to let the stoppage of ore by contract, the men want it done by day work. The mines were operated heretofore by means of an agreement between the owners and Union leaders. The latter claim that the new departure is a violation of the terms of this agreement.

The miners took possession of the works, stationed pickets all around them, and according to the account in the San Francisco Chronicle prevented the owners or their representatives from entering the mines. The government sent a body of fifty policemen to the scene of trouble. These did not side with either party, but simply insisted on free egress and ingress from and to the mines.

It is said that the low price of silver and least compelled the owners either to take this step in the way of reducing operating expenses, or else to close the mines altogether. Now they will insist on the disruption of the Miners' Union before they will consent to arbitrate. Thus the lawlessness and folly of misguided men tend to upset the very things they combine to establish.

UGHT TO BE REMOVED.

The scandal which has arisen over the conduct of Justice Kesler is likely to continue and draw public attention to that individual and the charges against him. In the City Council on Tuesday evening the following report from the Police Committee was presented and adopted by the Council:

"We, your Committee on Police, submit the following for your action in the matter of Police Justice Kesler; find that no excuse can be given for his conduct on the evening of June 17th, 1892, and that his conduct was against the honor and dignity of his high and responsible position and was open to censure.

M. H. BEARTSLEY,
J. L. LAWSON,
E. A. FOLLAND,
P. J. MORAN."

It might reasonably be expected that an officer having any sense of propriety, who had been thus censured after a close investigation, would be sensitive as well as sensible enough to tender his resignation at once. But Kesler seems determined to hang on to the place and its emoluments as long as possible. In this he is supported by his appropriately chosen attorney, O. W. Powers. The "Liberal" chief, with that impudence which is one of his chief characteristics, so it appears from reports of the proceedings, persisted in addressing the Council on behalf of his client in spite of the objections of several members. He ought to be taught a needed lesson, and no doubt would have been if the Council had not contained so many members of the faction which he manipulates. He had no right to address the Council except by unanimous consent.

A resolution was offered for the reremoval of Kesler as City Justice of the Peace and the substitution of another Justice to fill the place. But this went over for the written opinion of the City Attorney. There was no need for this delay, for that faculty was admitted on the spot the power of the Council to make the change. Every member of the Council might understand this for himself by simply reading the following, in Section Four of Chapter xxiv, Laws of Utah 1892:

"Sec. 4. In all cases where cities of any class have heretofore elected more than one Justice of the Peace, the City Council of such city may, by resolution, designate one of such justices to act for such city at large, and such City Council may designate the place where such justice shall transact the business pertaining to his office, and any city of the first or second class may, by ordinance or resolution, fix a salary for such justice so designated, which such salary shall be in lieu of all fees and other charges."

"This power to 'designate' is conferred upon the City Council. The Mayor has no part or lot in the matter. He has a voice, however, in the passage of an ordinance or resolution involving the expenditure of money. But the question of salary is not connected with the resolution to designate a Justice to act in Kesler's place; therefore the right of the Council is clear. It can displace Kesler as the City or Police Justice, and he would then remain in the office of simple Justice of the Peace to which he was elected.

According to the resolution adopted by the Council, he is unfit to be retained by that body as Police Justice. When removed from that position the public can manifest their appreciation of his suitability by taking or refraining from taking cases before him.

Under the Amendments to the Charters of Incorporated Cities, of 1888, however, the City Council has the power to remove "all officers of the city for misconduct." If the resolution, adopted by the Council, means what it says, that body will show itself to be inconsistent if it does not take steps for the removal of this officer, for the misconduct reported by the Police Committee. The Council owes it to the public to exercise its powers for the public protection, and it will be a disgrace to that body if it refrains from discharging its whole duty in this matter.

We trust that no attempt at bulldozing on the part of the "Liberal" boss, whose gall equals, if it does not exceed, that of the censured Justice, will have the effect of so paralyzing the "Liberal" members of the Council, that they will either go back on their resolution of censure or render it abortive by retaining in office a person whom they have virtually branded as unfit. There should be no hedging and no delay.

THE SEWAGE QUESTION.

Nothing seems to have been done by the City Council on Tuesday evening in regard to the sewage question. The city solons were engaged in an equally unavailing subject, viewing it from a moral standpoint, and therefore perhaps could not reach this materially neasy matter. There are other evenings in which they can attend to the sewer business, and perhaps they may be excused from handling it on the same evening when they took up the Kesler question.

The emptying of sewers into the river Jordan, will not be permitted long without something more than a verbal protest from the public. Those who are more particularly interested will be apt to take the matter into the courts if some prompt action is not taken by the Council. This affects the whole city. It is an evil that affects it now in a sanitary way, and it may affect it if not remedied soon, in a financial way. An investigation is in order and it is wanted at once.

A WORD FROM NEW ZEALAND.

We have been permitted to peruse a letter recently received from the President of the Australasian Mission. He states that friends in Utah occasionally send clothing to the Elders laboring in New Zealand, and the customs officers have begun to charge duty on articles of that kind. On the last package received a charge of 20 per cent. was placed. It is suggested that a more profitable way to aid the missionaries in that part of the world would be to send them remittances in money, clothing being as cheap in New Zealand as it is in Utah. It may be well to state here that it is a cause of great pleasure to the missionaries abroad to be substantially remembered by the friends they have left at home, not only because of such assistance being in many instances much needed, but also on account of the joy it gives to know that they are remembered at home.

The writer of the letter also speaks of the improvement in progress among Maori members of the Church. They are gradually adopting the manner of dress and other customs of white people. He describes them as self-reliant and industrious, and is hopeful in relation to their future.

RUSSIAN AGGRESSIVENESS.

THERE is no room for doubt that Russia has revived her aggressive policy. This means the re-opening of the "Eastern Question," which has already produced numbers of bloody wars. Doubtless encouraged by the success of Mr. Gladstone, whose foreign policy, when he is in power, is comparatively passive. The Russian "Bear" imagines he can tread on the tail of the British "Lion" with impunity. We have already alluded to the fact that the Czar has renewed his encroachments in the Pamir region, which is contiguous to British India. It was also published a few days ago that a conspiracy, in which the Russian government was flatly stated to be a party, had been disclosed. Its purpose was to assassinate Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria. At the close of the last Russo-Turkish war the Czar was forced by the European powers, much against his will, to agree to the preservation of the freedom and neutrality of Bulgaria, which is a very important strategic point. One of his aims is to control that country. This is not practicable while Prince Ferdinand is at the head of the Bulgarian government. Now comes the rebellion of the Hazaran tribes against the Ameer of Afghanistan. It was believed from the first that this insurrection was incited by Russian agents. This point is now placed beyond doubt by the capture, by the Ameer's troops, of five Russians among the rebellious Hazaras. They were placed in irons and forwarded to Cabul, the capital of Afghanistan.

These almost simultaneous movements at three different strategic points are significant, and will without doubt lead to serious complications. If they had occurred while a conservative administration was in undisputed power in Great Britain, these encroachments would doubtless have been met by counter demonstrations on the part of England, as was the case when similar attempts were made by Russia a year ago.

ASTOUNDING FIGURES.

MR. SCOTT ANDERSON delivered a temperance lecture at Fort Douglas Tuesday night, in the course of which he presented to his audience the following astonishing calculations. We have not tested them in detail for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are correct, but assume them to be so, as Mr. Anderson is an expert in that line. These figures not only convey a lesson in temperance, but also one in social and domestic economy.

"The Hon. John P. St. John, says that $1,507,000 is spent for intoxicating drinks in the United States every year. I understand that these figures are obtained from official sources and perfectly reliable.

"The sum is so vast that very few even begin to realize what it means.

"In silver dollars it would weigh 45,000 tons.

"In gold dollars it would weigh 2,800 tons.

"If it were in silver dollars and placed one on the other, allowing nine to an inch, it would reach over 2,700 miles in height, or laid flat it would go nearly twice around the world.

"If it were in five-dollar gold pieces and a man were instructed to fling one at a time out of a window or door every second, for ten hours a day, it would take him 22 years and five months to throw them all out.

"If an expert at counting money, had it in dollars, and could count four every second for ten hours a day, it would take 33 years to complete the task.

"The united population of the seven Western states, California, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, Colorado, Montana and Idaho, and three Territories, Utah, Arizona and New Mexico, is 3,258,000. Allowing five persons to a family, that would amount to a little over 650,000 families. Uncle Sam's drunk bill would give to each of these families $300 to buy a nice lot and $2,000 to build a handsome cottage and leave something to spare, but all this is swallowed and lost.

"There are about twenty millions of men in the United States. The money wasted in drink would buy each of them a suit of clothes costing $25, and give every one of them a watch and chain costing $50 besides.

"If the sum were in nickels and joined edge to edge, it would make a chain that would reach from the earth to the moon, and back again, or 150,000 miles.

"Let us suppose it to be in flour—fifty pounds to the sack and costing $1.10 a sack. This would build a wall six feet high and two feet thick, reaching from London to San Francisco and back—over 11,000 miles.

"If this flour were baked into bread it would furnish 200 one pound loaves to every family in the Union, or enough to feed the nation for nearly four months in the year.

"All this money is wasted in 240,797 saloons. If we allow eight persons to a saloon, that gives us nearly 3,000,000 persons who earn nothing, but feed and fatten on the earnings of their foolish customers.

"If these saloons were placed side by side, would line ten yards to each, they would line a street on both sides over 700 miles long, capable of reaching from Denver to Salt Lake City."

CHICAGO SATISFIED.

SPEAKING of the $2,500,000 appropriation by Congress during the closing hours of its last session, the Chicago News Record says:

"The gift is more than the directors of the World's Fair asked of Congress. Their purpose was to secure $5,000,000 in memorial coins from the government and to treat the government as a holder of stock to that amount, giving it back the same proportion of money from the proceeds as would be received by any other stockholder. The return of considerably more than half the money was well assured. Congress, however, has preferred to surrender all claim to the money appropriated."

It was supposed that the hesitation in the House to help the Fair would have some effect on Illinois politics, and hurt the prospects of the Democratic party there. Judging from the above it seems that the House after all has done better than the Illinois people expected.

DISQUALIFICATIONS OF MARRIED WOMEN.

In many of the large cities of this country school boards have adopted regulations disqualifying woman as a teacher in the public schools immediately after she is married. Reasons that to some appear pertinent are: logical are given, while to others they seem puerile and silly. However, the regulation obtains, and when the blithe young "schoolmarm" passes under the yoke of Hymen she must say good-bye to her former occupation.

Disclosures recently made reveal another office for which marriage disqualifies women. It was reported a short time since that the wife of Senator Hale was appointed to perform the ceremony of christening over a new war vessel to be launched from the Bath Iron works in a few weeks hence. The officers of the navy yards, and of the American fleet generally, received the intelligence with dismay. An old officer of the Brooklyn navy yard, when interrogated on this point, said:

"It is an ancient tradition that no married woman may baptize a new vessel. Such an innovation could not be tolerated, inasmuch as a superstition would follow the vessel that might make it difficult, if not impossible, to get a crew."

It appears that, according to naval etiquette, the launch of a new vessel and all details relating to the performance rests with the builders subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy. There is also an unwritten etiquette among the Sons of Neptune which is just as binding and more religiously observed than any statutory enactment. It is that the ceremony of christening must be performed by a maiden, and on no account by a married woman.

This is said to explain the trouble with the christening of the "Baltimore" in 1888. It was at first announced that Mrs. Wilson, wife of the naval constructor, would perform the ceremony connected with the naming of the "Baltimore." Protestants from naval officers came thick and fast to the Secretary. The baptism was postponed, and society at Washington was astonished that one of its prominent leaders did not officiate at the interesting ceremony. The vessel when launched some weeks later was named by a young maiden.

It is expected that Mrs. Hale must take a back seat at the rites of the "Ammen" run a few weeks hence, and that some lady of tender years will take her place. The wishes, superstitions and traditions of the sons of Neptune will doubtless be respected.

JOHNSON ISLAND.

JOHNSON ISLAND, the little speck in the South Pacific recently taken possession of by the British cruiser "Champlain," is situated 900 miles southwest of the Sandwich Islands. The place is said to be uninhabited and valueless. However, there is a good deal of noise being made about the British occupation. It is claimed that it was discovered and taken possession of in 1852 by an American captain named Parker. Whether international complications may ensue or not it is difficult to tell. The United States has no use for a barren, uninhabited island 900 miles from the Sandwich Islands, unless for planting a colony of anarchists there with John Most as Grand Hierophant and Mrs. Parsons as Supreme Grand Senechal.

LIQUOR IN CONGRESS.

PERHAPS no man in the United States within the past half century has attained notoriety so suddenly as the Hon. Thomas E. Watson, a member of Congress from Georgia. He is a stern prohibitionist. A short time ago he wrote a book in which he treated on the relations of Congress to the liquor traffic. The first edition of that book, 5000, is now exhausted, and the public appetite for its contents has only just been stimulated. In his description of Congress he says that "drunken members rebekat the aisles—a disgrace to the republic."

Such a charge as this could not go unchallenged by the House when made by one of its own members. An investigation followed, as readers of our dispatches will remember, but it did not entirely disprove what Mr. Watson said. It was not shown that drunken members reeled about, hurrhaling for the Fourth of July, but it was pretty clearly shown that in about 20 cases honorable members were very unstable on their feet, and had to be propped to keep them upright in their seats while voting on important measures.

Mr. Watson contends that Congress could do the work of the people much more efficiently without a bar for the sale of liquors than with one. On this question he says:

"This Congress is sent here to represent the people, and it ought to do what is right. We know that millions of the people are strong in the belief that liquor does vast harm; that it is the enemy of mankind; that it has killed husbands and fathers and ruined sons and daughters, and yet we authorize the establishment of a bar in the public building which is the property of these people as much as of the rest of our citizens.

"Why should it be strange if Congress, having become a barkeeper, should patronize that bar and feel the natural effect of that patronage? We have nothing to do with the bars all over the city; that does not make us so responsible as when we turn these inebriate halls founded by the Father of his Country, and which should be the light of the nation, into a mere barroom.

"When such things as this are done I do not think that any member of Congress ought to be restrained by any so-called ethics or by sentiments of personal friendship for his fellow members from denouncing such a monstrous evil. I don't believe a barroom is a necessary adjunct to the American public halls of legislation.

"I have treated this subject both in my book and in the paper which I publish at Atlanta in the manner in which I am sure my duty demands, and I have tried to base every statement on facts."

To Prove that matters were no better in the Senate, Mr. Watson quoted from a recent speech by Senator Vest, as follows:

"Every senator here knows that he can go into the Senate restaurant and get all the liquor he wants, if he has the money, and he can buy from a citizen from Maine—from the headquarters of prohibition. You have a card, published officially from the Senate restaurant, with all the wines upon it, and you can obtain Bourbon whisky ten degrees above proof, under the sobriquet of 'cold tea,' and they have even thrown off that disguise recently, and you can now drink it openly in the Senate restaurant."

In spite of the whitewashing report that was made in this matter, the people of the United States are keensighted enough to perceive the evils that it was intended to cover. And a great many citizens who are not strict prohibitionists consider the congressional traffic in alcoholic stimulants a disgrace to the capitol and to the nation.

AN ANCIENT AMERICAN FORT.

In Box Canyon, on the Gila river, several miles south of the Southern Pacific Railway in Arizona, is an ancient American Fort of singular construction. It has been for a long time a stronghold of the Indians, and during the gold excitement in California, it formed one of the largest mustering points. As described by Mr. R. E. L. Robinson in the San Francisco Chronicle, this canyon is 200 feet in width, with walls of perpendicular stone from 300 to 500 feet in height. At its mouth is the fortification referred to and which occasions so much speculation to observers and searchers of the past. It is pentagonal in form, but pyramidal in shape, and rises sixty feet in height above the desert. It indicates a race and a civilization entirely distinct from the cliff dwellers' remains found in the northern part of the Territory.

Mr. Robinson made a special excursion to the Gila river to examine this fort. As he journeyed down the canyon, he saw that the faces of the cliffs on either side, were covered with marks and writings of a bygone age. They were made evidently with some kind of paint. At the mouth he came in full view of the fort.

It is built of small boulders and cement. The first story is 22 feet high, in the form of an irregular pentagon. Two of the sides are about 200 feet each, while all the others measure about 150 feet each. Ten feet from the parapet of the terrace made by the roof of this rises another story, built in the same manner, and 18 feet in height. Above this there is still another terrace, from which rises a circular tower 40 feet in height, with a court on top.

The entire building is of solid masonry, and even today it would take a formidable piece of artillery to shatter it. The outside is plastered and covered with hieroglyphs, inscriptions, and representations of various animals engaged in combat. The remains of an old canal are still visible, which connected with the Gila, a mile distant, and which, before it reaches the fort, is divided, passing on either side, and connecting again, making the form of a diamond. It is supposed this was used as a moat. In the vicinity are indications of what must have been at one time a populous city, and evidences of work and industry of various kinds.

For strategic purposes no better site could be selected today for a fortification of the kind. It commands the key to the country south of it, and no invading army could pass it, without being slaughtered.

A COOL HEADED WOMAN.

The New York Recorder tells of an incident which occurred last Saturday night, in which a woman behaved with commendable coolness and admirable tact, under rather trying circumstances. Edward N. Souder, a wealthy planter and State senator of Yazoo, with his wife and two children, was visiting New York City and took rooms at a house on Thirty-fifth street. Says the Recorder:

"Saturday night they went to near Damrosch, at the Madison Square Roof Garden, and returned to the house about midnight. The rooms are on the fourth floor. Mr. Souder retired before his wife went upstairs. As she was disrobing the husband asked her to close one of the windows. A large trunk prevented her from approaching the window, but with an umbrella she reached out to raise the sash. As she leaned forward she saw a man crouched behind the trunk. She did not scream, but closed the window and went on chatting with her husband just as if she had seen nothing at all to frighten her. As she neared the bed she whispered to her husband of her discovery and warbled a snatch of one of the selections she had heard at the roof concert.

"Then the Senator from Yazoo arose from his couch and walked across the room to a closet, wherein he knew he had a pistol locked up in a satchel. Leisurely he secured the satchel, and, carrying it over to the trunk, laid it on the lid and slowly unlocked it. Taking out a big six-shooter, he leveled it at the crouching figure and said: 'Now you get up!'"

"The man obeyed, and as he crossed the room through the ray of moonlight that shone in through an open window Mr. Souder recognized in him a fellow-boarder who occupied a room overhead. Nothing had been stolen, so the big-hearted Southerner allowed him to leave the room.

The fellow ran downstairs and out into the street. Then Mr. Souder called the landlady and told him what had happened. The landlady decided that the man was John Scott. Scott's room was unoccupied. About 8 o'clock yesterday morning he came in, and the landlady accused him of an attempt at burglary. Mr. Souder was aroused and identified him, and the landlady had him locked up. At the station house two pawn tickets were found on his person, one representing an English yachting cap, which disappeared from one of the apartments a few weeks ago. He was remanded for examination.

THE KESLER CASE.

THE censured City Justice under advice from Boss Powers is fighting the City Council in the courts. By this he will at least gain delay and delay means the emoluments of office for as long as the delay lasts. This of course is quite shrewd in a small way and just the kind of tactics that might be expected from the persons who have adopted them. But the respect of the public for either of them will not be thereby materially increased.

A petition for an order of prohibition against the City Council, to prevent their substitution of Justice Gee in Kesler's place as Police Justice was filed on Wednesday and a temporary writ was issued and copies served upon the Councilmen. Following is the document. As it contains all the allegations in the petition we only reproduce the writ:

Territory of Utah, Third Judicial District Court.
The People of the Territory of Utah, send greeting:

To the City Council of Salt Lake City and to C. F. Loofbourrow, John L. Lawson, C. E. Wantland, J. A. Heiss, S. C. Ewing, H. F. Evans, E. A. Folland, E. E. Rich, O. H. Hardy, C. M. Bell, F. J. Mord, A. L. Simonds, J. C. Karkick and M. H. Beardsley, members of the City Council of Salt Lake City:

Whereas, Fred Kesler, Jr., of Salt Lake City, Salt Lake County, and Territory of Utah, lately in our court, before the Judge thereof, came and gave to the court his affidavit and he informed that he, the said Fred Kesler, Jr., is a citizen, resident and voter of said Salt Lake City, that he is a duly elected and qualified Justice of the Peace of said city; that in accordance with the laws of Utah Territory, the City Council for Salt Lake City on the 5th day of April, A. D. 1892, duly considered him the said Fred Kesler, Jr., to the office of City Justice of the Peace for Salt Lake City, and issued to him the said Fred Kesler Jr., its commission as such City Justice of the Peace; that he the said Fred Kesler, Jr., thereby became and was entitled to hold said office and to enjoy and receive the salary of said office for the period of two years from and after the date of his appointment to said office as aforesaid by said City Council of Salt Lake City; that on the ninth day of August, A. D. 1892, at a regular meeting of said City Council for Salt Lake City, the following resolution was introduced into said Council, to wit:

Resolved, that W. W. Gee, Justice of the Peace for the Fifth Precinct is hereby selected Police Judge until further notice, and that the City Marshal and Chief of Police are hereby requested to bring parties arrested for violation of the city ordinances before said Gee at his office in the City Hall for trial.

Further, that the City Auditor is hereby instructed not to pay Fred Kesler, Jr., any salary or money for acting as Police Judge after the adoption of this resolution, and that the said Kesler is hereby instructed to vacate the office he has occupied in the City Hall.

S. C. EWING,

That the persons signing said resolution are members of said City Council; that the effect of the adoption of said resolution will be to remove him, the said Fred Kesler, Jr., from his said office; that it will prevent him from receiving, as he rightfully should, the salary appurtenant thereto; and prevent him from enjoying the honors and performing the duties of said office; that said City Council has never formulated or presented any charges against him, the said Fred Kesler, Jr.; that it has never served or caused to be served on him any notice or citation to appear before said City Council and answer the charges that said City Council has refused and does refuse to allow him to appear in his own defense; that it refuses to allow him to appear by counsel; that it claims the right to remove him the said Fred Kesler, Jr., from his said office without any charges against him made and without any cause therefor shown or served and without any hearing had whatsoever; that at said meeting of said City Council had and held on the 9th day of August, 1892, he, the said Fred Kesler, Jr., appeared by his counsel, O. W. Powers, and protested against said City Council taking any action in the matter referred to, notwithstanding which said protest, said City Council proceeded to consider said matter and is proceeding and will, unless prohibited by this court, proceed to adopt said resolution, as he, the said Fred Kesler, Jr., verily believes, and oust him from his said office and prevent him from enjoying its salary and performing its duties; that the proceedings of said City Council in the premises are without and in excess of the jurisdiction of said City Council; that the said Fred Kesler, Jr., has no other specific legal remedy and cannot have adequate legal relief without the aid of the writ of prohibition.

Nevertheless, you, the City Council of Salt Lake City, and you, the said C. F. Loofbourrow, John L. Lawson, C. E. Wantland, J. A. Heiss, S. C. Ewing, H. F. Evans, E. A. Folland, E. E. Rich, O. H. Hardy, C. M. Bell, F. J. Mord, A. L. Simonds, J. C. Karkick and M. H. Beardsley, members of the City Council of Salt Lake City, well-knowing the premises, yet contriving the said Fred Kesler, Jr., unjustly to aggrive and oppress, have proceeded and are proceeding to adopt said resolution, without cause shown and without hearing, and not thus to oust him from his said office, in contempt of this court, and against the laws and customs of our said Territory, and to the manifest damage and grievance of him, said Fred Kesler, Jr.;

Wherefore, the said Kesler, Jr., hath prayed relief, and the writ of prohibition, we therefore do prohibit and firmly enjoin you and each of you that you do absolutely desist and refrain from any further proceedings in the premises until the further order of this court, and that you show cause on the second day of September, A. D. 1892, at 10 o'clock a.m. of said day, why you should not be absolutely restrained from any further proceedings in the premises.

Witness the Hon. F. J. Anderson, Judge, and seal of the district court of the Third Judicial District in and for the Territory of Utah, this 10th day of August, A. D. 1892.

By this movement Kessler secures his place and pay for a few weeks longer. Powers' legal maneuvers postpone eviction still further. But the event is inevitable, and he is out of very long if the Council takes the proper course and is ably represented before the court.

The position from which the Council desires to remove Kessler is simply a place to which he has been "designated." It is not the office of Justice of the Peace to which he was elected last February, but a post to which he was assigned by resolution of the Council in April. The power of the Council to remove him can scarcely be questioned. The laws of 1888, section 1755, par. 87, provide that the City Council shall have power "To appoint police and watchmen and to define their powers and duties, and to remove all officers of the city for misconduct, and to provide for filling such vacancies as may occur in any elective office, and to create any office that may be deemed necessary for the good government of the city; to regulate and prescribe the powers, duties and compensation of all officers of the city not herein provided for."

This evidently includes the power to remove elective as well as appointive officers, and to fill the vacancies occasioned by such removal. So that the Council may remove Kessler altogether. And if the resolution of censure passed upon him is just, he ought to be turned out forthwith. But the removal contemplated in the resolution which cannot now be carried into effect before a judicial hearing is had, simply relates to the place to which he was designated by the Council and from which that body can eject him when necessary. He was not "designated" for two years nor for any definite term. The only question of any real importance in this connection is, what is the legal mode of removal of a city officer?

The course taken in Kessler's case was this: The Mayor after hearing the evidence against the officers whom he removed, stated his lack of power to deal with others whom he thought were implicated, one of whom was City Justice Kessler. His case was referred to the Committee on Police. An investigation was had at which Kessler was permitted to appear and make his own defence. The Committee reported that there was "no excuse for his conduct" on the occasion which they had investigated, and that it was against the dignity of his position and open to censure. The Council adopted the report, and a resolution displacing him from the post to which he was assigned but not removing him from the office to which he was elected, was presented and held over for a week.

The attorney for Kessler evidently bases his case on a provision in Section Nine of the charter of 1880, which provides that "no officer shall be removed except for cause nor unless furnished with the charges; and shall have an opportunity of being heard in his defence," etc., and that a vote of two-thirds of the Council shall be necessary. But these provisions relate to "every person elected or appointed to any office under the provisions of this act." Kessler was not elected or appointed under the provisions of that act. All its provisions in relation to Justices of the Peace for the city were repealed long ago as 1872. Since then new laws have been passed in relation to those officers and, as we have shown, the laws of 1888 give power to the City Council "to remove all officers of the city for misconduct." The mode of procedure is not given and the court will probably decide whether the Council has taken legal action in the matter.

The truth is the course of Kessler in holding on to his place is what is vulgarly called "a game of bluff." Does he want his conduct openly ventilated and his record exposed? Hardly. But he thinks he can scare off the members of the Council who detected him on the night of June 17, 1892, by implications against them. It will be seen whether they have backbone enough to do their duty and defy his insinuations. If they back down now they will be viewed by the public with suspicion and no matter how undeserved it may be, shrinking will turn to their injury.

Kessler was not a fit person for the office to which he was elected. The Council made a great blunder in appointing him Police Justice. There ought not to be another case taken before him. As soon as possible he should be removed from office entirely. His reputation and record demand this. The Council is expected to do its duty.

THE GREAT CURE.

A FRIEND wishes to know whether we think there is any feasible means of adjustment for the prevalent social disturbances—in the form of strikes, lock-outs, boycotts and their violent concomitants—and if we do, what our idea of the remedy is.

We believe there is an effective cure for every human wrong, but that the condition of the race bars its application. The essence of the remedy is genuine Christianity. What there is of that in the world is mostly spurious, being made up of pretension, unsupported by practice, and even the profession of religion is on the wane. History teaches this lesson, if it teaches anything: That in the absence of religion morality rapidly disappears, and without morality justice takes a back seat. In the absence of justice peace is impossible.

Speaking as a whole, the world presents the aspect of a reign of selfishness. This is exhibited in every walk of life, each individual and aggregation of people, from the smallest contribution to the structure of a nation, is striving, struggling and fighting for advancement over all others. The fact is that the world-speaking specially of the more civilized portions of it—is unchristian and rapidly growing more so. Hence a cure of the conditions that are afflicting the race is impossible until that situation is changed.

The essence of genuine Christianity is self-denial. "Love thy neighbor as thyself;" and "Esteem thy brother above thyself." The opposite of this is embodied in an expression once used by a gentleman when testifying as a witness in one of the courts of Utah—"Of all my mother's sons I love myself the best." It needs no argument to show that if the rule among men was to seek the welfare of others rather than their own, or to labor for the general weal, conflicts would be impossible. Those whose interest is being enhanced by the actions of their neighbors have no cause to quarrel with the latter for thus contributing to their well-being. And until this disposition exists in men a millennium or era of peace is impossible.

As a matter of course, a pacific disposition is not all that is required, as ignorance as well as selfishness leads to conflict, because blunders grow out of misunderstanding. Light and sympathy combined will accomplish wonders in correcting the evils afflicting humanity. And these are embraced in genuine religion, which not only includes the love of God—which embodies the love of humanity—but also true education.

We recognize the fact that sentimental religion alone will not effect a cure of human ills. There must be regulations adjusting the relationships of the people. But intelligence and the love of God cannot be separated from the conditions and regulations necessary for the preservation of the social equilibrium of the world.

The Lord, in the early rise of the Church, revealed, in part, a system by which the Saints could work harmoniously in their temporal or business affairs. It involved the principle of co-operation, so systematized that all could labor for the benefit of the whole. A beginning was made, but the outcome was the dissolution of the organization, the cause of this result being that those associated with it were not sufficiently advanced in the understanding and practice of self-denial. Without this constituent its operation is impracticable. It might be asked why the Lord began to reveal the system under what appeared to be inopportune conditions. The answer is plain: Had He not done so the attention of the Saints would not have been forcibly directed toward the subject in a practical way. It was necessary as an educational effort, to prepare the people to accept and live according to the system when they shall be morally ready for it. They must at some time set before the world the means of solving the difficulties that afflict the race, but the operation cannot be of sudden growth. Intelligence, justice, self-sacrifice and brotherly love will constitute the essence of the system. These cannot be established by rules and regulations, but their superinducement conformity to their righteous requirements.

It may be said that many of the Saints are pulling away from the genius of unity under the inducements now offered for individual aggrandizement, which insensitively cultivated the selfish or unchristian spirit. This may be the case—it doubtless is in many instances—but we are of the opinion that there are, on the other hand, many who are longing for a new and better condition, when individual interests will be swallowed up in the central effort to conserve the welfare of the whole. This latter situation will be the universal condition in the millennial reign, under the benign rule of Messiah. In that time "every man will know the Lord;" "every man in every place will meet a brother and a friend" and the law of God will be written on the hearts of the people. All of these encouraging statements mean the prevalence of two conditions—a universal understanding of the relative rights of men and the prevalence of the love of God and humanity. In other words the era of a knowledge of truth and the existence of a common disposition to conform to its requirements. Hence the inevitable, because natural, result of such a condition—universal peace.

We believe that time will come, but we know not when. Justice is the normal condition of the universe of the Almighty and this globe of ours must wheel into line with its demands. Notwithstanding the present forbidding aspect of affairs, we believe that the time of adjustment is not very far distant. But between it and now will come the most gigantic and rapidly occurring revolutions that have ever taken place in the history of our planet. The Prophets, ancient and modern, have thus predicted.

A HORRIBLE NEW ENGLAND MURDER

FALL RIVER, Massachusetts, during the past week has been agitated over one of those murders for which New England has acquired considerable notoriety of late years. On the 4th inst. Andrew J. Borden, a wealthy banker, and his wife were found murdered in their home about 11 o'clock in the forenoon. No clue so far has been obtained of the murderer, for whose apprehension $5,000 reward is offered. The deed was perpetrated in a much frequented thoroughfare, in the center of a city of nearly 90,000 souls. The members of the household were at the time about the premises in the usual way. A servant was working in the upper part of the house.

Mrs. Borden was found, beaten to death, on the second floor. Her husband who had been resting on a lounge on the first floor, was found hacked to pieces with a knife or other sharp weapon. The inquest is now in progress. No clue so far has been obtained. In the Borden family there are two daughters, Lizzie and Emma.

A drug clerk testified that Lizzie asked for hydrocyanic acid at his store a few days before the murder. This is a poison that kills with very little pain and occasions no vomiting. It is supposed that both the old people were first poisoned and the bodies maltreated after death, as stated above.

The family consisted of six persons; namely, the murdered couple, two daughters, a servant and a friend or kinsman named Morse who made his home at the Borden house. At the time of the murder, the servant was in the house, the daughter Emma in the barn, Lizzie visiting at a distant part of the city, and Morse in town. He it was who discovered the dead bodies.

Mr. Borden was worth over $500,000. No probable cause can even be assigned for the murder. Lizzie Borden maintains a stolidity and indifference when questioned about the affair, that occasions surprise. When asked about the poison she vehemently disclaims all connection with such a theory, and becomes furiously indignant at the charge. Both she and her sister have offered the $5000 reward for the conviction of the murderer.

UP-HILL MISSIONARY WORK.

We have been shown a letter from Elder Joseph D. Stark, on a mission in England, to a friend in this city. The substance of his statement is to the effect that he labored for about six months in the Kent district of the London Conference. He found the people very indifferent to the truth. However, three persons during that half year embraced the Gospel. These were the only people who had taken this step in that section in a period of several years. He also operated for some time in South East London, where the people were so prejudiced that the Elders could not rent a hall. They succeeded in engaging one, but after paying the rent three months in advance the money was returned, accompanied by the information that they could not have the use of the hall, as others who were using it on week days had notified the landlord that they would all cease patronizing him if he permitted the "Mormons" to use it on Sundays, because the latter preached doctrines they did not coincide with. Elder Stark is now on the Island of Guernsey, where there is only one member of the Church and where prejudice is very strong. The Y. M. C. A. of that place makes it a business to publish and preach all kinds of absurd falsehoods about the Latter-day Saints and their doctrine. Elder Stark says it would be a good thing if persons in Utah having friends or relatives on the Islands of Guernsey and Jersey would take the trouble to write to them, as in that way many of the absurd notions prevalent among the people in relation to Utah might be measurably dispelled.

A letter from Elder Geo. W. Giffrey, who is in the Cheltenham Conference, tells a similar story. He finds it almost impossible to make any favorable impression upon the people regarding the revelation of the Gospel in this age. He makes a request that be published in this journal that he will be pleased to receive from people in Utah the addresses of friends and relatives in Cheltenham Conference, which now embraces what was formerly the Bristol Conference. His address is, 10 Andover Place, Cheltenham, England.

THOUGHTS ON THE HOMESTEAD AFFAIRS.

THE Homestead difficulty is assuming some peculiar features. This is particularly the case with regard to expressions of hatred toward the chief capitalists connected with the work. Manager Frick came very near "passing in his checks," to use a homely phrase, by means of the bullet and knife of an assassin. He is back at his post, and evidently takes no precautions to prevent another murderous attack, yet he continues to receive threatening letters, and it is asserted that a plot has been unearthed the object of which was to finish the bloody job which Bergman failed to execute. The police are watching for the heavy villain of the conspiracy who has undertaken to butcher Mr. Frick. The latter is a man of unusually strong characteristics. This is evinced by his course under the ordeal through which he is passing. His enemies can afford to admire his courage, even if they do not like his exercise of indomitable will and cannot agree with his ideas of justice.

Fortunately for Mr. Carnegie, he is now in a country where anarchists are swiftly dealt with, and where his person is comparatively free from danger of murderous attack. But he is being impaled upon the spikes of popular indignation.

Some time ago, in the Mother Country, a determination was expressed by bodies of workmen to the effect that they would oppose the acceptance of any more Carnegie donations for the establishment of beneficent institutions. It is difficult to understand the benefit that would arise from reprisals of that character. Such a boycott is novel, but quite impracticable, because there are thousands of ways by which Mr. Carnegie could, with his vast wealth, confer popular benefits that could not be prevented. In fact, we have thought that he could do much more good with his money in other ways than by erecting public libraries such as that splendid one he has established on George Fourth Bridge, Edinburgh. There are millions of people in the world—hundreds of thousands of them in Great Britain—who live in a condition of perpetual hunger, hardly ever having the opportunity of experiencing the satisfaction resulting from taking a sufficient quantity of wholesome food. The bare contemplation of such an aggregation of human suffering is appalling. But who thinks of it? Comparatively few. Yet those poor creatures are God's children. They are the brothers and sisters of all others of the human race. The thought of so many hungry people who suffer from birth to death from semi-starvation is enough to cause a pang to every large souled person when he sits down to a bounteous meal. There is a chance for Carnegie to do good.

We observe that a trades council in Glasgow referred to Carnegie in a resolution as a Judas Iscariot. This was hardly original. Besides, it was quite absurd, because the position of the apostate apostle who betrayed his Master does not have any feature in common with that occupied by the latter-day iron manufacturer. The former was evidently in somewhat reduced circumstances and sold his Master for thirty pieces of silver; the latter has so much money he doesn't know what to do with it, and attempts are being made to prevent him spending it in the way he wants to.

Mr. Carnegie spends the summer months of each year in Scotland, for the benefit of his health. More than likely that reason will cause him to deem it advisable to make his present stay abroad much longer than usual. He can see very plainly that Mr. Frick's physical condition has not been appreciably improved by his failing to go away from Homestead. In fact, Mr. Carnegie has given a remote intimation that he isn't wanted in the vicinity of the works, as he stated to a reporter that he had "every confidence" in those who have the business, including the dispute, in hand. He is evidently averse to running any chances of interviews with fellows of the Bergman stripe. He leaves that matter to the hands of Manager Frick, who, indeed, seems to be able to cope with it about as well as anybody could.

THE PAMIR UNPLEASANTNESS.

INFORMATION from London is to the effect that "even domestic politics are overshadowed by the gravity of the news from Pamir," to which we recently referred. Both China and England are moving against Russian aggression. The Afghans claim a part of the territory in dispute and are struggling to hold it against the Russians and Chinese. The British are decidedly strengthened for opposition to Russian advance by the recent British conquest of the petty states of Hunza and Nagar, situated between the Little Pamir and the frontier of Kashmir. The allied states of Hunza and Namar comprise all the valleys draining into the Kanjaut or Hunza river, which flows into the Gilgit river, two miles below Gilgit Fort.

This region is extremely difficult of access, to which fact is due the impunity with which the tribesmen have hitherto been able to carry on their raids into the countries of their neighbors. These valleys originate in a gigantic mountain system containing some of the highest peaks in the Himalayas, Mount Rakaposhi, which towers above Chait, being 25,000 feet high, while a number of other summits exceed 24,000 feet. Immense glaciers descend into the ravines, the Nagar river itself rising in the vastest of known glaciers, which is nearly eight miles in length.

Being surrounded by granite precipices and great wastes of snow and ice, affording only a hazardous passage during a few summer months into the neighboring country, Hunza-Nagar has but one point that is vulnerable, the ravine of the Kanjaut river, for an invading army. The mouth of the ravine is, however, practically closed during summer, because the river is so swollen at that season, by melting snows, that it becomes a rushing torrent, covering in places the whole width of the narrow valley. The British hold this practically impregnable position and are thus prepared to resist the Russian advance should the latter attempt to invade British territory. The Russians are now dangerously near British possessions, although not actually within them.

A dispatch received in London from Peking says:

"The Chinese government is already on the alert and explanations have been demanded from both Russia and Afghanistan for encroaching upon territory claimed by the Chinese. The Chinese forces in Pamir region, commanded by General Chang, without waiting for any explanations, have already encountered the Afghans in a bloody conflict at Samutash. The Chinese were considerably outnumbered, but they fought resolutely, and only retreated in the face of overwhelming force."

The authorities of British India are alive to the threatening character of the situation. They are arousing both the Chinese and Afghans to the danger to which they are exposed and by which they are threatened on account of the Russian encroachments.

RACE CONFLICT DEVELOPMENT.

THE race question in the South is becoming gradually more serious and threatening. As proof of this fact it is only necessary to refer to the fact that there has been organized in Alabama an oath-bound secret society—the "Knights of the White Shield." The object of the association is to maintain the supremacy of the white population in all matters political and social, at all hazards.

The New Orleans Tribune announces, on the other hand, that the negroes have established an organization in Kentucky the purpose of which is to secure the lives of negro prisoners in that State and in Florida.

The formation of these antagonistic combinations is almost sure to lead to conflicts and bloodshed. In fact, the carrying out of their objects must inevitably cause such a condition. Oath-bound aggressive societies are a curse to the country, as they segregate and tend to disrupt social and political affairs.

STRIKES IN THE UNITED STATES.

THE latest in the way of sensational intelligence from Homestead is a strike among the cooks. The head cook went out, taking seventy-four subordinates with him. From the tenor of the dispatch the trouble must have originated between the head cook and head watchman, as the latter and four assistants are under arrest.

Under the new regime the men now working in the Carnegie works are all boarded and lodged within the premises. The watchmen are employed to keep strikers out and the new men inside, and to prevent as much as possible intercourse between the classes. The commissariat department in an establishment of the Carnegie kind at present is an important one. Without it there could be no possibility of carrying on business in opposition to strikers. The new men, immediately they left the grounds, would be set on and maltreated, then in many cases boarding houses would refuse to entertain them, and stores would deny them supplies. So that an essential to break down a strike is a boarding house within the premises, under the supervision of the firm or one of its active managers.

The Philadelphia Press has been diving into the literature of strikes. It has found out that the first in this country occurred in that city, in 1796. It was not then termed a strike, but a "turn out" for higher wages, which the Philadelphia journeymen boot and shoemakers did. After being out two weeks they obtained their demands. In two years after they turned out again, and in 1799 came out a third time, receiving what they wanted on each occasion. In 1803 the sailors of New York "turned out" for a raise of from $10 to $14 a month. They failed.

The Quaker Crespien, emboldened by former successes, turned out once more in 1805, but this time were signally unsuccessful. They fought for seven weeks, and the leaders were prosecuted for conspiracy to raise wages. In 1809 the New York shoemakers turned out, and obtained their demands. In 1815 Pittsburg experienced its first turn out. The shoemakers again were the strikers, but they failed. In 1821 the printers were first heard from at Albany, N. Y. The Typographical Society organized against non-union men. Up till 1830 there was nothing said about hours of labor. In that year the masons and carpenters of Boston struck for a ten hour day. They were unsuccessful. In 1832 labor unions were becoming so strong that in Boston employers resolved not to employ union men. The ten hour day was agitated in Massachusetts and caused serious disorder. In 1834 the military were called out to suppress rioting. This issue extended to New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and about 1836 the ten hour day began to be generally observed. Hitherto it had been from sunrise to sunset. In 1836 French-Canadian laborers in Maine struck because the bosses prohibited them from smoking at work. They gained their point. From 1836 to 1842 fifteen strikes occurred, two of which were among women.

In the Pittsburg district the first iron strike occurred in 1842. In this year the weavers of Eastern Pennsylvania also struck. Next year the brick-makers were heard from. In 1845 the iron men again inaugurated a big strike, obtaining their demands. In 1850 the disturbances in Pittsburg were alarming. Women and children were engaged in rioting. Imported men were put to work, and the American men and women destroyed a large amount of property. From 1850 to 1860 strikes were numerous. In 1865 an attempt was made in the iron industry to make a scale which both sides agreed to. This system more or less prevailed ever since, but it has not prevented strikes.

Within the past decade strikes have become so frequent, and assume so much of the character of civil war, that their treatment would require a volume. From 1881 to 1887 nearly fifty-two millions of dollars were lost to strikers, and the same amount or more to capitalists. The losses by strikes since are incalculable. It is estimated that all the money lost by strikes since the beginning of the century would pay off the national debt of the United States and that of several of the States besides.

CONGRESSIONAL APPROPRIATIONS.

PARTY organs are making a good deal of talk about the respective appropriations of the first session of the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses. The former is usually denominated the billion dollar Congress, but the latter by its appropriations during the session just closed exceeds those of the first session of the Fifty-first by $44,000,000. Putting the question in this way is misleading, and in the end would result in no advantage to any party. The best way is to place the actual figures before the public and let them judge for themselves. The appropriations of the two sessions referred to are as follows:

	Fifty-first Congress.	Fifty-second Congress.
Agricultural.....	$1,799,100 00	$3,243,975 50
Army.....	94,306,471 00	94,306,499 00
Diplomatic and Consular.....	1,710,915 00	1,804,645 00

Pension.....	98,457,461 00	146,747,360 00
Post-office.....	73,028,694 90	97,531,477 73
River and Harbor.....	25,136,291 00	21,153,515 00

Permanent annual appropriations.....	101,838,453 00	121,861,880 00
Totals.....	$468,398,510 79	$507,711,121 94

It will be seen that in the matter of pensions an increase of $45,000,000 has taken place in the permanent annual appropriations; $10,000,000 for sugar bounties, and $9,000,000 for refunding national bank notes. The World's Fair gets $2,500,000. The agricultural department also shows an increase. Altogether these items will make over $75,000,000, the expenditure of which is directly chargeable to the legislation of the Fifty-first Congress, and hence cannot be fairly classed as belonging to the Fifty-second.

But then it is permissible to go back and show how much of the billion dollars of the Fifty-first Congress was the result of the legislation of the Fiftieth. We are of opinion that the sum of $70,000,000 of the so-called billion dollar Congress can be shown to be the result of legislation in the preceding Congress. Presenting issues of this kind in an entirely one-sided manner only mystifies the people, and does not help either party finally. What the people of the United States are concerned about is the question, was the money wisely expended and to the best advantage of the people at large?

The old whaling bark "Progress," with its extensive museum of marine curios and relics of whaling voyages, is now in the harbor at Chicago, and is being visited by hundreds of people.

IS IT A TRUST.

SIX of the great flouring mills of California, under the name of the Sperry Flour Company, have joined together, and henceforward will be operated as one company. This is done, it is said, to reduce expenses and give the general public better terms. That is what the Reading coal combine did last year, when the whole anthracite coal output of the country came under one management, but coal has gone up one dollar on the ton since the combine was accomplished, and now Congress has taken steps to investigate the matter.

The California mills in the trust or combine, or whatever it is, have an aggregate capacity of 6,000 barrels of flour daily. According to the Chronicle the new corporation is capitalised at $10,000,000, and has $5,800,000 of paid up capital. The formation of this monopoly is becoming an issue between Republicans and Democrats in California. Inasmuch as flour cannot be properly included in articles needing protection, the formation of a trust in the article is advanced as an argument that protection does not create trusts. Wheat flour, it is true, imported into the United States is subject to a duty of 25 per cent. ad valorem, but very little, if any, is imported.

The Democrats, on the other hand, ask "What is the need of protecting an article that requires no protection?" But the Republicans answer, "By protection we discourage wheat-growing on our Canadian border, and in other places. When foreign farmers know they can't sell to us, they will not grow wheat." And so the quarrel goes, while the facts show that trusts and combines are formed irrespective of parties and under both protection and free trade.

THE CASE OF KING, OF TENNESSEE.

THE name of Henry Clay King of Tennessee has been mentioned a great deal in the papers during the last eighteen months. The story of his life makes a lamentable chapter in the drama of human history. Only a short time ago he was found guilty of murder by a jury of his fellow citizens and was sentenced to be hanged. Governor Buchanan, on the 9th inst., commuted the death sentence to penal servitude for life. The commutation was not well received by the people of Memphis, and King had to be removed secretly in order to escape a lynching.

Col. H. C. King was a man whose celebrity as a lawyer, author and soldier was not confined to the limits of his native State. In the war of the rebellion he achieved fame as a soldier of the confederate army. His regiment, known as "King's tigers," makes a formidable showing in the civil war records. In law his work known as "King's Digest" is recognized as a standard in its line. Professionally he ranked among the foremost of the Tennessee bar. And it was while in the practice of his profession that he brought upon himself the misery which blighted his name, his family and his honor. About five years ago Mrs. Mary J.

Pillow, widow of General Gideon J. Pillow of Mexican war fame, called at the office of Henry Clay King in Memphis, on some trifling legal business. She was a woman of forty-five, but possessing certain charms which attracted King. He subsequently left his wife and children and went to live in her house. This naturally created gossip and caused great scandal. King found that public opinion was not by any means on his side. He owned a large plantation in Arkansas, and to this he and Mrs. Pillow retreated, and lived there as man and wife. The lady urged King to place his property beyond the reach of his lawful wife and children. She induced him to transfer the Arkansas estate to herself for protection. This he did. Mrs. Pillow then quietly had the property recorded in her own name. When King discovered this he charged the woman with perjury, and with plotting to ruin his wife and children. Mrs. Pillow in return ordered him off her premises. He had to go, and returned to Memphis, where only consternation awaited him. He tried to become reconciled with the Pillow woman once more, but she spurned him from her home that formerly was his. He then entered suit for the recovery of his property.

Mrs. Pillow retained as her attorneys the firm of Poston and Poston of Memphis. During the trial the relations of the plaintiff and defendant were fully disclosed. In his speech at the trial, David H. Poston, senior member of the firm, scolded King in a merciless and scathing manner. The speech aroused King to great anger. He met Poston in Memphis on March 10th, 1891, and shot him dead. At the time the murder created indignation in Memphis. A large mob attacked King who held them at bay with his smoking revolver, but finally surrendered to deputy-sheriff. His wife visited him in prison, and stood by him to the last. His defense at the trial was based on insanity, but the jury rendered a verdict of murder against him after two hours' deliberation.

It is said that strong influence both political and social was brought to bear on Governor Buchanan. If King had challenged Poston to combat in the usual Southern way public opinion would not be so fierce against him. But King walked deliberately up to his victim, pulled the trigger within a few feet of Poston's body, sending the ball clear through the intestines.

King's respite by the Governor was based principally on technical grounds. It was considered he was entitled to a change of venue, which was denied him, and that there were some other informalities about the trial. It is unlikely that there would have been a commutation of sentence if the convict had occupied a less prominent position in society. As it is, penal servitude for life is a terrible punishment.

Indiana will make a fine display at the World's Fair of the results of manufacturing industries growing out of the discovery of natural gas. Since Indiana first began to use the gas in 1885, it is claimed, the growth of manufacturing in the State has been greater than in any other state in the Union.

A CHANGE NEEDED.

THE censure passed by many City Councilors on the park keeper only violated the sentiment of the public. It is a disgrace to the person in charge to see the free-riding for want of attention both in Liberty Park and on the public squares. A live hedge has been set out in the part of the park which is peeling for want of water. This comes of providing places for party hangers-on.

Another thing open to complaint is the rough manners of one at least of the men who promenade the park for a living. His conduct forms a strong contrast to the courteous manners of Cammilla who formerly officiated there. The writer witnessed an exhibition of this a few evenings ago. A lady and gentleman were riding in a buggy at a rather rapid rate but not what might be called "fast driving." A policeman thrust his club in front of the horse's nose and yelled out in an offensive tone: "Stop that! Hold up or I'll run ye in! Pull up, I tell you!" and so on, as the pair drove on without paying any attention to the shouting insolent officer.

There should be propriety in everything. And men in a police uniform with a star and club should remember they are servants, not masters of the public; and park-keepers should bear in mind that they are expected to do something more than simply draw their salaries as a political reward.

ARE THE WORLDS INHABITED?

THE observations of the planet Mars, which is now in unusual proximity to our globe, have occasioned a good many speculations, philosophical and otherwise, in regard to the conditions existing in other worlds than our own. Is Mars inhabited? That is one of the questions propounded. The astronomers who confine themselves to the actual developments of science do not pretend to answer this query. There are others, however, who mingle deductions with discoveries and speculative philosophy with scientific knowledge, and they decide the question with more or less dogmatic confidence.

We do not think that pure science has furnished any definite solution to this interesting problem. We are of the opinion that for a very long time it will fail to do so. There may come a time when communication shall be opened up from world to world, and that which can now only be learned by revelation will be established by observation and experience.

To a great many professed scientists the mention of revelation, that is, Divine revelation as a reality, only provokes a smile or a frown. But then such persons are not all there is of intelligent humanity, and there are thinking individuals, disposed too to investigate before accepting anything, who have abiding faith in the actuality of Divine communication to man.

In reference to the question, Are other worlds than this inhabited? the Latter-day Saints have something definite for their guide. In a vision given to Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon, Feb. 16th, 1832, they saw the Son of God and beheld his glory; they were told to testify of his existence and "that by Him and through Him the worlds are and were created, and the inhabitants thereof are begotten sons and daughters unto God."

In the "Pearl of Great Price" are many allusions to this important subject and much information may be obtained from it concerning the governing planets and the purpose of their creation, this earth being designated as containing greater wickedness than any other of God's creations. All these references are corroborative of the doctrine that God created the worlds as habitations for His children, that they are in different stages of progression, and that the earth contains not a branch of the great family of the Universal Father.

In the 88th section of the Doctrine and Covenants much more is revealed concerning the "Kingdoms" which God has established and the intelligences within them, and in a parable it is shown that all these worlds, in their time and season, if they abide the law of their creation, will be gladdened with the presence and glory of their Maker.

These communications are of value to those who receive them as Divine; to others they may seem worthless. But at any rate they are reasonable and can be supported by rational reflection and by comparison with things that are known and admitted. It is unreasonable to suppose that this little earth, among all the myriads of the countless worlds that move in space subject to similar laws, is alone the abode of intelligent, progressive beings.

The astronomical observations of the planet Mars, although to some extent indefinite, have established the proofs that in many respects it has a great resemblance to our globe. What could be the object in the formation of such a planet if it were not as an abode for intelligent humanity? That Mars has an atmosphere; that its poles are snow-clad; that at certain seasons the snow melts; that it has mountains and valleys, that it has streams which resemble canals; these and many other points have become established almost to a certainty, and the inference is at least logical that a world so constituted is inhabitable and inhabited.

The dispatches published in the papers speak of the "germination" of the canals as not proven. The word should be germination, that is, duplication or doubling. This refers to the alleged discoveries of Schiaparelli of parallel canals on Mars. That eminent astronomer holds to the correctness of his observations and contends that they will yet be confirmed. If his prediction should be fulfilled the fact would be strong evidence in favor of the theory that Mars is inhabited.

It is contended by many scientists that most of the planets are uninhabitable, some because they are so near to the sun that human beings could not dwell there for the heat, and others because they are so far away that men would perish for the cold. The reasoning which leads to conclusions like these starts from the proposition that men and women in other worlds must be constituted exactly like the inhabitants of this earth. This we regard as an error and therefore the conclusions drawn from it are probably erroneous.

In the first place the conditions of climate and other surroundings on the worlds near to or remote from the sun have not been certainly determined. In the next place it would not follow that because of extreme heat or extreme cold, which no dweller on this earth could endure, men and women could not be formed with organisms suited to the environment whatever it might be. There are plants and animals in the arctic regions of the earth which could not live near the equator, and vice versa; yet they are plants and animals, nevertheless. The human denizens of this torrid zone would find it difficult to live in the arctic regions, but the people of both zones are men and women. They are of different tribes but the same race. And we have but to extend this principle to greater lengths to justify the conclusion that men and women, specially adapted therefore, may inhabit worlds which earthly scientists think incapable of human occupancy.

Of course this is not proof. As we have said, science has not yet furnished any definite proofs one way or the other, and is not likely to do so at present. But in this age of scientific research and of Divine manifestation, it is not rash to predict that knowledge will be obtained on this important and fascinating subject. This is not only the period of progress in science and art, in intellect and invention, in daring thought and wonderful appliances, but it is the "dispensation of the times of times" in which all things will be made manifest; "nothing shall be withheld" whether "in the heavens above or the earth beneath."

The temples that are being reared and that will be erected in other places will be temples of learning. They will be devoted not only to receiving in one part the word of the Lord through the "living oracles," but in other parts to the scientific demonstration of revealed truths. Religion and science will thus go hand in hand, and it will be seen that there is no conflict but the most perfect harmony between true science and true religion, from both of which that speculative philosophy, which has passed for either will be entirely banished.

We have no more doubt that the glittering stars and rolling planets, that move in their silent splendor in limitless space, are peopled with the sons and daughters of the Eternal, in various stages of progressive being, than we have, that there are human beings in earthlands which we have not visited. Nor have we any doubt that when the dwellers on earth have reached the celestial state they will acquire the means of communicating with their relatives on other worlds. Not only the members of the solar system but the innumerable so-called "fixed stars"—the suns of the universe with their attendant spheres, on which are beings who have advanced in wisdom, and power, and glory, to that perfection which we desire to attain, ages before this world came forth out of chaos at the Divine command.

We shall find out, either in this life or what we call "the life to come," that the multiplication of the offspring of God goes on from age to age in worlds without end, and that herein is the Father glorified, man being His "image and glory," and woman being the glory of the man, because through and by her seedless increase, involving power and dominion and happiness and union for ever and ever.

WHAT IS ANARCHY?

JULIUS HANBROEK, grand master of the Independent Order of Free Sons of Israel, is reported to have said in New York on Sunday last that "all aliens who are known to be nihilists, dynamites and anarchists" should be expelled from the United States.

This is good, as far as it goes, but what remedy would he suggest for native born anarchists? Speaking a few days ago in Chicago Mrs. Parsons said:

"I belong not to the upper ten thousand but to the lower ten million. I never stole $1,000,000, so my word goes for nothing. I know well that when the next disturbance takes place here I shall be arrested as a dangerous anarchist. We are growing, and we will sink this capitalistic ship of state."

Mrs. Parsons is not an alien, neither was her husband. Her children, whom she is schooling in anarchy, are not aliens. The audience to whom she addressed these words was far from being entirely alien, and her most vigorous applauders were native Americans. The men who assailed Russell Sage was not an alien. The most desperate criminal in all the world is the native American, when he goes into a career of crime.

LIZZIE BORDEN CHARGED WITH MURDERING HER PARENTS.

A DISPATCH from Fall River states that Lizzie C. Borden was formally charged with the murder of her father and step-mother, and that she was committed without bail.

Miss Borden is 32 years of age, and is accounted a handsome woman. She moved in the best society of her town, and is a prominent member of the Congregational Church. Her father, the murdered man, was about 70 years of age. His first wife, the mother of Lizzie and her sister Emma, died about 27 years ago. Mr. Borden married a second time and the woman murdered was therefore Lizzie's step-mother.

On the day of the murder, the 4th inst., the Borden household consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Borden, Lizzie and Emma Borden, a servant girl, and a man named Morse, brother of Mr. Borden's first wife. On the day mentioned Mr. Borden went out for a walk around town and returned at 10:30 a. m. His daughter Lizzie met him on his return, and helped him to take off his coat, and prepare a lounge for him to rest on in the parlor. Morse at this time was out, the servant girl was on the third floor, Mrs. Borden was on the second floor, and Emma was out visiting friends. Lizzie then left the house and went to the barn. She was there, she thought about 20 to 30 minutes when she heard moans. She came back to the house, entered the parlor, found her father lying as she had left him, but with his face and head chopped as with an axe. There were 11 cuts on the face. Lizzie gave the alarm. The servant was first to enter. Morse who was out, soon after came in. A policeman named Dougherty also appeared. He asked for Mrs. Borden. Then a search was made for her. She was found on the second floor, face downward, lying in a pool of blood, her skull cut open, and 18 cuts on her head.

The evidence at the inquest as published did not give any light as to the mystery. It was shown that Lizzie and her step-mother never were on good terms. Her father was accounted a close man in money affairs, and prohibited his daughter from entertaining or receiving company, though he was worth half a million dollars. Both daughters are unmarried.

TOO MUCH PLEASURE-HUNTING.

THESE are strange times. Any person professing to be a Latter-day Saint who takes the trouble to scan the situation throughout the world ought to be able to see that ancient and modern prophecy is being fulfilled with marvelous precision. Large numbers of the people belonging to the Church either do not take the trouble to give any attention to this fact, or else, in the face of the gravity of the situation, treat it with an indifference equal to that manifested toward the message carried by the Elders to the people in some of the nations abroad. This is a day of warning. It applies at home as well as abroad.

Among the Saints many are lukewarm, a condition that is displeasing in the sight of God. This is evinced by the mad rush after gaily and pleasure, leading in some cases to vice. The present tendency of the community in this respect is phenomenal. It has reached a stage that appears to us to be incompatible with the profession of genuine disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Even aside from the strictly religious aspect of the situation, it is regrettable from an economic standpoint. For the sake of spending a few hours in the species of recreation obtainable by participation in excursions, many people spend money which they can ill afford to apply to such a purpose. Some even incur indebtedness to gratify the popular inclination in the direction of pleasure-seeking. Thus numbers of families are placed by the inordinate indulgence in fleeting amusement. They have in consequence to subsequently go without supplies that conduce to their health and permanent comfort.

Doubtless many are led into the popular pleasure-hunting drift by example. Parents who are not in a position to afford such indulgences—to say nothing about their questioning their propriety from a religious standpoint—are appealed to by their children, who point, for argument, to the way in which other young folks are indulged, and so it goes.

The effect of the prevailing stampede after certain forms of pleasure-seeking has a demoralizing effect upon the public mind. We have special reference to the Latter-day Saints. It increases the tendency toward frivolity, and when the minds of the young are absorbed in that direction, the mental space is occupied and no room is left for the contemplation of the solid and serious. Yet we are living in the most important age of the world's history, and one of the most critical in that of the Church. It is a time when every officer and member ought to be considering how they can best serve God and build up His work; how they can occupy their time in doing good in place of selfishly and continuously ministering to the gratification of their personal appetites. If such a course were taken, what an inspiring spectacle the community would present. As it is, however, a portion of the people exhibit a different picture.

We do not intend to convey the impression that we are opposed to proper recreation, confined within the lines of moderation and good judgment. On the contrary we favor it. But when indulgence in it oversteers the bounds of common sense we hold that it is morally, physically and religiously hurtful. We wish some of those who have been going to excess in this direction would stop and reflect, that they might agree with this view and act accordingly. Those Latter-day Saints who are forgetful of their religious obligations ought to consider the times in which we live and the nature of the work in which they are, or ought to be, engaged.

THE BRIGHAM YOUNG COLLEGE.

The Brigham Young College of Logan, Utah, will begin its fifteenth collegiate year on September 5th. We have received the circular of this institution for the present year, and we think the issue will commend itself to a large number of young men and women in this Territory and its vicinity.

The college offers three two-year courses of study, the elementary, the normal and the business course; and two four-year courses, the scientific and the literary. These courses cover a wide and well selected range of study.

The elementary course is designed to furnish a thorough training in the elementary and common branches. The normal course qualifies students to assume professionally the duties of teachers in Territorial schools. The scientific course provides four years' training in the sciences, mathematics, language and philosophy. The literary course comprises languages, history, political science, philosophy and selected courses in natural science. The business course provides thorough training in the branches most used in business life.

The college aims to furnish a complete course in the theological doctrines of the Church, to give her students practice in their various Church callings, and to develop those high ideals of manhood and womanhood, those sentiments of honor and virtue, and that practical faith and works everywhere cherished by true Latter-day Saints. We note as follows from the college circular:

In the first year Roberts' The Gospel is used as a text book for two terms. It is followed by lectures on Messianic Prophecy and the Life of Christ during the second two terms.

In the first term of the second year a study of Penrose's Mormon Doctrine and the Articles of Faith, with references, introduces the work. The principles of the Gospel as expounded in Orson Sp car's Letters, with lectures, when possible, by returned missionaries, will occupy the second term.

The third term is taken up by studies in the Book of Mormon, using that work and Reynolds' The Story of the Book of Mormon for reference. A course of lectures on Prehistoric Races and Ancient Ruins of America is given in this connection.

In the fourth term The Key of Theology is used as a text book, and essays and speeches as a preparation for missionary work are required of the students.

In the third year, preparation of topics from Orson Pratt's Works and from the Voice of Warning, is required once a week in connection with the study of mental science, which partially takes the place of systematic theology at this stage. Similarly, The Preceptor, by John Nicholson, is studied along with logic in the third term, while ethics alone occupies the fourth term.

In the fourth year a more general course, comprising natural theology, Christian evidences, and studies in philosophy takes the place occupied in the preceding years by the special subjects above enumerated.

The subjects of psychology, logic, ethics, natural theology, Christian evidences, and selected studies in philosophy, comprise the course offered in mental and moral science and philosophy.

A two terms' course in mental science is first given. The text-book is supplemented by lectures on the leading concepts of modern psychology. The great facts of mind, including the varied and interesting phenomena of the mental life, the significance of the soul as a demonstrated existence, with a systematic view of its powers, outlines the course, which, besides being complete in itself, is also intended to serve as a general introduction to all the work that follows.

Logic is studied during the third term, mainly from the text-book. The study presupposes some knowledge of mental processes. It is taken up by an analysis of the propositions used in thought and speech, investigates their successful application in reasoning, and gives a full exposition of the subject and nature of proofs and fallacies.

Ethics occupies the fourth term of the first year. The science of duty is treated in a simple but thorough manner by means of lectures and text-book lessons. Morals and religion are shown to go hand in hand. Belief in the Divine goodness and practical faith in the existence of God, form the basis from which the instruction is given.

Morality is shown to have a scientific as well as a religious basis.

Natural theology occupies the first two terms of the (second) year. This study cannot be taken unless the student has previously studied mental science or unless he takes the latter at the same time with natural theology. The subject treats of the existence and character of God as far as these may be known from reason and nature. Belief in a Creator is shown to be sustained and justified by reason. Theism is contrasted with atheism, belief with skepticism, on purely scientific and rational grounds, and the superiority of the former is demonstrated by a series of arguments. At the same time, the necessity for divine revelation to show man's specific destiny, to explain the existence of sin and the remedy for it, to confer authority to administer in the Gospel ordinances, etc., is shown and illustrated.

Christian evidences occupies the third term, and consists of a series of lectures on the credibility of revealed religion, the divine authenticity of the Bible and Book of Mormon, the harmony of science and religion, and kindred subjects.

Studies in philosophy is the last subject taken up. It will comprise selected studies in psychology, theism, and metaphysics, and will be presented in the form of lectures and by assigned readings in the works of standard authors.

The course in English extends through three years, embracing English classics, elocution, rhetoric, English literature, the origin and history of the English language, studies in Chaucer and Spenser, Shakespeare, and modern poets.

Latin and German each extends through three years, and Spanish through two years.

Mathematics extends through three years, comprising algebra, Geometry, trigonometry, surveying, determinants, analytical geometry and calculus.

Physics and astronomy extend through a year and a half. Biology includes physiology, general Biology, systematic botany, microscopic and physiological botany and zoology.

Chemistry extends through one year and a half, and comprises qualitative and quantitative analysis, assaying and determinative mineralogy. Practical laboratory work is the leading feature in each department of natural science.

History and political science extend through three years. Grecian and Roman history, English history, United States history, general history, English constitutional history, civil government, constitutional law, political science, and political economy are the branches offered.

Instrumental and vocal music is taught by a skilled instructor and musician; and photography by a specialist. The faculty, eleven in number, have been selected with great care from the most successful teachers in the Territory. The cost of tuition, $5 per term, is merely nominal, while board is cheap and excellent and rent low in Logan. Further information may be obtained by writing to the President, S. H. Paul, Ph. B., Logan, Utah.

From the synopsis we have given above, it may be inferred that the college will receive a liberal patronage, and we wish it the success to which, by its advantages and character, it is clearly entitled.

IMPROVEMENT OF OUR PUBLIC THOROUGHFARES.

The average and lolly-minded American is proud to point to his country's rapid advancement and congratulate himself upon the fact that the world itself has progressed, to a surprising degree, since the discovery of the new continent. Every department of science has received a wonderful impetus; every invention for man's comfort and advancement has been fostered and Galileo and Copernicus would not be ostracized for heresy. Liberty, learning and progress have gone hand in hand and we believe that the world will presently make an upward movement in religion and morality. We shall then be surprised to discover that even were preferable to the fanatic servility and gross ignorance of the middle ages, inasmuch as they gave scope and impetus to independent thought upon these lines, canceled superstition and opened free channels to high thought and broad reason.

We boast of our advancement and in many ways we have reason to do so. The middle ages have but little to attract us, though the heaven that has worked the bread of the present was formulated and began to ferment in that period. But let us step behind those scenes in the vista of time. The old Roman has a sturdiness that commands our admiration, in spite of his faults. A little farther back we could almost envy the ancient Greek. Farther still, the old Egyptian. Where shall we find a grader more than Rameses, or a people who spoke so clearly and strongly to coming generations with tongues of stone as those old industrious, hard working, art-living Egyptians? Our beautiful residences, nay, we fear even the "crown stone fronts" of our Vanderbilts and Astors are mere imitation lace work when we compare them with the architectural monuments of these dead generations. We know not how the pyramids were built or how the obelisks were raised. We ponder and are lost as we think upon the temples of Karnac and Heliopolis, and, well yes, we almost sigh for that beautiful, lost civilization.

Then we think of those causeys and splendid roads which were made and enjoyed by the ancient people, Egyptians, Romans, Greeks and Arabs alike, and again we almost envy them. The Goths and Vandals, while yet barbarian nomads, may have traveled in their war-like expeditions over such roads as ours, but the civilized Romans, Greeks and Egyptians, never! Even the descendants of the Goth and Vandal were not slow in detecting and correcting that source of discomfort; bad roads; but the American politician, shall we say that he is too busy with politics and the seeking and securing of his office to think much of public improvements? Or is it that he never travels except in a Pullman Palace and is not therefore aware of the terrors of travel off railroad lines. We wish that he might have occasion to take a trip over the wagon roads of Southern Utah. He would perhaps think it privation to live without a railroad; but to behold the painful labor of draught animals as they drag their heavy burdens of freight over the rough, uneven, cut-up, rocky roads beneath the cruel lash of the impatient, weary driver, would alone awake a desire for a better condition. We will not mention women and children who must endure agonies in traveling or else remain at home. But what is the use of calling attention to the sufferings of animals or of human beings, the inconvenience of dragging to church, school, lecture or theatre (such theatres as we can have in a country where troops will never venture across the roads) through wind and dust, over rocks and holes? What is the use of saying that our civilization is retarded, our finer feelings degraded as we goad our teams, our vehicles prematurely worn out and broken down, the price of our goods increased—our necessities for luxuries can scarcely be transported with safety—the burdens of our whole lives increased by the condition of the roads over which we are obliged to travel, to walk every day? Only one voice will be heard in our day; the cry of the merchant. Then let even his cause be trumpeted! For the goods he sells have too often to be dragged over a heavy road by the animals for whom there is but little anxiety; and those goods come to cost so much that they cannot easily be disposed of; our roads, therefore, retard and hamper business, and business is today the goal of Americans.

True, our country is extensive and it would doubtless require much labor and means to make our roads equal to those of Europe, but they can at least be improved, and that greatly, without a great deal of expense to the government.

The improved facilities for traffic and general convenience would soon be found to repay the expense. Aside from other and more important considerations, the railroad was a Godsend to draught animals. The present condition of wagon roads, we earnestly reiterate, is a cruelty to those poor creatures who serve us so faithfully and well and whom we use so hardly in return. Not that our teamsters are necessarily unkind, but conditions compel them to unkindness. Here alone is good ground and wide scope for the efforts of the society for prevention of cruelty to animals and we earnestly invite its attention to this subject.

It is doubtless a fact that in proportion as people are made generally comfortable and happy and relieved from the corrosion of care they have time for the study and contemplation of higher things and are thereby enabled to cultivate their higher faculties. This is not so well accomplished by personal effort (which is likely to culminate in absorption of pursuit after superfluities and consequent pride) as in the general advancement of social conditions. While energy, economy and industry promote the vigor and develop the individual, we cannot deny that these qualities may run to an extreme and culminate in greed and bitter rivalry. The benefits of temporal improvement are thus too often counteracted by mental deformity. But in the advancement of a nation we think this is different. Make a people or a community wealthy and comfortable and its individual members will find improved opportunities for the development of their best of genius. The benefits of some system of united effort and interest would be incalculable. The high development of a community wherein each member might pursue a congenial calling is to day inconceivable. We believe that our nation will advance toward this point by gradations and that in time the high ideal of united effort and united interest will be realized. With less suffering in the struggle for life there will be less strife and a kinder brotherhood. Shall we not all raise a united voice for public improvement?

A worthy object for consideration and proper representation at the coming Exposition would be the present condition and the future improvement of our roads. Southern Utah has a crying need of them. Our natural facilities cannot be developed in the present situation. We are fifty or seventy-five years behind the times. Our children have not the advantage of modern culture; the struggle for existence is continual and difficult our more fortunate brethren and sisters would look upon us as deprived of the decencies of life and we do not hesitate to say that the roads over which we must communicate with the outside world are largely to blame.

RUN. LAMONT.
CIRCLEVILLE, Plute County, Utah,
August, 1892.

COALVILLE TOWNSHIP CASE.

The Coalville township case has been referred to the officers of the local land office for settlement, and the date for hearing will shortly be decided upon. The subject opinion on the case from First Assistant Secretary of the Interior for the commissioner of the general land office, has been received.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office:

Sir—I have considered the appeal of the mayor of Coalville, Utah Territory, who applies on behalf of said town to make additional township entry for the west $\frac{1}{2}$ southwest $\frac{1}{4}$ section 16, township 2 north, range 5 east, Salt Lake City, Utah Territory, land district.

It appears from the record before me that the original township of Coalville, or the corporation limits of said town, was fixed by enactment of the Territorial Legislature on July 16, 1867, embracing twenty sections of land, but the land being unsurveyed the township was laid off four miles east and west by five miles north and south, with the Wasatch coal bed as a center point.

In 1879 patent was issued in the name of Alma Eldredge, mayor of Coalville, for a township embracing the south $\frac{1}{2}$ of the northeast $\frac{1}{4}$, and the southeast $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 8, and the south $\frac{1}{2}$ of the northwest $\frac{1}{4}$, the southwest $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 9, the west $\frac{1}{2}$ of the north west $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 16, and the east $\frac{1}{2}$ of the northeast $\frac{1}{4}$ section 17, of township 2 north, range 5 east, Salt Lake, Utah, land district.

On April 8, 1885, the mayor made application to make additional township entry for the west $\frac{1}{2}$ southwest $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 16, township 2 north, range 5 east, S. L. M., and on November 29, 1886, gave notice of intention to make proof thereon on January 17, 1887, and on said day proof was made and accepted and final certificate issued and the receiver's receipt for \$200 was given said mayor "for and in behalf of the inhabitants of Coalville."

On June 6, 1890, you wrote to the Register and Receiver at Salt Lake City, requiring additional proof on the said entry, which was furnished, and on June 4, 1891, you held that said additional entry was illegal in its inception and you canceled the same from which decision the only man appealed.

The plat of official survey was filed on January 9, 1874.

By the fifteenth section of the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a Territorial Government for Utah" (9 Stat. 453) sections 16 and 36 were reserved for school purposes. In the case at bar, the territory of the tract now sought to be entered was not included in the application of the application to enter this land, nor have they been notified of the appeal. There are some ex parte affidavits tending to show that the land in controversy is now settled upon and occupied as a part of Coalville, but when the original entry was made, the tract now sought to be entered was not included in the application or entry, nor is there any testimony showing that it was occupied when the survey was made, therefore, the facts upon which the right to make entry for the tract depends are not before me. Your decision is set aside and you will direct a hearing upon notice to the officers representing the town of Coalville, and the proper Territorial officers, and testimony will be taken upon the point indicated.

The fact that the Territorial legislature incorporated Coalville covering a body of land four by five miles in extent prior to the survey, and before it was known that such tract included section 16, will not stop the Territory from asserting its right to section 16 for school purposes, if it is entitled thereto under its organic act. Upon the report of the local officers upon the testimony to be offered at said hearing, you will readjudicate the case.

The papers are returned herewith.
Respectfully,
GEORGE CHANDLER,
First Assistant Secretary.

THE SUMMER SCHOOL.

At Tuesday's morning session the glee club sang a selection from the new music books (the Tilden system) previously spoken of. The opening prayer was offered by Milton H. Harby.

The subject of the right to seats, continuing from the summer school to the Official Institute, was discussed. A vote was taken, a division of the house called for, and the question decided in favor of each person retaining his seat as purchased.

Hon. Jacob S. Boreman referred to the music lesson conducted before the opening of the session. He thought that children should be taught when young. He touched upon the lecture of Colonel Parker the previous evening, and spoke of the great power of the "Slates Rights" question. This school law was not passed as it should have been. It was a special law, and the additions were only amendments. It needed careful study to understand it, especially as regarded the election of county superintendents, which will take place in 1893. He spoke of the right of the county superintendent to direct the course of study, not the trustees, as heretofore. Temporary certificates should not be given year after year.

It was the duty of the president of the school board to see that the provisions of that part of the law relative to enforced attendance be carried out. Special school taxes could not be used to pay teachers, and the only case where it could be used would be where the legal object had been accomplished and there was a residue.

G. H. Strimball spoke of teaching as the art of securing the attention and making good use of it. The teacher should first know what to do, and second how to do it. The modern motto was let nature lead; it was good. There was no study where rules need be given for memorizing. If children were properly taught they would make their own rules by the inductive method. Judgment must be exercised in accepting all methods, or rejecting all new ideas advanced.

A vocal selection by Miss Alice Fridlay closed the exercises of the forenoon session.

AFTERNOON.

First on the programme for the afternoon were supplementary remarks by Commissioner Boreman, on the school law, drawn out by questions of students.

Q.—For what is the appropriation properly used.

A.—It is designed first to pay teachers but may be used to defray current expenses. The special tax may be used to buy building sites, build houses, repair, furnish, rent, etc., but still another section says that the school board shall furnish, repair, etc., and where no special tax has been levied they could only do so out of the appropriation. The first object, however, is the important one. They should pay teachers and pay them well, as it is the only way of being sure of having good, efficient educators. This should be thoroughly understood and advocated. No tax will be more willingly paid.

Q.—What is required in the way of certificates from graduates of normal schools?

A.—The certificate which such graduate receives entitles the holder to teach for five years in the grade specified without renewal of certificate, but in one grade only.

Q.—Who has the right to grade the public schools?

A.—Sec. 58 expressly says that the teacher shall grade the schools, but it should be under the direction of the superintendent.

Q.—Should the election for school trustees be held at the same time as other elections?

A.—Yes, the same day, except in one or two of our largest cities. They are not held at the same poll, nor under the same authority.

Q.—Can a teacher collect pay for time when his school is not in session?

A.—I think not, but he should; it would be perfectly proper to insist that such a statement be made in the contract. When school is dismissed because of epidemic or other such cause the teacher should not lose his pay.

Q.—Should a third grade teacher be employed over those holding grade certificates?

A.—That is entirely in the hands of the superintendent.

Q.—Why should age debar a competent teacher?

A.—There must be some limitation placed, as there is in the case of voting, and the law has seen fit to fix it as it is.

Q.—If a trustee has given teachers positions before said teachers have passed an examination, should they be allowed to continue the school, having failed to obtain certificates?

A.—They should not have been given the schools. A teacher not holding a certificate has no claim on the public fund, and cannot collect pay by law. It is just possible that the trustee who employed them could be held responsible.

Q.—How should percentages be determined?

A.—That is left entirely to the examining board.

Q.—Can parents be held accountable to the law for non-attendance of their children at school, there being no room in school? Would you approve its strict enforcement?

A.—They cannot be held accountable. I would advise that it be thoroughly understood and in time enforced. I wish every teacher would procure a copy of the school law and read it.

Dr. Karl G. Maeser held a session for the benefit of Church school teachers, in which he went into details of work as it had been and as it should be done; the necessity of having the full set of Church school papers as published in the Juvenile Instructor; the manner of procuring certificates, and the way in which the reports should be made out. Notification of examination of applicants was given. There were forty teachers present.

Prof. Whitley, a graduate of the University of Oxford, England, was presented to the assembled students as the lecturer for the evening. He spoke of the singular and unique gathering and its objects, and commended all. The subject of the lecture was the "Science of Life." The gentleman has been engaged to teach at the B. Y. A. this winter.

On Wednesday, at Provo Summer School's exercises, Prof. Bach gave a music lesson. He wrote a melody and the class, under his direction, sang the piece after one trial. Prof. Giles pronounced it progressive in every respect.

Prof. Wm. M. Stewart, in the course of his address, said: in the study of number, principle, a clear understanding of basic facts is absolutely essential. We must be thorough in this understanding before we can arouse the understandings of children. I went through the high school, learned algebra and geometry, and all these high and mighty sciences; but when I tried to teach a class of little ones, I found out I yet had to learn number. In the study of number, I make no educator my idol, I do not tie myself down to any one method; I hold myself at liberty to adopt any means of arousing the understanding.

The teacher cannot give ideas nor convey principles. He can only stimulate the mind to think and discover facts. This is what we need to do for children, and the teacher needs to be free to arrive at the end by whatever he thinks the best way. Superintendents should not say teach it this way or that way. I believe I would call it presumption to do so. If the superintendent knows better how to guide a certain little class than their own teacher, there is something wrong—perhaps it is a poor teacher, but I am inclined to think it is a mistake.

Here is a true guide to method. Thought should always precede expression, and ideas should stand before symbols. I once heard a teacher say: "I fill them so full of the multiplication table that it runs out at ears and eyes." He meant rote multiplication, drilled in rhythmically, without regard to understand the combinations. Well, I believe in drill, but not until after objective knowledge has been acquired.

Most teachers teach books rather than ideas. They think they must transfer to the minds of their pupils the ideas and forms contained in the book in use. But too many locks are illogical—constructed on wrong plans. For instance, most arithmetic consider percentage an entirely different matter from—we will say—reduction, an addition is treated as a subject entirely different from multiplication. This is wholly wrong. Number is a whole, and all its processes should go on together. The younger child in school uses all is only bewildered and stunted by this unnatural process of isolation of subjects.

The teacher is hampered by the book in another way when he is required to impart to his students a given quantity of its contents in a given time. How can anybody know before-hand just how much arithmetic a certain class can assimilate? We cannot quite part with the book, it is a useful guide and help especially to the teacher, but many times it should not be in the hands of the children.

The primary object in the study of number, as in all other studies, is mental growth—the bringing of the powers of mind into usable conditions; and this is done through original investigation. I am bitterly opposed to imitation, but the case before mentioned of one who improves on anything already in existence is not imitation; it is growth, original activity.

Children should be aided to acquire accuracy in their methods of computation, and be able to apply their knowledge to the ordinary affairs of life; otherwise their arithmetical work is mere tricks with numbers.

There is no more mental growth in a case of teaching results by cancellation only, than in the recitation of 12 contains 3 four times. Nine-tenths of all the work cut out in the arithmetics is only tricks with numbers and no more food for the mind than tricks with cards.

Think of the absurd statements which make algebra a mystery and a fear to students, and discourage them on the threshold. I boldy say there is in algebra no such thing as transpositions, teachers and text book to the contrary notwithstanding. Shall we call such jugglery "cultivating the mind"? Can the mind be cultivated if we know nothing but the contents of books?

Some teachers and students find great difficulty in understanding decimals; but they are so simple. They are a class of common fractions whose denominator is ten or some power of ten. They are so symmetrical, or conventional, if you prefer that term, that we do not need to write the denominator.

Do read the rules in percentage; hear how you must handle base rate and percentage; but can the student comprehend which is base, which is rate and which is percentage? Most likely not.

I am bitterly opposed to formal rules given before the principle is well understood. But a rule formulated by the class, as an outgrowth of their understanding of the principle involved, that is very good.

Let us learn this one fact—figures are not numbers, but on y symbols of numbers; and it is sad, and to say disastrous, to mistake symbols for the realities which they represent.

There are only two classes of arithmetical operations—building up and tearing down; otherwise, addition and division. Addition has two phases—addition proper and multiplication. Division has three phases, division proper, partition and subtraction.

In high class work we often fail to look beyond the symbols because we trust in our skill in using them; but if we really teach a primary class we must look beyond, or over, or around them, and see the actual fact. No shame for children, they must have living realities.

I learned more in mathematics by teaching a class of small children than all my high school teachers had ever been able to cram into me.

So-called short methods, invented, it would seem to make sure we do not exercise our own minds, are perfectly useless until, by what we term the long road, we have acquired a thorough comprehension of the case.

It is no matter how slow or long the route may be, we must understand the underlying, fundamental truth before we use any short methods, or they will prove to be traps for our unwary feet.

The last day of the exercises at Provo there was a large attendance. A music lesson was given by Prof. P. M. Bach.

Dr. Karl Macer lectured on "School Discipline."

Colonel Parker lectured during each session, and it has been decided by the managers of the Summer school and institute to publish all his addresses in full, in pamphlet form.

A great feature in the afternoon was the lecture of Prof. G. H. Brimhall on "Principles and School Devotion." The lecture on "Teacher and Society" by Colonel Parker was listened to with great interest, the Academy library being packed to overflowing.

Prof. B. Cluff, Jr., principal of the B. Y. A., concluded his masterly discussion of psychology begun on Wednesday.

Mrs. Parker said a few words of farewell to the class.

Colonel Parker, in half an hour's talk, summed up all his previous remarks. He expressed his appreciation of the attention and eager desire manifested by the class for knowledge. He would take pleasure in telling at home and abroad his very favorable impression of the teachers of Utah.

Superintendent Wilson announced that this concluded the work of the institute, and it was turned over to the originators of the summer school.

Professor Cluff, gave the meeting up to farewell remarks from those present, and quite twenty persons responded, all being earnest in their praises of the good done by this gathering.

Mrs. Parker was called for and recited a beautiful selection. Mrs. L. L. Dalton in behalf of the class presented Miss Hendrick with a portfolio of free hand engravings, (Utah scenes). The lady made a graceful response.

A vote of thanks was tendered to Prof. Bach.

Bishop Tanner pronounced the benediction.

DECAY OF LIBERALISM.

The decay of Ultra-Liberalism, as viewed during the Liberal conference in Salt Lake City, is a hopeful sign.

The mission of Liberalism was noble, only so far as it advocated and worked for unity, through channels approved by the discrete, wise and patriotic. Its sentiments and teachings can be beneficial to the interests of this Territory only in proportion to its capacity of infusing the needed unifying principle. A system, wherever found, which aims at dissolution and annihilation, and substitutes no principle which is capable of producing peace and harmony, is a failure. Liberalism allying itself with Americanism and identical with it is a grand success here as elsewhere—a handmaid of the social and educational forces, by and through which Americanism has, in the past, peacefully and infallibly achieved such grand victory on this continent, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. It will, in the fullness of time, solve the problem of Utah and successfully and effectually secure the cooperation of the two now discordant elements, in rendering this grand Territory of Utah, the great Mecca of the world. The sooner this can be done the better.

It is unquestionably the great desire of Mormons and Gentiles alike to see the day coming when the principles of Americanism shall rule here as elsewhere, when peace, harmony and good fellowship shall prevail. If Liberalism, then, were a faithful ally of Americanism it would have a mission, and if it faithfully performed this, it would be a success, welcomed by all. If on the other hand, it teaches and practices that by a course of coercion it can better cope with and solve the supposed problem which confronts the people of the Territory, it is and always will be a failure.

Americanism as preached and practiced in the past has lost none of its virtues and strength but conquers today as powerfully and unpretentiously and effectually as in the past. Were Liberalism kindred to it, it could do the same. Political machinations whether liberal or otherwise are insufficient per se to solve the problem which has vexed this Territory.

The truth of this bold assertion becomes clearer every day. While ample room should be allowed for diversity of opinions in all matters relating to the welfare of Utah politically, socially, and morally, the bitterness which has characterized the past should find no place. For is it not true that many who have come to these valleys from east and west, north and south, have come here with the sole desire of making a home in this beautiful country and intent only on seeing Utah become the garden spot of this western country?

The writer ventures moreover to assert, that while differences of opinion politically and otherwise are sure to assert themselves here as elsewhere, a continual political fermentation like that of the past, is subversive of all things beneficial to a substantial and healthy growth of Utah.

The bitter spirit which once animated the South is now no more. Peace and reconciliation spread their wings over this great and glorious republic, and with the exception of a few minor differences, we are now materially a nation "Unum spiritibus." An issue as serious as that between the North and the South has now, through the wisdom of the wise and the measures of the peaceable, become no more. If true Americanism, patriotism and loyalty effected this in a comparatively short time, how much less would be required to settle permanently the purely local political issues between the two or more contending parties here?

It is admitted by many good men, both Liberals and others, that the past has been characterized by a political efficiency utterly inconsistent with the spirit of the age, odious to a few and offensive to the majority.

Anathemas on all nightmares which may hereafter visit this land and oppress it. Many who come shall then find that after all Utah is not as bad a country to live in, and not so utterly demoralized as reported; but a country where the grand principles of the American institution can find as ready a soil as anywhere on this broad continent.

A. FJORNSTON, M. D.
SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 10th, 1892.

THE SANITARY SITUATION.

It will be no use for the City Council, or any member of that body to baffle the complaints about the failure of the sewerage system to meet the public necessity. The truth is that, at the upper part of East Temple Street near the Temple Block, the stench arising from the man-holes is stifling. It is the same at the head of State Street. Down at the Jordan, near where the pump is supposed to be at work, the filth emptied into the river pollutes the air, and warms the city of the dangers to health and life that lurk in these noxious deposits. Flushing is a necessity at the upper parts of the sewer; proper disposition of the sewage is a necessity at the point of exit.

These essentials were pointed out by the DESERET NEWS at the time when the sewer question was agitated in this city. For calling attention to them we were accused by our "Liberal" opponents of being opposed to proper sanitation. The charge has been frequently repeated since then, although the facts were exactly to the contrary and those who maligned us knew it as well as we.

When the proposition was made to sewer district No. 1, to vote on the question, we explained our position and advised the property owners to investigate the matter before deciding. We suggested that they find out first where the needed water was coming from for flushing, and where the output was to go. We opposed the emptying of the sewage into the Jordan and also the building of sewers, for one district only, at the general expense when very few of the taxpayers would reap any benefit from it.

Thus, as we have said, was greatly misrepresented, and the DESERET NEWS was daily held up for reprobation as "opposed to sewers." When the People's Party, previous to the municipal campaign of 1890, presented a declaration of principles, the same kind of falsehood was resorted to by the "Liberals" and it was claimed that the People's Party platform was inconsistent with the utterances of the DESERET NEWS, the sewer question being one of the alleged points of difference. To this we responded as follows on September 24, 1890:

"On the question of sanitation the DESERET NEWS stands just where it stood before the convention was held. We were and are in favor of 'sewers for the business part of the city, and the decorization and removal of fecal and all waste matter from the other districts.' The files of this paper will show that we have advocated this for many years. We opposed the expenditure of public money gathered from every part of the municipality, for a system that was for the special benefit of one locality, without a vote of the entire people whose money was to be thus expended. We opposed the discharge of the city's filth into the river Jordan, as was contemplated when the sewerage scheme was started. We urged the cleansing of the business centre by means of sewers, and the reception and deodorization of the sewage at some point southwest of the city, which would save the expending of many thousands of dollars for carrying it miles further, pumping it up at great cost, and discharging it where it might become a public nuisance. That was the extent of our opposition to sewerage.

We have urged upon the city authorities, every year for a dozen years or more, an effective and complete system of sanitation by the use of dry earth in the district outside our business localities, and the removal of waste material under an official inspector of nuisances and his assistants. We have pointed out and explained how it could be done and the sanitary benefit it would bring to the city."

Experience has proven the correctness of our former views which we have seen no reason to change. The disposition of the sewage should have been the first consideration. That pumping business appeared too cumbersome and expensive when it was mooted. It has proved inadequate. Deny it who may, filth is poured into the Jordan river, that will be heard from in direful voices if the deposit goes on. The flushing of the sewers was another consideration; that should have been given its proper weight. The fumes from the unflushed mains are both offensive to the nostrils and dangerous to health. A remedy is demanded and the demand will have to be met.

While the question of sewers was under discussion we said—September 25, 1888:

"There are numbers of sensible citizens, who, on the simple proposition 'Do you believe in sewerage?' would answer unhesitatingly, 'Yes,' but who are so doubtful of the practicability of the present scheme as to be decidedly agnostic."

"Let a complete and well digested system of reception, conduct and deposit of sewage be matured, and then the people may be able to decide upon it intelligently, and with a full understanding of what their votes mean and what their decision tends to. Let us look before we leap."

On the 24th of September, 1888, We said:

"Of course the question of 'decum position' does not appear in the form a protest of objectors to the proposed system. But it should be kept in view of every taxpayer before he decides the question. It is of far more importance than the bare proposition that calls for a decision by October 16th. It lies at the bottom of the whole matter. How can a sensible taxpayer decide whether he wants to pay for pipes to carry sewage from his premises, when there is no plan prepared to receive the body of the sewage, no place chosen to deposit it, no means devised for water to flush the pipes and make sure that the matter will be taken where it can do no harm?"

That was the extent of our "opposition to sewers." We wanted a practical system, before the city was committed to a scheme which was forced upon the City Council by a pressure from real estate boomers, who were more interested in making fictitious prices on real estate than the permanent benefit of the city.

The truth is, the sewage problem in this city is yet unsolved. Only one part of town is drained, and what to do with the output is a serious consideration. Meanwhile, the far greater part of town is uncleaned. A very unsatisfactory ordinance has been passed and returned from the Mayor to the Council unsigned, which dabbles with the garbage question and fiddles with the disposition of local matter. It prevents a citizen from taking the very course which would deodorize such matter and render it perfectly innocuous, and inaugurates a system of removal that will create a perpetual nuisance all over the city.

Dry earth is the cure for stench from outhouses where there are no sewers, and the use of the matter thus rendered scentless, in gardens for fertilizing, will be the simplest, cheapest and most harmless manner of its disposition. Garbage that is not destroyed on the premises can be removed as provided. And sanitary inspection should be made thorough and persistent.

A great fuss is made of a little manure from a barn which does no harm, and decaying fruit is allowed to remain on the ground and send off its germs into the air carrying disease and death, and nothing is said about it. We tell the Board of Health that from this time until Winter begins to breathe upon the wind, there will be a thousand fold more danger to the city from rotting fruit, the fumes from the unflushed sewers, and the stink from the unpumped filth down by the Jordan, than from all the manure piles in the city that may be left for awhile uncarted.

Clear up the orchards, dry-earth the closets, take away the garbage, remove dead animals, flush the sewers, provide effectually for the reception and disposition of sewage without running it into the river, and the sanitary situation will become vastly improved and be made as good as it can be found in most places on the civilized globe.

DEATH OF DR. JOHN F. WELD.

We have been requested to copy the following from the Nauvoo Independent, as the deceased gentleman here noticed has been a good friend to many of our people:

Dr. John F. Weld, perhaps the oldest pioneer in the county, died at 3 a. m. last Thursday, at the home of Thomas E. Kelly, in Sonora township, where he has been making his home for fifteen years, aged 83 years, 7 months and 17 days. He was born in Hertschire, Vermont, December 11th, 1808. He was well known throughout the county, having come here as early as 1837, first settling at St. Mary's, where he remained for a short time as a practicing physician. He became dissatisfied there and went to Nauvoo, having been called by the sickness of Hiram Kimball. Thought some of locating there but finally went to Fort Madison, thence to West Point, Iowa, and returned to St.

Mary's by way of Carthage. He walked the distance, as any other means of conveyance was limited. He was a man of more than ordinary ability and of sterling integrity of character, Democratic in political convictions, thoughtful and liberal in sentiment. He believed that humanity was the only religion and love the only priest. In his last lucid moments he expressed a wish that no minister should be invited to officiate at his last earthly rites.

He graduated with high honors at Dartmouth College, New Hampshire, and in early manhood engaged in teaching school. Among his papers he has preserved a commission given him by Governor Thomas Barlin, signed by Secretary of State Lyman Trumbull, which elected him to the office of surgeon of the cohort, Nauvoo Legion, in 1841. He was married twice, first to a Mrs. White, daughter of D. Hibbard, and a sister-in-law of the late M. M. Morrill, with whom he lived but a short time. Second to Mrs. Elizabeth Rowe, mother of the late Mrs. G. Edmunds. The second Mrs. Weld was a kind-hearted and charitable lady, and her death was mourned by all who had the pleasure of knowing her.

The doctor knew all about the Mormon troubles, the killing of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the burning of the temple, etc. He was curious in some respects, having preserved copies of newspapers dated back to 1835. He might have attained a greater age had he not met with the dread disease of grippe. He has a record of his ancestors since 1833 and they all attained an old age. The doctor was the eldest among a family of six sons, all of whom are dead but one, Martin Weld living in Pennsylvania. C. S. and Moses Weld died one year ago this August, their death occurring within a few days of each other. C. S. Lived a bachelor life, and made his home with his brother. He left an estate estimated at $170,000. His nephew, G. G. Weld, of Oldtown, Me., was appointed administrator. Dr. G. G. Weld was a delegate to the Minneapolis convention last June, and on his return east paid his uncle John F. a visit. It was the first time their eyes had ever looked upon each other and his visit was a great pleasure to the old gentlemen.

The funeral took place on Friday morning, the remains being interred in city cemetery. Mr. E. Vallet made a few remarks at the burial.

RETURNED ELDERS.

Elders H. M. Rawlins and Frank F. Merrill have just returned from a mission to Indian Territory. Brother Merrill enjoyed good health up to the 15th of July, when he was overcome by the heat and prostrated with fever. There was every indication of the effects of sunstroke. Everything was done for his comfort, and preparations were made to bring him home as soon as possible. He is now at his father's residence in the Ninth ward and rapidly recovering. The fever has left him.

Elder Rawlins reports all well in the mission in Indian Territory and says it is generally in a good condition.

THE DRINK DEMOND ENCOURAGED.

YESTERDAY, under the caption of "Gilded Vice," we briefly expressed a few ideas with regard to the fact that an extensive new liquor saloon establishment had published an invitation, through the columns of a local paper, to all the "men, women and children" of Salt Lake City to call and see the gorgeous equipments and fittings of the premises. The page advertisement making the announcement assured the "men, women and children" that they need have no hesitancy in visiting the place, as the bar would not be opened until 5 o'clock in the evening. The paper which made the publication states that a great crowd of "men, women and children" entered the establishment during the day; also that the bar was opened before the hour announced and continued right along, doing a rushing business and taking in a large amount of money.

We pointed out the fact that the effect of an acceptance of the invitation to witness the display must be necessarily bad, because it would give to the whiskey traffic the recognition and encouragement of the ladies and would eliminate repugnance toward it from the minds of tender children. This impression of course would be more complete when the entire object lesson was placed before the little ones, by the breaking of the contract made with the public to keep the bar closed until a stated hour. This breach of faith showed an unscrupulousness that might have been expected.

Taking the statements of our contemporaries as true regarding the size of the crowd which visited the premises referred to, the spectacle the establishment presented shows a deplorable drift of popular inclination. It is also a matter for regret that there should be an influential public journal which not only has no word of condemnation for such a flagrant breach of good faith as that mentioned in this article, but which, in its reading columns extols a drinking den as an "undeniable attraction" of Salt Lake which "every visitor will want to see." One of the chief functions of the press is to exercise an influence in favor of sobriety and consequent good morals. Such encomiums in relation to places which have been proved to be the gates of ruin to millions of people, do not tend in that direction. "White" drinking saloon may be an attraction in this city or elsewhere to a certain class of people, we do emphatically deny that it is, no matter how seductively and splendidly equipped, to the extent that our cotemporary declares it to be.

It is but little wonder that drunkenness with its train of troubles is increasing in our once temperate and well ordered city!

HISTORICAL REMINISCENCES.

Samuel Tarwater, the Missouri pensioner mentioned in last night's News, was one of the noted Samuel Bogart's mob, and received his wounds in the memorable fight at Crooked river, where David Patton, Ohanson and others fell. Tarwater received several terrible sabre cuts on the head, neck and face, one of which severed his jaw and upper teeth. In this condition he was left on the field for dead, but afterwards recovered and still survives. (Thomas H. Lloyd of the mob was also left on the field for dead, but recovered and was living a few years ago).

Panic-stricken, the mob fled and the wildest excitement prevailed throughout the county (Ray). Amos Reese and Wiley E. Williams hastened to Jefferson City, to the governor. The result was the calling out of the militia and Boggs' famous order to "exterminate the Mormons or drive them from the State." After the surrender at Far West and the militia were withdrawn, and most of the "Mormons" had left the State, Bogart and his mob still remained to quarrel over the spoils. They now had full possession of the town. An election was held to fill all offices. Bogart and Wesley Hines were candidates for the same office (county judge, I think). Bogart said something against Hines and Hines' nephew, a young man named Beattie, called Bogart a liar. Bogart pulled his pistol and shot Beattie. Beattie was carried into James Holman's store close by and died in a few minutes. Bogart in the meantime had mounted his horse and started on his famous ride across the prairies southward, pursued by eight other riders, only one of whose horses was fleet enough to close up on the fugitive, and he had no arms. When Bogart pointed his pistol at him he had to fall back out of reach of it. Thus continued the wild ride of the pursuers and pursued over the prairie until they came to Crooked river. A heavy rain had fallen the night before. The river was booming and dangerous. Bogart drove his horse into the flood, holding on to the tail, and in this way swam the river. Here the pursuit ended. This was the last of Bogart in Missouri. He escaped into Texas. In October, 1882, the writer of this met with General A. W. Doniphan, in Richmond, Mo., and in a conversation with him at that time he said, "Bogart died—think he was killed—fifteen or twenty years ago, on the Brazos river in Washington County, Texas." Yours, B. R.

FAINT-HEARTED DEPUTIES.

New developments are appearing in the Erie and Lehigh Valley railroads dispute. The military, as we anticipated, have been brought into requisition to protect the property of the companies against the depredations of the strikers. This was absolutely necessary, for although the sheriff of the county showed a good deal of energy and plenty of courage, he failed to secure a posse of deputies of the same stripe as himself. The deputies summoned by him were exceedingly brave under one condition of circumstances, but they failed in another situation. Their boldness and fighting qualities were displayed when they were on the cars on the way to the scene of the trouble. They fought determinedly with their mouths, when the enemy was several miles away. As soon as they were confronted by the strikers their valor vanished into thin air, and they shiveringly got rid of their clubs and marched away to the time of the shouts of the strikers.

It is said that Napoleon usually selected leaders who had poudricous noses, because a large proboscis shows strength of character of some kind. His own nose was not particularly huge, however. It is not a bad plan in selecting men for hazardous work which requires staying qualities, to avoid men who announce beforehand the feats of valor they intend to perform as soon as the opportunity appears. That class of men generally remember that they have business elsewhere when the time for action arrives. Such fellows are a good deal after the fashion of ultra-patriotic politicians, whose service to their country consists of wind work, and even that stops when the hope of office, spoils and pay entirely disappears.

PRECAUTIONS AGAINST CHOLERA.

THE reports of the ravages of the cholera scourge in numerous parts of the world, are causing much anxiety in this country. The press is urging the authorities especially at seaport cities, to take steps to prevent the introduction of the infection, and throughout the nation to look well to sanitary matters, as a preparation in case the plague should make its appearance. Attention is being directed to former visitations of the disease to this country. Upon this branch of the subject an exchange presents the following data:

"Those who remember visitations of cholera to this country tremble at the prospect of its return. We never saw the disease until 1832, when it raged here with frightful violence. It came to us over precisely the course followed by the present epidemic, except that there were then no railroads to aid it. It reached Quebec first by ship, and traveled down Lake Champlain. It broke out in New York and two days later was in Albany. Then it moved west, appearing within a few days at Utica, Schenectady, Syracuse and Buffalo. It ravaged New York State, appearing without warning in most of the towns and villages.

"In New York city it created a panic. It centered at the Five Points, then an over-crowded locality, far more filthy than any section of the city today, and spread like fire in every direction. For a long period the death rate averaged seventy a day. The physicians of that day did not understand its nature and attributed its spread to contagion in the air. The people left town by thousands and took refuge in neighboring country villages. During that year 4740 persons died of cholera throughout the country and the year following 1000 more. Boston, Newark, Philadelphia and New Orleans also suffered greatly. In Philadelphia the panic was so great that the dead were left unburied by hundreds until a committee of citizens volunteered to gather up the bodies and place them underground. It also spread to Havana, where 10,000 of the 100,000 inhabitants died of it in a year.

"In 1848 the cholera came again. This time it reached the country by ship from Europe to New Orleans. It reached New York, but did not amount to much here. It covered the entire West. It was worst at New Orleans, where 1610 died in 1848, 3176 in 1849 and 1448 in 1850. It lingered in various parts of the country, with occasional outbreaks, until 1864."

BOMBAY, Aug. 16.—Petitions are received daily from officials in all parts of India in favor of a gold standard.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

* The Sunday school officers and teachers of this Stake met last evening in the Fourteenth ward assembly rooms, Superintendent T. C. Griggs presiding. The Taylorville Sunday school choir furnished the excellent music during the evening, and the opening prayer was offered by Elder J. H. Parry.

† About two-thirds of the city schools were represented, as also were the schools of Union and Taylorville.

‡ Elder Robert A. Ure, of the Sunday school missionary corps, stated that he had always enjoyed his labors in the Sunday school, and appreciated very highly the valuable instructions he had received in them while a boy.

§ The speaker referred to the efforts now being made to conduct the Sunday schools in a more uniform manner, and according to the best light and intelligence obtainable. The schools which had adopted the new methods were making, in most instances, much the greater progress, and were doing good.

¶ Every effort should be made to get into the Sunday school ranks as many young people, those between the ages of 14 and 21 years, as most of the schools had very few of this age in attendance.

Superintendent Archibald Frame, of Taylorville, briefly reported the Sunday school of his ward. It was fully graded, but the best work, as with other schools, was being done in the Primary class. Better work could be done in all the classes if the teachers would study and prepare their lessons beforehand, so that they would have something fresh and interesting to present to their scholars.

Superintendent Charles Denney, of the Union Sunday school, was the next speaker. One of the greatest drawbacks, the speaker said, to the Sunday school work as he found it, was the lack of competent teachers, as where there were good teachers there was no trouble to get a good attendance of children.

He referred to the beneficial effects of an occasional reunion of several contiguous schools as was held on Sunday last, August 14, when the schools of Union, Taylorville and South Taylorville met with the school of West Jordan. He had also found the regular attendance of the Bishop a great help.

"Let us Treat Each Other Kindly," was very beautifully rendered by the choir.

Superintendent T. C. Griggs called attention to a recent general circular of the general board of the Sunday School Union, and referred particularly to the Inter-Stake Sunday school missionary work shortly to be resumed. Another special feature of the circular was the appointment of the first Sunday in September as "nickel day," upon which occasion the superintendents were directed to make an earnest effort to make a success of this work of raising means for the publication of text books, charts, etc., by the general board. It was suggested that preparations be made two or three weeks before hand, and bring the subject before their schools so that there would be a hearty and willing response made to the good cause by all the children.

The speaker also reminded the wards represented that a recent call was made for a subscription from the various schools of this Stake, for $2 or less from each school in the Stake, and scarcely half of the schools had responded, and it was desired that those who had not already done so would promptly respond and forward their contributions, including the "nickel" subscriptions, to the Stake secretary, J. H. Parry, Box 90, Salt Lake City.

As there would not be any schools held in the city on Sunday, September 4, on account of Stake conference, Superintendent Griggs suggested that nickel day be the last Sunday in August in all the schools not convening on September 4th.

The audience were greatly favored by a song and chorus from Mrs. Annie McKay Murphy and the choir, entitled "Let us all Speak Kind Words to Each Other."

Benediction was pronounced by Assistant Supt. John Vincent, of the Sixteenth ward, and the meeting adjourned for one month.

The Twelfth ward school will furnish the music at the next meeting.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

LAST January a conference was held in Columbus, Ohio, between employers and laborers to consider existing conditions. In March a similar meeting was held at Toledo. A report of the work performed at both meetings was recently published in the Bibliotheca Sacra and signed by Washington Gladden, General Bilkerhoff, of Mansfield, O., and the Rev. Sydney Strong, of Mt. Vernon.

The first question discussed at both these conferences was as follows:

"Do you think that the present relations of employers and laborers are satisfactory?" The response to this was almost unanimously in the negative, but the general opinion was that the unsatisfactory conditions could be compared. Several successful employers admitted that competition is often made an instrument of injustice, and that the lowest price at which labor can be obtained is not always a just price. It is not always just to buy labor as cheap as possible and sell products in the highest market. One large employer said "he hoped public opinion would eventually brand as irreparable any one who has accumulated a large fortune from the employment of those who remain poor despite their best efforts."

Profit-sharing was discussed. This system brought out some conflicting opinions. Even labor leaders did not endorse it, on the ground that it would destroy labor unions. The sense of both meetings was that while plausible in theory it would prove difficult in practice.

In discussing the relation of government to capital and labor, the sentiment of the latter's representatives inclined to some form of Socialism or Socialism. But in the matter of transportation such as railways, telegraphs, telephones, etc., the labor men were almost unanimous in the idea that they should be controlled by the State. The capitalists did not take this view. Their opposition arose from the belief that such an innovation would still further corrupt politics. They, however, believed that something should be done to improve the present system. Employees did not object to the eight-hour day provided it could be made universal. Many favored arbitration under Government auspices in labor troubles.

It was pretty generally agreed that labor was by no means the only source of wealth, neither was capital. Brains were the great factor, and should be classed before either capital or labor in wealth production. It was also concluded that equality does not exist in human capacities or conditions. But the strong are in duty bound to help the weak. It was agreed that large numbers of native-born workmen, were being alienated from churches and religious influences, while foreigners were more identified with them. Labor organizations were not condemned by the employers, while the laborers insisted that they were a necessity. Speaking on the subject the Springfield Republican says:

"It was one of the best outcomes of these conferences at Columbus and Toledo, that instead of insistence on the old economic dogmas that competition is the only law and the equivalent of supply and demand, the only gospel, the higher principle of mutual confidence, respect and sacrifice seemed to be getting the better, however slowly, of the anti-Christian law of that personal selfishness, which whether in the dogged will of the employer or the employed, will be ever insisting on personal rights to the disregard of personal duties."

DRAMATIC INCIDENT IN SOCIAL LIFE

MINNESOTA has just experienced one of those dramatic developments in social life which savors of the fertile imagination of the playwright. It is almost an exact duplicate of the Robert Ray Hamilton episode, with the tragic elements omitted. The dispatches contained but very brief references to it.

The chief actor in the story is Ezra T. Foot, vice-president of the Duluth, Red Wing and Southern Railroad. He is the son of Elias Foot, the senior member of a large mercantile firm in St. Paul. He is about twenty-six years of age, and organist of the First Presbyterian church in that city. About six years ago he went to Philadelphia to learn the profession of dentistry. There he met a young woman named Flood, who belonged to the class of unfortunate for which eastern cities are notorious. They went to live together as man and wife.

In the fall of 1889 Foot obtained his degree, and settled in Lancaster, Pa. He severed all relations with the Flood girl. She went to New York city, and returned to her old life. There she made the acquaintance of a midwife named Landan. Through her the girl obtained a baby boy from a family named Campbell for adoption. She gave her name as Mrs. Foot of St. Paul. The baby boy was then five months old. The Flood woman took the baby and went to Lancaster, and presented it to the dentist as his son, and demanded marriage. It was fully a year since they parted, but the baby was five months old. The couple repaired to New Jersey, where no marriage license is required and were there married.

Foot, being now a family man, returned to St. Paul, abandoned dental work, and entered business. His father received him, and the highest society of St. Paul opened its portals to young Foot and family. Mrs. Foot became a society favorite, and Willie Foot, alias Campbell, became the pet of his grandfather. But Mrs. Campbell in New York began to yearn for a look at her boy. She went to Landan for information, but the latter would not give any. Finally a lawyer took up the matter, and Mrs. Landan was forced to reveal the secret.

The lawyer then wrote to Silas Foot of St. Paul, disclosing the situation. The old man was horrified. However, he kept matters secret. He obtained the portraits of half a dozen children, and among them that of Willie. He came to New York, saw the lawyer, and also Mrs. Campbell. The portraits were shown to the latter, and she immediately picked out Willie's. The old man said that her case was good. He returned to St. Paul, but young Mrs. Foot, divining that something was wrong, suddenly departed, taking the child with her.

In due time a divorce was obtained, but Mr. Foot, Senior, felt he could not live without Willie. He went to New York, saw Mrs. Campbell, and agreed with her in case Willie was found to adopt him as her son. Detectives were employed, Willie and his mother were found in Philadelphia. Mrs. Foot abdicated all claims to the child, though she had grown to love it as her own, provided no prosecution be instituted against her. Little Willie, scion of the historic clan Campbell is now the son of Silas Foot, and brother of Ezra P. Foot, formerly his alleged father.

MORE VIOLENCE.

ANOTHER strike has occasioned a violent outbreak. This time it is in the State of New York. The contestants consist of the Erie and Lehigh Valley Railway Company on the one side and its striking switchmen on the other. The conflict develops all the recklessness with regard to human life and the rights of property that was recently exhibited at Homestead and Cour d'Alene.

The mischief that can be wrought in such a struggle is immense. In the first place, free switchmen king the places of the strikers are liable for want of experience, to precipitate accidents by which many lives and much property may be sacrificed. Add to this the fact that the strikers are throwing switches, by which means freight and passenger trains are being dethroned. They are also using the torch, with which they are burning whole trains of merchandise, destroying buildings and committing other diabolisms. Parts of trains are being uncoupled that they may dash down steep grades and smash into cars. This is terrible work. Such conduct must stop, but how can the cessation be brought about?

If the company, which says it has been running its business at a loss under the old conditions, yield to the demands of the switchmen because of the violent attacks made upon its property and upon the lives of innocent people who have nothing to do with the issue, the moral effect would be bad. It would amount to an admission that labor can obtain its demands by recourse to destructive and bloody methods, which would become epidemic throughout the country, and no one would be able to tell when the end would come or what it would be.

The sheriff is reported to be powerless to stop the lawless depredations of the strikers and their sympathizers. He is likely to continue in that condition of helplessness. There seems to be a probability of the military forces of the State being called into requisition. And all this brings the people into antagonism with the government, and the effect is bad all around and bodes no good to the country.

Within a few weeks scenes of this deplorable character have been enacted in five of the sovereign States—Tennessee, Wyoming, Pennsylvania, Idaho and New York. These constitute a fraction over one-ninth of the States composing the Union. This fact ought to draw public attention to the serious character of the situation, which is a threatening danger to the peace and prosperity of the nation.

STAKE CONFERENCES.

BEAR LAKE.

This conference was held on August 6th and 7th. On the stand were President Joseph F. Smith, Apostle F. M. Lyman, and President L. B. THE LEHIGH VALLEY STRIKE.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 14.—There is no further disguising the fact that the strike of Erie & Lehigh Valley switchmen is a serious matter. There had been more or less trouble Saturday between the strikers and their sympathizers and the men who are doing the strikers' work, and a few desultory assaults had occurred. Things began to put on a more serious aspect at 2 o'clock this morning when a series of incendiary fires broke out simultaneously in the Lehigh Valley yards. Eighteen or twenty freight cars filled with fuel, cotton, hay and various other merchandise, two passenger coaches and two watchmen's houses burned. The water tank adjacent to the coal trestle was smashed and an engine taking water there wrecked by a string of ten runaway coal cars that had been turned loose from the trestle. A little office building and two or three freight cars were first destroyed in the south yards. The flames were next discovered in the passenger coaches used for the conveyance of workmen.

In the yards east in Dingen Street the fire raged among the cars of merchandise.

The firemen, however, prevented the destruction of a great number of cars. The officers are unable to find any suspicious characters. The strikers and their sympathizers have pulled the plugs, turned the switches and driven off the crews. Three men are at the hospital and were badly hurt.

One of the most cowardly things done was throwing the switches under passenger train No. 17 at Williams Street at 7:30 o'clock tonight. Two passenger coaches were thrown from the track, but the conductor thinks that none were hurt though many were badly shaken.

Fifty men boarded passenger train No. 3 at 11 o'clock and MOLESTED THE EMPLOYEES, driving them off. The crew finally succeeded in getting the train to the station.

The mob took possession of the Seneca street switches three or four times during the day and drove off the signal men.

In the Lehigh yards at Cheesewaga tonight the scenes of last night were repeated. It was plainly intimated by Erie officials that workmen from the East were engaged to take the places of the strikers. The strikers assert that the road is losing heavily by not having men to perform the work of the strikers. Two trains of freight cars standing on the siding in Cheesewaga, a railroad suburb of Buffalo, were burned tonight. The Lehigh Valley has called on the sheriff for protection. He sent six deputies to the scene and will swear in fifty more tomorrow.

Later at 1 o'clock fire broke out in three places in the Lehigh yards again simultaneously. The fire department has been unable to quench it. New York express No. 1, the Erie, was held two miles out because it cannot pass. New York express No. 4 has not been sent out for the same reason.

At the same time switch lights on the Erie, between South street and Western New York, and the Pennsylvania target were stolen. At 2:45 a.m.

the passengers on the two trains on the Lehigh and Erie, which were ditched at William street, were brought into the station. Nobody was injured. Superintendent Brunn reports that the fire is still raging among the cars of merchandise in the yards at Cheektowaga, and says the sheriff seems powerless to interfere, though called on to protect the railroad property.

BUFFALO, Aug. 14, 2 a. m.—Word has just been received that a train of forty-two cars on the Erie road, filled with fine merchandise, a mile east of William street is now burning fiercely with no protection.

BUFFALO, Aug. 15.—The police commissioners today are busy swearing in special policemen on account of the railroad strike. The sheriff is also swearing in deputies outside the city limits at the yards. The sheriff will call on the military, only as a last resort. In the ruins of one of the cars burned last night, the police have found the remains of an empty kerosene can, showing the manner in which the fire was started by the incendiaries. The car department claims that the work of the men at the freight car department was much impeded by the cutting of the hose by unknown parties. Twelve lengths of hose were cut and rendered useless during the night.

It is estimated that from 100 to 200 cars were destroyed by incendiary fire. Everything was quiet in the yards up to noon. The reported strike was likely to spread to the Erie yards at Hornellville. Grand Master Sweeney emphatically condemns the acts of lawlessness, and states it was the work of irresponsible individuals, who could not be controlled, and not of the strikers.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 15.—This afternoon twenty or thirty striking switchmen boarded a freight train pulling into the city to set the brakes and stall the train. They pulled the coupling pins, throwing the pins and links into a stagnant pool, and disappeared. A new supply of pins and links were procured and the train proceeded, amid considerable excitement.

The only Lehigh Valley train that moved today was a coal train, which went out at 3:30 guarded by eight policemen. The Nickel Plate succeeded in moving thirty-five cars of live stock from the Lehigh to the Lake Shore tracks, but when the men learned of it this morning, they refused to make the cars up in the trains bound for New York. One hundred and seventy-three cars of live stock belonging to the Erie are standing on the West Shore tracks, which the men refused to handle. They were discharged in turn as they declined, and in consequence stood in hourly expectation of being ordered out by the union. In the Philadelphia & Reading yards not a car has moved since Saturday. A large force of men are expected tomorrow and an effort will be made to push the work.

The sheriff's posse which went to East Buffalo this afternoon was greeted with jeers by the assembled strikers. "Specials" who had been as brave as lions on the train and indulged in tall talk, felt their courage oozing away as soon as they landed, and finally in response to the appeals of the men, one after another threw away their clubs or handed them to the powerless sheriff, while at each conversion a cheer went up from the strikers, and soon all that remained of the sheriff's brave posse could be counted on the fingers of one hand. The sheriff bowed down to the inevitable, and came back to Buffalo to call out the militia.

There has been no disturbance up to 11 p. m. tonight at the Cheektowaga yards except the burning of one empty Lehigh freight car. At 8:30 p. m. the Seventh regiment and the Sixty-ninth regiment assembled at Armour's ready to move at a moment's notice, though the amateurs do not much relish the idea of a repetition of the fight of 1877.

Reliable reports received from East Buffalo and Cheektowaga show that the Lehigh Valley road had lost seventy-two freight cars by the fire and the Erie fourteen. Railroad men profess to be utterly unable at present to fix the estimate of the loss.

They are acting very cautiously on this point, for the reason that a claim will be made against the city and county for damages and the amount of losses has not yet been figured up. It is known, however, that many of the cars were destroyed.

The Sixty-fifth regiment has just been sent to Cheektowaga to guard the Lehigh Valley and Erie yards the rest of the night.

The Seventy-fourth regiment has just been called out to protect the Central and West Shore property, it being feared that the switchmen on these roads may go out tonight.

ELMHURST, N. Y., Aug. 15.—Great excitement prevails at Waverly, N. Y., on account of the strike of the Lehigh switchmen. A collision between strikers and switchmen seemed inevitable this morning over an attempt to run an engine and caboose out of Erie, Pa., just across the line. Men surrounded the engine and refused to let them go. Sheriff Powell turned the switch himself but it was immediately turned back by the strikers. The switch was finally made, but the strikers pulled the coupling-pin between the engine and cars and made another delay. The sheriff tried to arrest some men but they were immediately rescued by their comrades. Superintendent Stephenson and the sheriff mounted the pilot and could not keep the men away from the engine.

At noon the engine had gone about 200 yards and the STRIKERS WERE IN COMMAND OF THE SITUATION.

The altercations between the sheriff and posse had been conducted thus far without serious results. Sixty men were ordered to report to Superintendent Stephenson this morning to take the place of the strikers.

They reported, but refused to go to work.

A union meeting of trainmen was held this afternoon at Sayre and it was decided that trainmen would not do switchmen's work.

The turmoil has subsided, the Sheriff admitting his powerlessness, but more trouble is threatened when he undertakes to make the promised arrests with a larger force.

One of the strikers, Wm. Jones, was hurt in one of the melees with the Sheriff's force.

BUFFALO, N. J., Aug. 16.—There were no sensational developments in the switchmen's strike during the night, and the situation has improved. With two excellent regiments of national guards in the field and the police reinforced by 200 specials, the feeling is much more reassuring than yesterday. The police claim to be able to handle the strike within the city limits.

AUBURN, N. Y., Aug. 16.—Captain Kirby, of the second company of the Wheeler Rifles, has received orders to hold his company ready to go to Buffalo at a moment's notice.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Aug. 16.—The forty-first company of the national guard is under orders to be ready at a moment's notice to go to Buffalo.

BUFFALO, Aug. 16.—There were no indications this morning of a strike on the Central. It is known that a committee of switchmen were sent to Superintendent Burrows of the Central, however, yesterday, for conference. Mr. Burrows was out on the road, but the statement of the men was forwarded him. A reply was received, but it gave the men no satisfaction.

Third Vice-President Walter Webb of New York Central is in the city, having been called here by the gravity of the situation and the possibility of the Great Four track road being affected. In conversation Mr. Webb said: "The strike has not extended to our road, and we are not aware that any of our men are anxious to join in the strike. The only danger we have felt is that our men might be forced from their posts by the other strikers. From what I learn I think the switchmen would have been driven from their posts last night had it not been for the calling out of the military. All we ask is protection from outside violence."

THE BOND ELECTION.

Yesterday's election, held for the purpose of bonding the county to the amount of $300,000, was an exceedingly quiet one, comparatively little interest being taken. The city vote by precincts was as follows:

	For.	Against
First precinct.....	160	159
Second precinct.....	196	115
Third precinct.....	17	183
Fourth precinct.....	78	181
Fifth precinct.....	154	116
Total.....	695	694

The returns of the county precincts have not yet been opened nor officially canvassed. But from the city vote and the number of ballots cast against the proposition in the county precincts heard from it is safe to say that it has been defeated. The voting at the places named below was as follows:

	For.	Against.
Bingham.....	19	17
Sandy.....	19	106
Murray.....	28	192
Irving.....	8	97
Granite.....	8	79
Hunter.....	14	6
Sugar.....	32	47

The precincts to be heard from are: Big Cottonwood, Butler, Brighton, Bluff, East Mill Creek, Farmer's, Ft. Herriman, Granger, Little Cottonwood, Mill Creek, Mt. Dell, North Point, North Jordan, Pleasant Greer, River-ton, Silver, South Jordan, Union, West Jordan.

RELIGIOUS.

Sunday Services.

Religious services were held at the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday, August 7th, 1892, commencing at 2 o'clock p.m., President Angus M. Cannon presiding.

The choir sang the hymn:

Softly beams the sacred dawning
Of the great Millennial morn.

Prayer was offered by Elder George B. Wallace.

The choir and congregation sang:

How firm a foundation, ye Saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in His excellent word.

The Sacrament was administered by the Priesthood of the First ward.

APOSTLE ABRAHAM H. CANNON

then addressed the congregation. The speaker said he arose in the hope that the Saints would sustain him in faith and prayer before God, that what he should say might be dictated by the Holy Spirit. The Latter-day Saint who lives his religion is at all times in possession of a testimony from heaven of the divinity of this work, whatever the time and circumstances may be, and if his heart be right before God, He will aid him to speak of that testimony. And humble though it may be, He will sometimes cause the words spoken to reach the hearts of those who are honest and move them to seek for themselves and learn His will. For we believe the Lord is not only able, but also willing to speak to His children on earth and reveal His will to them.

We do not believe that revelations are given to those alone who are members of the Church, though we do believe that this is the only Church that professes to be guided by continuous revelation. We hold that Scriptures are being made continually, and that the revelations given in this age are just as binding and necessary for salvation as those given in ancient times. While we do not in any respect reject the Bible, we do acknowledge that God is just as capable of making known His will now as formerly.

One evidence of our faith in this doctrine is the gathering of this people to these valleys. No person could have drawn them together unless God had influenced their hearts. It is the testimony of His Spirit that has moved the hearts of men and women and caused them to leave homes, friends, relatives, and all that was dear to them, in order to come here, where, as they believe, they could be taught more fully in the laws of the Lord. It has not been the eloquence of missionaries nor inducements of a temporal nature that have brought us to this country, but it has been hope and faith in the promises of God. It has been the knowledge that these are the latter days, spoken of by Prophets of old—days in which judgments are to be poured out upon the wicked, previous to which God should speak again through His servants.

The Elders have gone forth to preach the Gospel as they were directed by the Holy Spirit. Nor have they taken the honor of themselves, but they have been called as was Aaron. Joseph Smith received revelations from on High, before the Church was organized. He was a prophet, a seer and a translator before that event, but though he had these marvelous gifts, he was not thereby authorized to establish the Church, before he was especially ordained to do so. It was only after John the Baptist, who held the authority to baptize for the remission of sins, had restored to him these keys, that he received power to administer in this ordinance. And then it was necessary that he should receive the keys of the higher Priesthood, held by Peter, James, and John, by which he was endowed with power to lay the hands on the believers for the reception of the Holy Spirit. After he had been given this power, he was instructed to organize the Church of which we are members.

In the same manner he called others to the ministry, and conferred on them the same power he had received, and they went forth to the nations of the earth, and the evidence of their divine calling is seen in the fruits of their work everywhere, where the Gospel was preached. They were called from the humblest vocations, but a power rested on them that was divine.

Now, what is the Gospel? Is it anything new, anything strange to Bible readers? No. It is the old, everlasting Gospel, once preached by Jesus and His Apostles. He sent these out to preach to every creature that he who believes and is baptized shall be saved; and that he who does not believe shall be damned, and various gifts were promised to those who should accept the Gospel of the Kingdom.

No argument is needed to convince Christians that Faith is necessary to salvation. This is a fundamental doctrine held by all believers in Jesus. They admit that it is necessary to believe in God the Father, and His Son and the Holy Spirit, but there is a great difference in the opinions of men concerning the divine Being. We believe that God is a personage and that He has a real body and parts and passions, and we find numerous places in the Holy Scriptures in confirmation of this. We believe that Jesus came in the flesh, suffered and died, and rose again, and that the body which was laid in the grave was the one which he received in the resurrection, though immortal and pure, and that He has the same body today. We believe that the Holy Ghost is a spiritual personage who stands at the Father's command and that a portion of the Holy Spirit is given to every Saint or every one who tries to serve God. A portion of this Spirit enlightens every person coming into the world. Man may neglect to follow His counsel and even drive Him away by continual opposition, but it is nevertheless the heritage of all to have Him. This is our faith concerning these personages.

We also think it necessary to believe all that God says to us.

The order of the Gospel is first, faith; second, repentance; third, baptism; and fourth, the laying on of hands. Then follows the other ordinances and laws and commandments necessary for the salvation of man.

Repentance is acknowledged among men generally as a correct principle. When any one has done wrong, he is expected to turn from it and do it no more. No death bed repentance is accepted, or one lasting but for a moment and then easily forgotten, but one which changes the whole course of man, if he has done wrong before.

Then comes baptism and we believe in the ordinance as Christ set us an example. Baptism is the immersion in water of those who have reached years of accountability, who can exercise faith and show evidence of repentance. It is an ordinance for those who have grown up and have done a wrong of which they repent. To such, and not to infants, should it be administered, in order that the old life may be buried and the repentant believer rise again to newness of life.

After this comes the laying on of hands by those who have authority to do so, whereby the Holy Ghost is conferred. He is the Comforter who takes of the things of God and reveals to man, and gives a testimony in our hearts. It is by the Spirit that the sick are healed and even the dead raised, if necessary, and the gifts of tongues and interpretations, etc., are imparted. This is the Spirit Jesus promised to those who accepted His word. It is the same Spirit who has been promised to those who shall accept the testimony given by His servants in this age. Here is something for the world whereby to test this work, whether it is from God or not. It is an infallible test. It is not even necessary to receive every ordinance of the Gospel in order to receive a testimony. There are instances where God revealed His will before baptism, as He did to Cornelius in ancient times, or as He did to Paul who was a persecutor, but received a revelation informing him that he was fighting against Jesus. Had he rejected this warning, he would have been worthy of damnation, but he accepted it and received a testimony and from that day devoted his life to the defense of the principles he had formerly opposed. The same testimony lives in the hearts of many Saints today, and it is so strong that they are willing to sacrifice all for it.

The sufferings of the Saints were referred to by the speaker as a proof of this. What greater evidence can be given than the sacrifices asked of the hands of the Saints, many of whom have left all in order to serve God? The Lord has accepted these offerings brought by many of His people. Their sincerity has been manifest even to the world, and their testimony shall not be without its effect on the children of men.

Many people, who are fairminded, and yet do not believe in God, wonder why the Saints have always been persecuted. There are various reasons for this. It is stated in the word of God that all those who desire to live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Christ plainly told His followers that they must expect to suffer persecution and they found it as the Master had predicted. They were opposed everywhere. Their lives were filled with trouble and finally they sealed their testimony with their blood. This was the fate of all the Apostles with one exception. Persecution followed them until the Priesthood was taken away and the Church removed from among the children of men. We are told that in this age persecutions were again to be expected. No amount of civilization is enough to make the world tolerate such people as the Gospel will make its adherents. Joseph Smith suffered all manner of persecution during his brief but eventful career, and at last he followed his predecessors in the apostolic dignity and sealed his testimony with his blood. Such things may be expected as long as satan has influence in the world. But blessed are they who suffer persecution for the sake of righteousness, for there is a reward laid up for them in the celestial glory, a reward of which no one can rob them.

Opposition on account of righteousness is accompanied with blessing; but if perchance we suffer on account of doing what is wrong, we must repent. The children of Israel were sometimes subjected to sufferings on account of their breaking God's commandments. Think of the many years the people had to wander in the wilderness, while most of them died without seeing the promised land. Even Moses was not permitted to enter the land, though he could see it from the mountain.

Some instances were referred to illustrating the condition of the chosen people when they deviated from the word of the Lord. They could not prevail against their enemies when wickedness existed against them. The speaker said, if there was such to be found among the Saints, who transgressed the laws of God, the whole people would perchance have to suffer. For the preservation of the whole people, it was, therefore, necessary that we remove all evil that may be found among us. If, to some extent, we suffer persecution, we should search ourselves and see if we are in any way the cause of it ourselves. But if we suffer for the sake of righteousness, we are blessed.

Many seek to live as near God as they can and to do their duty. When we compare our history to that of ancient Israel, we feel encouraged, but God expects us to be even more obedient than they were. For what is promised for these latter days are greater than any promise that was ever before given. This is the dispensation of the fulness of time, in which all things shall again be restored. Christ will come. It is a day when heaven is again opened and men are permitted to converse with angels and holy beings. Nothing prevents us from having great intelligence and enjoying the guidance of the Holy Spirit in everything, not only in our meetings but in our daily labor; in whatever we undertake to do in our offices, our workshops, or other places of business, so that we in all things can live as the children of God should live.

God requires such a course of the Latter-day Saints. If we indulge in the evils of the world, God will reject us. When we see the indifference which characterizes many people, it makes our heart bleed. The speaker referred to the general desecration of the Sabbath and said he feared we did not sufficiently understand what God requires of us in regard to this day. In the days of Moses, there was severe penalty for the desecration of the Sabbath, Israel could not even gather food on that day. And in this age, we have been commanded to keep the day holy. Not to do this will bring condemnation on the transgressors.

Then again with regard to profanity. How great is the sin of using the name of the Deity in vain. And what will be the punishment visited on those who do it, especially if they are called Latter-day Saints.

There are numerous other things, almost too numerous to mention. There is for instance the use of tobacco, which the Lord has prohibited.

God will call men and women to account, if they unworthily partake of the emblems of the Lord's supper. People who have unkind feelings in their hearts against their fellowmen should not partake of those holy emblems, for in so doing they bring evil upon themselves for time, and for eternity also. It is the duty of teachers to set things of this nature in order, and if they had the full power of the Priesthood, they would accomplish this and great results would follow.

Peace on earth and good will among men is the essence of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Its aim is the establishment of a better era, in which God Himself shall administer justice among men. This is what we wish to see established, and people who now do not believe in the Gospel will yet have to acknowledge it.

The speaker testified that the eyes of the Almighty are upon His people and to those who appeal to Him in need or distress, He will listen and answer their prayers, and when His people thus hold communication with Him and walk in His paths, the glory of the Lord will be established on earth, as has been predicted by Prophets in all ages.

The choir sang the anthem:

God be merciful unto us and bless us.

Benediction by Bishop Heber Benoni.

OGDEN POSSIBILITIES.

As between what remains of the "Liberal" party and the opposition to it, Ogden today enjoys, or at least possesses, the distinction of being the only doubtful city in the Territory. The uncertainty regarding its political status is not in any sense relieved by the prevailing apathy, and is, if possible, more mystified because of the claim that formerly staunch and long-time "Liberals" who have drawn out and now advocate the division movement, may be to some extent offset by new recruits from other points. While the latter are very few in number, it should also be borne in mind that the outspoken divisionists among the former "Liberals" are by no means a great host, though tolerably numerous; and it was with the hope of being able to arrive at something approaching the true situation that I obtained from several Junctionists, who are recognized non-"Mormons," their individual views regarding it.

As is the case elsewhere and all the time, the men of moderate views and conservative estimates are in a rather insignificant minority, while the majority of these more conspicuous who lay any claim to decided preferences at all can see only a sweeping victory for the party to which they are attached. The Democrat is going to have a walk-over, so is the Republican, and the "Liberal" borrows sufficient comfort from the fact that the two former are nearly equally divided to make him feel, or to say he feels, that the performance of February, 1889, will be repeated at least once more. I found few of this kind of person, however, than was expected, and this may be attributed to various causes.

The election of last year divided the "Liberal" party, not exactly in two equal parts, but in such a way that about one-third or one-fourth of it joined the People's party in a citizen's ticket and the contest was a draw—about half the offices going either way. Now of those who thus broke off it is a safe guess that not a baker's dozen or so have returned to the fold, and just as safe a one that many times that number have since dropped off to return no more, these not going down in the sea of neutrality by any means, but going to swell the ranks of the national organizations. The rank and file thus represented may be conjectured from the number of men of great prominence and ability who have taken such action, embracing such names as Judge Boreman, Judge Croce, J. W. McNutt, Ransford Smith, J. G. Tyler, Judge McGinniss, W. H. Smith, L. R. Rhodes, Rogers and Evans, and many others.

Ogden is one of the few cities of the Territory holding a municipal election in November, and as stated, the only one concerning which there is any uncertainty. That it will be hotly contested seems scarcely to admit of a doubt, although to look at it now and converse with its citizens would not lead to such a conclusion by any means; indeed, if the election were to occur within a few weeks, it is morally certain that the party which polled its full strength would win, for there could scarcely be more than half a vote cast and the loss would necessarily be with the other two. The present administration is quite efficient and popular, but it owes responsibility to no political organization, so there are no gains to be had and no losses to be sustained by reason of it, thus contributing its share toward the political stagnation which the city at present amounts to.

Forehandliness in the matter of figures would scarcely, under such circumstances, have sufficient foundation to entitle it to attention, let alone to credence, but a general statement based upon such conversation as is engaged in, a full consideration of the election of a year ago when the same organizations contested as will contest this year, and a careful survey of the situation generally, may be permissible.

Ogden consists of one council and two house districts; of these the Democrats elected the council and one of the representatives, the "Liberals" taking the other one by a very narrow margin, so narrow that a change of half a dozen votes would have given the Democrats a clean sweep. Estimating that for every "Liberal" who has gone back fully three have come out, that recent accessions from elsewhere will not amount to enough to make a material difference, and dividing the recruits to the national parties equally between them, the Democrats will elect all the city officers at large and six of the councilmen, while of the four remaining the "Liberals" may possibly get one or two, but I don't if very much; all of those the Democrats don't get will, I think, go to the Republicans.

ESSAY CAIGH.

SACRIFICE.

The fact that the great plan of salvation is founded upon the law of sacrifice, and that the principle constitutes a prominent feature in the entire development of that plan, renders it worthy of more than an indifferent passing thought; worthy of a candid, careful consideration.

Personal sacrifice required of us by sense of duty, or otherwise, is seldom in accord with our natural wishes. To forego even a desired pleasure, much more that which may seem a necessity of life, is repulsive to our natures, and for this reason alone it has none of our sympathy. We have no eagerness to discover any virtue in, much less any necessity for sacrifice in our lives.

It must, however, be a feature of great prominence and vast importance when we are assured that no Savior or Redeemer of man could be found without it. It was from before the foundation of the world, and from the days of Adam until now, atonement for sin has been by sacrifice. Such were the conditions under which the Savior of men could redeem our race. To leave His exalted position of being "one with the Father," and come down among men to share in all their temptations and sorrows, was a sacrifice beyond our conception. To descend below all conditions from one that was above all, and suffer as none other can for other's sake, was evidence of more than human philanthropy; was the love of God; a love to save beyond compare.

Sacrifice is necessary to true greatness. If we give of our abundance, and are not inconvenienced by making the gift, what evidence is the deed of our charity? There may be very many motives for a generous bestowal of worldly goods, where indeed no feeling or sense of charity prevails. But where we see one giving to the needy, and know the giver must suffer loss or hardship—personal inconvenience and possibly individual suffering, then a sense of duty prompted by the purest love must actuate the deed. And such must be the love of those who would be saviors upon Mount Zion. It must be the love that will feel no sacrifice too great to save a soul; to work for one who cannot do the work for himself.

In early times it required life and blood to symbolize the sacrifice of a world's Savior; and now in the divine plan we may become saviors to our kindred—fathers and mothers, relations as near and dear to us, as we in our finite state can possibly appreciate; but not without a sacrifice proportionate to the redeeming work we do, and the blessing by that work secured.

A sacrifice made at the cost of self-denial, self-abnegation and determined effort, gives evidence of unfeigned love, of that charity which is akin to the love of God, and has divine recognition.

The rich man who bestows a gift out of the abundance of wealth, and is not personally inconvenienced in any way by so doing, has but little claim of making thereby a sacrifice that shall be accounted to him for righteousness.

But little credit was given by our Savior to those who gave out of their abundance, though, the sums were great, out of her who gave the smallest mite. He said she gave more than they all, because it was her all, her living.

She did it in the face of want, of personal inconvenience, or perhaps suffering. It was indeed to her a sacrifice, and so recognized by the Lord, who judges all rightly.

There are no Saviors without sacrifice in the divine plan, and those who would be saviors upon Mount Zion in the last days must comply with the conditions upon which such high honors are predicated. They must afford evidence of willingness to suffer in proportion to the joy and redemption imparted to another.

In all the economy of God's works there is a law of compensation existing by which an equilibrium of power is maintained, or in other words there is an opposite in all things, by virtue of which if we trespass upon the one we are liable to the other. Mercy and Justice are both legitimate virtues or attributes of Deity, and if we will not regard the profits of the one, we must meet the demands of the other. There is no escaping this condition attending the career of human existence. Justice is often deferred; is slow in pressing its demands, but they are sure to be made; if not in the present, then in the future. Were it otherwise, both justice and mercy would be failures and there would be no God. The great day of reckoning will demand a full and just settlement of all accounts.

They who have, by sacrifice, contributed to the welfare of humanity, though it be but a single soul, shall in nowise lose their reward. Inasmuch as ye have done it to one of the least of these who are mine, ye have done unto me," is the declaration of Him who has wrought out, by his atonement and sacrifice, redemption for all of suffering humanity.

Every kind generous act done to another, prompted by love for fellow man, can no more lose its reward than a wrong inflicted upon another can escape its merited penalty. The one is in unison with a Savior's cause in aid of his divine mission and secures his kindly recognition; the other incurs a debt to be paid, or penalty to be endured.

Indifference and hate, like venom, kill. With malice, spite, man's soul doth ill. From which no good can ever flow, Destroying hope of happiness to know.

Love works no ill, it does no wrong; Gives peace to man, to angels song; Is light and power in all creation's plan, Ties earth to heaven; like God, makes man.

Then let us choose the path of life, Forsaking all that tends to strife; For the living and the dead, In concert with our living head.

CITY COUNCIL.

The City Council met in regular session August 9. The councilmen in attendance were: Rich, Folland, Moran, Evans, Lawson, Beardsley, Wantland, Helsa, Hardy, Bell.

In the absence of President Loofbourrow Mr. Beardsley was called to the chair.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read, amended and approved, after which were read and referred as follows:

J. W. Jenkins and others protested against the payment of a double assessment for construction of watermain. Committee on waterworks.

G. Williams asked to be appointed to a position on the police force. Committee on police.

J. E. Lively made a similar request. Same reference.

John Evans asked for a rebate on sprinkling tax. Committee on sprinkling.

S. U. Watson sent in a communication saying that he had never refused to pay workmen for services rendered. Committee on claims.

The Eureka Gas company ask the council to investigate the operations of a patent gas saver owned by them. Committee on improvements.

J. D. Schaffer and others asked that Eleventh East street be improved. Committee of streets.

G. Grainger and others asked for an extension of watermain. Committee on waterworks.

Willard Young asked permission to construct his own sidewalk. Committee on streets.

A communication from Auerbach Brothers and Henry Cohn calling attention to a petition which it is alleged had been pigeonholed was referred to the recorder.

John B. Reed and others asked that City Creek between Fourth and Seventh West streets be cleaned out and put in good condition for conveying the high waters of next spring to a point where it will do no injury to property owners residing in that locality. Committee on irrigation.

CITY GAS STOCK.

Thomas L. Kutz made an offer for the city's stock in the Salt Lake City Gas company. He offered $10,000 cash upon the execution of the contract of sale, $15,000 in one month thereafter, $15,000 in two, three, four and five months respectively thereafter, and the balance of $13,875 in six months after said date, a total of $98,875. The city owns 787 shares of the stock. Committee on ways and means.

STREET OBSTRUCTION.

The Salt Lake and Los Angeles Railway company, by George Q. Cannon, president, sent in a communication in regard to the occupation of West South Temple street. They claimed that they supposed that they had a right to the street, but since it had been discovered that such was not the case, they expressed their willingness to comply with the wishes of the Council and remove the obstruction. On motion, it was ordered that the time for the removal of the obstruction be extended to twenty days.

UNSIGNEED LICENSE.

The Mayor sent in the following: Gentlemen—William Menott of the firm of Carney & Menott, while that firm held and were enjoying a license to retail liquor in the city, was on the 15th of July last arrested for violating the Sunday liquor law, and on the following day pleaded guilty to the charge. He was again arrested on the 24th of the same month for a similar violation. The evidence in his trial on the last charge was published in the newspapers and to which I call your attention. The license of the firm expired July 27th and by the action of the City Council a short time since renewal of license to this firm was authorized. I have not yet approved of the applicant's bonds and the renewal license has not yet been issued. In consideration of the fact that the applicants have confessed to having violated the Sunday ordinances of the city while enjoying the benefit of their former license and upon supposition that the City Council, when the applicants' license was removed were not aware of the fact that the Sunday ordinances had been violated. I therefore call the attention of the council to the matter and respectfully ask that the previous action in the premises be reconsidered, the authority for doing which is contained in Section 2 of an act relating to liquor licenses." Revised ordinances 1892, page 57.

Respectfully

R. M. BASKIN, Mayor.

Committee on license.

A TEMPEST.

The Ohio Pipe Line Company asked the Council to notify it who was the successful bidder for 580 tons of pipe to be purchased by the city.

This caused a good deal of acrimonious discussion and charges were made that the mayor had been ignored in the solicitation of bids.

Wantland—Heretofore the mayor has always been associated in these matters. Why he should be ignored now can only be guessed at.

Lawson—When the purchase of this pipe was discussed in this council before the matter was referred to the committee on waterworks, the committee at once through its chairman proceeded to do its duty. I do not know that it is absolutely necessary that the committee shall consult with Mayor Baskin as to everything they do simply because he happens to be the chief executive of this city. The committee is not made of that kind of stuff that will bare their heads and with hats in hand go and wait upon that official every time they wish to do anything. When their work is over they can report to him through the council. There is no law nor method that guarantees or compels us to take any other course. The members of the committee are gentlemen and have as much right as Mr. Baskin.

Bell (sarcastically)—It is the height of indecency for this committee and especially this man Lawson to pursue this course and then talk in the manner that he has before this council tonight. The whole affair is simply an effort to get even; a piece of spite work against the Mayor. It is retaliation—

Moran (rising quickly)—I call the gentleman to order—

Bell (indignantly)—I want you to understand Mr. Moran that I am strictly in order and I want you to mind your business.

Hardy—Mr. President I call the gentleman to order.

Bell—Never Mind Mr. Hardy.

Moran—I insist that Mr. Bell is out of order. He is becoming personal.

Heiss—He has a right to be personal in this case.

Bell—Yes, I have a right to be personal in this case.

On motion of Wantland the matter was temporarily laid on the table.

REVISED ORDINANCES.

The city recorder reported that the compilation of the revision of the ordinances, made by Mr. Joseph Lippman under his direction, was now ready for submision.

On motion, it was ordered that they be considered in special sessions to be commenced tonight (Wednesday).

WHILE SERVING AS PAYMASTER.

City Treasurer Duke sent in a communication stating that prior to the time of the appointment of the deputy auditor the work of paymaster was performed by his office assistant. Such service was worth $100, and he asked an appropriation of that amount. Committee on claims.

WATERMASTER'S ESTIMATES.

The watermaster submitted estimates of the expenses of his department for the quarter ending September 30th as follows: Supplies, $250; labor, $550; total, $800. Committee on irrigation.

EMIGRATION WATER RIGHTS.

The superintendent of waterworks called the attention of the Council to the water rights purchased by the city in Emigration canyon, stating that parties had since jumped them and the matter should be given immediate attention. Referred.

FILTHY GUTTERS.

The health commissioner recommended the removal of filth along the gutters on Second South between Main and West Temple streets. Superintendent of streets and health commissioner associated.

KEESLER REBUKED.

The recorder read the following from the police committee:

We your committee on police submit the following for your action in the matter of Police Justice Keesler, find that no excuse can be given for his conduct on the evening of June 17th, 1892 and that his conduct was against the honor and dignity of his high and responsible position and was open to censure.

M. H. BEARDSLEY,

J. L. LAWSON,

ELI A. FOLLAND,

F. J. MORAN.

The report was adopted on the following vote:

Ayes—Beardsley, Bell, Evans, Ewing, Folland, Hardy, Heiss, Lawson, Moran, Rich, Simondt, Wantland.
No—Horn.

KEESLER STILL SMILES.

Heiss offered the following:

Resolved, That W. W. Gee, the justice of the peace for the Fifteenth precinct, is hereby selected police judge until further notice, and that the city marshal and chief of police are hereby requested to bring parties arrested for violation of the city ordinances before said Gee at his office in the city hall for trial.

Further, That the city auditor is hereby instructed to not pay Fred Keesler, jr., any salary or money for acting as police judge after the adoption of this resolution, and that the said Keesler is hereby instructed to vacate the office he has occupied in the city hall.

J. A. HEISS,
C. F. LOOFBROUOW,
C. E. WANTLAND,
S. C. EWING,
A. L. SIMONDI.

Moran—I move that the report be tabled indefinitely. Lost.

Moran again took the floor and said Keesler could not be removed except for cause.

Wantland took the floor and proceeded to speak in favor of the resolution. Mr. O. W. Powers, who had been occupying a seat near Keesler, his client, suddenly stepped to the centre of the floor and without invitation or permission commenced to address the members of the Council.

Hardy—I object—

Powers (interrupting)—I am here—

Rich—I protest—

Powers—I am here to—

Heiss—This is the first time that I ever objected to hearing Judge Powers speak. But he is out of place on this floor tonight. I protest against him speaking.

Beardsley—You can only speak, Judge Powers, by unanimous consent of the Council.

Powers—I—

Bell here succeeded in getting the floor and made a pitiable plea for Keesler, whom he said could not be deprived without a regular hearing as he was an appointive officer.

After Bell had finished Powers had the brazen audacity to take the floor and speak notwithstanding the strenuous objections of the members of the Council. He wound up by saying, as attorney for Mr. Keesler, I warn you not to remove him as your action will be illegal and we will contest the matter in the courts. I just want to enter a protest, that is all.

Horn—Keesler can't be removed. The resolution is not worth the paper it is written on.

Heiss—Yes, it is. It will stick all right.

Lawson—I am glad some of these gentlemen have changed their minds.

Moran moved that the resolution be referred back to the city attorney to see whether or not it was legal.

The city attorney here took the floor and said: "Five justices of the peace are elected in this city—one from each precinct. The Council can designate any one of them to hold court at the City Hall. The office of police justice is not appointive. The resolution is good law and Keesler can be removed as it provides.

Moran—I move that it go back to the city attorney for a written opinion.

The city attorney—I have just given my opinion. If you want it in writing the stenographer can take it down. My opinion will not change.

Wantland—I made up my mind in this matter four weeks ago. I know—we all know what public sentiment is in this city against this man. He should be removed and I will vote in favor of so doing.

The motion to refer carried.

THE POLE TROUBLE.

The committee on streets recommended the adoption of the report from the city engineer in regard to the difficulty between the Telephone company and the Salt Lake City Street Railway company in regard to certain poles on Second East street, recommending that the Street Railway company be ordered to remove said poles and also recommending that the blanket franchise granted said Street Railway Company in regard to the occupation of the streets with their poles be repealed, and that the matter be referred to the city attorney and city engineer for the necessary action.

After more acrimonious discussion the matter was laid on the table for one week.

THAT SLAUGHTERHOUSE NUISANCE.

The sanitary committee in the matter of the complaint against the White slaughter house reported that the complaint was in the main well founded. The committee had recommended that he make certain improvements, and in view of the fact that he contemplated moving the whole plant very soon, thought this would be sufficient. Adopted.

PAVING ORDERS.

Heils then offered the following, which was referred to the city attorney for an opinion as to its legality:

Resolved, That all public and private alleys on the following streets be paved with stone blocks or cobble stones.
Both sides of State street from South Temple to Third South.

Both sides of Main street from South Temple to Third South.

Both sides of West Temple street from South Temple to Third South.

Both sides of South Temple street from West Temple to State.

Both sides of First South street from West Temple to State.

Both sides of Second South street from West Temple to State.

Both sides of Third South street from West Temple to State.

And that all of said alleys shall be paved for a distance of 1000 feet back from the property line or street into which they open.

PARK IMPROVEMENTS.

Heils offered the following, which was referred to the committee on public grounds:

Whereas, The city having but one public park, it is important that the same be improved and beautified for the benefit of the public, therefore,

Resolved, That the sum of $15,000 be appropriated for that purpose.

Rich offered the following, which also went to the committee on public grounds:

Resolved, That the committee on public grounds investigate at once the cause of the young trees, etc., dying around the Eighth ward square, and report to this Council their findings, with recommendations.

AFTER THE MARSHAL.

Beil offered the following:

Resolved, That the city marshal report to this Council reasons for his failure to remove street stands, horse blocks and other obstructions from the public streets and sidewalks as per resolution passed by this Council July 5th, 1892.

Adopted.

BIDS FOR WATER PIPES.

The committee on waterworks reported the following bids for 550 tons of Detroit pipe:

Detroit Pipe and Foundry Co.$41.35 per ton
Deans Long.....	19.50 "
Deans and Montana Machinery Co.	34.50 "
Adison Pipe and Foundry Co.	38.00 "
Howard-Harrison Iron Works.....	37.50 "
Rhodes Bros.....	36.50 "

They recommend that the bid of Rhodes Bros. be accepted.

Beil again made a personal speech and said the committee had treated the Mayor shabbily.

Lawson—There is a constant bluster in this Council about the committee on waterworks buying pipe over the mayor's head and keeping up a petty fight. It may be true that some of the mayor's trusted conclaves are keeping up a petty fight but as far as I am concerned I personally renege it.

Beil—Has not the committee purchased pipe without consultation?

Lawson—No, sir.

Beil—No contracts entered into?

Lawson—No, sir.

Beil—No papers signed?

Lawson—No, sir.

Beil—You are sure of that?

Lawson (warmly)—Yes, sir, I am sure of that. I have tried to be patient and keep my temper within bounds while the gentleman was speaking, for instead of asking a question he has been making a speech. I want the members of this Council to understand once for all that I am not in the hardware business.

Ewing—I am in favor of dropping the bids out entirely and allowing the Mayor to advertise for new ones. I believe in giving to Caesar what is his due.

The City Attorney—The committee's actions thus far are illegal.

Moran—I will be one of the first members to oppose interfering with the Mayor's prerogative. It may have been the custom heretofore, but it is not necessarily correct, however.

Hardy—I request that the report lay over for one week. Carried.

ROAD TO MORGAN.

The special committee composed of Wantland, Rich and Folland reported as follows:

Your committee to report upon the feasibility of completing a wagon road to Morgan via City Creek and Hardscrabble canyons, report that we have examined the route and believe it to be a feasible proposition and one that will be of great benefit to the trade of Salt Lake City. We recommend that the street supervisor be instructed to open the road as far as the city lands extend. We will report as early as possible concerning the portion of the work between the head of City Creek and the Morgan county settlement.

Laid over for one week.

AFTER THE WESTSIDE RAPID TRANSIT.

Horn offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Westside Rapid Transit company be compelled to repair Second West street, south of Ninth South street, in compliance with its franchise, such repairs to be made at once and under the supervision of the street supervisor.

A dopted.

ANOTHER LONG DEBATE.

In the matter of the petition of the Great Salt Lake & Hot Springs Railway company, the committee on streets recommended that the city attorney be instructed to prepare an amended franchise, said franchise to provide that the railway company shall, within four months, begin the actual construction of a broad-gauge line west of this city.

Hardy—I am unalterably opposed to the granting of this petition until I know just what it means. The people on the street along this line are greatly discommoded. If I had my way I would compel all railroads to enter and leave the city on the same thoroughfares so far as it is possible. It is done elsewhere and should be here. Two hundred and fifty residents in that locality protest against the manner in which this railroad company is squeezing the tax payers of the Third precinct.

Rich concurred with Hardy and made a strong speech in favor of the petitioners and against the railroad company which he stated had broken faith with the city. When it secured its original franchise it was granted for the operation of a horse, dummy or electric system but that document or contract had been violated by the operation of large engines and the hauling of freight over its line into the heart of the city.

Horn—said that he was in favor of railroads; the company in question for instance had by its enterprise lowered freight and passenger traffic to an extent that was greatly appreciated by the people.

Folland—said he had been opposed to railroads for many years—that is he had been opposed to the construction of any more in the western part of the city which was now completely grid-ironed by rails. If they could be gotten into a smaller compass he would be willing to grant the railroad companies every reasonable concession. Otherwise not. Adopted.

TOO MANY TRACKS.

The committee on streets recommended that the Oregon Short Line and Utah Northern be allowed to construct a side track on Fourth West street.

Moran—How long is this track?

Wantland—Something over five hundred feet.

Simondi—There are now twenty-seven tracks lying parallel with each other in that locality. That seems quite sufficient.

Folland—There are certainly a great number of tracks on that street now. I do not believe that the committee has been down there but are simply making an offhand investigation.

Evans—There are far too many railroad tracks on that street now. I shall vote against the proposition.

Moran—I move to reject the report.

Wantland—I ask that it lay over for one week. Carried.

TO ENTERTAIN VISITORS.

Ewing and Evans moved the appointment of a committee of three to entertain such visitors as may come here from day to day during the next two or three weeks, en route from the Knight Templar convclave at Denver.

The matter after some warm discussion was referred to the Mayor, giving him authority to appoint a committee of five and associate himself with them.

EIGHT HOUR MEASURE PASSED.

Moran's eight hour ordinance passed.

The appropriation list was then adopted as follows:

Paving and a dozen other matters came up and it was midnight when the members left the heated Council chamber and sought the open air.

A special session of the City Council was held last night. In the absence of President Loomis, Councilman Ewing was called to the chair. The members in attendance were: Rich, Folland, Hardy, Moran, Bell, Evans, Simond, Lawson, Wantland, Helsa.

RETURNED UNAPPROVED.

The garbage ordinance recently passed by the City Council was returned by the mayor unapproved and referred to the sanitary committee for revision.

SIDEWALK CONSTRUCTION.

Wantland offered a resolution providing that the city attorney report an ordinance to the Council providing for the payment of taxes on sidewalk construction to be paid for in four installments of three, nine, fifteen and twenty-one months. Adopted.

REQUESTED TO REPORT.

Wantland moved that the special committee consisting of the city engineer, superintendent of waterworks, be requested to report concerning the steps necessary to be taken to replace the waters of the Salt Lake and Jordan canal north of Ninth South street. Adopted.

AMENDED SPRINKLING ORDINANCE.

An ordinance amending Section 1 an ordinance creating Sprinkling District No. 1 and defining its boundaries was passed. The amendment added is the addition of the following: Third West street from the south line of North Temple street to the north line of First South street and the same is hereby made a part of District No. 1.

CENTER STREET RAILWAY.

The committee on streets reported that the cost of grading Center street to the level of the west sidewalk was estimated by the city engineer at $2,400. Also that the Street Car Company offers to pay $750 of the amount. The committee recommended that the street supervisor be directed to grade the street under the direction of the city engineer and that the street car company be requested to place its tracks in the middle of the street. Moran—I am opposed against this report and the proposition on general principles. If the petition is granted deep cuts will be made and as a result retaining walls will have to be built.

Hardy—The proposition is an excellent one. The gravel taken from the cut can be used to good advantage in other parts of the city.

Lawson—I believe we should be careful in regard to this matter. I understand that the cut will be at least fifteen feet deep. I move that it be referred to the city attorney for an opinion as to the legality of constructing retaining walls at that point, should it be considered necessary.

The city attorney explained that he had already delivered an opinion on that subject and that the city was not necessarily obliged to construct retaining walls.

Bell—Mr. Hardy lives in that predict and I know him to be pretty well acquainted on street matters, and am willing to accept his representation of the case.

The report was adopted on the following vote:

Ayes—Bell, Evans, Ewing, Folland, Hardy, Helsa, Horn, Rich, Simond, Wantland.
 Noes—Moran, Lawson.

PAYING TAX PROTEST.

Hardy presented a protest from a large number of prominent citizens and property owners representing 4554 feet on Main, First and Second South streets property, against the payment of the first installment of the paving tax on August 21st, and asking that the first installment be made payable about ten days before the date when the city shall make its first payment to the contractors on said works.

Moran—I move that the petition be granted.

Wantland moved to amend by referring it to the city attorney and city engineer assistant for recommendation. The total assessment is $120,000.

Some discussion of a cessuary character followed, after which the original motion carried.

PUBLIC GROUNDS.

Helsa offered the following:

Whereas, it is reported that a number of lots and pieces of ground belonging to the city are now in the possession of divers and sundry persons who may acquire title to the same by adverse possession, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the city engineer be and he is hereby authorized to employ some competent person to visit each piece of ground owned by the city and find out who occupies and what particular pieces of ground, lot or part of lot are so occupied.

ADOPTED.

REVISED ORDINANCES.

The recorder announced that the table was cleared of all the old business.

Bell then moved that the city ordinances recently re-arranged be referred to the committee on municipal laws, and the city attorney associated for general revision.

Wantland opposed the motion to refer to any committee.

Folland declared that it would be a better plan for the Council to consider the ordinance in open meeting, chapter by chapter. The members would thus have an opportunity of familiarizing themselves with the law.

MR. LIPPMAN'S EXPLANATION.

Mr. Lippman said he had followed the general outline of the Omaha ordinance in revising the city statutes. Up to date there were 55 chapters, all alphabetically arranged. The recent paving ordinance and the new eight hour labor law would of course be added, making all told a book of sixty chapters.

Wherever he found a conflict in the law he had noted it, and would call the attention of the Council to the same as read.

In regard to the liquor law, he called attention to the fact that the Territorial Legislature had, in 1882, passed a general liquor law. The city adopted this into its ordinances. In 1884 the Territorial Legislature adopted a new liquor law. The Council had never adopted this, but was acting under the old law.

Mr. Lippman said that there was no law for the appointment of a police justice prior to March 4th, 1892. The general Territorial law prior to that time provided that five justices of the peace should be elected, and that the Council had, without any warrant in law, been designating one of these justices to act as police justice. The last Legislature, however, enacted a law providing that but one city justice could be elected for the city at large. He then mentioned quite a number of other inaccuracies, to which he would call attention as the ordinances were read.

It was then moved that the ordinances as read stand approved if no objections were entered. Adopted.

THE ORDINANCES TAKEN UP.

It was nearly 10 o'clock when the reading of the new compilation of laws was commenced by Mr. Lippman. When the subject of the appointment of officers was reached, Lawson moved that the law be amended to make the incumbency of officers subject to the pleasure of the Council instead of two years.

Rich seconded the motion. He believed the proposition was a good one as officers sometimes were appointed whose conduct could not be condoned by the city.

Mr. Lippman suggested that the charter provided that appointees to office could retain their position for two years.

Rich amended by moving that the exact words of the charter bearing on the subject be incorporated in the ordinance.

Lawson seconded the motion.

The city attorney read from the charter "and any officer can be removed from office by a two-thirds vote in the discretion of the City Council." "This can be done with or without cause."

Rich contended that the word "cause" wherever it appeared should be stricken out. There were many good reasons why this should be done. For instance, a policeman under the old law—no matter how objectionable he might be—could find apparent sanction in the statutes that his appointment was good for two years and he could hold his office that long and thus cause the Council a great deal of trouble. The city ordinances should be such that any officer could be removed at the pleasure of the City Council.

A special meeting of the City Council was held last night. President Loomis, having returned from Tintic occupied the chair.

Roll call showed the following members present: Rich, Hardy, Folland, Horn, Bell, Lawson, Helsa, Simond, Evans, Moran.

The revision of the new compilation of city ordinances was taken up, the question of appointment and removal of officers being first considered.

"CAUSE" STRICKEN OUT.

Rich moved to strike out the words "and no officer shall be removed except for cause" and incorporate the following in the ordinance from the city charter: "All officers appointed by the Council may be removed at any time by vote at discretion of two-thirds of said Council; and any officer may be suspended until the disposition of charges preferred against him."

Lawson—Whenever the city becomes dissatisfied with one of its officers it should have the right to discharge him just the same as any individual or firm can dispense with the services of an employe with whom they had become displeased.

The motion to strike out prevailed.

CAPTAIN OF POLICE.

When Mr. Lipman reached the office of Captain of Police, he called attention to the fact that the office was created October 27th, 1890, and it was abolished February 17th, 1891. There was, however, an ordinance creating the salary for that position, and the office was in fact, in existence today and was occupied.

Folland—Perhaps I can explain that matter. In October of last year during the police squabble, the office of Captain of Police was abolished for the reason that serious charges had been preferred against Captain Parker who was the incumbent of the office at that time, and who refused to vacate. On the day the ordinance took effect he was killed. It was passed simply to get rid of him.

Rich moved that the office of captain of police be created.

The motion will be considered at a future meeting.

DUTY SERGEANTS.

Hardy—I move that the three duty sergeants be stricken from the list of appointees.

Rich—I second the motion and do so for the reason that I think the office should be filled from the police force chosen from among the best men by the chief of police.

Hicks—Then there will be no restriction as to the number of appointments made.

Folland—There certainly would be a restriction because these appointments can not be made except by and with the approval and consent of the council.

The motion to strike out carried.

SPECIAL POLICEMEN.

There was a protracted discussion on the appointment of special policemen by the mayor.

Moran—The Mayor recently appointed a special policeman. He was engaged and his name was placed on the 183 roll some time before it was presented in the Council. The police committee was displeased but was powerless in the premises; the man was kept constantly at work notwithstanding.

Rich moved that the Mayor be requested to report to the Council all appointments of special police officers at the next regular meeting of the Council after such appointments are made.

Moran contended that the motion was improper, inasmuch as it conflicted with the charter conferred upon the city by the Territorial Legislature in 1883.

Evans favored the amendment and said that it neither affected, abridged nor altered that charter.

PARK KEEPER.

The next question was the appointment of a park keeper or keeper at Liberty Park by the Mayor.

Lawson moved to amend by adding

"by and with the consent of the City Council." He said if the members would just take a visit to Liberty Park they would see the necessity of the Council having such power. The present incumbent was an official who had allowed that park to fall into a most disgraceful condition. He was an appointee of the mayor and the Council cannot now remove him.

Rich said the same deplorable condition of affairs existed at Washington and Pioneer squares.

The amendment carried.

ASSISTANT CITY ATTORNEY.

The ordinance relating to the appointment of an assistant city attorney providing for the appointment of that officer by the city attorney and for whose official acts he should be responsible.

Moran moved that the office be filled by and with the advice and consent of the City Council.

Horn moved as a substitute that the city attorney may by and with the advice and consent of the City Council appoint an assistant attorney, who shall hold his office at the pleasure of the council.

Evans said he did not see that Mr. Moran's motion improved the condition of the question in the least.

Beardsley said that the city attorney was responsible not only for the acts of himself but for those of his assistant as well.

Hardy stated the city attorney was under $5000 bonds and that was sufficient.

Lawson on the following vote: Ayes—Folland, Horn, Lawson, Moran, Rich—5.

Noes—Beardsley, Bell, Evans, Hardy, Hicks, Leabourau—0.

A great deal more talk was indulged in but nothing further done in the matter which will be further considered at the next meeting.

THEY TALK TOO OFTEN.

The president read the following from the rules of the council and suggested if it was complied with it would greatly facilitate business:

Rule 2.—No member shall speak more than once on the same subject, without the consent of the council, unless he is a mover of the matter pending or the chairman of the committee who reported the same, in which case he shall be privileged to open and close the debate.

APPROPRIATIONS.

H. M. Willard.....	$0 50
J. H. Bowman.....	$20 00
Monahan, Bird & Co.....	$33 18
Total.....	$10,409 28

There was another special session of the City Council last night. President Lookbur w occupied the chair. The councilmen in attendance were Evans, Rich, Folland, Hardy, Hicks, Horn, Lawson, Beardsley, Moran and Bell.

DEPUTY ASSESSOR OF WATER RATES.

On motion of Rich the action in passing the ordinance relating to a deputy assessor and collector of water rates was reconsidered and the words "City Council" inserted where the word "Mayor" occurred, the right of appointing thus being taken from the latter and bestowed on the former.

Evans inquired if the Council had the authority to repeal an ordinance by the adoption of a resolution.

Beardsley desired light on the same subject, and asked the City Attorney for his opinion.

MR. HOGG'S EXPLANATION.

The city attorney replied that an ordinance could neither be created nor repealed by a simple motion. The amendments offered should be taken and noted; then they could be adopted as a whole. Of course the risk of the exercise of the mayor's veto power would have to be run.

"Who shall hold his office subject to the will of the Council?" was added to the section creating a deputy for the assessor of water rates.

AUDITOR'S DEPUTY.

Moran made a speech on the subject of the appointment of a deputy city auditor. He was opposed to the Mayor having absolute and exclusive jurisdiction in the matter. He moved that the appointment be only made "by and with the consent of the City Council." Carried.

DESK SERGEANTS.

The appointment and duties of police sergeants caused considerable unimportant discussion.

Moran was opposed to such persons being called "desk sergeants." He was of the opinion that "police clerks" was nearer the proper thing. The selection of such employes is left to the judgment of the Mayor. The chief of police will have no voice in the matter other than the personal influence he may have with the chief executive of the city.

INSPECTOR OF SEWERS.

Rich moved that the office of sewer inspector be abolished, and made a speech to that end. Such a person it remained should be an employe of the city government and not an officer. The motion failed to carry.

A CURB ON STANTON.

The Council put a curb on Chief Stanton, of the fire department, by declaring that he can only promote and appoint "by and with the consent of the City Council."

OTHER CHECKS.

It was also decided that the same rule must hold good in the appointment of deputies by the inspector of buildings, marshal, jailor, and recorder.

PREPARING FOR DANGER.

Having in mind the great difficulty in getting rid of an incompetent and immoral police justice, the Council added these words to the ordinance relating to that official's appointment: "And the Council may remove him at pleasure."

ONLY ONE.

After some little discussion it was decided to allow the tender of weights and measures to have but one deputy.

FOREMEN INSTEAD OF SUPERVISORS.

Hereafter the assistant supervisors of streets will be called foremen as will also the assistant watermasters.

MORE RESTRICTIONS.

The ordinance was recommended that the city sexton and watermaster can only appoint deputies by and with the consent of the Council.

REFERRED.

The ordinance relating to health and sanitary regulations was referred to the board of health for examination and recommendation.

MUST BE SUBMITTED.

It was decided that all specifications from the board of public works shall be submitted to the council before bids are advertised for.

EQUALIZATION COMMITTEE.

The committee appointed as a board of equalization consists of Lawson, Hiele, Rich, Horn and Simond who represent the precincts in the order named.

Adjourned until Tuesday night at 7:30.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The City School Board met Thursday night, Vice President Nelson in the chair. The members in attendance were Newman, Young, Ald, Pratt, Pike, Raybould, Dooly, Baldwin and Duke.

MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS.

R. C. Watt and eighty others asked the board to secure for school purposes the Presbyterian Sunday school building, situated on Fourth West street. Referred.

David M. Phillips, Guy Harbens, William Rawlings and James Lee asked to be made janitors. Referred.

The citizens of the Third precinct were allowed to use the grounds in front of the Nineteenth ward school building for an open air mass meeting to protest against the establishment in that vicinity of the garbage crematory.

T. K. Morris and others offered to furnish coal black ink to the board for forty cents a gallon. Referred.

The committee on sites and buildings recommended that $1,650.16 be appropriated to R. Kletting for fifty per cent. of his bill for architectural services. A. adopted.

The committee on sites and buildings were authorized to advertise for bids for heating and ventilating the the Hamilton and Franklin school buildings.

The president and clerk were authorized to sign for the board a petition to have the sewer lateral extended on E street, a distance of 165 feet to near the intersection of Third street. This extension will enable the Lowell school building to connect with the sewer.

APPROVED AND DISAPPROVED.

The committee on sites and buildings recommended that the contract for the erection of the Jackson and Washington school buildings be let to F. M. Wright and A. Hennegon.

Pike wanted to know whether or not the bondsmen were responsible.

Dooly thought they were. Pike sprung the proposition that Hennegon was not responsible himself and read a long letter from the architect to that end. He further said that there was an extra $960 in the contract, but no requirement that the contractor do that amount of work. He moved that the contract and bond for the erection of Washington school be approved. Carried.

He then moved that the bond for the erection of the Jackson school be disapproved.

Dooly—The bondsmen are the same.

Newman thought the bondsmen were not responsible.

Raybould thought the bondsmen were perfectly reliable. He thought a fight was made over something that was unimportant.

Young said there was an agreement to pay the contractors nearly $1,000 extra, but there was nothing that would compel the contractors to do the work for it. He offered an amendment that the bonds be approved, if the contractors would consent to sign the plans to be submitted on August 12th.

Pike's motion to disapprove the bonds was lost, and Young's amendment went in as an original motion.

Raybould moved the adoption of Young's motion, which was carried.

DEATHS.

MILLER—In the Twentieth ward, this city, Aug. 11th, 1902, of old age, John Miller, born in Wyomond, Norfolk, England, December 22nd, 1811.

DAME—At Paragonah, Iron county, Utah, July 27, 1892, Lovinna Andrews Dame, daughter of Richard Andrews and Sarah Brockway; born March 1, 1825, in Trumbull county, Ohio; married to the late Hon. W. H. Dame December 5, 1839; baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ, Latter-day Saints May 20, 1841; shared with others in trials and dangers of the expedition from Nauvoo, and came to Salt Lake City at an early day. Moved south in President George A. Smith's time, driving a four-horse team most of the way from Salt Lake City to Paragonah, Iron county, where she resided until about ten years ago, when she removed to Paragonah.

Sister Dame was a refined and cultivated lady. She was extremely sensitive regarding the sufferings of others, especially of children; she had no children of her own, however, but raised several belonging to other people, a son of whom watched over her with fond and anxious care through her sickness to her death, doing for her all that could be done, assisted by kind neighbors and friends.

The only child deceased was taken to Paragonah, followed by a large circle of friends, when funeral services were held. The speakers were, Bishop W. E. Jones, M. Richards, Jr., Bishop A. A. Thomas, and Durham A. Barton, all of whom spoke of the virtues and faithfulness of the respected deceased, and nothing was expressed but what was strictly in keeping with her character.

DISCOURSE

Delivered by President Joseph F. Smith, Monday, July 4th, at a Conference of the four Stakes of Zion in Arizona, held at Winslow, Apache County, Arizona.

In attempting to say a few words I desire an interest in your feelings and in your faith and prayer; for I am dependent upon the favor of the Almighty for what I shall say to you. It is very pleasing to contemplate the work of God in which we are engaged. It is worthy of our most careful thought and attention; for it not only seeks to give us, by the spirit of inspiration, a knowledge of those principles which are necessary to our salvation and exaltation in the presence of God, but it seeks, by an organization which God has revealed and established in the earth, to discipline us and to give us experience and understanding in relation to the working and binding effects of those principles. The Gospel itself is a code of laws which originated in the heavens, and which is given to men on the earth to enable them to assimilate themselves to those who are in heaven, that in the observance of the laws and principles which they are governed by we may be like unto them and become fitted to dwell with them when we shall have done with the things of time. The principles of the Gospel are not only perfect in themselves, but the organization of the Church is also perfect in itself, and the order of government which God has instituted for His people is a pattern of that which is in the heavens.

We are told in the revelations that in this Church there are two priesthoods—the Melchisedec and the Aaronic; and this Aaronic Priesthood is an appendage to the Melchisedec Priesthood, which is the first or greater, and which is after the order of the Son of God. There are numerous offices connected with these two Priesthoods, such as Apostles, Patriarchs, High Priests, Seventies, Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons. The priesthood of Melchisedec holds the presiding power and authority; and by virtue of a man possessing the keys and authority of the Melchisedec priesthood he is able to minister in all the lesser offices of these two priesthoods, because the greater always comprehends the lesser. We are also told that the office of a Bishop belongs to the lesser or Aaronic priesthood; and that whenever there are found in the Church legitimate descendants of Aaron, then the Bishops will be chosen from his seed, because this office belongs to them by right. And when a literal descendant of Aaron is found to officiate in the office of Bishop, he will do so without counselors. But he will be chosen and ordained and set apart to officiate in this office by those who hold the Melchisedec priesthood. He will not be able to seize the office by reason of his being a descendant of Aaron, any more than a person is entitled to any office in the priesthood because he is born in the Church. All persons have to be set apart and ordained to these offices and callings by those who hold the authority. So that: If there was a descendant of Aaron here whom it was thought proper to choose to fill the office of Bishop in the Church, and to sit as a common judge in the midst of the people, he would have to be called and ordained to that office, and set apart to officiate in it, by the presiding officers of the Melchisedec priesthood. The office of Bishop, or presiding officer in the lesser priesthood, is to look after and take care of the temporal affairs of the Church. Hence it becomes the duty of the Bishop to look after the gathering of the tithing of the people, and other contributions which are made for the building of temples and houses of worship, for the sending of the Gospel to the nations of the earth, for the gathering of the poor, for the maintenance of the ministry, for the support of the poor, to look after such as are in need and to minister unto them according to their necessities. But it is the duty of him who holds the High Priesthood, which is after the order of the Son of God, to preside over all the officers of the Priesthood and over all the members of the Church, when he is chosen and set apart to preside. For instance, the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is composed of three High Priests, who are chosen from the body of the High Priests, and who are sustained by all the Priesthood and members of the Church, and whose names are presented before the assembled congregations of the Saints every half year, for them to manifest their will, faith and confidence toward them as the presiding officers of the whole Church. It is their duty to preside over the Church. It is their duty to preside over the Twelve Apostles. It is their duty to preside over all the High Priests, over all the Seventies, and over all the Stakes and wards of Zion. In fact, it is their duty to preside over all the branches of the Church in every land and clime. This presiding council is set apart for this purpose, and is sustained by the voice of the people, not only in the general conference, but half yearly, but in all the Stakes of Zion, at their quarterly conference. The presiding authorities of the Church are presented before the people that they may sustain or reject them, as they see fit.

The Twelve Apostles are a traveling High Council, called and appointed to officiate in the ministry and in the preaching of the Gospel of Christ in all the nations of the earth, as well as in the Stakes of Zion, under the direction of the Presidency of the Church. The Seventies are quorums each of Seventy Elders, who are chosen and ordained for the purpose of assisting the Twelve Apostles to carry the Gospel to the nations of the earth, wherever the Apostles have not power or time to carry it themselves. They are, therefore, auxiliary Elders, chosen to be assistants of the Twelve Apostles in spreading the Gospel, that Gospel may be preached to the people, that they may understand the truth as it is in Christ Jesus, and that they may grow up in the knowledge of God and in an understanding of those principles which are calculated to save them, as Brother George Reynolds, one of the First Seven Presidents of the Seventies, has been preaching the first principles of the Gospel to us here this afternoon. These are all general authorities of the Church, and it is their duty to labor for the welfare of Zion everywhere, wherever they are called and appointed by their presiding officers to go.

Then we come to an organization which we call a Stake. This meeting is a gathering of Latter-day Saints who are members of four separate Stakes of Zion, located in Arizona. We have here the presidents of these four Stakes, with their counselors, and a number of the Bishops and other officers. We have come here to hold a conference, to teach and be taught, and to rejoice together in the truth. We have come to be taught in relation to our duties as Presidents of Stakes, as Counselors, as High Counsellors, as Bishops, etc.

The organization of a Stake is a perfect pattern of the general organization of the Church. As God organized the whole Church with three presiding High Priests and with twelve presiding High Councilors, or a travelling High Council, so we have three High Priests to preside over a Stake, and twelve High Councilors to sit with them in judgment on matters which may be appealed to them from the Bishop's court, or may come before them originally. The Bishops are appointed to preside over wards in a Stake. A Bishop presides over one ward. He has no jurisdiction over another ward. He cannot go into another ward and act there as a Bishop, because he is not set apart for that purpose. He has been appointed Bishop over a certain ward. There he has authority to preside. But his jurisdiction and his authority do not extend any farther. So with the President of a Stake. The President of the Snowflake Stake of Zion has authority in the Snowflake Stake, but he has no authority in any other Stake. Where he is set apart to preside, with his counselors, there he has jurisdiction, according to the rights and powers which pertain to his presidency. Now, as the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints presides over the Twelve, over the Presidents of Stakes and over the Bishops of wards, through all the lengths and breadths of Zion and throughout all the world, so the Presidency of a Stake presides over the Bishops in the Stake, and over the High Councilors, and over the High Priests, and over the Elders; and over all the people within the borders of the Stake, to the same extent precisely, in their sphere and calling, as the First Presidency over the Church. The presiding authority of a Stake is independent of that of all other Stakes, but is not independent of the presiding authority of the Church; notwithstanding the organization of a Stake is as perfect and complete as the organization of the entire Church, yet it would not be complete if it were not inseparably connected with the presiding authority of the Church. So, also, a Bishop cannot act independently of the presiding authority of the Stake. He is amenable to that authority in all things. He is responsible, in the discharge of his duties, to the presiding officers of the stake in which he is Bishop. He is not independent of him either in the management of his spiritual affairs or his temporal affairs. He is amenable to the presiding authority of that Stake as that presiding authority is amenable to the presiding authority of the Church. When the Presidency of a Stake counsel a Bishop with regard to temporal affairs, the Bishop should understand that it is their right to look into his affairs as a Bishop, to scrutinize his acts as such, and to investigate everything that he does as Bishop. They not only have the right to do this, but it is their duty to do it, as much as it is the duty of the general presiding authorities of the Church to look into the actions and conduct of the presiding authorities of the Stake, and the presiding authorities of the Stake have no right to question their authority to do this; neither has the Bishop any right to question the authority of the Presidency of the Stake to inquire into his affairs and to look after his doings and see that they are right. A Bishop should feel proud to acknowledge the right of the Presidency of the Stake to enquire into his official acts, and not only that, he should feel proud that he has someone to rely upon, to ask counsel of, and to see that he does not go wrong. Now, as we have no literal descendants of Aaron in the Church, we have no Bishops acting without counselors. But as we are informed that a man who holds the office of a High Priest has authority to officiate in the lesser offices of the Priesthood, it is proper to choose a High Priest, or to choose an Elder and ordain him a High Priest, and ordain and set him apart to act as a Bishop in the Church, by reason of his authority as a High Priest; and he chooses two Counselors, and they act together as common judges, or as a common court, in the midst of Zion, to sit in judgment upon difficulties between brethren, and to judge between brethren with regard to their moral and religious duties, and to see that all wrongs are put right. Not only so, but it is their duty to look after the poor, and see that they are fed and clothed; to look after the fatherless, and see that they are provided for; to gather the tithings of the people, and to take care of those tithings, and to hold them subject to the orders of the Presiding Bishopric, or of him who presides over the Presiding Bishopric—the President of the Church. For remember, while we have two authorities apparently running along laterally in the Church, it must not be lost sight of that the greater always presides over the lesser, so that although the Presiding Bishopric has great authority in the Church, and is entrusted with the management of the temporal affairs of the Church, controlling the Bishops with regard to these matters, still the Presiding Bishopric is controlled by the Presidency of the Church, as are all the other Bishops. So it is in a Stake of Zion. The Bishops who are entrusted with the gathering of the tithings of the people and holding them subject to the orders of the Presiding Bishopric or the presiding authority of the Church, do so under the supervision and counsel of the Presidency of the Stake in which they live. I want the Bishops to understand that it is the duty of the Presidents of Stakes to look after them, to see that they are doing their duty, that their tithing hayricks and their wheat bins just right, so that the hay and wheat will not be wasted. They are placed to preside over you and to counsel you in regard to the management of your bishopric. When Bishops try a case, there may be an appeal from their judgment to the Presidency of the Stake and the High Council. They hold a supervisory power over your decisions, and they can reverse them if they see proper, or they can sustain them.

Thus you will find the order of the Priesthood that God has established, from the Deacons unto the presiding authority in the Church; all working in harmony one with the other; no clashing, no contention, but each one acting in his own place; each one's duty defined; and if each one will keep in his own sphere and attend to his own duty, there will be no trouble and no difficulty with regard to the rights of priesthood or presidency. I have heard in my time of Bishops who felt that they were only amenable to the presiding Bishopric. If there is any Bishop here that is possessed of that erroneous idea, I want him to become dispossessed of it. Remember that you are subject to the counsel, direction and supervision of the Presidency of your Stake. And the Presidency of your Stake is amenable to the presiding authorities of the whole Church. We want you Bishops to say to the presiding authorities in your Stake: "We have so and so (describing the articles) on hand here. We have received so much. Here are the books containing our accounts, and they are all open to you, and we invite you to come and look after us and see that we attend to our duties right, and help us keep things straight if you can."—for sometimes it is very difficult for Bishops to keep things straight; in fact, it is sometimes very difficult for men to keep themselves straight. Here is where the trouble lies. If you will show me a man who is really capable of keeping himself straight in every particular, I will show you a man, if he is a Bishop, that will be able to keep himself straight as a Bishop, and he will keep his Bishopric pretty straight too. So with the President of a Stake, and with a High Councilor, etc. But if you find a man that is not capable of keeping himself straight, then it is difficult indeed for him to keep his public affairs straight.

Brethren and sisters, I felt like referring briefly to this subject. A great deal may be said in relation to the authority and rights of the priesthood. It is the grand principle of government and of organization, by which the energies and forces of the people of God in all ages have been and will be directed. It is that principle by which God Almighty governs throughout all His universe. It is the principle by which the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is governed, and by which the people, as individuals, should be guided and controlled in all their religious duties. It is a principle that must be honored by the members of the Church, because no man can magnify his calling as a member of this Church who does not feel in his soul to honor and respect the Priesthood which is held by his brethren. It is true our brethren are not perfect. None of us are perfect. But the Priesthood that we hold is perfect, because it is of God. It is the authority which God has revealed and restored to the children of men for their government and guidance in the building up of Zion and in the proclamation of the Gospel to the nations of the earth, until every son and daughter of Adam shall have the privilege of hearing the sound of the Gospel, and of being brought to the knowledge of the truth, not only upon this earth, but in the spirit world. The millions and millions that have lived upon this earth and have passed away without the knowledge of the Gospel here, will have to be taught them there, by virtue of the authority of this holy priesthood that you and I hold. The Church of God will be organized among them by the authority of this priesthood; and all that is or will be done for the salvation of the human family in this world or in the spirit world, will be done by virtue of the sacred and holy authority, in the name of Jesus Christ. However imperfect they may be, men have been clothed with this authority, by which they can speak and act in the name of the Father and the Son, and God is bound, if they speak by His spirit in the discharge of their duties as His servants, to respect and fulfill that which they say, because they speak by the authority that He has given. We are in this position, and when we bless, the blessing will follow. Of course, all things must be done in righteousness. No man can do anything in unrighteousness that God is bound to respect. But when a man who holds the Priesthood does that which is righteous, God is bound to acknowledge it as though He had done it Himself. Therefore it is wrong for a Bishop to get the idea that the President of the Stake has no authority to counsel him or to keep a supervision over him. The moment he gets that idea he begins to disregard the authority of the Priesthood which is set to preside over him, and to interrupt and interfere with the progress of the cause and the rights of the Priesthood of the Son of God. The same may be said of every individual who in any manner disrespects or dishonors those who preside over him. Let us suppose a case. Here is a brother who has fallen into the habit of getting drunk, and by that course is debasing himself. The Bishop, or some other officer of the Church goes to that man and says: "Here, we cannot put up with your drinking, or your carousing, or your setting an evil example before the Church, and we call you to an account before the Lord for your conduct; we say to you that you must reform in these particulars or we will be under the necessity of withdrawing from you the hand of fellowship." "Why," says the man, "you are interfering with my agency. Am I not a free man? Cannot I do as I please with myself?" Ob, yes, you can, perhaps, under other circumstances, but not as a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. When a member of this Church thinks or feels that his free agency will give him the license to lie, to steal, to curse and swear, to get drunk and to blaspheme the name of God, he is mistaken. He has no such privilege as a member of this Church; and it is the right of the presiding authorities to see to it that he shall be dealt with for his fellowship, and if he does not repent, that he be excommunicated from the Church and cast out to the buffetings of Satan, that he may go his own road and have the freedom of that agency which he claims. When you embrace this Gospel you enter into a covenant before God that you will cease from wickedness, from lying, stealing, swearing and blaspheming the name of Deity; you make a covenant that you will not commit adultery, nor any other crime; that you will have faith in the Father and the Son, that you will love your neighbor, be honorable, virtuous and honest in the midst of the children of men; and while you are under that covenant and maintain a membership in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, your presiding officer has a right to look after you, to counsel you, and to admonish you when you do that which is contrary to your profession. It is his duty to do this, and he neglects his duty when he does not do it, and will be held responsible by the Lord for that neglect.

Now, there is a way to reach every wrong. If the President of a Stake does wrong, or the President of the Church does wrong, the right way to rectify it is not to go about among the people, who are, perhaps, not capable of judging, not knowing all the circumstances, and try to smelter their minds against him. That is wrong, that is rebellion, and will lead to confusion and to the rejection of the truth by those who do this. If a presiding officer does wrong let a complaint be laid, if this be necessary, before his superior officers in the Church, and let the complainant state his case, bring forth his proofs, and show that his presiding officer is doing that which is not becoming to him in the position in which he is sustained, and his presiding officers will see to it that he either reform or is removed. It is not proper, but entirely wrong, for a member of the Church to undertake to supervise the presiding authorities of the Church and to set them right upon his own volition. He cannot do it, and it will lead to apostasy in many men who takes that course, if he follows it up long enough.

God bless you, my brethren and sisters, in the name of Jesus. Amen.

STAKE CONFERENCES.

SANPETE.

The regular quarterly Conference of the Sanpete Stake of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was held in Mount Pleasant on the 18th and 19th of August, 1892, according to previous appointment. Counselor Henry Beal presiding. Owing to his ill health and death in his family, President Peterson was unable to attend. At the opening of conference there were present, President Fieldstead, of the Presidency of the Seventies; Counselors Henry and John B. Maiben of the Stake Presidency and several members of the High Council. The Bishops of the several wards were mostly represented. There was a large attendance of Saints, especially on Sunday, when the spacious bowery was filled to overflowing. On Sunday, Apostle Lund was in attendance. The usual conference business was attended to—bishops reports of wards, statistical and Sunday school reports, presentation of General and Stake authorities, who were all sustained by unanimous vote. The names of two brethren were presented and sustained to be ordained High Priests. The organizations of the several quorums were considered complete and satisfactory and in working order.

The speakers during conference were Counselors Beal and Maiben, President Fieldstead, Elder C. H. Wheelock and Apostle A. H. Lund. The general duties of the Saints were the subjects treated, together with such themes as education, and gratitude to God for his many blessings we enjoy.

Four regular meetings were held and on Thursday evening there was a Priesthood meeting. Conference adjourned for three months, to meet at Moroni.

GEORGE TAYLOR,
Clerk of Conference.

MORGAN.

The quarterly conference of Morgan Stake convened Sunday and Monday, the 14th and 15th insts. The proceedings opened Sunday morning at 10:30, President Smith presiding.

Elder John H. Gibby, who had lately returned from a foreign mission, was the first speaker. He spoke of the temporal and spiritual conditions of mankind, and compared those of the Latter-day Saints with those of the world.

He was followed by Elder Mark Lindsay, of Weber. The speakers in the afternoon were Elders Orson Porter and B. H. Roberts.

Elder Porter who had just returned from a mission to the Northern States, was the first speaker. He gave an interesting account of his labors and experiences while in the ministry and advised the young men to educate themselves in the principles of the Gospel, so that they might present them properly before the world. He was followed by Elder Roberts, who delivered an interesting discourse on the history of the people of God, both ancient and modern, showing that whenever this class of people had planted colonies the earth had been made to yield in abundance the necessities of life and the land had been turned from a barren desert into beautiful cities, farms, orchards and gardens. The speaker showed very plainly that righteousness is very material to our temporal prosperity.

The time on Monday was occupied by discourses from the Stake Presidency and High Council, the reading of the Stake statistical report and the report of the superintendent of Sabbath schools. Many important subjects were treated upon by the brethren and much valuable counsel given during the conference.

On Sunday evening Elder Roberts delivered a lecture under the auspices of the Seventies' quorum. The subject was, The Duties, Labors and Experiences of the Elders while in the Ministry. The lecture was well attended and highly appreciated.

ALONZO FRANKS,
Stake Clerk.

MORGAN, Aug. 16, 1892.

SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

Elder George Reynold's has kindly presented the Sunday Schools of this Stake of Zion with a copy each of the "Dictionary of the Book of Mormon." Sunday School superintendents can obtain them by sending, or calling, at the Fifteenth Ward store, 340 W. First South street, Salt Lake City.

HENRY BURNHAM, who calls himself Henry Barry, a one-armed temperance lecturer, was to have lectured on temperance at Fair Haven, Conn., the other evening. But at the time he was to have spoken he was "arrested in an intoxicated condition and sentenced to thirty days." He complied in his own proper person both the lecturer and the awful example.

THE EIGHT HOURS BILL

MAYOR BASKIN has vetoed the eight-hour labor bill. This has occasioned some excitement in labor circles. It has exposed the Mayor to much criticism. It is very easy to arouse sympathy for "the poor working man," and to call everything oppression which appears to be opposed to his interests or his demands. We are not among the great admirers of Mayor Baskin, but we do not think it right to join in any unreasonable attacks upon him, nor to find fault when he performs what he believes to be his duty. We therefore ask the public, including the working people who think the Mayor has done wrong, to carefully examine the bill and the veto before they condemn the course he has taken. The bill has been published before but we reproduce it here for reference:

"A bill for an ordinance making eight hours a legal day's work on public contract work.

"Section 1. Be it ordained by the City Council of Salt Lake City, Territory of Utah, that in all contracts made by the City of Salt Lake for the erection of buildings or repairs on public buildings, bridges, viaducts, street paving or grading, and all work on water works or sewerage, there shall be incorporated the express agreement between said city and contractor or contractors that the said contractor or contractors shall not require or permit any employee or laborer between the hours of 6 a. m. and 6 p. m. each day to work more than eight hours upon any such building, bridge, or viaduct, or street, or other public work, and that the said eight hours shall be a full and legal day's work; the provisions of this section shall not apply to work required under said contract to be done at the factory, foundry or shops of the contractor or contractors, but shall apply only when employees or laborers are engaged directly at work upon the premises where such public work is being constructed.

Sec. 2. Any such contract shall also provide that in the event of any contractor or contractors violating the provisions of said contract, that he or they shall forfeit $100 to the City of Salt Lake, Territory of Utah, for each and every day that he or they shall violate the provisions of said contract.

This ordinance shall be in force from and after its approval.

The text of the veto will be found in our report of the City Council proceedings. It will be seen that the Mayor is not opposed to the eight-hour system, so far as it makes eight hours "a full and legal day's work." But he does not think it proper by arbitrary legislation to interfere with the natural right of a workman to labor more than eight hours if he wishes to do so, nor of a contractor to engage men to work extra time if he wishes or it becomes necessary. Further, the Mayor objects to limiting work to eight hours in the day and leaving it unlimited as to time in the night.

Now, what is there in all this that is unsound in law or reason, or unjust to the workman or the employer? If the city should ordain that eight hours shall be counted as a full day's work entitled to a full day's pay, making proper provision as to night work also, would not that be all-sufficient? Is it necessary to prevent any man from laboring longer than eight hours if he desires to do so and can get the work? If a contractor is under obligations to finish a job by a certain time and he finds it necessary to engage his workmen over time, would it be right to fine him a hundred dollars or punish him in any way for doing so? We do not believe that any such restriction and penalty would be good law, even if the ordinance had been signed by the Mayor, for, as he says, it would deprive men of "a natural right" and laws are made to protect and secure, not destroy such rights.

We are in sympathy with the eight-hour labor movement. We have been for many years in favor of the theory that eight hours for work, eight hours for sleep and eight hours for improvement and recreation, make a fair division of the day of twenty-four hours. If the law was so framed that eight hours should be a legal day's work entitled to a full day's pay on all public works, we think that would be a good thing. But we do not believe in such legal restrictions as would destroy liberty or interfere with the freedom of the laborer or the employer. Nor do we consider any enactment sound in law or in principle which intrudes upon any natural right.

Working people may combine and pledge themselves of their own free will not to work longer than eight hours in a day. But they have no right to say that other persons, who do not choose so to bind themselves, shall conform to this limit. Any attempt to compel others to do so is tyranny and should be resisted just as much as the oppression of employers. The tyranny of labor combinations ought to be fought by working men as well as the tyranny of capital. Men of independence should be careful not to barter their individual liberty for a deceptive mess of pottage.

The great troubles that are coming upon this nation will have their source in the lawlessness of labor combinations and their disregard of individual rights on the one hand, and the grasping heartlessness of moneyed corporations on the other. It is not always the necessities and sufferings of working people, or the injustice and oppression of their employers, that are the occasion of strikes. It is too often a disposition to take advantage of an opportunity to demand higher compensation for labor, regardless of any question of equity or justice. And that usually originates with crafty men who do no manual labor, but manipulate the organizations to which laborers surrender themselves.

There is no doubt that labor has gained advantages by union effort.

Organization is necessary to the amelioration of working people. They have a right to combine and it is good policy to do so. While capital and labor continue to hold their relative positions of antagonism, a contest for the promotion of labor interests and for resisting the encroachment of capital will be needful. But the danger in them is in that tyranny which always grows in a mob than in a person or a government, and in that disposition to effect by force what cannot be accomplished by reason.

The liberties of mankind are of paramount importance. They must be preserved at any cost. They must not be trampled upon under any pretence. Labor associations have no more right to say that men who do not belong to them shall not work for a certain price or a given time, than capitalists have to say they shall do so. Governments have not the right to limit men's liberties in this respect. Municipalities go beyond their powers when they attempt it.

Mayor Baskin is right in his reasoning, and, in our opinion, has done his duty in vetoing the bill under consideration. And no matter how much some demagogues may denounce his act, we do not believe there is a thinking workman in this city who studies the situation and the bill but will say in his heart, the veto is right, after all.

STORAGE-BATTERY STREET CARS.

Says the New York World on this subject:

"The storage-battery system has been recognized from the first as the ideal method of utilizing electric power in crowded cities. Attempts to apply it, however, have not been successful, for mechanical or commercial reasons.

"The system has been developed at Milford, Mass., and is now in operation. The bucking of planes in the batteries which has hitherto been the most serious mechanical difficulty, is rendered impossible. The escape of force in wasteful ways is prevented. The weight of cars, when equipped with power enough for a run of fifty miles, is less than that of trolley cars. The crippling of the machinery by suddenly excessive currents—a danger unavoidable on trolley lines—is impossible here.

"The cars at Milford climb a grade of 8½ per cent. and make sharp curves without difficulty. In going down grades the resistance needs only to check speed is applied not was fully by brakes, but by a dynamic device which utilizes the force of the descent in the development of electricity and reinforces the battery with new power. In one experiment it has been found that 17 per cent. of the power for the trip has been resupplied in this way."

GILDED VICE.

EVERY possible effort is being put forth in this once sober city to clothe vice with the habiliments of respectability, that it may be more alluring. One of the devices used for this purpose is to equip drinking dens with gilded splendor, that outward show may serve to cause men with shallow brains to lose sight of the danger of indulging in intoxicants.

A new drinking establishment exhibiting novel ingenuity. It occupied yeaterday a page of a local newspaper in which to describe its attractions. This, of itself, was not unusual, but it was coupled with an invitation to the people of the whole city—"men, women and children"—to visit the premises and view the attractive ornaments, embellishments and fittings.

What would be the natural effect produced upon children by visiting a place of that kind? To take away any feeling of repugnance they may heretofore have entertained towards it. This would be a mental step toward future indulgence in drink. A visit of women and children to such an establishment is a species of patronage. It is a recognition of a traffic which has led millions of men and women to degradation and ruin. We do not think that the ladies can afford to give the slightest support, moral or otherwise, to such a business, which is gaining a strong foothold here, having been fostered and pampered during the last two years and a half, until its influence is an incubus.

With regard to the illegal Sunday liquor traffic, Chief of Police Paul is reported by a local paper as stating that all the drinking shops were closed yesterday. If the head of the police department made any such assertion he stated that which is not true, for a number of saloons were running yesterday (Sunday), as they have been ever since the "Liberals" assumed control of the city.

Drunkennes and its attendant evils are increasing.

DECREASE IN FAMILIES.

THE decrease in American families has been a subject of much regret among those who desire the welfare of this country. We do not know that the alleged facts concerning it have ever been seriously disputed. The Popular Science Monthly for August contains some lessons from the census, by Carroll D. Wright, which will effectually set at rest any controversy on the subject. According to his citations it appears that in 1850 the average family consisted of 5.55 persons. From this there has been a gradual decrease, it being in 1860 5.28, in 1870 5.09, in 1880 5.04, and in 1890 4.94.

Looking at the different geographical divisions, it is found that this rule holds true except in the Western division, where the average size of the family has risen from 4.18 in 1850 to 4.88 in 1890, the increase having been steady through the intermediate decades. This result would have been expected, of course, on account of the settlement of the West in the last few years, the population having increased rapidly and being more and more brought to the family basis, instead of that of single individuals or young families settling in Western Territories.

The small average size of the family in Oklahoma, now a Territory just opened for settlement, shows the influence of new settlements upon the size of the family. In Oklahoma the size of the family will increase until population becomes fairly dense, when it will follow the rule of older communities and decrease. When population becomes more or less urban in character the maximum is reached, and after that a constantly receding average will probably be shown at each succeeding census.

It is to be hoped that with the prevalent copying of the fashions and manners of the East, this community will not imitate the spirit of those "refined" and "cultured" ladies of "society" who think it indelicate and "in bad form" to bring forth a number of children. This disposition is a sign of the decadence of any people where it exists. It is a mark of licentiousness and godlessness. It rebels against nature and sin against Deity. It involves practices that are abhorrent to every true womanly sentiment, in violation of human law and Divine commandment, and will surely bring its penalties, not only upon the community where it is countenanced but upon the individuals who are personally guilty.

The maternal instinct which is strong in every true and loving woman is God-implanted, and 'tis woe to that man or woman and to that nation or people that seeks to root it up or cause it to wither and die.

THE BONDS ELECTION.

THE election of county bonds appears to be decided in the negative. We are not at all surprised. There seems to have been but little interest in the matter. This apathy was not confined to any particular class or party. Nobody had any enthusiasm over the proposition of the County Court.

The city and county building is going up and money will have to be raised to pay for it, that is one of the certainties. But as regards the poor house and farm, the majority of the people appeared to be of the opinion that the present grounds and buildings are ample just now, and that it will be time enough to enlarge when there are more indigent to take care of and the site now used can be disposed of. Other projected improvements are not immediately pressing and can wait awhile without serious detriment. That is the popular sentiment.

It is folly to try and make sectional feeling out of this defeat of the bonds. If the "Liberal" faction wanted them why did they not vote for them? What prominent "Liberal" outside of the County Court, advocated them? What prominent member of any party or class pronounced against them? The truth is, the proposition fell flat upon the community and appeared to be out of season. That is all there is of it, and it is petty meanness to try to attach any other meaning to the result.

COMPARATIVE CRIMINALITY OF THE SEXES.

THERE may be reasons other than that women are generally better than men, why there are so many more male than female convicts in this and other civilized countries. But prison statistics speak very strongly in favor of "the weaker sex." It may be that woman's comparative weakness has something to do with the fact that, as a rule, she is not nearly so criminal as man. She is also usually under stronger social restraints, and her whole life is more guarded than that of the male from childhood's earliest hours.

However, the jail records of the world tell a story that cannot be denied, and until something more definite than is now argued can be said to the contrary, we shall hold that those figures favor the theory of woman's moral superiority to man.

In 1890 there were under sentence for criminal homicide 6958 males in the prisons of the United States, and 383 females. That is, the male criminals in this high grade of offenses were seventeen times more numerous than the female criminals. For other statutory offenses there were 75,924 male criminals, and 6405 female offenders. That is, over eleven males to one female.

But the United States record is not peculiar in this respect. It appears that in the chief countries of Europe the proportions of criminals considered by sexes are as follows: France and England, 100 men to 20 women; Germany, 100 men to 18 women; Austria, 100 men to 14.8 women. In the United States it is 100 men to 8.4 women. Of course the American women are vastly more free from crime than are those of Europe because our women are generally the subjects of kind treatment and special care than in Europe. Moreover, there is far less poverty in this country, and poverty is a powerful incentive to crime.

It is true that when women break loose from the restrictions that surround their sex, they often go to greater extremes of evil than men. An abandoned woman is usually worse than an abandoned man. The women of the French revolution were fiercer in their demand for blood than the fiercest sans culottes of the Faubourgs. The women were crueler than the men strikers at Homestead. A woman poisoner has generally more venom in her heart than a male murderer. But this only argues that she goes to the other extreme of her character, and helps the argument that normally she is less immoral than man.

It is thought that the tendencies of modern times will result in changing the relative statistics as to crime in the two sexes. That as women are brought more and more upon the same social, industrial and political plane as men, they will become more proportionally criminal. This, however, is a mere speculation and springs, in our opinion, from the prejudice that prevails as to woman's full liberty.

Up to the present, statistics do not justify any such conclusion, and we believe that the future figures of history will rather go to show that, with woman's emancipation from the bondage of the past, there will be further evidence of her general moral superiority to man.

Most people have two kinds of manners. One they use in the kitchen and the other is saved for parlor use. You never know a man until you know his kitchen manners. One reason that marriage brings out so many unpleasant surprises is that the court-ship was based on the parlor manners.

A ROYAL PROCLAMATION.

WE find the following singular document in the Samos Times of June 25th, which is published partly in English and partly in Samoan. It needs no explanation but shows how far Kingly authority extends in the islands of the Southern seas:

"WHEREAS through an ERROR in reckoning the people of these Islands have hitherto been using the WRONG DAY and DATE as judged by OUR TRUE POSITION in LONGITUDE NOW THEREFORE TO RECTIFY THIS ERROR, and in accordance with the expressed desire of the Municipal Council of Apia and my Government, it is hereby proclaimed and ordered that TUESDAY the 5th of JULY NEXT by present reckoning shall be called MONDAY the 4th of JULY, and the days and dates in the future shall be reckoned in succession from that day. That is, there shall be two days next week called MONDAY the 4th of JULY. MALIETOA, King of Samoa.

THE SAN FRANCISCO & SALT LAKE RAILWAY.

IN relation to the projected railroad between this city and the Pacific Coast the San Francisco Chronicle has the following:

"The San Francisco and Great Salt Lake Railway is still undergoing the incubating process. The details of the plans of procedure are still being considered, and the stock subscriptions are yet to be raised as well as being solicited privately. When the promoters are ready there will be a grand announcement and everything will be revealed. The prospectus of the road will be issued, subscription books opened to the public and the plans made known, all at once. This may happen in one week and it may be delayed two or three weeks. The present delay is mainly due to the fact that some expected large subscriptions of stock are awaiting either the return of capitalists whose names are wanted or the making up of their minds about it. Then the prospectus may suffer a few minor changes.

"It has been the idea from the start to go before the public with a large list of subscriptions by rich citizens as a starter, and it is intimated that this starter will be surprisingly large both in its total amount and in the size of some of the subscriptions by local and it may be delayed two or three weeks. The present delay is mainly due to the fact that some expected large subscriptions of stock are awaiting either the return of capitalists whose names are wanted or the making up of their minds about it. Then the prospectus may suffer a few minor changes.

"The judgment of the leaders in the enterprise has differed much on some points. One of these is the minimum amount of stock subscriptions with which the company can go to the money market with its bonds. Some say that $1,125,000 will be sufficient, and the judgments of the others range upward to $5,000,000 as the least backing that would secure for the bonds any favorable consideration and a fair price. It is expected that many of the bonds will be sold in this city and State. Opinion was also divided on the question of whether the through road or local competing lines should receive first consideration. This question has been decided in favor of building the through line first. Altogether the present situation is very encouraging."

A SIGNIFICANT INCIDENT.

THE burning in effigy, by two hundred soldiers of the National guard, of Col. Stretor and General Snowden is a sad commentary on the discipline of the military. The number of men who engaged in perpetrating this gross affront upon two leading officers, shows that the disposition toward insubordination is widespread. That the details could have been perfected within the barracks and the act accomplished, without interference, a short distance from the military quarters is significant in the same line. But more striking still was the inscription placed on the breast of each of the dummies—"Death to all Tyrants." It may be added to this that it is questionable whether public opinion will to any extent condemn this act of insubordination, because it was performed in consequence of an occurrence connected with which the popular feeling has been powerfully aroused against the insulted officers—the barbarous treatment of private fams. All the circumstances show that it is somewhat doubtful as to whether the military could be implicitly relied upon in case of an extensive popular uprising, which, judging from the drift of affairs in general, is not a very remote possibility. "Death to all tyrants" means—It means anything—that officers whose methods are, in the estimation of subordinates, flagrantly distasteful might, under some circumstances, be short-lived. In fact, there appears to be a species of looseness all around in affairs in general that is not conducive to the social and political welfare of the country.

NEARLY A SLAUGHTERING BEE.

WE, in this country, can beat the world in political novelties. One incident of a striking character in this line is described in a dispatch from Houston, Texas. The occasion was the Democratic State Convention. The party is split into two factions. Those belonging to one are followers of a man named Hogg, and those connected with the other are attached to a prominent individual whose name is Clark.

The initiatory proceedings of electing a chairman caused a rupture. Pistols and knives were drawn and flourished, and for a time Bedlam reigned supreme. Fortunately both parties simultaneously divided, the Hogs occupying one half of the stand and hall and the other animals the remaining half. Each opened a separate convention, and after transacting some preliminary business, adjourned.

It is to be hoped the occasion will pass over without the place of assembling being turned into a slaughter house, a situation which came very near being precipitated yesterday. We submit that such scenes are not of a nature to elevate the plane of American politics. Where are we drifting to, anyhow?

OUR DELEGATE.

HON. JOHN T. CAINE, as announced in our columns last evening, has returned from Washington, having remained at his post until after the close of the late session of Congress. He will take a much-needed rest that he may be prepared for the duties of next winter. Our Delegate has won for himself the respect and esteem of all classes and parties in this Territory, and of all who have had the honor of his acquaintance during his official life. The only detractors he has had are persons whose chronic disposition is to falsify everybody and everything that does not conform to their interests and desires, and their denunciation does not count. We noticed in the Salt Lake Times, a few evenings ago, a pleasant and just tribute to the unceasing labors of Mr. Caine in behalf of his constituents, irrespective of creed or party, who needed his aid at the national capital. We know that the gentleman has had at heart the good of the Territory and that he has been indefatigable in his labors for the people of Utah, whether in public affairs or in personal matters in which he could aid them in the various Departments. He is honored by his Congressional associates, and has the confidence of the people whom he has represented with unflinching fidelity so long, and in their behalf we bid him welcome home, and hope he will thoroughly enjoy this respite from his labors.

ASSISTANTS TO CHOLERA.

CHOLERA talk is indulged in all over the civilized world. It has been stated here that the natural conditions of this region bar entrance to the terror-inspiring plague. Of course, everybody hopes that Providence has been thus lavish to this part of the world in the exercise of its protective power. But reliance upon such immunity ought not to be such as to cause an avoidance of common precautions. One fact is clear enough; should the cholera take a notion in its wanderings over the earth to visit this city it will find a valuable auxiliary in the prosecution of its deadly work. We have reference to those sections of sewer pipes which are not adequately flushed. We have already directed attention to the horrible effluvia emitted from the manholes connected with the sections of the system referred to. Unless some more thorough means is taken to flush the pipes where obstructions occur, these manholes are liable to become, during the prevailing hot weather, disease-breeding nuisances. It is not sufficient that the sewers in question should be cleaned by hydrant and hose applications merely when the manholes throw out a corruption signal in the shape of an insufferable stench. The process ought to be applied daily. That is the only present means of keeping the surrounding atmosphere thinned down. There must be no official indifference on this point. The subject is too serious to be trifled with.

THE People's party opened its first State convention in Idaho at Armory Hall in Boise City on the 15th inst.

LOCAL SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

RESIGNATIONS seem to be the rage. Not only in the County Court and the City Council are officers resigning, but the "Liberal" faction is being shaken up by retirements and the gravitation of its most sensible men to their political places of affinity. These are all signs of the times, and further proofs of "changed conditions."

One of the most significant of these movements is the resignation of Boss Powers, followed by the declination of Allen G. Campbell to be his successor as chief of the city "Liberal" committee.

Signs of defection may be seen all along the line. They are good signs. The continuance of the "Liberal" movement means only the perpetuation of strife that ought to be buried over issues that are dead. And there are very few reflecting persons who see in the survival of that faction, anything higher than a desire on the part of certain schemers to obtain or retain office or public employment, and a hatred on the part of others to the majority of the people and their religious institutions.

We notice that while sliding out of a position from which all the possible honors have been drawn, and throwing away the peel of the orange from which all the probable juice has been sucked, the Chief of the Tascoraras is figuring for the future in the way of club manoeuvres and organizations, with a view of sliding into association with expected Democratic advantage. He is a wily and open-eyed schemer, and commands a certain degree of attention and admiration for his persistence, activity and irrepressible assurance. "Liberalism" is on its last legs, and he is making preparations for the inevitable collapse.

UNITED LABOR AND THE NATIONAL GUARD.

The following dispatch is small but significant:

"WINCHESTER, Pa., Aug. 13.—The State Federation of Labor today passed a resolution recommending all union men to refrain from enlisting in the National Guard and all enlisted men to withdraw."

The resolution referred to suggests the possibilities of trades organizations.

The National Guard is not what its name implies, being a local organization. Its object is to provide for local, and not national, protection and defense. It is deemed essential to the preservation of tranquility, but is perhaps of doubtful potentiality for that purpose. Being a popular organization, it is naturally composed of people who belong to the masses—the bone and sinew of the commonwealth. In cases of popular uprisings its efficacy for the maintenance of order would be doubtful. This can be seen at a glance when the fact is considered that the ranks must necessarily be largely composed of members of trades unions. In case of a conflict connected with labor disputes it would be hardly reasonable to expect men to fight their fellow union members, even if the latter were seeking to carry their point by violent methods.

The resolution will doubtless be effective in preventing the enlistment into the national guard of union men, and will cause numbers of others now connected with the organization to leave it. The consequent elimination from the ranks, while weakening its power for other purposes, will not have that effect in the matter of service in labor conflicts, as it will thus be freed of much of the disaffection existing in it.

We are exceedingly doubtful with regard to the efficiency of the Guard as it exists. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction in the ranks in the State of New York at present. Unless promises to provide better food and accommodation are soon complied with, an early revolt will not be surprising. We imagine, however, that the soldiers at the scene of the railroad troubles does not altogether arise from the absence of suitable food and shelter, but also from the fact that their situation is distasteful to them.

The power of the Federation of Labor over its members is very great. Its potency is exhibited by the uniform respect paid to its decrees in relation to strikes. It would be easy, if deemed necessary, for the Federation to substitute the request in relation to the National Guard by the issuance of an unqualified order.

SHORTENING THE TRANS-ATLANTIC PASSAGE.

A dispatch from Quebec to the Boston Herald says:

"The shortening of trans-Atlantic ocean passage to a three days' voyage is the inducement now held out to the Canadian government by the promoters of the new Labrador railway scheme. The proposal involves the establishment of an ocean steamship port at Port Marnham, which is situated on the St. Lewis inlet, about 80 miles north of the straits of Belle Isle. It is claimed that the short crossing between Port Marnham and Milford Haven in Wales could easily be made in 72 hours by the greyhounds now running between New York and Liverpool."

"Port Marnham is described as a magnificent harbor, almost entirely land-locked, and open for navigation seven to eight months in the year. It is claimed by the author of the scheme that during the season of navigation almost all the mails between Europe and America, as well as the bulk of the passenger trade, would follow the shortest existing route. Public interest in the scheme has been awakened in Canada by the publication of the report of a survey for a line of railway from Quebec to Labrador, which for its entire length is practically level. The entire length of the route so explored is not more than 850 miles, and the work of constructing it need not occupy more than 18 months, while its average cost a mile would be but little more than that of the Canadian Pacific railway where it traverses the level plateau of the Canadian northwest. The company for which the survey has been made, has been formed in London, and includes a fair sprinkling of Canadian politicians, and the announcement is made that the company is prepared to proceed with the undertaking, "provided Canadians join them in their efforts to open a route which will revolutionize American trade, and especially that of Canada." The westward connections of the projected line would be more easily controlled by the Northern Pacific people than by anybody else, and railroad men are now asking if it is with this object in view that Mr. McNaught of that corporation and his friend, John C. Eno, and others connected with them, have secured a controlling interest in charters and existing lines of railway running westward towards the great lakes from a point on the line of the Quebec and Lake St. John railway.

LATEST OUTBREAK IN TENNESSEE.

FOR the benefit of those who have not closely followed the particulars of the latest outbreak of miners in Tennessee, and causes connected therewith, we here reproduce a dispatch to the Louisville Courier Journal. It contains details that did not appear in the press telegrams published here.

NASHVILLE, Ten., Aug. 13.—(Special).—Once more Tennessee has riotous miners. A prison stockade has been burned and again have the convict inmates been temporarily driven from competition with free labor. The scene of the latest trouble is at Tracy City, a point where trouble was least expected.

At 9 o'clock this morning the stockade was burned and the 390 convicts were placed on cars ready to be started for Nashville. At 5 o'clock this morning a committee of miners awoke E. O. Nathurst, Superintendent of the mines for the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, and asked him that the miners be allowed as many hours work in each week as the convicts. Mr. Nathurst replied that he would submit the matter to the company and do what he could.

The committee then left and Mr. Nathurst, knowing that a secret oath-bound organization had been formed some weeks ago for purposes unknown, at once began to suspect trouble. He went to Deputy Warden Burton, and together they began to chronicle among the miners, who were gathering in groups, and try to influence them to keep quiet.

Their efforts were of no avail. Slowly the ominous air of suppressed excitement became tinged with threats and promises of destruction to the stockade or a battle.

At 8:30 o'clock an organized body of 150 men, 100 of them armed and fifty apparently unarmed, advanced on the stockade. To capture it was the work of a minute. Without undue confusion every piece of property belonging to the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad company was removed to a safe distance and the convicts who were in the stockade were led out under guard.

Then the torch was applied, and at 9 o'clock the buildings were a mass of flames. The miners at once proceeded to the mines, took possession of the convicts, marched them to the railroad station and loaded them in box cars. Next the telegraph wires were cut and a guard was placed over every engine in the yards to prevent carrying the news down the mountain.

Later on Conductor Finch and Engineer Bolten were ordered to leave immediately with the convicts. Being covered by guns they were obliged to obey. The train arrived at the foot of the mountain at 1 p.m. Captain Burton, with twenty-five guards, has the convicts in charge and under control.

Between Sewanee and Montegic, the convicts cut the train in two, and ten or fifteen made a break for liberty. Several shots were fired. Matt Wilson, white, was killed, and the jaw of John Smith, a Memphis negro, was shot off. Three others were wounded, but they succeeded in escaping, as the guard could not leave the train.

Last summer when the convicts were released at Coal Creek, Oliver Springs and Briceville, an unsuccessful attempt was made to have the Tracy City miners take similar action, but it failed for the reason that the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company was working its free miners on full time, and they did not feel that they were injured by the convicts being at work there.

Recently, however, the company found it necessary to reduce the coal output, and during July the output was only 28,000 tons, whereas a year ago the output was 36,000 tons. The loss all fell on the free miners, who were put on half time, while the convicts worked full time. This caused the organization of the band that today burned the stockade.

Vice-President Baxter, of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, Wednesday informed Governor Buchanan that trouble was anticipated, and Superintendent of Prisons Wade on Thursday made an investigation and reported all quiet. He, however, engaged fifty new guards to reinforce the thirty already on hand.

It is quite a coincidence that when Governor Buchanan received news of the trouble this morning he was in conference with a committee of miners from Coal Creek, who had presented resolutions recently adopted by the free miners asking the withdrawal of the State troops, and pledging good behavior. When they heard of the trouble they at once went home in order to prevent any trouble that might be caused there.

Gov. Buchanan has officially received no information of the trouble except that the convicts were at Cowan. Adj. Gen. Norman ordered a special train to bring the convicts, numbering 390, to Nashville. The State Board of Prison Inspectors will order the return of the convicts to Tracy City as soon as the stockade is rebuilt, and will furnish the guards necessary to protect them. Gov. Buchanan is powerless in the premises.

POLITICAL EDUCATION.

THERE is a great deal said nowadays in Utah about "political education." A stranger would be led to believe, by the tenor of remarks made upon it, that the people of this Territory knew nothing about politics until quite recently, when gentlemen more or less informed, condescended to expound the respective theories of the great parties of the country for the especial benefit of the masses.

The truth is that politics is by no means an uninvestigated subject in Utah. There has been some confusion of mind as to the relative values of the claims made by Democrats and Republicans. But the general principles of the science of government have been widely discussed among the people, and both men and women throughout the Territory have given them serious consideration.

Much of what is now dignified as "political education" has no right to the term. It would be more appropriately called party misrepresentation. It consists chiefly of vilifying one party and claiming undue credit for the other. Advocates on either side are addicted to this, and the effect is not edifying. Also there are persons who attempt to make converts to their side by generalities without point, claiming they are Republicans or Democrats, as the case may be, because their party possesses certain qualifications and will accomplish certain things, all of which might be equally claimed by their opponents, and all that is needed in the argument to make it equally valuable to either side is to change the name of the party to eulogized for that of the other.

Occasionally a speech is made or an article is published which is argumentative and educational. It contains facts and figures and logical reasoning. It is then worth consideration and comparison with the views of an advocate of the opposite party. The less exclusive and special pleading it contains the more valuable it is. The stronger and more fairly it presents the claims of the other side the more convincing it is in its refutations. Such speeches and articles are of benefit to enquirers, and when converts are made by them the recruits are likely to remain permanent soldiers of the party.

We notice that much of the influence brought to bear upon voters appeals to their selfishness and promotes sectionalism. That is to say, they are asked to adopt what is alleged to be of local benefit and personal advantage, rather than that which will be likely to advance the welfare of the whole country. This may be political education, but it is not in the direction of statesmanship and patriotism. In national questions the good of the nation should be paramount. National politics ought not to be studied within the narrow limits of mere local interests.

We advise our friends who are seriously investigating political principles and party invitations, to avoid accepting without question the statements of either opponent as to the views and purposes of the other. Let each party speak for itself. When a Democrat says the Republicans want monarchy, or a Republican says the Democrats want anarchy; when either says the other aims at the ruin of the nation, or the destruction of manufactures, or the establishment of monopolies; when one party claims all the intelligence or patriotism, or virtue, and declares the other to be destitute of everything that is admirable or praiseworthy; it may be sensibly set down to party buncombe and that mendacity which some people excuse in what they call politics but would condemn in anything else.

All such stuff as that is foreign to true political education, and is not worth spending time to consider. Very much of the same value is the claim that respected men of years that are past, and who have long since left this world and its disputes, belonged to such and such a party, and their admirers should therefore belong to the same party. The issues of their time are probably also in the grave. It is the living present with which we have to deal and the best interests of Utah and the nation today which we should consider. Both sides of any mooted question should be examined, and every citizen should think for himself and act for himself, exercising that liberty which is given of God and recognized by his country, and so use his political influence that good government may be maintained and individual rights may be preserved.

WHICH IS THE TRUE CHURCH?

THE question "Which is the true church?" is being discussed in the theological world. The answers to it are generally vague and unsatisfactory. The Catholic and Episcopalian reply is the most definite. It rests upon the claim of continuity. That is, it alleges that the church has continued from the time of Christ and the Apostles down to the present day and that church which can trace an unbroken succession is the true church. Other religious bodies argue that age, continuance and form do not count and that spiritual vitality, power to lift up the fallen and convert the sinner and other evidences of present religious force are the signs of the true Church.

It seems to us that we must first determine what we mean by "the true Church" before we can arrive at a proper solution to the problem. If the Church of Jesus Christ is meant and we suppose it is, then it follows that no church is the true Church which He did not establish. The New Testament gives the history of the setting up of His Church when He was on earth and its continuation under the direction of His Apostles. It describes its organization, its doctrines, its authorities, its ordinances, gifts and distinctive peculiarities. It also foreshadows an utter departure from these and the bringing in of damnable heresies by false teachers who would make merchandise of the souls of men.

The claim of continuity can be readily settled by comparing the Church as thus described with the churches that make the claim of succession. They will be found to be utterly unlike the Church that Christ made and to fulfill the prediction of the great falling away.

The modern organizations have been made by men. They made no pretense that Christ authorized them to do this. However useful these churches may be or may have been, they are not the organization which Christ set up when on earth, nor are they His Church by His authority or institution since then. If Jesus Christ has not organized a Church in these latter times then there is no true church on the earth, but all the ecclesiastical bodies and associations are as human in their character as any secular society.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints claims to have been organized by the Lord Jesus Christ Himself, through his personal administration and authority and is the exact counterpart of the early Christian Church. For these reasons we answer the question under discussion by saying that this is the only true Church of Christ on earth and we know that what we say is true.

POSSIBILITIES OF THE LABOR AND CAPITAL STRUGGLE.

THE Tennessee trouble has temporarily collapsed. It will, however, in the nature of things, be renewed in the future. The continued existence of the cause of the difficulty will revive it.

The reason for the sudden suspension of hostile activity on the part of the miners is the same as that which led to a similar result in the operations of the Cœur d'Alene and Homestead strikers. It is this:

It is almost impossible for an organized mob, no matter how large, to stand before disciplined troops in battle. The fighters on the side of labor are thoroughly organized for conflicts or struggles from which violence is excluded, but they are not marshalled for physical offensive and defensive purposes. As a consequence the contests in which the workmen engage with capital are unequal. The workers are at a disadvantage. It is impossible for them to gain the victory until relative conditions are changed.

This view is easily supported. If organized labor succeeds in its struggle with organized capital, this result can only be achieved, if attainable at all, by the use of force. Without it success is an "invisible quantity" so far as associated labor is concerned. The reasons are obvious:

(1) The forces of labor are divided. The non-union element is sufficiently strong to throw the balance of power to the side of capital. So soon as a strike is on capital appeals, and never in vain, to non-union labor, the places of the striking men are filled, and unless union labor resort to violence the struggle is ended, with victory on the banners of the employers.

(2) In the event of the strikers—now in the "school of despair"—declining to give up the struggle at this point, they must have recourse to violence. The application of this forcible means must necessarily be futile, because here again they are at a disadvantage. They cannot operate the conflict on this "plan of campaign" without breaking the laws. This situation brings to the aid of the employers the forces of the government. The result is inevitable; united labor, having no military organization, must be defeated. There is only a remote basis for hope in any other direction aside from military organization. This lies in making a strike cover so much ground and so many avenues of business as to render it impracticable to find non-unionists enough to supplant the workmen engaged in the struggle. Such a conflict, however, even if it were conducted without violence, would be revolutionary and disastrous to the national commonwealth.

In observing the social commotion in progress, it is impossible for the fact to escape notice that wherever organized labor learns by experience its weakness, in comparison with the strength of those whom it regards as its opponents, it sets to work to remedy the deficiency. This leads to a vital, nay startling question: Will it resort to military means to overcome the reasons for its defeat when, in its struggles, it is subjected to the law of force.

It would be folly to answer this interrogatory with an unqualified negative. The strong probabilities are in favor of a future realization of an actual affirmative to this important question. It is not in the nature of things for the great masses of the workmen of the country to succumb in any struggle, racial or otherwise, without exhausting every resource within their reach. If this view be correct, then they will have recourse to military organization and discipline.

We ask those who do not agree with the idea that this result is probable, to observe that the symptoms of such a step have already appeared. We have but to refer, on this point, to the resolution lately adopted by the Council of the Federated Trades of the State of Massachusetts. It recommends all union men to refrain from enlisting in the National Guard and that those now associated with that body withdraw from it. The purpose of this is plain; it is to weaken the military and thus deprecate its effectiveness when directed against united labor. The step would not to any extent accomplish the object, but it is the intent of the measure that we are now referring to. But there has been an actual step taken in the matter of establishing a military organization in connection with organized labor. It is a singular fact that this was done under the auspices of official authority of the State of Illinois. Only a few weeks since, shortly after the Homestead outbreak, it was announced in the press dispatches that the Carpenters' Union, at Chicago, had obtained a license from the Secretary of the State giving permission to organize and equip a military force. Its object was stated to be to repel any armed aggressive force that might enter the State of Illinois. Fifteen hundred men were enrolled at once, and it was expected that the number would soon be doubled. This has probably been done ere this. They were to be armed with Winchester rifles and to engage in regular drill exercises.

If such an organization is possible within the lines of one labor union it is equally so with others. If such a step were to become general, united labor would soon have under its auspices a mighty disciplined army. The dangerous consequences of a situation of this nature would be overwhelming. The possibilities of gigantic civil strife ensuing from the labor and capital question would be enormous. Yet who is prepared to say that such a condition of things is not liable, in the very nature of current questions and events, to arise?

IS IT RETALIATION?

PUBLIC bodies look very small when they act from pettishness and do anything for spite. We do not accuse the County Court of such paltiness, but a good many people think that the stoppage of the sprinkling carts on certain streets and of all work except that done by poll tax, smacks very strongly of such a spirit. To suffocate people with dust because they would not vote a lot of money into its hands, is a poor way for the County Court to show its resentment at the failure of the bonds election, if that is what they mean by it. It will not add to the popularity of the selectmen nor will it stimulate the public to reverse their verdict.

We suggest that when the question of bonding the county is again agitated, the notice of the election be made more general. It should be published in the newspapers, and it should contain specific announcements as to the qualifications of voters. A great many people stayed away from the polls who had the right to vote as the statute stands, but who supposed they were disqualified by act of Congress, or by local election laws. The power of the County Court to manage the election and appoint the election officers was also a matter of doubt, and it ought to have been determined satisfactorily.

We do not think the County Court or any of its members have just cause to feel disgruntled because the taxpayers did not vote for the bonds. The fault, if any, rests with their own party adherents, who, if they had been so disposed, could have carried the election. It is evident that the majority of them did not vote at all. But it was their right to vote or not as they chose, and to stop sprinkling the streets is a childish sort of retaliation or miserable sort of vengeance. According to the report of the County Clerk the amount of revenue which will accrue to the county, after the territorial and school taxes are deducted from the total of $425,457.68, will be $98,776.38. If out of nearly one hundred thousand dollars nothing can be spared for sprinkling streets which ought to be attended to, and for road work which is needed to be done, it seems to us that it is very poor management.

We do not wish to find fault with the County Court unnecessarily. Public men seldom give public satisfaction, and the criticism that is so freely bestowed upon them is, no doubt, often very provoking. But in this instance it really looks as though there was occasion for complaint, and we hope the county authorities will reconsider the matter to which we have drawn attention.

A REVIVAL.

THIS periodical falsehood about a "Mormon" exodus to Mexico has again started on its rounds. It is an epidemic. Usually it breaks out in some metropolitan journal, and is then caught up by the country papers and has its run till exhausted. This time it seems to have started where it commonly ends. Rural publications are announcing that five hundred "Mormon" families are preparing to leave Utah for Mexico as soon as the crops are harvested. There is no more truth in the rumor than there was in former canards of the same sort. The harvest of anti-"Mormon" lies is never entirely reaped, or the seeds of the old stories ripen before the parent crop is all out. The "Mormons" have less cause than ever to want to leave Utah.

ANOTHER SAMPLE SALT LAKE DISPATCH.

It is about time that a romantic bubble which has been going the rounds of the press should be punctured with the pin-point of fact. A Salt Lake dispatch was sent to New York about three weeks ago announcing that Blade, the Maori pugilist—described as the "heavy weight rival of Sullivan"—had stolen a "Mormon" Bishop's daughter and run away with her. The Bishop's name was said to be Sweeney, and the locality quite close to the alleged scene of another bogus story—probably hatched in the same brain—the infamous Bishop West fiction.

The girl was painted as a lovely young creature who had "all the young members of the Mormon Church within a circuit of 500 miles at her feet." The usual particulars of an irate father and a weeping damsel "locked in an upper room," were given, and also the sequel of an eloping daughter, a race for the Justice's house, the triumph of the eloping pair, and the baffled rage of the pursuing father—"The Bishop and all his clan." To this stuff was given the added interest of making all the parties "Mormons" but the Maori.

Well, the story was made out of whole cloth, and the numerous country papers which have copied it from the New York daily that was first fooled into publishing it, have simply repeated a lot of nonsense that any well edited journal ought to have detected as false when received. The retired pugilist, who is pretty well known in these parts, was quietly married about the time the lightning liar of Salt Lake sent his dispatch to New York, and the wedding was announced in Salt Lake papers.

This is the truth; it lets the gas out of the bubble which has amused the public at supposed "Mormon" expense, and it shows how unreliable is anything that is sent over the wires to the East as news from "the seat of Mormonism."

A FEW WOKS TO FARMERS.

The time is at hand when farmers will be in a rush to get rid of their grain. If the price is low they will be more likely to run it into market than if it is high. That is strange but it is true. Every country store keeper knows that when the price of grain is down the market is glutted, and that when it takes a rise the average farmer will hold on to his produce, expecting a still higher price until it declines, when he will be in such a hurry to get rid of it that he helps to lower the figure.

We are aware of the needs of most of our country cousins. The family requires shoes and clothing. Debts have accumulated that must be met at harvest time. Winter supplies have to be laid in, and there are lots of calls for means that can only come from the crops that are now getting ready for market. All right. Pay your debts, farmers, and then hold on to your remaining grain if you can. Don't buy anything more than you need now. Keep what you have until it will bring a fair return for your labor. It is better to sell your grain in the spring than in the fall. Try and meet fall needs with fall work. Make it a point to get ahead a little instead of all the time making up for the past. Working with a "dead horse" will always keep you poor.

Brains must go with muscle when men want to make headway. Think before you sell. Supply needs but don't pander to mere wants. Endeavor to be "forehanded." Wheat in the granary is almost like money in pocket. When it is gone, debt is the next thing to confront you. Debt means bondage, and that means more excessive toil.

Friends, endeavor to become independent. You cannot achieve full freedom until you can get ahead of your expenditure. Keep some grain in the bin, and if possible some cash in the bank, and use your thinkers as well as your hands. Hold on to your produce, if possible, when the market is low, and keep your eyes open for a rainy day. These are simple suggestions, but there is prosperity in them for the farmer.

APPROXIMATE NUMERICAL EQUALITY OF THE SEXES.

Census bulletin 201 gives the relative proportions of females to males, of foreign born to native born people, and of colored to white, as shown at the last three decennial censuses.

The whole number of males in the United States in 1890 was 82,067,880 and the whole number of females 80,554,370. For the United States as a whole, therefore, there were for every 100,000 males 95,280 females in 1890. In 1880 there were 95,544 females to every 100,000 males, while in 1870 there were 97,801 females to every 100,000 males. The females exceeded the males in 1890 to a greater extent than 5 per cent. in the District of Columbia, Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

In the District of Columbia the population of females to males in 1890 was 110,242 to 100,000, and in 1880, 112,525 to 100,000. Massachusetts had in 1890, 105,840 females to 100,000 males, and in 1880 117,712 females to 100,000 males. Rhode Island had in 1890 105,628 females to 100,000 males, and in 1880 107,571 females to 100,000 males.

In 1880 the whole number of States and Territories in which females exceeded the males was 17, and in 1890 only 11. The females exceeded the males by five per cent. in 1890 in the District of Columbia, Massachusetts and Rhode Island; by 2.5 per cent. in North Carolina, Maryland, Connecticut, New Hampshire, New York, South Carolina, and New Jersey.

The males exceeded the females by .95 per cent. in 1890 in Louisiana, Alabama, Georgia, Maine, Mississippi, Tennessee, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Delaware, Vermont, Indiana, and West Virginia; by .80 per cent. in Illinois, Florida, Missouri, Wisconsin, Arkansas, Iowa, Michigan, and Texas; by .80 per cent. in Kansas, Minnesota, New Mexico, Nebraska, and South Dakota; by from .50 to .80 per cent. in North Dakota, Oklahoma, California, Idaho, Arizona, Washington, Nevada, Wyoming, and Montana.

THE TENNESSEE SITUATION.

REPORTS from Tennessee indicate that the labor trouble in that State is not improving. The numbers of hostile miners are being increased, so it is stated, by re-inforcements from Kentucky. Their forces are said to aggregate nearly 20,000 men, determined fellows well armed and familiar with the surrounding country. It is doubted now that all the troops within the State would prove a match for them, especially as their recent successes must have increased confidence in their own powers to cope with forces opposed to them. As a consequence of the gravity of the situation, Governor Buchanan is being urged to apply to the President for Federal assistance. Should he do so, Tennessee will make the third State to invoke Federal assistance for the purpose of quelling popular revolts within a period of a few weeks.

WALKING BY FAITH.

In this age of skepticism anything that tends to cultivate faith is valuable. The drift of the modern intellectual stream is towards incredulity, which is destructive of that spirituality that is essential to the higher life. The following, which appears in the Christian Standard, leads in the right direction so we give it place in our column:

"Faith is that faculty by which we see the invisible. Behind phenomena stands force. Although invisible, we not only believe that it is, but find it to be a rewarder of those who diligently seek it and reverently seek its aid. In the higher ranges of progress men walk more and more by faith and less and less by sight. By faith we are enjoying more and more the ministry of the mysterious, the use of the unseen. We are finding that sense-perception is the only vestibule of inquiry and knowledge; that to stop with the objects of sense—to be materialists—is to halt upon the threshold of the universe; to be always children in understanding, never getting beyond the object lesson of the kindergarten.

"Moreover, the more we know of the invisible, the more we come to know that which passeth knowledge, the higher, the bolder, the more infinite it seems to be. Force becomes almighty, wisdom becomes allwise, and we begin to write the invisible, The Invisible. What was so long rejected by the builders of philosophic hypotheses and scientific theories becomes the head of the corner—spirit is force and it is life. The very thing which materialistic science refused most sublimely to recognize has become the most necessary datum in solving the problems of science. The great thinkers now say that there must be some great universe of spiritual force to account for the seen. Not only has this looking at the unseen—the gazing beyond phenomena to the principles and potencies which cause them—marked man's development, but every enlargement of that sense which farther sees than sight, brings a higher satisfaction, a purer and more permanent enjoyment."

"PERSONAL LIBERTY."

THE tyranny sought to be set up by some of the labor unions in this country and the wrong involved in it are thus pointedly and briefly presented by the Boston Herald:

"There are certain things that the labor organizations must learn; the first is that they cannot succeed in the absence of the support of public opinion. With this support they may not always succeed, but without it victory is utterly impossible. The next fact to be borne in mind is that public opinion in the United States has been so much concerned with the question of personal liberty. With us each individual who has not by his crimes against society brought about his imprisonment is a freeman, and as such is not only entitled to the protection of the laws, but also has the right, so long as he breaks no legal statute or ordinance, to employ his time and energies in such manner and under such conditions as he may see fit. Of the 18,000,000 or 20,000,000 of workers in the United States, probably not 1,000,000 are definitely affiliated with labor organizations, and even if ninety-nine out of a hundred of our citizens were so affiliated, they would have no right to lawlessly impose their will upon the hundredth man."

THE CHARGE MUST BE MET.

THE DESERET NEWS is accused by certain "Liberals" of trying to make a "sensation" out of the alleged appointment, by the Mayor, of a special officer at a good round salary, without authority or approval of the City Council. Mr. Wantland is reported as saying:

"The News asserts that the Mayor appointed Mr. Pendleton without consulting the Council or asking it to confirm his action. These are not the facts of the case. There was a resolution introduced authorizing the Mayor to appoint a suitable person for that position, and this resolution was referred to the Mayor with power to act. The attempt at sensationalism on the part of the News falls very flat."

If Councilman Wantland expressed himself in this manner he has not confined himself to the facts. The DESERET NEWS simply reported what was alleged by a member of the City Council. In commenting upon the matter, we expressed the opinion that "probably there had been some mistake," and that "the Mayor may have been under the impression that he was authorized to proceed according to the resolution that was introduced but which failed to carry in the Council."

Mr. Wantland asserts that a "resolution was referred to the Mayor with power to act," authorizing him "to appoint a suitable person for that position"—that is, to watch the canyons in the interest of the city's water rights. In this he takes issue with other members of the Council, not with the DESERET NEWS as he pretends. But taking up the matter on his assumption, we now ask him to produce a copy of the resolution adopted by the Council and referred to the Mayor with power to act. If he will furnish it to us it will be duly published in the DESERET NEWS, and will settle the controversy. This will vindicate him and us at the same time, for we expressed a doubt that the Mayor had intentionally made appointments which he had no right to fill.

We are of the opinion, however, that the Councilman cannot do this. Is it not a fact that a thorough examination of the records and search for the alleged document have failed to reveal it. And if so is it of any use for Mr. Wantland to try and make out that the DESERET NEWS has been raising "a tempest in a teapot," when this paper has tried to put the matter in the most favorable light possible for the Mayor? Is not this the resolution which Mr. Wantland introduced and which he now has in mind?

"Resolved, That the Mayor be and is hereby authorized to engage the services of a suitable person for a period not to exceed six months, at a salary not to exceed $150 per month, for the purpose of watching the canyons and protecting the water rights of the city, said employee to also perform such duties, keep such records and make such reports in connection with the irrigation and water departments and public grounds of the city as may be ordered by the Mayor and Council."

The record shows that this was introduced April 21, 1892, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and subsequently reported upon adversely.

Let it be understood that we have no fault to find with the appointment, if it is legal and the office is necessary. We believe the gentleman appointed is fully capable of performing the duties named in the resolution. He is an old resident, a capable citizen, and is thoroughly familiar with irrigating affairs and the water rights of the city and of individuals. But all that cuts no figure in the question of the necessity for the office and of the right of the Mayor to appoint without the consent of the City Council.

This is no "tempest in a teapot," but unless the Mayor has been duly authorized to appoint, or acted under a mistaken impression as we suggested, it is a question of great importance that must be settled for good. If the Mayor has undertaken to create an office and fill it by the appointment of a friend, not only without the approval of the City Council, but in defiance of the adverse action of that body, as some of its members claim, he has assumed powers to which he has no right, the appointment is illegal, the funds drawn in payment have been unlawfully appropriated, and the whole thing is wrong and should be stamped upon at once.

We have deprecated every sign of a disposition on the part of either branch of the municipal government to ignore or interfere with the rights of the others. We desire to see harmony prevail among them all. This cannot be promoted by such proceedings as are now alleged against the Mayor. If the charge is true, a full exposure should be made and proper action be taken to correct the wrong. If a mistake has been made by the Mayor, it should be officially explained. And if the resolution claimed by Mr. Wantland was really adopted, let it be produced and we will only be too pleased to give it publicity and thus settle the ugly question.

Since the foregoing was written, a report made by the City Attorney has been found which throws more light on the subject. It appears that on May 12, 1892, that officer, to whom the matter of alleged interference with the water rights of the city in Emigration Canyon was referred, rendered the following report which was duly published in the DESERET NEWS:

"I was not furnished with any of the facts and consequently can give no opinion as to the legal status. From inquiry I find that the Council which just preceded your honorable body purchased certain water rights from persons residing on Emigration creek and received warranty deeds therefor. These deeds I have been unable to find or learn who has them in possession. The former council also purchased a piece of ground, probably one hundred and sixty acres, who had title from the government and received warranty deeds to the land and water, the deeds of which I have also been unable to obtain for the same reason. With the exception of the last purchase spoken of the lands in the other purchases were quit-claimed to the city, the titles to the same being only squatter's rights with the title still in the government. I am also informed as to the last mentioned lands, they have been taken possession of and filed upon in the local land office by persons under the homestead and pre-emption laws of the United States and that parties are now improving the same by planting and seeding, etc. It is impossible for me to go on the grounds and investigate and ascertain what the actual facts in the case are. I obtained all the information above referred to from ex-Councilman Pendleton, who, I understand, conducted the negotiations and made the aforesaid purchases for the preceding Council. I would recommend that the appropriate committee or a special agent be appointed for the purpose of looking into the matter, collect the evidence preparatory to commencing action, should one be necessary to protect the legal rights of the city."

This was referred to the Mayor with power to act. But it is claimed that this is a very different thing to the appointment of an officer to perform the duties specified in the Wantland resolution of April 21 which was defeated. And further, it is claimed that when the Mayor took action and selected the man for this temporary purpose, the name should have been submitted to the Council for confirmation. This it is stated was not done, but the appointee's name has been on the regular pay roll without the consent or even the knowledge until recently of the City Council.

Thus the difficulty exists just the same, in spite of the report which is now resuscitated. We understand that the members of the Council who object to the action of the Mayor, do not object to the man who received the appointment, but they do object to the manner of his appointing, the enlargement of his functions in excess of what the report mentions, and the stretch of executive authority at the expense of the rights of the City Council.

MINING TROUBLES IN THE SOUTH.

UNTIL reliable information is obtained from the seat of the labor conflict in Tennessee, it will be well for the public to make due allowance for conjectural and speculative dispatches that are filled with blood and thunder sensational statements. They form an unreliable basis on which to predicate an estimate of the situation. That the condition is critical, however, is beyond doubt, but it does not appear at present writing that there has been any great loss of life resulting from the conflict. It is probably true that the miners dishonorably disregarded the implied conditions of their own proposal when they hoisted a flag of truce, by capturing General Anderson. But that they would go so far as to murder that gallant officer is exceedingly doubtful.

The whole State, it appears, has been thrown into a condition of excitement by the gravity of the situation and extremists who are careful to keep away from the scene of the difficulty and who would never think of giving personal aid to the authorities, are shouting denunciation in the direction of Governor Buchanan, who seems to be doing all he can under the circumstances to establish peace in the region of the revolt.

Should extensive fighting occur, there is one class who will not be likely to receive much leniency at the hands of those who are engaged on the side of law and order. We refer to the accessions to the forces of the miners who have gone over from Kentucky to aid them. They have placed themselves in the position of invaders of the soil of a neighboring State, for the purpose of setting its laws at defiance. For those disturbers of the peace and good order of Tennessee there will be but little consideration; nor should there be. If this business of people of one State making lawless incursions into neighboring States continue, it will lead the country into inevitable anarchy. It was resorted to on a small scale in the recent disturbance at Cour de Alene. Armed miners from Montana marched into Idaho to aid the strikers in the latter State. This was only done on a small scale in that instance, however, but reports indicate that the invading forces from Kentucky who have gone into Tennessee for a similar purpose are much more numerous. If this kind of work is not stopped short it will result in war between some of the States. That would be the natural result of allowing such invasions to go unchecked. The proper way to put a stop to them would be for the States from which such armed mobs proceed to prevent them crossing into the domain of their neighbors.

West Virginia promises an outbreak somewhat similar to that of Tennessee in consequence of a strike being on, some of the mines are being worked by non-union men and the latter and the mining property are being protected by the sheriff and a force of armed deputies. A conflict is anticipated.

The spirit of conciliation and peace is departing from people of all classes, and the evil genius of retaliation and murder is gaining ground.

Since the foregoing was in type the news of the capture of General Anderson by the miners has been confirmed by later dispatches. The details are affecting. He preferred death to surrender, desiring only that he be not hanged, but shot, and that his grave be marked so that his family might know where his body was laid. Should his captors murder this brave officer, the inhuman and treacherous act will arouse such a feeling of frenzy in the people of the State that vengeance will be visited upon the mobocrats. We still cling to the opinion that they will not kill him.

LEHI SUGAR PROSPECTS.

THE sugar factory at Lehi has excellent prospects for the present year, and its success in the more distant future is as strongly assured as that of any manufacturing enterprise in the West. The experience of last season has proven of immense value this season. The raising of sugar beets was largely an experiment in 1891. Farmers who made the venture then, learned many lessons which have been useful to them this year. They demonstrated the fact that great bulk in the roots did not mean large returns in saccharine matter. They found out that planting rows too closely was not profitable. They also learned that the use of the cultivator was necessary and that hand-hoeing alone did not pay. The agriculturists of 1892, who have devoted some acreage to the sugar beet, will make better profits than they did in 1891.

The factory, too, learned valuable lessons, both in the handling and testing of the beets and in the running of the machinery and the utilization and organization of labor. This year the managers will start out with improved facilities and with the advantages that come from practical experience, and the result cannot fail to be encouraging to the stockholders.

We have already explained about the bounty. Both the Government bounty and the Territorial bounty will be available. So that in addition to the opportunities we have named, the company will, by making more sugar, receive greater amounts of bounty money than before. This will give the shares a much greater value in the stock market than ever, and ought to stimulate subscriptions.

If we are not mistaken, a great many Utah men agreed in the beginning to take stock in this enterprise but have failed to come to the front. A few leading men furnished the money, and some of them gave their notes for large amounts in order to make the venture successful. They ought not to be compelled to carry this burden any longer. We advise our friends who took an interest in the sugar works—in their minds, to step forward and show their interest by their works and by their money. We are of the opinion that in a short time there will be a demand for the capital stock in the sugar company, and that those who promised their aid and failed to furnish it when it was most needed, will regret their mistake unless they immediately make their word good.

It was designed in the start to make this manufacturing concern popular. That is, to let the people at large take part in it. This was a wise intention. Everybody in Utah ought to feel proud of such an institution as that at Lehi, and the project of giving men and women able to raise but a small amount of money an opportunity to invest in it, was in accordance with the spirit in which this Territory was settled and founded.

No one has asked us to say this. We do not know whether the company desire the subject agitated. We mention these things for the good of the public. We do not think the idea ought to prevail that the bounty has been taken off and that the company is handicapped thereby, and that therefore its prospects are not bright. The contrary is the truth, and the Lehi factory faces the season of 1892 with the most encouraging circumstances surrounding it, and with the full expectation of doing much better than as possible in the first year of its existence.

SISTER CATHERINE M. HARROCKS

In another part of this issue we publish a brief account of the services held over the remains of Mother Harrocks. She was a woman around whom there appeared to be a never-varying atmosphere of peace. Her life and personal characteristics showed her to be an ideal disciple of Christ. One of the leading traits exhibited throughout her career was a deep sense of gratitude to God for all His mercies. This feature of her nature was brought out in its full luster when she first heard the Gospel in its fulness, as revealed anew in this age through the agency of the Prophet Joseph Smith. She accepted it as the "glad tidings of great joy." Her honest heart exhibited her thankfulness for the divine blessing by administering to the wants of the servants of God, to extend hospitality to whom she esteemed in the light of a boon to herself. It was enough for her to know that the Elders sent into the world with the proclamation of divine truth were the commissioned agents of the Lord to cause her to regard it in the light of a blessing. To have the opportunity of exhibiting kindness to them. This same sentiment of gratitude was directed to all who conferred upon her the smallest courtesy, and remained with her to her latest moment of consciousness. Even after the power of speech had left her she manifested by signs her appreciation of the last act of love bestowed by the fond hearts who surrounded her deathbed.

In the individuality of Sister Harrocks, charity formed a combination with gratitude. If others thought and even insisted that she had been wronged by individuals, she declined to join in any words of condemnation, but, on the contrary, urged that the person thus referred to could not in her belief be actuated by the motives attributed to them. She was not a public woman, being of a retiring disposition. But she was possessed of that sweetness that furnishes subdued sunshine in the family circle. Between herself and her son, W. B. Dougall, with whom she lived, there was a bond of affection that was delightful, and its radiance embraced Sister Dougall and every member of the family.

There is nothing in nature so beautiful as a little innocent, affectionate child. Next to this attractive picture is that of a woman who has reached the age of advanced ripeness, and exhibits love, kindness, appreciation and plectivity, and who has all these characteristics imprinted and blended in her facial expression. This is a condition hardly attainable by a person with whom these amiable and noble traits have not been conspicuous by nature and cultivation in earlier life. The picture is painted in youth and maturity, and in old age the colors are set and the lights, shades and tones are subdued by the mellowing effects of time. This is a correct portrait of Sister Catherine M. Harrocks, whose blessed memory will be cherished by those who knew her best, because their closeness of acquaintance caused them to love her most.

THE CHINESE EXCLUSION BILL.

In a few days an attempt will be made to enforce the provisions of the Chinese Exclusion bill passed at the last session of Congress. A dispatch from Chicago states that a prominent Chinaman of that city, acting under orders from his government, has notified the United States officials that the new law would be ignored, and that subjects of the Emperor of China would not take out residence certificates until the law was tested before the Supreme Court of this country.

The bill provides that the work of registering and photographing shall be performed by the Internal Revenue Bureau. Officers of that department are already apprehensive that the main features of the law can not be enforced. Under the terms of this bill every Chinaman in the United States and Territories, except members of the diplomatic corps, must report to the nearest internal revenue collector, and obtain from him a certificate of residence. This certificate will contain all the physical particulars of the person whom it represents, and must also be accompanied with a likeness of him. The period for the performance of this work extends until the 5th of next May. After that date any Chinaman not armed with the required certificate can be removed from the United States. But this removal can not be made by the internal revenue department. It comes within the scope of the Attorney-General and Secretary of the Treasury. It is said the appropriation of $100,000 for enforcing the law is insufficient. On the whole, it is thought that before an uncertificated Chinaman can be deported some lively legal battles will take place.

A POLITICAL PENDULUM.

THE New York World has given statistics of the vote of New York in the Presidential elections since 1839, which show that the State has swung like a pendulum, with almost unvarying regularity, going now to the Republicans and then to the Democrats for forty years and for several years previous to the Whigs and the Democrats. The only break in the alternation was in the case of Lincoln, who received the vote of the State for two successive terms. The principal figures given by the World are these:

Year.	Successful candidates.	Plurality.
1839—Van Buren, Dem.....	26,573
1840—Harrison, Whig.....	12,291
1844—Polk, Dem.....	5,166
1848—Taylor, Whig.....	(Election divided)
1852—Pierce, Dem.....	37,301
1856—Fremont, Rep.....	30,129

"The Republican party captured the State because it drew into its ranks in its crusade against slavery all the free soil elements of the Democratic party. But after Lincoln's two terms of office the old backward and forward movement was renewed. Here are the results:

Year.	Candidate.	Plurality.
1860—Lincoln, Rep.....	50,475
1864—Lincoln, Rep.....	6,749
1868—Seymour, Dem.....	40,800
1872—Grant, Rep.....	55,558
1876—Tilden, Dem.....	38,743
1880—Garfield, Rep.....	21,633
1884—Cleveland, Dem.....	1,617
1888—Harrison, Rep.....	15,002

Of course, this is no definite indication for 1892, but there will be a good many people who will look upon it in that light, and it will no doubt have its effect upon the election.

EARTHQUAKE IN WALES.

A SPECIAL to the New York Recorder gives the following account of a seismic disturbance in Wales which occurred on the night of Wednesday, August 18th:

"The shock of an earthquake last night caused consternation in Pembrokeshire, the extreme southwestern county of Wales. People were generally asleep, when a low, rumbling noise was heard, and the houses rocked and shivered like a ship in an undulating sea. In Haverfordwest, the rumbling and the rocking motion were particularly heard and felt, and hundreds of people, awakened from sleep, rushed out into the street in their night-gowns, without waiting to dress. Crockery was smashed and furniture moved by the shaking of the buildings, which lasted, however, but a few seconds. The people remained in the streets, panic-stricken and fearful of a more disastrous visitation. After an interval another shock came, but it was slight, as compared with the first, and did no damage. Then there was another interval, and another shock, also slight. After some time, there was no more sign of seismic disturbance, people returned into their houses and tried to sleep. The day preceding the shock had been extremely sultry for that section, so near the breezes of the Irish Sea, and a dull, heavy heat seemed ominous of something unusual.

"At the time the shock was felt with as much force as at Haverfordwest. The day was very warm, and toward evening there was a dull copper hue in the sky, while the slight breeze entirely ceased, and the atmosphere was oppressively still. The color of the sky aroused considerable remark, and was thought to portend a storm.

"The night was almost as oppressive as the afternoon, and when the shock came many of the people were in front of their houses, dozing or trying to sleep in the open air. The shock was a smart one, and the damage resulting was chiefly to property. In one instance a mirror cracked in a house. In St. David's most of the people remained up almost all night, and many of them in the streets. People living near St. David's Head say that the sea was unusually calm, and almost glassy last evening. The first shock was accompanied with considerable turbulence of the waves, and a large one swept in towing foam high up on the rocks. The tumult of the waters continued for some minutes and ceased shortly after the final shock.

"In other parts of South Wales the earthquake was not felt so seriously as in Pembrokeshire, but the disturbance was noticed as far east as Monmouthshire."

DISCIPLINED STATE CONSTABULARIES.

THE labor troubles in various parts of the country are evoking comment as to the imperfect provisions made for the protection of life and property.

Pinkertonism is now one of the things of the past. The militia, it is found, is far from a swerving the demands of the hour. An officer of the Pennsylvania National Guard suggested the establishment of a State constabulary, or disciplined police force. The New York Evening Post regards the suggestion with favor, and says that the proposed force could be "used in ordinary times to keep the peace and prevent disorder in rural districts and small towns, and be ready to be massed to suppress a riot whenever necessary."

Another authority says that a paid State constabulary is an absolute necessity, "trained for both preventive and repressive service, and rigidly protected from the interference of party politics." It is contended that the calling out of the militia on occasions like that at Homestead draws a number of young men away from business and professions; that it deranges the order of the community in one direction though called on to suppress disorders in another. Accommodations cannot be prepared for a militia corps thus suddenly summoned, and the result is that discontent creeps into the ranks of the would-be protectors."

On the other hand, the idea of a State constabulary is vigorously opposed by many of the leading journals of the country. The St. Paul Pioneer Press says: "The day that sees us with permanent State constabularies will be a day when arbitrary government shall have won its way far toward a conquest of free government by the people." It goes on to show that a permanent police force like that outlined by the Post is simply the stepping stone to a standing army. Such an innovation would immediately subvert the spirit of the American republic, and in every State where an organized, disciplined constabulary existed the people would be classed as the governed and governing classes.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—Dispatches from various European centers state that there has been no abatement in the heat prevailing for the past ten days.

EDUCATIONAL IDEAS.

[From the Boston Transcript of Aug. 16th.]

Readers of the Transcript remember that some years ago a Yankee school-master employed in the suburban town of Quincy had the audacity to think, feel and intimate that some of the old methods of training children in public schools were no good.

But School Boards are proverbial for knowing it all. That one under which the master referred to labored raised a storm about him and he fled for shelter to the centre of the universe and became supervisor of the uncommon common schools of Boston. There he also ventured to think for himself, it is said, and to hold opinions as to the training of children that were not to be found in any proper Boston family. Consequently the man found himself in another storm. Chicago heard of him, and, as Chicago likes men who can raise the wind, she sent for him. He came West and is growing up with the village that can drink more sewage and live than any spot or people on earth or Mars.

The gentleman referred to is Francis W. Parker, for years of the Shurtleff School of South Boston, later of Quincy, later of Boston, and now principal of Cook County Normal School at Chicago. Mr. Parker's views reached Utah through school literature, and met a welcome reception among the only "Latter-day Saints." Last winter the president of the Brigham Young Academy at Provo, Utah, opened correspondence with Mr. Parker with a view to securing him for a course of lectures to the Mormon teachers of wooly Utah, in the summer. Price and time were agreed upon and Mr. Parker is here at work. He was engaged for a week. At the end of the week he was engaged for a second week and is now telling the teachers what he knows and what he wants to see done in the way of establishing a better system of pedagogy.

This summer school for teachers was open to all, although established by the Mormon academy referred to. Those in charge told Mr. Parker there would probably be two hundred present; but the gentleman informs me that the attendance has been over five hundred. Probably many are not teachers, yet the attendance of the latter has been far beyond anticipation, and many of them are non-Mormon. In conversing with Mr. Parker, I found him enthusiastic over his mountain pupils. He says he never saw a more earnest body of men and women. They were wide awake, and, having him there, were determined to obtain all he had to give. The engagement for the second week came from the Superintendents of the public schools in several adjoining counties. Of course the superintendents of those particular counties are Mormons, but there are many non-Mormon teachers under them, and there is no Mormonism taught in any of the public schools. Mr. Parker finds in Utah more sympathy with his views of teaching than he expected, and much more than he has found in the older Eastern communities. This is not surprising. The Mormons are in some things a reformatory people, more so in the past perhaps than now. But they have always been full of solicitude for their children. It is a great mistake to accuse them of opposition to education, as has been done for years. To the Mormon a child is a "tabernacle," in which a pre-existing child of God has taken up its home for the training it can receive in this life as a preparation for the eternal life after the resurrection. Perhaps I had better tell you as nearly as I can what their philosophy of birth, death and the future is.

All people have pre-existed. All are the spiritual offspring of God. Life on earth is a preparation. All are endowed with "agency." That is, all are "free agents, as some other theologians say. Our bodies are temples or tabernacles in which spirits live, and life is a school. There is no compulsion. You may go to school or play truant. You may have all the benefits of preparation afforded by "the everlasting gospel," or you may go fishing, so to speak, fool your time away and reject the gospel. That is your choice under your "agency." The result will show in the resurrection. The belief is, as nearly as I can obtain it, that at death the pre-existing spirit that has been tabernacled in the body, leaves its house of clay and waits the resurrection. When that comes it is a physical resurrection. The bodies will be quickened and rise from their graves in form precisely as they were laid away. But instead of blood there will be spirit in the veins and that spirit will insure immortal life of the resurrected and purified body. Just as at birth the spirit enters the body of the infant, so in the resurrection the spirit will return to its body and the union of the body and spirit will constitute the immortal soul.

You can see, therefore, that the Mormons are full of solicitude that their children shall be so reared and trained that they will choose the better way, that in the resurrection they may come forth to eternal celestial glory. Mr. Parker consequently found very willing listeners. His utterances will be carefully scanned for seeds of heresy; but as he has the art of saying things in a pleasing way, there will be little objection to his theories.

Last Sunday he was honored with an invitation to Salt Lake for the purpose of delivering an address in the great Mormon Tabernacle. He was announced as from Boston. It was in some sense a retaliation of the Eliot visit last autumn. When the Mormons want to make a stranger feel welcome and at home they give him an audience in the Tabernacle. To stand on the platform there before six thousand or eight thousand people gives a stranger a sensation. Mr. Parker had a fine audience. There was an audience of three hundred behind him. It was the choir, and the visitor probably heard as fine a body of singers as he ever listened to. In front were at least five thousand people. His subject was "The Child," and he handled it in a very eloquent, entertaining and instructive manner. The skeleton of the lecture was—

1. Every child is a born savage.
2. Every child is a born naturalist.
3. Every child is a born worker.
4. Every child is a born singer.
5. Every child is a born lover.

The elaboration of these points gave us a delightful hour of listening. Mr. Parker, as might be expected of a man who had lived in Boston, is full of Herbert Spencer's philosophy of evolution. When he announced his first proposition, that every child is a born savage, I was amused to see the heads of Mormon people around him jerk backward as they looked sharply up at him, as if framing a silent protest against such an utterance. But he saw his position at a glance and deftly explained away the seeming harshness of his words. Thereafter there was no thing but plain sailing and the pelagique left thoughts that ought to produce great good even among Mormon reformers.

Mr. Parker is accompanied his wife, who has also enjoyed distinction in Boston. As Mrs. Frank Stewart she was well known in the Boston School of Oratory as an assistant of Messrs. Munroe and Raymond. As wife of a schoolmaster of a reformatory bent of mind she has become a reformer herself and a partner with her husband in his public work. She was announced to give an address last Sunday evening in the Tabernacle on "Dress Reform." But her husband was given the first chance, and she couldn't put him out. When he sat down she excused herself and promised the talk at another time. But it was surprising what a disappointment it caused among the females. The Mormon women are opposed to nonsense in dress. Yet the fashions are so seductive that they cannot resist the temptation—that is, the younger ones and those who have a little money cannot. But conscience is alive, and they are eager to find that dress reform that will enable them to be pretty and pious at the same time.

Mr. Parker goes from here to Ohio, where he holds another institute this month. His work in Chicago, he tells me, is in fine condition, and his plans are making progress. The Germans have taken him up as an ideal educator, and his future is secure.

CHARLES ELLIS.

SALT LAKE CITY, AUG. 10.

DEATH OF SARAH D. PAINE.

Sarah D. Paine, who died a few days since after a short illness, was one of the earliest settlers in this once dreary Rocky Mountain country. The daughter of Daniel Drake and Patience Perkins, she was born in Pike township, Allegheny county, New York, September 10, 1821. In 1826 the family moved to Hartford, Trumbull county, Ohio, and were among the early pioneers of that State and county. In 1835 they moved to Illinois and settled at La Harpe, Hancock county, where in March 8, 1841, the family were united with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. On the 1st of January the same year Sarah D. was married to William G. Paine.

In the spring of 1846, at the time of the expulsion from Nauvoo, they crossed over the river into Iowa, and then proceeded to the Ponca nation in President Brigham Young's company, where they wintered. In the spring of 1847, in company with her husband, Sister Paine went back as far as Winter Quarters, where they remained until the spring of 1848, when they started upon their overland journey across the plains to Utah in Capt. William Perki's company. They arrived in Salt Lake City on the 4th of September following. They remained in the capital until the spring of 1851, when they came to Ogden City, at which time there was scarcely a house to be seen there. They first settled in what was then called Farr's Fort.

In the fall of the same year they moved onto the farm which was then located on what was subsequently Bingham's fort, which her husband helped to build, as a protection against the depredations of the savage redmen.

In 1856 the fort was broken up and vacated, when Sister Paine, with her family, moved into Ogden City, where she continued to reside until the time of her demise. She participated in the "move south" at the time of the general exodus of the "Mormon" people from the north in time of the invasion by Johnson's army.

She was the mother of ten children—five boys and five girls; had fifty-two grandchildren and thirty-two great grandchildren.

THE POTATO CROP.

I notice in an article in your paper that the potato crop is a partial failure in some parts hereabout, and the supposition is that the price is likely to be higher than last season for this product. If this is really the case there is no cause for alarm among purchasers. For the last few years there has been an abundant crop and in all probability there will be this year, except in a few localities. This partial failure should not cause people to run to extremes—either producers or buyers. It is well known that commission merchants and others are ever on the alert to take advantage of any circumstances to make money for themselves, no matter at whose expense, and for this reason caution should be used.

It is a fact that a year or two ago potatoes were so plentiful that they could scarcely be given away even in the spring time, when they would naturally be dear, and two or three farmers in the southern part of the county shipped several car loads each, and after paying the expense of transportation from Sandy to the eastern market obtained fourteen cents per bushel. For this they had to haul them from their farms to the depot, to say nothing of the cost of labor in raising them the previous summer, storing them during the winter, sprouting them, etc.

This season there will be an abundance for home consumption, and perhaps plenty to send away, if there should be a market open for them, but last year the outside demand was very limited.

The conclusion I have arrived at on this question is that the farmer should be content with a fair remuneration for his labor and not hold on to his potatoes till next spring and perhaps, as has often been the case, dispose of them for less than he was offered for them in the fall, or not sell them at all. Some have said they would rather feed them to the cows or throw them away than sell them for such a price. This is sheer nonsense, as everybody knows that farming carried on in this way would soon bring financial ruin. It is much better to dispose of perishable crops for a fair remuneration than to run the risk of getting nothing. The best and safest way is to avoid extremes. Respectfully, S. E. D. Y.

THE STATEHOOD BILL.

FOLLOWING is the full text of the bill for the admission of Utah into the Union as a State, introduced in the House of Representatives by Hon. John T. Caine, July 30, 1892, referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed:

A BILL TO ENABLE THE PEOPLE OF UTAH TO FORM A CONSTITUTION AND STATE GOVERNMENT, AND TO BE ADMITTED INTO THE UNION ON AN EQUAL FOOTING WITH THE ORIGINAL STATES.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the inhabitants of all that part of the area of the United States now constituting the Territory of Utah, as at present described, may become the State of Utah, as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 2. That all persons who are qualified by the laws of said Territory to vote for representatives to the legislative assembly thereof are hereby authorized to vote for and choose delegates to form a convention in said Territory; and the qualifications for delegates to such convention shall be such as by the laws of said Territory persons are required to possess to be eligible to the legislative assembly thereof; and the aforesaid convention shall consist of one hundred and seven delegates, apportioned among the several counties as within the limit of the proposed State as follows: Beaver County, two delegates; Box Elder County, four delegates; Cache County, eight delegates; Davis County, three delegates; Emery County, three delegates; Garfield County, one delegate; Grand County, one delegate; Iron County, one delegate; Juab County, three delegates; Kane County, one delegate; Millard County, two delegates; Morgan County, one delegate; Plute County, one delegate; Rich County, one delegate; Salt Lake County, twenty-nine delegates; San Juan County, one delegate; Sanpete County, seven delegates; Sevier County, three delegates; Summit County, four delegates; Tooele County, two delegates; Uintah County, one delegate; Utah County, twelve delegates; Wasatch County, two delegates; Washington County, two delegates; Wayne County, one delegate; and Weber County, eleven delegates; and the governor of said Territory shall, by proclamation, order an election of the delegates aforesaid in said Territory to be held on the sixth Tuesday after the passage of this act, excluding the day of the passage of this act, in case it should be passed on Tuesday, which proclamation shall be issued within fifteen days after the passage of this act; and such election shall be conducted, the returns made, the result ascertained, and the certificates to persons elected to such convention issued in the same manner as is prescribed by the laws of said Territory regulating elections therein for members of the legislature. All persons resident in said proposed State who are qualified voters of said Territory, as herein provided, shall be entitled to vote upon the ratification or rejection of the constitution, under such rules and regulations as said convention may prescribe, not in conflict with this act.

Sec. 3. That the delegates to the convention thus elected shall meet at the seat of government of said Territory on the fifth Tuesday after their election, excluding the day of election in case such day shall be Tuesday, and, after organization, shall declare, on behalf of the people of said proposed State, that they adopt the Constitution of the United States; whereupon said convention shall be, and is hereby, authorized to form a constitution and State government for said proposed State. The constitution shall be republican in form, and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race or color, except as to Indians not taxed, and not be repugnant to the Constitution of the United States and the principles of the Declaration of Independence. And said convention shall provide, by ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States and the people of said State—

First, That perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and that no inhabitant of said State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship.

Second, That the people inhabiting said proposed State do agree and declare that they forever disclaim all right and title to the unappropriated public lands lying within the boundaries thereof, and to all lands lying within said limits owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes; and that until the title thereto shall have been extinguished by the United States, the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition of the United States, and said Indian lands shall remain under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States; that the lands belonging to citizens of the United States residing without the said State shall never be taxed at a higher rate than the lands belonging to residents thereof; that no taxes shall be imposed by the State on lands or property therein belonging to or which may hereafter be purchased by the United States or reserved for its use; but nothing herein, or in the ordinance herein provided for, shall preclude the State from taxing, as other lands are taxed, any lands owned or held by any Indian who has severed his tribal relations and has obtained from the United States or from any person a title thereto by patent or other grant, save and except such lands as have been or may be granted to any Indian or Indians under any act of Congress containing a provision exempting the lands thus granted from taxation; but said ordinance shall provide that all such lands shall be exempt from taxation by said State so long and to such extent as such act of Congress may prescribe.

Third, That the debts and liabilities of said Territory shall be assumed and paid by said State.

Fourth, That provision shall be made for the establishment and maintenance of a system of public schools, which shall be open to all the children of said State and free from sectarian control.

Sec. 4. That in case a constitution and State government shall be formed in compliance with the provisions of this act, the convention forming the same shall provide by ordinance for submitting said constitution to the people of said State for its ratification or rejection, at an election to be held at a time fixed in said ordinance, at which election the qualified voters of said proposed State shall vote directly for or against the proposed constitution, and for or against any provisions separately submitted. The returns of said election shall be made to the secretary of said Territory, who, with the governor and chief justice thereof, or any two of them shall canvass the same; and if a majority of the legal votes cast on that question shall be for the constitution, the governor shall certify the result to the President of the United States, together with a statement of the votes cast thereon and upon separate articles or propositions, and a copy of said constitution, articles, propositions, and ordinances. And if the constitution and government of said proposed State are Republican in form, and if all the provisions of this act have been complied within the formation thereof, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to issue his proclamation announcing the result of said election, and thereupon the proposed State of Utah shall be deemed admitted by Congress into the Union under and by virtue of this act on an equal footing with the original States from and after the date of said proclamation.

Sec. 5. That until the next general census, or until otherwise provided by law, said State shall be entitled to one Representative in the House of Representatives of the United States, which Representative in the Fifty-third Congress, together with the governor and other officers provided for in said constitution, may be elected on the same day of the election for the adoption of the constitution; and until said State officers are elected and qualified under the provision of the constitution and the State is admitted into the Union, the Territorial officers shall continue to discharge the duties of their respective offices in said Territory.

Sec. 6. That upon the admission of said State into the Union sections numbered sixteen and thirty-six in every township of said proposed State, and where such sections, or any part thereof, have been sold or otherwise disposed of by or under the authority of any act of Congress, other lands equivalent thereto, in legal subdivisions of not less than one quarter section, and as contiguous as may be to the section in lieu of which the same is taken, are hereby granted to said State for the support of common schools, such indemnity lands to be selected within said State in such manner as the legislature may provide, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; Provided, That the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections embraced in permanent reservations for national purposes shall not, at any time, be subject to the grant nor to the indemnity provisions of this act, nor shall any lands embraced in Indian, military, or other reservations of any character be subject to the grant nor to the indemnity provisions of this act until the reservation shall have been extinguished and such lands be restored to and become a part of the public domain.

Sec. 7. That upon the admission of said State into the Union, in accordance with the provisions of this act, fifty sections of the unappropriated lands within said State, to be selected and located in legal subdivisions as provided in section six of this act, shall be, and are hereby, granted to said State for the purpose of erecting public buildings at the capital of said State where permanently located, for legislative, executive, and judicial purposes.

Sec. 8. That ninety thousand acres of land, to be selected and located as provided in the foregoing section of this act, are hereby granted to said State for the use and support of an agricultural college in said State, as provided in the act of Congress making donations of land for such purposes.

Sec. 9. That five per centum of the proceeds of the sale of public lands lying within said State, which shall be sold by the United States subsequent to the admission of said State into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to the said State, to be used as permanent fund, the interest of which only shall be expended for the support of the common schools within said State.

Sec. 10. That all lands herein granted for educational purposes, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, shall be disposed of at public sale, and at a price not less than five dollars per acre, the proceeds to constitute a permanent school fund, the interest of which only shall be expended in the support of said schools; and such land shall not be subject to pre-emption, homestead entry, or any other entry under the land laws of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, but shall be reserved for school purposes only.

Sec. 11. That the lands, to the extent of two townships in quantity, authorized by the third section of the act of February 21st, 1855, to be reserved for the establishment of a university in Utah, are hereby granted to the State of Utah, for university purposes, to be held and used in accordance with the provisions of this section; and any portion of said lands that may not have been selected by said Territory may be selected by said State. But said act is hereby so amended that none of said lands shall be sold for less than five dollars per acre, and the proceeds shall constitute a permanent fund, to be safely invested and held by said State, and the income thereof be used exclusively for university purposes. The schools, colleges, and universities provided for in this act shall forever remain under the exclusive control of said State; and no part of the proceeds arising from the sale or disposal of any lands herein granted for educational purposes shall be used for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, college, or university.

Sec. 12. That all mineral lands shall be exempted from the grants made by this act. But if sections sixteen and thirty-six, or any subdivision or portion of any smallest subdivision thereof in any township shall be found by the Department of the Interior to be mineral lands, said State is hereby authorized and empowered to select, in legal subdivisions, an equal quantity of other unappropriated lands in said State in lieu thereof for the use and the benefit of the common schools of said State.

Sec. 13. That in lieu of the grant of land for purposes of internal improvement made to new States by the eighth section of the act of September fourth, eighteen hundred and forty-one, which section is hereby repealed as to said State, and in lieu of any claim or demand by the State of Utah under the act of September twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and fifty, and section twenty-four hundred and seventy-nine of the Revised Statutes, making a grant of swamp and overflowed lands to certain States, which grant is hereby declared to be extended to said State of Utah, and in lieu of any grant of saline lands to said State, the following grants of land are hereby made to said State for the purposes indicated, namely:

For the establishment of permanent water reservoirs for irrigating purposes, two hundred thousand acres; for the establishment and maintenance of an insane asylum, fifty thousand acres; for the establishment and maintenance of a school of mines, fifty thousand acres; for the establishment and maintenance of a deaf and dumb asylum, fifty thousand acres; for the establishment and maintenance of a reform school, fifty thousand acres; for establishment and maintenance of State normal schools, fifty thousand acres; for establishment and maintenance of an institution for the blind, fifty thousand acres. The United States penitentiary near Salt Lake and all lands and appurtenances connected therewith and set apart and reserve therefor are hereby granted to the State of Utah.

The said State of Utah shall not be entitled to any further or other grants of land for any purpose than as expressly provided in this act; and the lands granted by this section shall be held, appropriated and disposed of exclusively for the purposes herein mentioned, in such manner as the legislature of the State may provide.

Sec. 14. That all lands granted in quantity or as indemnity by this act shall be selected under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior from the surveyed, unsurveyed, and unappropriated public lands of the United States within the limits of the said State of Utah. And there shall be deducted from the number of acres of land donated by this act for specific objects to said State the number of acres therein heretofore donated by Congress to said Territory for similar objects. None of the lands granted under this act shall be sold except at public sale, and for not less than five dollars an acre; but the State may lease any of the lands for periods of not more than five years, under such regulations as may be provided by the laws of the State.

Sec. 15. That the State of Utah shall constitute one judicial district, which shall be called the district of Utah, and the circuit and district courts thereof shall be held at the capital of said State for the time being. The judge of said district shall receive a yearly salary of five thousand dollars, payable monthly, and shall reside in this district. There shall be appointed clerks of said courts, who shall keep their offices at the capital of said State. There shall be appointed for said district one district judge, one United States attorney, and one United States marshal. The regular terms of said courts shall be held at the place aforesaid on the first Monday in April and the first Monday in November in each year. For judicial purposes the district of Utah shall be attached to the eighth judicial circuit, and only one grand jury and one petit jury shall be summoned in both of said courts.

Sec. 18. That the circuit and district courts for the district of Utah and the judges thereof, respectively, shall possess the same powers and jurisdiction and perform the same duties possessed and required to be performed by the other circuit and district courts and judges of the United States, and shall be governed by the same laws and regulations.

Sec. 17. That the marshal, district attorney, and clerks of the circuit and district courts of the said district of Utah, and all other officers and other persons performing duty in the administration of justice therein, shall severally possess the powers and perform the duties lawfully possessed and required to be performed by similar officers in other districts of the United States, and shall, for the services they may perform, receive the same fees and compensation allowed by law to other similar officers and persons performing similar duties.

Sec. 18. That the convention herein provided for shall have the power to provide, by ordinance, for the transfer of actions, cases, proceedings, and matters pending in the supreme or district courts of the Territory of Utah at the time of the admission of the said State into the Union to such courts as shall be established under the constitution to be thus formed, or to the circuit or district court of the United States for the district of Utah; and no indictment, action or proceeding shall abate by reason of any change in the courts, but shall be proceeded with in the State or United States courts according to the laws thereof respectively. That all cases of appeal or writ of error heretofore prosecuted and now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States upon any record from the supreme court of said Territory, or that may hereafter lawfully be prosecuted upon any record from said court, may be heard and determined by said Supreme Court of the United States; and the mandate of execution or of further proceedings shall be directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to the circuit or district court hereby established within the said State from or to the supreme court of such State, as the nature of the case may require. And the circuit, district and State courts herein named shall, respectively, be the successors of the supreme court of the Territory as to all such cases arising within the limits embraced within the jurisdiction of such courts, respectively, with full power to proceed with the same and award money or final process therein; and that from all judgements and decrees of the supreme court of the Territory, mentioned in this act, in any case arising within the limits of the proposed State prior to admission, the parties to such judgement shall have the same right to prosecute appeals and writs of error to the Supreme Court of the United States as they shall have had by law prior to the admission of said State into the Union.

Sec. 19. That the sum of thirty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to said Territory for defraying the expenses of said convention and for the payment of the members thereof, under the same rules and regulations and at the same rates as are now provided by law for the payment of the Territorial legislature.

Sec. 20. That the constitutional convention may by ordinance provide for the election of officers for a full State government, including members of the legislature and a Representative in the Fifty-third Congress, at the time of the election for the ratification or rejection of the constitution, but the said State government shall remain in abeyance until the State shall be admitted into the Union as proposed by this act. In case the constitution of said State shall be ratified by the people, but not otherwise, the legislature thereof may assemble, organize, and elect two Senators of the United States in the manner now prescribed by the laws of the United States; and the governor and secretary of State of the proposed State shall certify the election of the Senators and Representative in the manner required by law, and when such State is admitted into the Union as provided in this act, the Senators and Representative shall be entitled to be admitted to seats in Congress and to all the rights and privileges of Senators and Representatives of other States in the Congress of the United States; and the State government formed in pursuance of said constitution, as provided by the constitutional convention, shall proceed to exercise all the functions of State officers; and all laws in force made by said Territory at the time of its admission into the Union shall be in force in said State, except as modified or changed by this act or by the constitution of the State, and the laws of the United States not locally inapplicable shall have the same force and effect within the said State as elsewhere within the United States.

Sec. 21. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act, whether passed by the legislature of said Territory or by Congress, are hereby repealed.

PLENTIFUL CACHE.

The battle of the wheat throughout this great cereal valley is now in active progress. The grain warriors are attacking the golden harvest and so immense is the labor that not only is the day consumed, but the entire night has been made available by the light of the moon to complete the conquest of the precious store. Thirty-five years ago the coming fall your humble writer was one of six hundred men, who though armed, were not all dressed in uniform, yet "looked like men of war," marched from Ogden City to "Box Elder," now called Brigham City, and passing through Box Elder canyon came out upon the beach land above what is now called Wellsville. The great majority of the command for the first time saw this grand valley in the hush of quiet solitude, but the look of surprise found expression in words of admiration as we gazed upon its great length, and contemplated what its future might unfold, should it become the habitation of man.

This was at the period of the "Utah War," when, by reason of the scarcity of "store goods" the variegated colors of our patched outer clothing formed a study for human optics, amusing and ludicrous in the extreme. The wonderful transformation that has taken place in the appearance of the valley since the period alluded to, the immense tracts of land brought under cultivation, land heretofore regarded as worthless because of the want of water supply, now dry farmed, yields abundantly its thousands of bushels of the choicest wheat. Even high up on the upper benches, where no one ever expected or could have believed that grain could be produced, now affords a plentiful yield of wheat of the finest quality without irrigation. The people of Lewiston and Preston occupy an extensive country, living on their farms with dwelling houses about a mile apart, which seems to me rather unsocial and not calculated to engender those kindly amenities of social life which a closer relationship would afford. From a religious standpoint people so widely separated may not feel the liveliest interest in regard to attending their meetings, and hence may become stunted in their spiritual growth. From their geographical positions, both Lewiston and Preston will undoubtedly become in time the centres of vast populations, but this can only be effected, in the opinion of the writer, by a division of the extensive lands now held by comparatively few persons. The town part of both settlements contain but few houses, and when one contemplates how far apart people live in general way, it may be called a country of magnificent distances. The soil is a sandy loam and of excellent quality, producing small fruits and vegetables to a great extent without irrigation. The people of Preston are erecting a fine large rock building to be used as a college similar to the Brigham Young colleges of Logan and Provo.

The people of Preston are antcipating having a United States Experimental Agricultural Station established in their town, and also that Preston may be made the county seat.

GEORGE W. CROCHERON.

LEWISTON, Cache County, Aug. 9th.

THE LEHIGH VALLEY STRIKE.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 17.—At one o'clock this (Wednesday) morning the Central switchmen abandoned all work in the freight yards. This adds reinforcements to the Lehigh and Erie strikers, and a police escort was sent out to bring in the Lake Shore train, due here at 1:40 a.m.

The switch tenders in the Central passenger yard and train houses are included in the strike. This means not a man on the Central, employed as a switchman, is at work.

The West Shore men will go out tonight. Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh have already gone out despite the fact that THEIR TERMS WERE ACCORDED TO. At this hour the firemen are hounding the engines in the round house and all hands are idle in the yards. There is no disturbance but every trainman seems to be determined on his course of action. The strikers say this does not measure the possible extent of the strike. The strike was ordered by the Switchmen's union and is the result of trouble on the Erie and Lehigh roads.

An enormous amount of traffic will be tied up by the strike as it will, no doubt, involve the West Shore and Lake Shore roads and perhaps all the lines in Buffalo. Delaware Lackawanna and Western switchmen will probably not remain long at work handling freight from the lines named.

The strike is extending and may be far reaching in its consequence and disastrous to the business community. Plenty of troops will be massed here by daylight this morning.

One switchman said the switchmen on the West Shore road would go out tonight. Those on the other roads will be sure to follow in due time. The Lake Shore men will go out if asked to handle freight from any of the tied up roads.

Manley C. Greene, Justice of the supreme court at Buffalo, impressed by the gravity of the situation among the striking switchmen, has ordered out the entire fourth brigade of the State militia, consisting of 2000 men, in separate companies, and one battery of artillery.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 16.—This morning at 3 o'clock an attack was made on the stockade at Oliver Springs by miners. Two of the three guards were killed and several miners killed and wounded. This afternoon several companies of militia from Chattanooga were sent to Oliver Springs. They reached there safely, but no news can be had as the rioters cut the wires.

This afternoon a hundred miners, armed with Winchester

TOOK POSSESSION OF A TRAIN on the Knoxville & Ohio road at Coal Creek en route to Canton, where they hoped to be able to increase the reinforcements, but they were too late. The issue is a grave one, for the miners threaten to wreck any train carrying militia.

Tonight the through mail trains could not go forward, and it is believed the United States authorities will interfere. At 10 o'clock tonight sixty-three soldiers left on a special train for the scene of the disturbance. It is difficult tonight to get details, and all sorts of rumors are afloat. Tonight eighty-two miners, all heavily armed, boarded a passenger train at Cow Creek, placed pistols at the heads of the conductor and firemen and made them carry them back to Clinton where the coaches were detached and the passengers left terrified. The miners then blieved on two coal cars and forced the engineer to take them to Oliver Springs. They refused to pay their fare and simply had their own way by outlawry.

At 11 p. m. the wires are up by a roundabout route and news is just begining to come, but slowly. It is now known that the battle was renewed shortly after the Knoxville troops reached the stockade, but the result is unknown. The Chattanooga militia will have to march overland from Harrison to Oliver Springs, a distance of eighteen miles, as the Waltenridge road is planted with dynamite.

A special to the Times at midnight says the stockade at Oliver Springs is still surrounded by a mob wild over the killing of their leader, William G. Brummet of Rockwood, and the wounding of another man.

The militia company from Knoxville reached the village, but it is not known whether they got to the stockade.

No fights have occurred since morning, but the miners are massed near the stockade and swear they will take it tonight.

An authentic bulletin received by the Journal at midnight says the report that a second battle occurred at Oliver Springs is a canard, but reinforcements of miners are arriving, and a battle is expected before morning, before Colonel Woolford's and the Chattanooga militia can reach the stockade, five miles from Oliver Springs.

CHICAGO, Aug. 17.—During a conference in the Switchmen's Union National headquarters last night, at which all the grand officers were present except Grand Master Sweeney, who is in Buffalo, a telegram was received from Sweeney to the effect that the Erie lines and Western New York and Pennsylvania system, two of the great railway systems involved in the switchmen's strike, had acceded to the strikers' demand, leaving only the Lehigh Valley road to fight.

BUFFALO, Aug. 17.—The situation this morning in the great railroad strike is not encouraging. The New York Central switchmen having joined the strikers makes it much more formidable. The Central yards are under picket guard. It is feared the strike will spread to other Vanderbilt lines, Lake Shore, Michigan Central and West Shore. Under order from General Doyle, the entire Fourth United States brigade of the State militia will be concentrated heretoday. All will be needed as the strike covers several miles of territory.

The State board of arbitration here will make strenuous efforts with both parties for a settlement.

Superintendent Voorhes of the New York Central, said to an Associated Press representative this morning, that there was a hundred and fifty men of that line out. They profess to demand shorter hours which the company refused to grant, but they were actually trying to get ten per cent. increase in the pay. This also the company would not grant, as the men were already receiving more than any other men performing a like service on the roads in the State. He added, there has been no delay in the trains and things are in a good shape, because there is no perishable freight in the yards. If given protection by the authorities they would have no difficulty in supplying the strikers' places.

Florence Donovan and Wm. Furrell of the State board of arbitration are in the city and will attempt a conciliation between the railway officials and the men.

The day shift of the West Shore switchmen worked about an hour this morning and then dropped everything where it stood. Their demands are similar to the Central men. The night shift, without doubt, will refuse to work tonight.

General Manager Halstead, of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western has issued imperative orders that no freight will be received from any of the tied-up roads. The fast freight lines are probably the greatest sufferers by the strike. Thousands of dollars' worth of perishable goods are standing on the side tracks and nothing can be done towards forwarding them.

BUFFALO, Aug. 17.—Master Workman Sweeney said this afternoon that the switchmen were not only not to blame for the acts of disorder, but they did not sanction them in any way. Mr. Sweeney said there was a rumor going about that the company had cars set on fire Sunday morning to enlist sympathy and put the switchmen in the hole, and that the burned cars were condemned, and were set on grass-growing sidings and left there to rot. Mr. Sweeney said they considered the militia as friends, but the presence were unnecessary, as the organization was peaceful.

VICE-PRESIDENT WEBB

of the Central said this evening that they intended to run the road and move all trains as usual without employing Pinkertons, but were looking to the State to protect the men.

Although the troops are more comfortable than yesterday, they are complaining bitterly because the railroads do not send passenger coaches out for shelter.

GENERAL DOYLE AND STAFF

were very much occupied all day placing the arriving troops. The picket lines extend about twenty-five miles tonight. Some 2000 men are on the ground under arms.

The strike on the Central increased the work of the military, as its property has to be guarded.

A STRONG GUARD

keeps Queen street closed from the Lackawanna tract north. Today all through the Lehigh Valley yards and Buffalo Creek yards, down to the island and around to the lake shore, everything is almost dead. The companies did not attempt to move any of the long line of cars stifling the switching and sidetracks.

The strikers kept quiet and there is no trouble of any kind. The Lehigh people would not attempt to work because they said there was not enough protection on the ground. Although there has been no trouble they know that if work was attempted trouble would ensue.

The Lehigh expects men to go to work tomorrow in the switchmen's places.

TROUBLE IS THREATENED

at the Erie elevator, which was glutted with grain. Six boats had been used and an attempt made to run down a string of empty cars, but the strikers interfered. Two companies of soldiers were ordered out but when they arrived the attempts of the strikers were given up and nothing was done.

The companies are preparing flat cars to be occupied by sharpshooters and attached to the cow-catcher of each engine for the purpose of protecting the crew.

AT THE CONFERENCE

of the railroad men with the sheriff this afternoon it was decided to request Governor Flower to call out the national guard. The sheriff deferred sending the message until he could consult with General Dodge.

BUFFALO, Aug. 18.—The sixth day of the switchmen's strike closes with increasing complications. The leaders witnessed the massing of troops with a growing determination to meet every move of their opponents with a counter stroke.

Fully 8,000 troops will be here tomorrow guarding the strikers. The railway officials rely upon the presence of the soldiers to permit them to raise the freight blockade with the non-union men already engaged. As a counter stroke it is considered probable the foremen and trainmen on the lines where the strike now prevails will be called out.

The latest addition of the striking switchmen is ninety men in the nickel plate yards who struck because they were asked to handle boycotted freight. Thus the switchmen upon the entire Vanderbilt system in the trinity are out.

THE STRIKE LEADERS

claim tonight the Vanderbilt system at this point is blockaded and inactive. They claim also that the Erie, Lehigh Valley and Buffalo Creek roads are likewise paralyzed. They do not feel it necessary to call out the men in the allied trades, though the reserve force may possibly be called out of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh and Eastern New York and Pennsylvania switchmen.

The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western, which has already conceded the demands, went still further today and formally notified them that they would not be asked to handle boycotted freight.

There is no doubt that before yielding the fight the leaders will extend the fight west, even to Chicago, and eastward to New York, ultimately calling out perhaps not only the switchmen, but firemen and trainmen. The strikers expect developments in the next three days.

The strikers claim full sympathy on the part of the firemen, whom they state will quit their engines whenever the order reaches them. It is said whenever ordered out, but firemen will probably be first called out.

As to the condition of the tie up the roads officials' statements are strongly contradictory.

Tonight it is claimed by the Central officials that their freight traffic in and out of the East Buffalo yards is progressing without interruption. The Central will tomorrow resume work at the Black Rock and Erie street yards. They estimate that by Monday the freight business will be moving normally.

Preparations of a suggestive character were made today at Felch hospital. Over twenty cots with bedding have been arranged together with several filed stretchers. Several surgeons have signified their intention of assisting the staff should the necessity arise.

The troops are complaining greatly at the way they are treated both as to food and accommodations.

Inspector-General McGrath and Major H. K. H. arrived this afternoon and they will look after the matter and see that the men have proper attention.

ONE OR TWO SKIRMISHES with gathering crowds were reported during the day, but the incidents were not serious. The people gather and taunt and annoy the troops.

Some efforts were made during the day to move trains at the Babcock street crossing of the Erie, but the non-union men refused to work and decamped. One train was finally made up and sent out, but it could not get through the blockade.

BUFFALO, Aug. 19.—Unless new complications develop before tomorrow morning the switchmen's strike will be broken. The railroad companies claim they have sufficient men to operate the roads if proper protection is given them.

Two thousand troops were ordered out, but they, it was claimed, were not sufficient, and 1000 more were ordered and are here, being assigned to duty at all points where the companies feel there might be danger. Tonight every command is assigned to duty. Careful inquiry demonstrated beyond a doubt that the companies have sufficient men to man the roads. To insure the strikers say the men being held in readiness are restrained from liberty; also that the men were bribed to work on Western roads and did not know they were expected to work on tie up roads in Buffalo. If these allegations prove true the men may desert upon the first opportunity. It is not deemed probable, however, that such defections would constitute more than a small minority of those now wanting work.

The Lake Shore road has enough men in the yards tonight to man the usual number of switching engines. The Erie today moved five trains and have in quarters more than the number of men usually employed. The most feature of the strike is what can and will be the next strike of the leaders against the railway interests. Efforts are being made to get the firemen and trainmen to withdraw. The firemen are holding a meeting the outcome of which may be a determination to quit work.

A SECRET MEETING

of five local lodges of firemen was held tonight. About 250 men were in attendance, representing all the lodges in the city, as well as the different roads. The brotherhood was represented by delegates.

As a result of the meeting it can now be said almost certainly that the locomotive firemen of the Lehigh, Erie, Lake Shore, West Shore and Central roads will go out between seven o'clock tomorrow evening and Sunday morning. This was the unanimous decision, as the men were found in favor of declaring a strike on the roads named.

Master Workman Sweeney this evening received a deputation from the Grand Lodge of Switchmen of Pennsylvania. The conference lasted nearly an hour, and it is impossible to learn what transpired. Third Vice-President Webb of the Central said tonight that so far as his road was concerned the strike was entirely over. The only troubles reported during the day were when Yardmaster Barrett tried to bring a string of freight cars to East Buffalo under protection of troops. He was stoned but not seriously injured. No arrests were made and the soldiers did not open fire.

This afternoon the Lehigh and Erie began the resumption of their freight traffic. The Lake Shore has men, and is waiting until they know absolute protection will be rendered, before clearing the yard. Work will be commenced in dead earnest tomorrow. It is clear that while the soldiers are here the roads will be able to resume and continue the freight business. The Erie Company paid off yesterday and the Lehigh & Lackawanna paid their employees today. The officers are apprehensive that if a contest is to come it may fairly be expected tonight. The reason is that with money in their pockets the men, or at least a portion of them, will soon have liquor in their stomachs. The officials fear the cooler heads may not be able to restrain the others and an outbreak may occur.

BUFFALO, Aug. 20.—There need be no more mincing of terms as to the fate of the striking switchmen here while the status which prevails tonight maintains. Unless the labor leaders shall adopt decisive measures in new directions the switchmen in the Buffalo yards will undoubtedly be defeated. They know it themselves, but still cling to the conviction that something will happen. Their faith is on their leaders. They hope the firemen may come out.

This evening a railroad man said: "The engineers and firemen are going out within forty-eight hours. This is positive. I am in a position to know what I am talking about. I feel certain that the engineers and firemen will join the strike, and Erie trainmen are going to quit. They are well organized. The Lehigh trainmen are not well organized and will likely stay at work. The firemen may strike without the consent of Sergeant."

This is the view of an afternoon paper of the switchmen's campaign.

During the afternoon non-union switchmen on the New York Central were all supplied with revolvers and given directions to use them only for self-defense. Manufacturers and business men in the neighborhood of the railroads have taken alarm at the presence of apparent danger and asked the sheriff for protection.

An attempt was made to wreck a Lehigh train near Buffalo Creek this afternoon, but fortunately the train did not leave the track.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Aug. 20.—The blockade at Sayre, Pa., and Waverly, N. Y., was virtually raised today. About 7:30 this morning the ball was set rolling at Waverly when a freight on the Philadelphia & Reading from Sayre was stopped on the switch by strikers. The military were notified and they marched to the railway tracks, formed in line at ten o'clock and marched up to the tracks to clear the crowd. Hundreds of people blocked the tracks and the banks along the railroad, yelling at and geying the military.

The picket line formed, but while they were forming the fire in the engine was mysteriously dumped and pins were pulled. The fire was rebuilt and a policeman turned the switch, as the switchman dared to do it. The train pulled out on the Erie tracks and passed the depot all right, closely followed by a delegation of strikers. Lines of military guarded the train on either side. They soon found that some pins had been pulled and the train stopped again, but eventually got off without further trouble.

Three trains more also passed out between the lines of military and the company claim the blockade is raised. Michael McNamara, leader of the strikers, was arrested this morning on a charge of interfering with the moving of trains and was released on $1000 bail for examination next Tuesday.

BUFFALO, Aug. 21.—Since the resumption of work yesterday the Central has moved more easily than ordinary, and the prospects of the strike arising impeding further progress is hourly diminishing. At Black Rock the embargo on western freight is practically removed and cars held back on the Michigan Central are being shoved across the International bridge in numbers that exceed the ordinary influx. The Erie made the first attempt to start freight out of the Black Rock yards. It sent over another this afternoon. The Central, Erie and Lehigh are all working vigorously.

At East Buffalo the soldiers still patrol all the yards in which there has been trouble and have had to deal more with crowds of spectators who flocked around the yards than with disaffected railroad men during the day. The Lake Shore is moving some freight and made several deliveries to the Central this morning. The Nickel Plate is not attempting to move much but perishable and stock trains.

Past Grand Chief Telegrapher A. D. Thurston of Vincent, Ia., arrived in the city last evening. His visit as nearly as can be learned is to ascertain the local situation and to consult with members regarding the pending trouble. With the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western the trouble is understood to be regarding wages and it has been referred to General manager Halford for approval.

To supply food to non-union men or even soldiers is regarded by those in sympathy with the strikers as a high crime. When the forces in the neighborhood of the Lake Shore tracks on Elk street attempted to get something to eat this morning they were repulsed at many of the doors even though they offered pay for food.

THE CHIEF MILITARY OFFICIALS

Now located here tonight are satisfied that the falling to Buffalo of over half of the National guards of the State was a wise and necessary move. Adjutant-General Porter, with General Doyle and other officers, made a tour of all the military camps today and their observations resulted in the conclusion that the force here, considering the great amount of territory to be guarded, was not excessive. Not only this, but doubt was cast in the minds of all the party whether summoning more troops would not be necessary. General

Porter shook his head when asked how long the troops would remain here. General Doyle today ordered an extra company of militia from Hornsleville. "The firemen have the whole thing in their hands," said a railroad man to an Associated Press correspondent today. "If they go out you will see the greatest strike the world ever knew. It will not be confined to freight trains alone, but passenger trains will be involved. When the firemen go out the engineers will be practically out, too. Chief Engineer Arthur does not believe in strikes, but he will not allow the men to go on the road with green firemen. When they strike the roads will be tied up."

BUFFALO, Aug. 22.—Master Workman Sweeney of the switchmen's order has asked the heads of all other labor organizations allied with the switchmen in railroad work to meet him here. Already Sargent is here, and others are expected tomorrow and next day. Fair judgment leads to the conviction that there will be no concerted abandonment of work by the organizations to be represented in the conference. No conference can possibly occur before Wednesday, while in all likelihood the first session will not be held before Thursday. Meantime speculation may be expected as to whether Sweeney will order out the other switchmen of the west or east, or both.

About fifty men who acted as switchmen for the New York & Pennsylvania road this afternoon ceased work because they were required to handle work from the Central. There are renewed intimations that the switchmen of the Grand Trunk may unite themselves with the strikers. No troops will be withdrawn till time shall have made impossible any further attacks.

General Porter said today that the troops would be ordered home as soon as the situation warranted.

Lake Shore officials report conditions normal.

Thirteen car handlers employed on the Lehigh Trestle on the water front stopped work this afternoon and told the yardmaster they would not resume until the grievances of the switchmen were settled. The men were not dissatisfied with their condition.

BANNOCK STAKE CONFERENCE.

The Bannock Quarterly Conference was held Sunday and Monday, August 14th and 15th at Louisa, Idaho, meeting at ten a. m. and two p. m. each day.

On the stand were: Apostle John H. Smith, President S. B. Young, Stake President T. E. Ricks, and Counselors William F. Rigby and James E. Steele, Patriarch A. E. Hinckley and O. N. Liljequist, President C. O. Card and others.

The reports of the Bishops were all satisfactory. President C. O. Card said there was ample room in the Lord's work for all and no need for anyone to infringe upon another's ground. He counseled all to cultivate the spirit of God, lest, not doing so, we should lose the same.

President S. B. Young discoursed upon the principle of faith, and taking up the history of Joseph Smith, explained the foundation of our faith, which is in harmony with the scriptures, but too simple for some people to accept. Brother Young also spoke in relation to the education of the young, the necessity of cleanliness to prevent disease, keeping the Word of Wisdom and other subjects.

Elder Samuel W. Richards spoke upon the observance of the Sabbath day and the requirements of the Lord that his people should assemble on that day and worship God in spirit and in truth.

Apostle John Henry Smith said to the Latter-day Saints had been given the mission to break into pieces all false systems of religion. The knowledge given to people in former days can be and is given as reasonably in our day. The responsibility of the blood of the world rests upon us, for to us is given the law of life; hence he advised all to be diligent in magnifying their great callings.

The other speakers were Patriarchs A. E. Hinckley and O. N. Liljequist, Stake Counselors Wm. F. Rigby and Jas. E. Steele, who gave many good instructions to the Saints.

The general and Stake authorities were presented and unanimously sustained. Three new Bishops were ordained and set apart to preside over new wards and thirty-four home missionaries were called to travel in the Stake during the next three months.

Benediction by Elder Jas. Gillespie.
JAS. GILLESPIE,
Stake Clerk.

On motion, it was decided to lay the resignation on the table for a time.

THE TENNESSEE WAR.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 17.—Upon arrival of two hundred convicts here this afternoon the story of the surrender of the stockade at the Oliver Springs was learned. Last night some fifteen hundred miners seized three trains, and with drawn Winchester compelled the tralermen to take them to Oliver Springs. The warden of the stockade at Oliver Springs heard of their approach, and when the miners were at least a mile away, he assembled the guards and convicts and marched to the miners and surrendered. This action comes as a great surprise after the defense made last night. The guns of the militiamen were taken from them, and the miners placed the convicts and guards on the train and sent them to Knoxville.

The miners then went to Coal Creek where the men from the whole region congregated. The universal belief is that Coal Creek will be attacked before morning. It is impossible now to reinforce Capt. Anderson at Coal Creek and the whole brunt of the battle will fall on him and his command of 180 men. They have a commanding position, are heavily armed and should give a good account of themselves. The State is thoroughly aroused and men of all classes are ready to join the Law and Order party to aid the military in restoring quiet even at the cost of a few lives. The sheriff of Knox county called for 500 citizens to relieve the miners at Coal Creek. This is under authority of an order from Governor Buchanan and a petition has been sent to the governor asking him to call upon the general government for aid. Governor Buchanan also authorized the sheriff of Hamilton county to raise a posse of 500 men and proceed to Coal Creek.

At midnight the miners at Coal Creek received large reinforcements from Kentucky. The rumor is strong that Governor Buchanan tonight ordered General Anderson to withdraw the troops and come to Knoxville.

NASHVILLE, Aug. 15.—At 8 o'clock this (Thursday) morning a special train with about 100 troops and civilians left for east Tennessee in response to the governor's call for assistance.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—General Grant, acting-secretary of war, said this afternoon that the war department had no information whatever regarding the labor troubles in New York and Tennessee beyond what was furnished by the press dispatches, and no reason to apprehend a call for federal troops for interference in either case.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 17.—The sheriff is summoning every available man to the seat of war. Governor Buchanan has called for 8000 recruits. One thousand are needed from this county.

Various estimates are made as to the number of miners involved in the trouble. The estimates may be greatly exaggerated but the lawbreakers doubtless have a reserve force which will number fully twenty thousand resolute men, and should they break into open rebellion and defy the troops it will prove a very difficult body to handle, familiar as they are with all mountain retreats and passes. Conservative people think they will hesitate to oppose the troops, their main object seeming to be to create sentiment against convict labor. Friends of the miners say the trouble will subside as soon as the miners are rid of the convicts, but most of the citizens feel it will take the whole power of the State and possibly aid from the national government to quell the disturbance. The full force of the State militia does not exceed 2000 men, and they cannot possibly be brought together inside of a week. In the meantime, if the miners persist they will have accomplished their end.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 18.—Late last night, after consultation with Adjutant General Norman and his attorneys, Governor Buchanan ordered all the organized militia in the State to the scene of trouble in the mining region, and made requisitions on the sheriffs of Davidson, Hamilton and Knox counties for posess of a thousand men each; on the sheriffs of Anderson, Roane, Morgan and Marion for five hundred men or more, if they can raise them. The penalty for any sheriff refusing to obey his order, is a term of imprisonment and a fine of ten dollars. All the troops will mass at Chattanooga this morning, and the brigadier-general in command will proceed at once to Knoxville and from there to Coal Creek. The posesses are armed with all sorts of pistols and guns. Two companies of infantry, one battery cannon and two galling guns compose the Asheville troops.

KNOXVILLE, Aug. 18.—This afternoon the court house bell rang the riot call and since then the city has been one large palpitating nerve.

The excitement is intense and beyond description.

At 2 o'clock the wires were cut at Coal Creek and the newspaper men and railroad men knew the last step was about to be taken.

Shortly thereafter the Journal received a bulletin that an attack had been made upon Camp Anderson and from the news obtainable the attack must have been a feeler, as no casualties were reported. In a short time another attack was made, and then a third. In the last, Gatling guns were brought to bear on the miners with deadly effect. Many were killed and wounded.

AT SIX THIS EVENING the alarming news was brought in that Captain Anderson had been captured and was being held a prisoner with guards to prevent a faction from hanging him. The details reported that the capture had not yet been made but it is believed to some extent and will soon be ascertained. The militia, however, is fighting with desperation as they know that capture will be followed by the death of all at the hands of the infuriated mob.

Reinforcements are hurrying northward, but they are few in number, though brave fighters.

AT 8 P. M.

General Carney and the West Tennessee troops had not yet arrived.

It is feared that the little band that left Knoxville this afternoon will be butchered before help can reach it.

This afternoon a posse was summoned by Sheriff Holloway and armed with Winchester rifles. It numbered eighty-five men, among them some of the most prominent business and professional men of the city, and commanded by Major D. A. Carpenter.

The posse was joined by the militia under command of Colonel Woolford, numbering probably a hundred men. The party immediately left for the scene of trouble. At Clinton they were met by a number of citizens of Knoxville, Clinton and Coal Creek who urged that it was absolute madness going forward without reinforcements.

A thousand armed miners, they said, were drawn up upon them as they alighted from the train, and there was dynamite everywhere. Major Carpenter heard them through and then, turning to the men, said:

"Boys, I guess we go on," and they went beyond Clinton. They have not been heard from.

At Clinton the sounds of battle were heard and there is no doubt that deadly fighting raged beyond the mountains.

Thousands of angry and excited men line the streets and curse Buchanan for his weakness and the miners for their meanness. The court house bell is again ringing the riot call and excited people are rushing in that direction, and men volunteering, but there are no arms.

General Carney with four hundred men has just reached Knoxville and

WILL GO IMMEDIATELY TO THE FRONT.

The opinion is growing that an awful loss of life of citizens and innocent men will only be avoided by prompt action of the governor in calling on the president to send federal troops to the scene.

AT ELEVEN O'CLOCK.

KNOXVILLE, Aug. 18.—At this hour the wires are still down and real news is not obtainable. It is known that a majority of Carpenter's Knoxville men reached Oufutt, about five miles from Coal Creek, in safety.

It is possible the first heard of him will be inside Camp Anderson, after a skirmish with the surprised miners.

A courier came into Clinton at 11 o'clock with the news that the firing was kept up all the afternoon, that the Gatling gun was out of condition and

FOUR SOLDIERS KILLED.

No credence was given to this, however.

It now transpires that the firing has been desultory, no such attacks having been made.

The miners claim none of them have been injured, but this is not believed. A report also comes that General Anderson has been removed from the hotel at Coal Creek and that he will be killed tonight. If this proves true the vengeance of the people will be awful. Miners from Kentucky are swarming to Coal Creek, and it is reported they captured a Gatling gun from some militia company and are bringing it with them.

If General Carnes reaches Coal Creek he will open telegraphic connection with Knoxville, having wire, linemen and operators with him.

GENERAL ANDERSON CAPTURED.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Aug. 18.—A special to the Times from the scene of war, filed at 12 m., says the reporter who has been under arrest by the miners since night before last has just escaped. He says the fighting began at 5 o'clock and continued without cessation until 6 o'clock.

During the fight two or three of the leaders of the miners were captured by General Anderson's troops. A truce was raised and the miners told Anderson if he would surrender their leaders they would allow him to return to the fort. He took them and went down among the mob. When out of range of the guns he was captured and not allowed to return.

The leader of the mob is the notorious Bud Lindsay, brother of the United States attorney for this district, who has murdered eight or ten men in his time.

Lindsay put a pistol to Anderson's head and told him he must order his men to surrender or he would shoot him. General Anderson answered by a defiant wave of his hand and a firm "Shoot and be damned," adding that he would never tell his men to surrender. Anderson was then taken to the hotel as a prisoner.

Tonight it is reported that the miners intend to lynch him.

One thousand citizens and soldiers are on their way as reinforcements. They have plenty of ammunition, two Gatling guns and two cannons. They are under command of General Carnes of Memphis, and he declares they will go to Coal Creek tonight or Wednesday morning.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Aug. 18.—Uncertainty no longer marks the condition of things at the seat of war. Fort Anderson has been relieved and is no longer in a state of siege. The tables are turned, and the miners instead of being hunters are hunted. General Carnes' forces reached the neighborhood of the beleaguered camps at daybreak. Wild scenes of confusion ensued. The scouts failed to do their duty and the position of the miners was unknown. A forward movement was cautiously made. General Carnes and a heterogeneous army of citizens and about three hundred militia left the train at Offitt's Station and pushed forward across the country from Offitt's to Coal Creek. By the route taken it is laborious climbing and as laborious a descent. As the column came down the side of the mountain a young man mounted a rock to get a view. A shot rang through the stillness and he fell headlong among his comrades, dead.

The body of miners chose a sheltered rock, which formed a natural defense, and from it fired a volley which caused much havoc. Curiously enough, the miners had taken no other provision to prevent a rear attack. General Carnes advanced his guards at once and formed into charging line, and after receiving the scattering volley from a few who failed to take the first opportunity of escaping, advanced rapidly. Eighteen miners were captured.

Another of the sheriff's posse besides young Waltham, was killed, namely Bush Gliven, of Knoxville. Two miners' bodies were found after the skirmish and several wounded taken in and cared for. With these exceptions the casualties among the miners are unknown.

General Carnes arrested 200 citizens of Coal Creek and told them he would hold them until Captain Anderson returned to him. They delivered him to Carnes alive and well. Carnes is in possession and has plenty of men and ammunition.

COAL CREEK, Aug. 19.—The battle at Coal Creek is at an end. When Major Carpenter turned into the mountains at Offitt's last night with 125 brave men the night was perfectly dark. Although the major is familiar with every bypath in the Black Wilds it was found difficult to keep the direction, as not even the stars were shining. After a while four men appeared and offered to guide the party. Major Carpenter reluctantly accepted the offer, and the march was again taken up and better speed was made. Between 5 and 6 o'clock, while entirely unconscious of danger, the men were fired upon from behind. Miners lay behind a stone ledge. Their broadsides mowed down Volunteers John Waltham and Bush Gliven of Knoxville and wounded Volunteer Tom Carnes also of Knoxville. Major Tom Carpenter wheeled and fought bravely, but a retreat was necessary, they fighting all the way. The volunteers fell back to Clinton, six miles, reaching there at noon.

In the meantime General Carnes had established himself at Offitt's to await daylight. With the first streak of dawn the advance on Coal Creek began. The miners fired over their heads from the mountains so that the bullets could be heard whistling by the soldiers. The soldiers returned the fire. At noon General Carnes captured a band of miners. They were released on their promise to deliver Captain Anderson. At the appointed hour nothing was to be seen of either Captain Anderson or the miners. Then General Carnes entered Coal Creek. There he found that Jewell fighting had been going on between the miners at Fort Anderson.

The miners surrendered at 4:30 p.m. General Anderson was restored to his command and peace declared. After reaching Clinton Major Carpenter's men, although they had not rested for twenty-four hours, went directly by train to Coal Creek and reported to General Carnes as he marched into town.

COAL CREEK, Tenn., Aug. 20.—The troops returned from Bristolville about 6 o'clock. They met with very little resistance. A negro desperado, and miners' sympathizer, who had sworn to kill the first soldier whom he met, offered resistance and was shot dead. A dozen or more bullet holes are in him.

About 125 miners were taken prisoners and brought back, and are now under guard. A miner has just been captured wearing a lieutenant's uniform and a sword. Where he obtained them is a mystery. A full military uniform was also found in the mountains late this afternoon.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., Aug. 20.—When the convicts at Inman were liberated by the miners last Monday, Judge Moon, who is holding court, called the grand jury and charged them. Although there were three miners on the jury indictments were returned against every man who was known to have participated in the raid on the stockade at Inman. The sheriff declined to serve the warrants and the deputy sheriff was ordered to serve them. The indicted men say they will resist arrest and it is thought a large force will be necessary to capture them.

COAL CREEK, Tenn., Aug. 21.—It has been a quiet day. Nothing transpired of startling significance. Beyond the snoring of alleged crows and an occasional arrest by scouting parties, there has been nothing worthy of note at the seat of war. Rumors come from perfectly reliable sources that Bud Lindsay, the noted desperado who killed half a dozen men and was in favor of lynching General Anderson day before yesterday, will be lynched before morning. Lindsay is deputy United States marshal. Warden Gammon expressed the opinion this afternoon that the trouble is not yet over, but on the contrary, a majority of resident citizens say there will be no further trouble until the troops are withdrawn. Searching parties are scouring the mountain sides for a radius of six or eight miles and brought in several prisoners. An important arrest was made in the person of A. J. Semmons. Everything is quiet at present.

Tonight about 10 o'clock a party of citizens through stratagem secured the notorious Bud Lindsay, who has been a prisoner here for the last two days, from the guards and conducted him up the valley towards Bristolville, a few miles south of this place, for the purpose of lynching him. They were fully determined and would undoubtedly have carried out their plan but for the pitiable pleadings of Lindsay and his solemn promise to go with the troops and point out every man in the mountains who is implicated in the late miners' troubles. His life was spared on this condition. He was brought back to Coal Creek and will be used to identify outlaws.

WESLEY SPRING, Wis., Aug. 21.—Andy Gardner and W. C. Jones, members of the amalgamated association who deserted the strikers at the steel works and returned to work, were attacked by fifteen men supposed to be members of the amalgamated association late last night near the city. Five shots were fired. Clubs and knives were freely used. Before the police arrived the assailants had disappeared. Jones was cut and beaten until insensible. Gardner is missing and undoubtedly dead.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 21.—General Carnes telegraphed the governor today that on Monday the trials of all the prisoners against whom cases could be made out would be begun before a civil magistrate at Clinton, and Adjutant-General Norman replied: "Procure the best counsel obtainable and send all prisoners bound over to Knoxville jail for safe keeping."

CALIFORNIA'S BOUNDARIES.

The sundry civil bill, passed during the closing hours of the last session of Congress, contains an appropriation of $15,500 for the re-survey of the eastern boundary line of California, from Lake Tahoe to the Colorado river. It is said that this sum will not be sufficient for the completion of the survey, but work will be commenced immediately, notwithstanding. According to the San Francisco Chronicle California will gain from Nevada a strip of land over half a mile wide and 400 miles long, comprising in area 100 square miles of territory. The projected survey will definitely and permanently fix the boundary line.

The boundary line as defined by law starts from the center of the channel of the Colorado at a specified degree of latitude, and runs northwest a distance of 406 miles to where the thirty-ninth parallel of latitude intersects the 120th meridian, which intersection, it is supposed, takes place in the center of Lake Tahoe; thence the boundary is the 120th meridian to the Oregon line. It will be marked all the way by a chain of iron posts.

The line has been located once already and considerable money expended on the work, but it was not generally accepted as correct. The United States Coast and Geodetic survey will perform the new measurement. The old monuments will be reset according to the calculations of the new surveyors, and these will be final. California has always had troubles over her boundaries on every side except on the western. This will be obviated in future.

THE UNIVERSITY OF UTAH.

THE University of Utah, better known by its former and more euphonious title of the University of Deseret, will re-open on the 12th of September when applications for admission may be made. The University is open to students of both sexes over 16 years of age who can pass an examination or who have a certificate from another establishment of equal standing. The examination will of course be according to the studies that pupils desire to take. Particulars can be learned from the catalogue of the institution which can be obtained on application to D. R. Allen, the secretary of the Faculty. The entrance fee for residents of Utah is $5, for others $25.

The Departments are five in number, viz: the Department of Liberal Arts, of General Science, of Letters, of Mining and the Normal Department. These are under the direction of competent Professors engaged by the Board of Regents and selected for their special qualifications and talents. It is known that Dr. Park has resigned the office of President which he held so many years with such ability and success as have permanently identified his name with that of the University. Prof. Joseph T. Kingbury has been appointed as acting President. He is not only celebrated for his skill and erudition in chemistry and physics, but esteemed for his many qualifications as an instructor and pleasant manner.

of the establishment is the Normal Department under Professor Wm. M. Stewart. In this department ladies and gentlemen who desire to become teachers receive the training which is essential to success in that profession. More teachers are needed in the Territory. Competent persons have no difficulty in obtaining schools. The University is turning out many every year who are thus qualified. We are importing teachers for Utah schools simply because there are not enough graduates from our own University to fill the demand. Young men and women who are ambitious to engage in the honorable profession of pedagogy should avail themselves of the opportunities afforded them by our home institutions, among which is the University of Utah, which has a model training school connected with the Normal Department.

The University has a fine and commodious building and possesses great advantages for students. Its library, apparatus, art gallery cabinet and other accessories offer special facilities in the acquirement of a thorough education. The Deaf Mute Department has a separate building and is in a flourishing condition.

The prospects of this institution are excellent. It is becoming famous not only in Utah but in the surrounding States and Territories, and as an establishment of learning is a monument to the enterprise of the early settlers here, by whom it was founded, and of the progressive spirit of the people of the present time. Judge Robert Harkness is the Chancellor, who with the other Regents is heartily interested in promoting its welfare. We are pleased to see the prosperity which attends the University of Utah and expect to see it rank at no distant day with the very foremost educational institutions of the country.

IMPORTANT TO VOTERS.

THE general election in the Territory this year will take place on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November. The registration for that election is now in progress. It ought to be thorough and complete. The lists should be purged of all names upon it that are not lawfully there. The names of all legal voters that have been omitted ought to be duly registered. Every voter should see for himself that his name is on the list.

It is to be presumed that the registration this year will be fairly conducted, as in many instances a different class of men will act as registration officers. It is very important that the election shall be fair and full, and the free expression of the will of the lawful voters of the Territory. This cannot be assured without a clean, correct and complete registration. Every good citizen ought to do what he can to secure this.

We do not believe that respectable Republicans or Democrats desire any unfair proceedings in reference to the approaching election. As to the "Liberals," we know what they have done in the past and voters should be on their guard in the present and for the future. There will be a great struggle throughout the Territory to capture the office of Delegate to Congress. Each party will do its utmost to gain that end. In this county there will be a big fight for the local offices. No person can make his influence count for very much who has no vote, and no one can vote who is not registered. Therefore, see to it, voters, that your names are not omitted from the registration lists, and if the registrar does not find you be sure that you find the registrar.

During the week commencing on the second Monday in September, the registration officer in each county is required by law, at his office to enter on the registry list the name of any voter that may have been omitted, on such voter appearing and taking the oath provided by the statute. It would be better for voters to get their names on the list during the hours to house visitations of the registrar. But all should take pains, when the time appointed comes, to see whether their names have been omitted and that all errors are corrected. The names must be correctly spelled and the proper initials given.

The registration for the last city election is not sufficient. This is the registration for the territorial, county and precinct election. New-comers who have been in the Territory six months and the precinct thirty days, should be registered if they are adult citizens. Young men who have arrived at their majority recently should be registered. And voters who have removed from one precinct to another should have their names properly transferred, because every voter must cast his ballot in the precinct where he resides.

There are important matters. We hope the registrars will do their duty. And we trust that all legal voters will take interest enough in good government to see that we have a clean and complete registration, and then a free election which shall express the wishes of the majority of the citizens.

IS HE A HYPOCRITE OR A MARTYR.

NEW YORK has a sensation in the religious line. Edward De Coblain, who was expelled from the British House of Commons about a year ago, is now in Gotham. He is making quite a noise as a Methodist revivalist. De Coblain was at one time city treasurer of Belfast, Ireland. In that town he was known as a most exemplary citizen. In religion he was known as a Perfectionist, and was an enthusiastic worker in organizing Sunday schools and establishing congregations of his creed. He was even known as "the workman's friend," and organized several clubs for the advancement and elevation of laboring classes. He has large property interests in Belfast, and it is said that in his time he was a generous and liberal donor to all charitable institutions. When he announced himself as a candidate for Parliament on the conservative ticket he had a walk over.

Early in 1891 rumors of a dark character got into circulation about him in the House of Commons. That body talked of an investigation. It was soon discovered that De Coblain had fled to France. The charges then became common gossip, and the Belfast Election Committee called on him to come and meet the charges. He replied by saying that under God's guidance he was prompted to fly. He left immediately, disrobed, his representative, and the House of Commons ordered the expulsion of DeCobain for gross and immoral conduct.

DeCobain fled from France to Spain, thence to the United States. In New York he made the acquaintance of prominent Methodists. He went to gatherings and spoke fervently and earnestly, until he became a recognized church power. His identity was not fully known to the public, though it was to his immediate friends. At a revival meeting a few nights ago, he preached and sang with such fervor and force that he became the lion of the hour. Women and men flocked around him to shake his hand. Then his full identity was made known. He gave a sort of exhibition of the charges made against him, which was accepted, and he is now the guest of Godham's most prominent Methodists, and regarded as a persecuted man.

THE CONVICT CONTRACT SYSTEM.

THE recent troubles in Tennessee can be traced directly to the system of leasing convicts which prevails in that State. This business has been a bitter issue for some time with labor organizations, and also with manufacturers. The wage workers claim that it degrades labor, disturbs wage rates and creates a sort of general disorder all around. The capitalists who cannot lease convicts claim that those who do can undersell them in the market; hence in certain industries the convict and the honest citizen are competitors.

The present condition of the copper trade in Chicago affords a fair illustration of the situation as regards the convict as a factor in production. The penitentiary of Joliet and Michigan city are immense institutions. The convicts there are not leased out as in Tennessee, but they are leased to contractors for whom the work is performed within the prison walls. For some time contractors in the copper trade have been turning out work for the Chicago markets. At first private master-coopers tried to compete with the prison-made article, and of course had to reduce wages, until at present the best tradesman in the city can only make $1.20 per day. A day's work for a first class worker is supposed to be about six large jars, for which he gets twenty cents each. The same kind of barrels can be turned out at Joliet for four and a half cents each. The result is that convict prices now rule, and twenty master-coopers with six hundred journeymen in Chicago alone can not even get full employment at twenty cents a barrel.

The daily product at Joliet is estimated at 1200 barrels. The convicts are paid about 55 cents each a day. The output at Michigan city is put at 2000 barrels daily. Before this prison contract system was introduced journeymen coopers were paid about 35 cents a barrel, which would produce about $2.10 a day. When it is remembered that this contract business also obtains in shoemaking, chair-making and various other industries, it is little wonder that disorder sometimes prevails.

What renders the prison contract system specially odious in Illinois is the fact that it is being carried on in defiance of law, as the following appeal of the coopers will show:

"To the Pork and Beef Packers of Chicago."

"Gentlemen—We desire to call your attention to the fact that the XXXIVth General Assembly of Illinois (in 1885) submitted the following constitutional amendment to the people of this State for their ratification or rejection: 'Resolved, That hereafter it shall be unlawful in the State of Illinois to let by contract to any person or persons or corporation the labor of any convict confined within said institution.' At the general election Nov. 2, 1887, the above amendment was voted on by the people of Illinois and adopted by a majority of over 19,000 votes. On Nov. 22 of the same year the vote was canvassed and the Governor issued his proclamation declaring such amendment to be a part of the constitution of the State. It is now seven years since the XXXIVth General Assembly passed the above joint resolution and nearly five years since the amendment was ratified and declared to be the organic law of Illinois. Notwithstanding this no regard has been paid by our State officials to its existence. In consequence of this the cooperator interests of this city have become so depressed that many of our houses are on the verge of bankruptcy, while the journeymen coopers have been unable to sustain their families in ordinary comfort.

"With these facts before you, we are slow to believe that the packers of Chicago are determined to aid in continuing this illegal and monstrous competition of convict labor against a body of our people who have any claim on society for a fair opportunity to make an honest living and support their families in conformity with the usages of civilized life. That we are growing restless and considering ways and means by which this outrage can be stopped is quite natural.

"After due consideration we have concluded that the wisest course to be pursued is to ask a conference with the packers and see whether by mutual consent we can form an agreement by which prison-made coopers will be excluded from the Union stock yards. Hoping that you will give this your favorable consideration, we remain, very respectfully,

"THE COMMITTEE OF JOURNEMEN COOPERS."

In this appeal there is nothing anarchistic, impertinent or intemperate. It shows that the anarchy is on the part of the capitalist and the constituted authority.

DEATH OF C. M. HARROCKS.

Catherine Macswell Harrocks, widow of the late Peter Harrocks, died at 10:45 a.m. today, August 18th, at the residence of her son, Elder W. B. Dougal, 49 north West Temple street, of general weakness superinduced by old age. Deceased was born in Dumblane, Perthshire, Scotland, October 8, 1808.

Sister Harrocks embraced the Gospel in 1858, in Aughton, Lancashire, England, and emigrated to Utah in 1855. She passed through the various trials and vicissitudes incidental to life in Utah in early times, with cheerfulness and unswerving integrity to the truth. She rejoiced in the principles of the Gospel when first heard and accepted them with a devoted and honest heart, cheerfully leaving friends and all former ties, to comply with the duty she felt resting upon her to gather to the body of the Church. She was an unobtrusive earnest worker, diffusing joy and comfort in the hearts of all who knew her, and was one of nature's truly noble women. Her unselfishness and her charity for the weaknesses of others were among her conspicuous characteristics. She has gone to join the Host of the pure and righteous who have preceded her and finally to enjoy the Celestial Kingdom of God. Sister Harrocks had been a widow for over 26 years.

RETURNED ELDERS.

This morning we received a pleasant call from Elder John D. Williams, of Kanran, Iron County. He returned yesterday from a mission to England, to fill which he left here on September 2nd, 1890. He labored during his absence in the Welsh Conference. His in connection with his fellow missionaries, endeavored diligently to spread the Gospel, but the people generally manifested marked indifference to their message. Very few accepted it. Elder Williams returns in good health.

This morning we received a call from Elder Joshua B. Bean, of this city, who returned on Saturday from a mission to England. He left home on September 3rd, 1890. On arriving at Liverpool he was appointed to labor in the Leeds Conference, during the first ten months as Traveling Elder and the remainder of the time as President of the Conference. He and the other brethren associated with him were more than usually successful, for these times. During the present year twenty-one additions were made to the Church. The conference covers a large extent of country and requires much traveling on the part of the Elders. Most of the proselyting has to be done in a private way, as the people, as a rule, are too indifferent to attend public meetings. Elder Bean returns in good health, well pleased with the experience he has derived from his mission.

RELIGIOUS.

Sunday Services.

Religious services were held in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Aug. 14, 1892, commencing at 2 p.m.; Counselor Charles W. Penrose presiding. The choir sang the hymn beginning:

God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform.

Prayer was offered by Elder Theodore Curtis.

The choir next sang the hymn:

He died, the great Redeemer died,
And Israel's daughters wept around.

The Priesthood of the Second Ward administered in the ordinance of the Sacrament.

ELDER JAMES E. TALMAGE

was the speaker. He referred, in the outset, to the fact that the Elders of this Church are called upon to speak on occasions like the present without any previous notice, so that no time for preparation of what they had to say was afforded them. Hence it followed that they could not as a rule demonstrate to the congregation assembled great powers of oratory as the result of careful study and a critical selection of topics, words and sentiments. Yet he himself could call to mind many instances when he had heard men stand up and speak, in their weakness, words of mighty strength. It had been his fortune to go into a number of the greatest and grandest edifices of worship which had been erected by man, and there listen to sermons the outcome of men's most earnest and profound study of theological matters, and religious music by trained choirs. He offered no criticism upon any special form of worship or upon the grandeur of some of the buildings in which services were conducted; he would only say such ceremonies as were observed therein had been known under the name of the worship of God.

It was not necessary in order to worship our Father acceptably that we should assemble in buildings erected at great cost. As the people of old offered their sacrifices, their prayers and devotions unto Him in the wilderness, upon the desert sand, and they were acceptable in His sight, so in modern times His people had gathered in his convocation in the woods and upon the prairies of this great land. He had there met with them, as every true heart knew, and His blessing rested upon them. Need we doubt, therefore, in a congregation of this kind, if we put away from our hearts all things that were worldly and wicked, that the same blessings were within our reach?

This one day of the week upon which we assembled together should suggest unto us holy things. Its very name—the Sabbath day—indicated such. Upon this particular day, throughout the length and breadth of the whole and, inhabited by professing Christians, we found congregations gathered together for the acknowledged and avowed purpose of worshipping God. Yet there was a growing disposition among the people of the world to disregard, to a very great extent, the sanctity of the Sabbath.

Let them ask themselves for what purpose was the Sabbath instituted and why had they been called upon to meet together on that day, to offer their prayers and supplications unto God in humility and singleness of heart? The first reference he knew of regarding the institution of this day was by the Creator himself, after having spent six days in making the world and bringing it into a condition in which it could be occupied by man. We were told that He rested upon the seventh day and hallowed it. So careful was the Lord of this day that He himself had set apart, that even down to the time in which we live He had given unto His people laws of language that could not be misunderstood relative to its holy observance. The longest of all the commandments which the Lord gave to Moses, and the one which in our translation occupied the greatest space, was the one beginning with the words "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." This command the speaker read in full. Remark upon the words "hallowed it," he asked what was meant by that? To hallow a day or time was to sanctify it, to render it holy, to set it apart for some special service in the Almighty's cause. Here, then, was the Lord's own mighty declaration that the Sabbath was the day to be hallowed unto His service. On many occasions did He speak unto His people in Israel telling them His purpose in establishing this day, explaining to them the benefits which would result from a conscientious observance of this day, and also the penalties which would follow the willful disregard and neglect of His requirements thereon.

Elder Talmage quoted the thirteenth verse of Exodus, xxxi:

Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you.

What did the Lord mean by declaring that the observance of the Sabbath day was a sign between Him and His people? He had ever delighted in giving signs whereby His people would be distinguished from all others. What He said in comparatively modern times compared with this day—the day when the Savior Himself stood upon the earth and gave instructions to His disciples to go forth and preach the Gospel to every creature—"And these signs shall follow them that believe"—thus establishing certain symbols by which the observer could recognize between the true and the false churches. Here, then, was a sign established from very early days that His people should observe the seventh day and keep it holy. The great Creator himself, after making the world in six days, rested on the seventh day; and He wrote in all the writings that detailed the doings of God with men a single instance in which our Heavenly Father had asked us to do one thing which He himself had not set the example in? Before establishing the Sabbath for His people He observed it himself, sanctified it, and gave it as a pattern to the world and all who should live upon it.

This keeping holy the Sabbath day became something more than a mere form; we knew this in the terrible penalties that God established by way of punishment for those of His recreant children who would not obey His commandment.

Ye shall keep the sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you: every one that doeth it shall surely be put to death; for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: whosoever doeth any work on the sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death.

This law was not to be a dead letter, not given simply to be placed on the statute book and know no enforcement. While the children of Israel were in the wilderness they found a man who gathered sticks on the Sabbath day; they brought him unto Moses and Aaron and all the congregation; he was stoned without the camp, and died, as the Lord commanded Moses. The Sabbath breaker then, was in those days deemed worthy of death.

The speaker cited various other passages from Holy Writ bearing on the subject of hallowing the Sabbath day, and went on to remark that many persons who did not understand the principles upon which the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was founded found fault with their professions that they could receive continual revelation. These people asserted that continued revelation might, in many instances, contradict and set at naught revelations which had been received before. All such criticism should be always answered by the request that they would point out one single instance in which the Lord had ever given a revelation contrary to necessity. Elder Talmage read from the revelation given through the Prophet Joseph Smith in Jackson County, Missouri, August 7th, 1831, (Doctrine and Covenants, Sec. 59, verses 9 to 13.)

And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go up to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day;

For verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High.

Nevertheless, thy vows shall be offered up in righteousness on all days and at all times;

But remember that on this the Lord's day thou shalt offer thine oblations and thy sacraments unto the Most High, confessing thy sins unto thy brethren, and before the Lord.

And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect, or, in other words, that thy joy may be full.

Let the Latter-day Saints hear and understand this for their own benefit. The Great Lawgiver had thus re-enacted or re-stated that law of hallowing the Sabbath, lest some of them might now say that it pertained only to the days of the Israelites—to former times. If they failed now to observe that law, the signs which had been established between God and His people would depart.

But upon looking abroad in the world we saw that the people had come to regard the Sabbath day as one of pleasure. Theatres, opera houses, and many places of far worse repute were kept glaringly open on that day in many of the great cities of this land—this land which had such need to acknowledge the hand of God—this nation which had been raised up by His hand—this nation whose independence was founded upon a Declaration which partook of all the nature of an inspired document. The people were running away and forgetting altogether the Sabbath of the Lord their God.

Coming nearer home, among those who called themselves the Saints of latter-days, did we find a growing disposition to look upon the Sabbath day with reverence? Places of pleasure, resorts for amusement—and in many cases for unhallowed and ungodly amusement—were kept open, and the people were tempted to go into the canyons, to the lakes, and turn these natural blessings and great beauties of the land to their own detriment and destruction. They desecrated the Sabbath of the Lord their God and trod under foot the mighty statutes which He had established as the sign between himself and his people, making His great day like unto other days, neglecting his sanctuary and forgetting they are the people who professed to be the Saints of the living God. What was it to be a Saint? It was to be a holy one of the Lord, and He had always been jealous of Holy ones—be they men or things, places or days. Let them think of what they were doing by dragging down into the mire of commonplace things this holy day. The Lord would not allow such trifling with holy things to go unpunished, and he sometimes felt that we were scarcely better than the impious king Belshazzar, who at his unrighteous feast beheld "the writing on the wall." He had thought, at times, that some of them who were so neglectful of this holy day should fear lest the hand should be seen tracing on the wall the words which spoke their punishment and doom, because they had desecrated the holy things of God.

In conclusion the speaker besought his hearers to beware and live more godly lives, keeping inviolate those signs or symbols by which the Saints of God might be distinguished from those who claimed not to be. His people. Let them lead true Christian lives and seek every day to demonstrate unto Him that they deserved the fond name which He had applied to them—His children.

COUNSELLOR CHARLES W. PENROSE said he desired while the choir was preparing to render the anthem to add a few words to the remarks of Elder Talmage. Not only should the Latter-day Saints keep the Sabbath day holy and refrain from going on excursions to places of public resort, but they should teach their children to observe this day and walk uprightly before the Lord; for so had God commanded. He would ask his brethren and sisters, the fathers and mothers in Israel, to use all the influence they possessed to induce their children to keep the Sabbath day holy. Parents in Zion should also exercise a careful watch over the young, especially at night. He had been informed that, on the late bathing trains, a great many of our young people when returning conducted themselves in a very improper manner, the daughters of Latter-day Saints mingling with strangers, persons of loose character, and acting in a way which was a disgrace to the name they bear. As one called to watch over the people of the Lord in this vicinity, he begged of his brethren and sisters to see that when their children went out on pleasure they returned home at the proper time. It was a bad thing for boys and girls to be away on pleasure excursions till nearly midnight. It was not good either for their health or their morals. He had no objection to amusement. On the contrary, he believed in proper and innocent recreation for both old and young, more particularly for the youth. But recreation should be so conducted that no harm could come from it. Parents were not able to accompany their children in their recreations, they should see that some one had charge of them who could exercise influence over their actions, in order that they might return home at proper seasons. Teach them to conduct themselves aright. He would ask the young ladies, whenever they went out on pleasure trips to comport themselves with that modesty and decorum which became respectable people, to say nothing about Latter-day Saints. It was not considered proper anywhere for young ladies to act in the way some conducted themselves when out for pleasure. They should be modest and chaste in their manner as well as in their acts and words. He hoped the young people would take a lesson from what he had said, so that such admonitions need not be reiterated; for on the rising generation in Zion depended the future glory of Israel. May God help us to understand our responsibilities in this and other respects.

The choir sang the anthem: "Glorious is Thy Name, Almighty Lord." The benediction was pronounced by Elder John Morgan.

TOBACCO.

Looking over my notes accumulated during rambles in America and Europe, I find the following valuable discovery made by a celebrated physician of Great Britain, which may prove a voice of warning to some young men of Utah who are being thoughtlessly led into a bad habit by the examples set before them by many of the new comers as well as the older residents of Utah.

With the earnest hope that, at least a few of the intelligent lads of Utah may take the warning and cease the evil habit of the use of tobacco. I pen the following scrap:

A certain doctor, struck with the large number of boys under fifteen years of age whom he observed smoking, was led to inquire into the effect which the habit had upon the general health. He took for this purpose thirty-eight persons aged from nine to fifteen, and carefully examined them.

In twenty-seven of these he discovered injurious traces of the habit. In twenty-two there were various disorders of blood, circulation and digestion, palpitation of the heart, and a taste, more or less, for strong drink. In twelve there were frequent bleedings of the nose, ten had disturbed sleep, and twelve slight ulceration of the mucous membrane, which disappeared on the use of tobacco ceasing for some days. The doctor treated them all for weakness, but with little effect until the smoking was discontinued, when health and strength were soon restored.

Now, this is no "old wife's tale," for the foregoing facts are given under good authority.

Quite recently, while at Logan Temple, I met a brother and his wife from Santaquin, Utah County, Utah, who thanked me for kind words on the subject of the Word of Wisdom, as found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, Sec. 89, p. 821, verse 8: "And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for brutes, and all such cattle, to be used with judgment and skill." Verse 18: "And all Saints who remember to keep and do these sayings, walking in obedience to the commandments, shall receive health in their navel and marrow to their bones."

The gentleman from Santaquin I have forgotten, and here make the request that if this meets his observation he will communicate the particulars to my address, 118 S. First West street, Salt Lake City, Utah. In his thanks he remarked that the lecture at Santaquin, twenty-two years ago, on the subject of the bad habit of using tobacco, struck him so forcibly that when he returned home from the meeting he resolved, before his wife, that by the help of God he would quit the filthy habit as one of the mistakes of his boyhood days. He also said that although so attached to the long use of the "weed," he was enabled to keep his resolution, and that his health, appetite, and spirits were ever so much improved by the small sacrifice made.

While in Mexico last May, at the Palmito Hotel, the proprietor offered me, out of complaisance, a cigar. This I refused, saying that I was either unfortunate or fortunate in not smoking. "Very fortunate, sir," was the reply. The hotel clerk informed me that the proprietor had, in times of deep thought, smoked two ounces of cigarettes before "letting up." I saw the latter walking with his staff a corpulent and broken down, though comparatively young man.

The Southern States is one of the worst places I ever came across for inveterate users of tobacco—both men and women; but I am constrained to believe that Mexico takes the lead in the tobacco line.

EDWARD STEVENSON.
SALT LAKE CITY, August 15, 1892.

DEATH OF SISTER M. N. ALLRED.

Melissa Norton Allred was born in New Lisbon, State of Indiana, December 23rd, 1824. She was the daughter of David and Elizabeth Norton and wife of P. H. Allred. She died July 26th, 1892. Her grandfather fought in the Revolutionary war, under General George Washington. She, with her parents, joined the Church in an early day and moved from Indiana when twelve years old to the State of Missouri, in President A. O. Smoot's company; settled near Haun's Mill; shared in the persecutions of the Saints and came near being in the Haun's Mill massacre. Her father and family gathered to the mill for protection the night previous to the massacre.

Father Norton had a premonition that trouble would occur and that if he remained he would be slain. His home being in a rather secluded place he returned with his family, consequently they escaped injury. The day after the massacre David Evans and others, of the survivors, took refuge in a thicket on Brother Norton's farm. To them, in company with her mother, the deceased carried provisions until peace was restored. Many other incidents of kindness peculiar to Sister Alired's disposition might be mentioned, but space will not permit.

Next, through the exterminating order of Governor Boggs, the family were compelled to flee into the State of Illinois. They participated in the persecutions in Nauvoo, the enemy being continually on their trail. The family were again compelled to abandon their home and fled to Council Bluffs in the State of Iowa, near Winter Quarters, on the Missouri river. It was at the last mentioned place that deceased became the wife of P. H. Alired, February 3rd, 1848. The following summer, Sister and Brother Alired emigrated to Utah in President Brigham Young's company and settled in the Old Fort, Salt Lake City. She with her husband shared the hardships peculiar to this then barren and uncultivated region, suffered many times for the want of food and clothing, but dividing their scanty means with their friends and also the Indians. In the fall of 1854 Sister Alired and family located in Lehi City, Utah county, where they resided until the time of her death. She had been a perpetual sufferer for nineteen years, never at any time being free from pain. But she possessed a powerful constitution, and struggled along through all these years of affliction. It has been a mystery to those acquainted with her how she survived so long. She was of a kind, motherly disposition, imparting of her substance to the poor, and destitute. She never could do too much for suffering humanity. The day she died she remarked that she had not felt so well during all her past years of affliction.

The day previous to her death she walked 125 yards to see the procession on July 25th. In the afternoon she went to her son James Alired's to dinner with her friends. On the day of her death she arose in the morning, ate her breakfast, did up her house work, partook of dinner and afterwards resumed work about the house. She finally laid down upon her bed to rest, when suddenly she called to her husband and remarked that she was fainting. He went to her assistance, whereupon she closed her eyes and passed away without a struggle.

Thus departed an honest, noble daughter of God, to await the morn of the first resurrection. Too much cannot be said of her kind-hearted husband for unceasing and untiring efforts during her years of affliction to comfort his wife.

Sister Alired was the mother of eight children (6 sons and 2 daughters) two of whom preceded her behind the veil. She leaves a husband, six children, thirty-five grand-children and a wide circle of friends to mourn her departure. The funeral services were held at the family residence at 4 p. m. on the afternoon of the 28th of July, Bishop F. R. Cutler presiding. Brother

Wm. Goates offered the opening prayer. Brother J. L. Gibbs and his aids rendered some excellent singing appropriate to the occasion. Brother T. R. Cutler, Wm. Clark, E. H. Davis and Israel Evans spoke in eulogistic terms of the deceased and offered consoling remarks to the relatives and friends. At 5 p. m. the remains were conducted to their last resting place, followed by a large concourse of people. The dedicatory prayer at the grave was delivered by Bishop Cutler. E. S.

CITY COUNCIL.

The City Council met in regular session Tuesday night, [President] Leffebour was again late in putting in an appearance in the Council chamber, and on motion of Horn, Hardy was chosen chairman.

The members in attendance were: Rich, Pollard, Moran, Horn, Bell, Lawson, Evans, Helsa, Beardsley, Wainland.

HARDY'S HONORS OF SHORT DURATION.

The roll call had just been completed when President Leffebour entered, and Hardy immediately vacated the chair for him.

The minutes of the regular meeting of one week ago were read and approved, after which the most important business of the meeting was taken up for disposition.

POLICE APPOINTMENTS.

Mayor Haskin sent in the following: To the President and City Council:

Gentlemen—I have appointed R. G. Sleator, Fred. M. Schulze and P. H. Fliz Maurice on the regular police force and respectfully ask their confirmation.

Moran moved that the matter be referred to the committee on police. Carried.

VETO MESSAGE.

The following from the Mayor was read:

To C. E. Stanton, City Recorder:

Sir—I herewith return, unapproved, bill 220, entitled "A bill for an ordinance making eight hours a legal day's work on all public contract work," for the following reasons:

Every man should be left as free and untrammelled in making contracts for the disposal of his services as he is in the disposal of his chattels or his land. If any laborer desires to work more than eight hours per day he should not be interfered with in making an arrangement with his employer so to do. To prevent this by arbitrary legislation is to take from him a natural right, which the legislative power cannot in justice do.

In the execution of contracts, especially for the construction of sewer, waterworks and paving unexpected emergencies frequently arise of such urgency as can only be practically met by working the regular force on extra time. In each of such emergencies, if met as practically it only can be, the contractor under this bill would be subject to the unjust forfeiture of $100.

I cannot understand why this bill should limit the employment of laborers to eight hours, between the hours of 6 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m., and leave the hours of night labor unrestricted. Night labor, as is well known, is much more wearing on the constitution of man than day labor.

The bill requires all contracts with the city for the erection, building or the repairing of public building, bridges or viaducts, street paving or grading and all waterworks and sewerage," in addition to the eight-hour restriction to contain a clause providing that in the event of any contractor violating the provisions of the contract, he shall forfeit to the city $100 for each day or day he shall so violate the provisions of the contract.

By reason of the complex nature of the work covered by contracts of the nature referred to in the bill there must of necessity be many violations of the bill by every contractor; violations of minor importance working little or no damage to the city; yet under the bill the contractor would nevertheless be liable upon each breach for the forfeiture under the bill I doubt whether any prudent business man could be found who would enter into any such obligations.

That clause of the bill which provides that eight hours of labor shall be a full and legal day's work meets my approbation.

Laid on the table to come up when called for.

DEFECTIVE TITLE WORK.

Recorder Stanton read the following which was referred to the city attorney: To the City Council:

In the matter of the plats and abstracts of lands, the title of which is vested in the city of Salt Lake, as furnished by us, we beg leave to state that the work was done by us without our certificates, as in a number of instances the titles were somewhat defective, and it was our idea that the work would be submitted to the City Attorney in order that the titles might be perfected and that the abstracts and plats would be returned to us for completion at which time we intended to compare the work with our records and certify to the same and we presented a communication to that effect at the time the work was delivered.

It appears that we were misled, as the work has not been returned to us, which leaves it in your hands in an imperfect condition, and not having compared. The work shows all owned by Salt Lake City and while there may be errors they are merely clerical and would have been corrected had we compared the work before delivery. We therefore respectfully request that the work be returned to us for completion, as it will be impossible to make the corrections outside of our office, for the reason that the whole work must be compared with our records. We can correct the errors discovered by City Engineer Doremus, but as there may be others, it will be necessary that the whole work be compared. Respectfully submitted.

FOR PERSONAL INJURIES.

The sum of $800 was voted to Mary Worceline for injuries sustained in falling on the sidewalk. The committee reported that said injuries were caused by negligence in leaving stakes in the ground, placed there by the engineer's department.

The City Council was to have met in special session this afternoon at 2 o'clock. At that time, however, only three or four members were present in the Council chamber. At 2:15, on motion of Folland, Horn was chosen chairman. The following members answered to roll call: Rich, Folland, Wantland, Heise, Evans.

NO QUORUM.

The chair announced that there was no quorum present and an informal recess was taken for fifteen minutes. Folland suggested that the chief of police be sent after the absent members and compel their attendance. Beardsley appeared on the scene at 2:30 closely followed by Jailer Raleigh. At 2:45 Bell, Lawson, Simondi and Moran and Hardy entered and the City Council was again called to order.

PETITIONS

were read and referred as follows: William Dunn and others asked that certain streets be graveled. Committee on streets.

Al. Folland and others asked for a new road grade on Tenth East between Fifth and Sixth South streets. Committee on streets.

John W. Donnellan and others asked that J. S. Stewart be made police desk sergeant. Committee on police.

Duncan McAllister and others protested against Center street being cut down to level of grade on west side of street. Committee on streets.

J. S. Morse asked permission to lay a sidewalk on the temporary grade on Third street. Committee on streets.

R. L. Conley and others asked that an electric light be placed at the intersection of Pear and Wall streets. Committee on improvements.

George Canning asked permission to put a shingle roof on a building erected by him at the extreme edge of the fire limits.

Abraham Jeffs and others protested against the erection of the garbage crematory on the site selected near the Warm Springs.

THE MAYOR'S RETRACTION.

The Mayor sent the following: Gentlemen—Since my former communication on the subject of the issuance of a retail liquor license to Carney & Merritt, I have received from them the attached letter which I ask be placed on file for future reference. In view of the fact that Carney & Merritt in this letter solemnly promise that if their license be renewed they will in the future obey the liquor ordinances in all respects, I will approve their bond and withdraw my request that you may reconsider your action in granting this firm a renewal of their license.

THE PENITENT PLEADERS.

Carney and Merritt's letter read:

To R. N. Baskin, Mayor:

In regard to our retail liquor license, we solemnly make you the promise that if granted a renewed license we will faithfully observe the ordinances of the city relating to the sale of liquor and in all respects.

Received and filed.

WILLING TO COMPLY.

The West Side Rapid Transit Company, sent in a communication in which it said that it would willingly do any work that the city supervisor of streets deemed proper on Second West street. Received and filed.

FOUR ELECTRIC LIGHTS.

Contractor B. wman asked that four electric arc lights be placed on the big derricks of the joint city and county building so that the Eighth Ward square might be sufficiently illuminated to protect the firehose work on the building. Rejected.

COMBINATION POLE PROTEST.

The Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone company sent in the following, addressed to the city recorder:

We are in receipt of your notice of a resolution passed by the City Council August 10th, 1892, which reads: "That the Street Railway company, the Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone company and the Salt Lake Light, Power and Heating company be compelled to use combination poles in the center of the street on Main street, First and Second South streets" and desire to express ourselves as in favor of this plan so far as practicable. However, we wish to call the attention of the Council to some difficulties to be overcome and ask that the resolution be changed accordingly.

We would recommend that the resolution be changed to read: "That the telephone company, the street railway companies and the telegraph companies be compelled to use combination poles in the center of the streets in the paving districts."

AN OBJECTION.

Reporting on the same proposition the Salt Lake Light, Power and Heating company asked that the resolution, passed on August 10th, be amended, and that it be relieved from complying with its requirements in as much as the arrangement was cumbersome and full of irregularities and difficulties. Filed.

WILL THEY DO IT?

It was rumored about the Council chamber this afternoon that Moran's eight-hour ordinance would come up before the meeting adjourned and be passed over the mayor's veto.

When the News report of the City Council proceedings closed at four o'clock yesterday evening, after the resignation of C. Leonard Ewing, of the Second Precinct, had been received considerable discussion ensued on a petition of Mrs. Mary Post and twenty-five others, asking that the houses on Franklin avenue, used for immoral purposes by removal, so that they would be able to rent their houses and to pay the city taxes on the same.

It was finally referred to a special committee consisting of Wantland, Heise, Hardy Horn, and Beardsley.

STORAGE BASINS.

The recorder read the following, which was referred for investigation:

Gentlemen:—Your special committee appointed to report upon the means by which a substitute can be provided for the water now supplied through the Jordan and Salt Lake City canal for irrigating north of Ninth South Street, beg leave to report, that in our opinion this substitute can be provided through the construction of storage basins, or the completion of those already begun at the head of the Thirteenth street pipe line in City Creek Canyon, and at the intersection of First South and Thirteenth East streets. These with the smaller ones already in use would hold the entire excess of flow over that required for culinary uses from City Creek, Emigration and Parley's canyon and would if drawn through the hydrants located nearest the point of distribution, be sufficient to irrigate the Territory now supplied with water for this purpose from the canal. Respectfully,

J. F. DOREMUS, City Engineer.

A. M. HARVEY, Watermaster.

W. H. RYAN, Supt. Water Works.

ANOTHER GAS COMPANY.

The Indiana Natural Gas Pipe Line company asked for a franchise to allow them to lay pipes within the city, promising to have gas within the city within twelve months.

Lawson moved that the petition be not granted. The foot of gas here without a pipe or a company as a franchise had been granted to a company that had flowing today 25,000,000 feet of gas. It was simply a scheme to embarrass the present company. When the petitioners could show that they had gas in commercial quantities, then he would be willing that a franchise should be given them, but not until that time.

Simondi did not like to hear Lawson make such statements, unless he knew they were true. Personally, however, he did not favor the granting of the franchise until there was gas in sight.

He said the petitioners had informed him that they had 5000 acres of land near the point of the mountain, and would go to work if the council would encourage them a little.

Wantland gave the history of natural gas to this city. He was not in favor of granting any franchise until gas had been discovered. He did not propose to put a club into the hands of the petitioners to embarrass the men who were now doing good work and had already spent here large sums of money. Now that we are just about at the point where we are going to get something, we should not do anything to prevent it.

The petition was laid on the table.

A SUB CONTRACTOR QUESTION.
The city attorney reported on the claims of James Clary and six others who said they had claims against Watson Bros. and G. O. W. Showell, for labor performed by them on City Creek and North Temple street, saying that he found the facts to be that Watson Bros. had nothing to do with the matter whatever; that Watson had the contract with the city to perform the work and that Showell was a subcontractor under him to do a certain portion thereof; that the work was completed, and the city has paid Watson for the same, and Watson had settled with Showell in full for his part of the work; that the petitioners have no claim against the city; that all of said petitioners were employed by Showell, and he alone is responsible to them. Concluding, he said:

"I do not recognize the liability of the city in any case under garnishee process, nor do I think it is legally bound by such process when served upon it or any of its officers. I would recommend, however, that in all cases where contractors fail or refuse to pay the men, that the city, when garnished for the laborers' wages in future, waive that legal right and hold the money back for their protection against the employer. Contractors who do intend to and who do not take care of the laborers can, of course, take contracts at lower figures than those who pay for the labor, but I take it that the city does not approve of any such course."

Adopted.

A. W. KAYBOULD, City Auditor.
PRIVATE AND PUBLIC ALLEYWAYS.

The city attorney gave his opinion that the city had a right to order paved all public alleyways, but no jurisdiction over private alleyways.

CLEANED AND STRAIGHTENED.

City creek between Sixth and Ninth West streets was ordered cleaned and the stream confined to a narrow channel.

DUKE GETS THE MONEY.

The application of Treasurer Duke for $100 to be used as the salary of the paymaster was allowed.

ELECTRIC LIGHT.

An electric light was ordered at the corner of Mead and Second West streets.

ELEVENTH EAST STREET.

The street supervisor was ordered to put Eleventh East street in good condition for travel.

RELIEVED FROM THE TAX.

Follan's resolution relieving the Brigham Young Trust company from the payment of paving taxes on State street, because of land deeded to the city for street purposes, was adopted. It exempts twenty-five feet on State street and fifty-six on Commercial street.

WATER MOTORS.

The board of education asked that the Council enact an ordinance allowing the use of water to propel motors for ventilating school houses.

Rich was in favor of doing anything he could for the public schools, but he was very much afraid that the city could not consistently allow so much water as would be necessary to propel the motors to go to waste.

The bill was read the first time and referred to the committee on waterworks.

BOARD OF EQUALIZATION.

It was ordered that the Council sit as a board of equalization to hear protests on the extension of the sewers on Thursday next, August 25, at 2 p.m.

MUST HAVE REQUISITIONS.

Evans offered the following:

Resolved, That all officers in charge of departments shall be required to furnish the City Council, when necessary, requisitions for supplies and material for their respective departments. Such requisitions after being read by the recorder, shall be referred to the proper committee with power to purchase; providing that when purchases require bids to be submitted, committees shall be authorized to obtain such bids, and report the same to the Council with recommendations.

Laid over until next meeting.

SPONGING ON THE COUNCIL.

A bill for sponges for the street supervisor's department was sent in from the Wasatch Drug company, amounting to $4.40.

Beil—I move that the bill be referred back for particulars. I know something about fine horses and how many sponges are required to wash and keep them in sleek condition. But it occurs to me that a great many sponges are being used in the street supervisor's department.

Watnand—I certainly would not object to an occasional sponge once in a while.

Beil—Neither would I to an occasional one.

Simond—I is rather a spongy question. I second the motion to refer back.

Horn—There has been entirely too much sponging on the council in this manner. (Laughter.)

On motion of Rich the bill was rejected.

The report was adopted and the committee empowered to get the work done at the lowest possible figure.

The committee on school work reported that it had considered the time for opening the schools for the ensuing year, and recommended that they open on Monday, Sept. 12. Adopted.

The committee on teachers presented Superintendent Millsbaugh's recommendation for salaries of teachers for the coming year, and also a further list of candidates which he recommended to be employed as teachers; total, 125. The average salary of 125 teachers and principals is $786.40. The last month's pay-roll amounted to $9877.50, being at the annual rate of $98,775.

The estimate for 125 teachers, two less than the total of last year, less the night school, is $98,800, being at the rate of $475 less than that of last year. The salaries range from $550 to $1250 per year.

THE HIGH SCHOOL.

Only two members of the committee having signed the report on the high school and the rule of the board being that a majority (three) being necessary, the rule was suspended and the report was read as follows:

Teachers.	Last year.	This year.
W. R. Maize, Principal.....	1500	1500
F. M. Collins.....	1400	1400
L. G. Worstell.....	1100	1400
Miss J. M. Fry.....	1000	1100
Miss N. I. Davis.....	900	1000

Baluwin and Young signed the report and recommended the schedule be adopted.

Vice-president Nelson vacated the chair in favor of Mr. Dooly and read a minority report of the committee on teachers with respect to the schedule of pay for high school teachers.

SPECIAL SCHOOL TAX REFUND.

In the matter of the refunding of the special school taxes, the finance committee made its promised special report as follows:

When this Board of Education was first organized in July, 1890, the most troublesome question was that of the finance.

The Board was given no means, but inferentially under the law it was supposed to succeed in the possession of the anticipated revenue from the special taxation levied in the twenty-one former school districts of the city. But this taxation was very unequal, ranging from one-eighth of one per cent. to one and a quarter per cent. in three districts which had made tax levies; two districts had made no levies at all. Besides the evident inequality of pooling for general benefit the revenue derived in this manner, a further inequality existed in the fact that some of the old districts had valuable properties paid for by the people under the old local district system, while others of such districts not only had little or nothing to turn into the common property account, but were, on the contrary in debt. Yet the law made this board the recipient of the old district debts as well as their assets, and the question was what could be done in the way of adjustment. From the very first the board saw the inequalities involved in this consolidation; realized them in much greater degree than did the general public. It also proved its earnestness in seeking a remedy, the record being as follows:

August 21, 1891. On motion of Mr. Williams the finance committee was authorized to employ counsel in order that an equitable settlement or adjustment may be had in the collection of the taxes as early a date as possible.

August 28, 1890. Mr. Nelson moved that it be the sense of this board that the burdens of the school maintenance as regards property rights be equalized, and that the committee on audit be requested to report the proper form in which the adjustment shall take place.

Same date. It was moved by Mr. Pike that it be the sense of this board that the taxes assessed in any local school district so far as practicable and necessary, shall be expended in such district until their actual necessities for school buildings are supplied.

September 24, 1890, the auditing committee in response to the above order of the board, reported as follows:

Resolved, First—That we request all the outgoing trustees to furnish a full inventory of the school property in their districts, and affix thereto a reasonable and fair cash valuation for the same, and the County Collector be requested to furnish the net amount of tax to be collected from each district in 1890, for the purpose of ascertaining the total amount of school property in the city and the taxes to be collected, in order that a uniform rate of tax can be computed, which it would be necessary to assess, if desired, to pay for this property; and that this committee be authorized to procure from the City Assessor the total assessed valuation of property in the city, showing the amount in each of the old school districts, from which to determine the proper proportion each district should have supplied under a uniform tax rate as above suggested.

Second—That each district be then charged or credited, as the case may be, with the difference between the amount actually turned over and what its proportion would be, on the basis of said uniform tax.

Third—That the next session of the Legislature be petitioned by this board to frame such a law as will enable us to correct the inequalities found to exist between the various districts, and that the clerk of this board be requested to furnish a copy of these resolutions to the outgoing trustees, and to the press.

GEORGE W. SNOW, } Audit.

Subsequently, at a meeting of the finance committee—date not certain, because no record was made, but prior to the litigation as to these taxes—the chairman of that committee submitted the proposition to cover the inequalities of those taxes by the issue of bonds and refund to the people paying the tax, as was subsequently done; but at first the supposition was that all would pay the taxes and all would be repaid, without contention or wasteful struggles.

After the litigation was practically completed, this suggestion was renewed to the board direct and was adopted; but those who were victorious in the suits declined to meet the board's overtures.

Apparently oblivious of the facts of this board, or doubtful of its ability to procure relief, the victorious suits in resistance to the collection of these special school district taxes of 1890 began. There were several of them, and they varied in form, but all tended to the one purpose of having these taxes declared void. This Board was obliged to defend or see the cases go by default. It therefore appeared in support of the validity of the school taxes. When these were finally declared to be valid, the court declaring that the percentages levied should have been collected on the roll of 1889, the question was whether we should ask a mandate for such collection or quit strife.

The mandate proposition was deemed utterly impracticable; though the court declared that the taxes should be collected on the assessment roll of 1889, there was no practicable way to make such collection, therefore, no further steps were taken. A portion of those who had fought the tax resisted collection from the beginning. As to them the result was clear; they had nothing to recover. But a large amount had been paid under protest to the collector, and the payers claimed their due. The sum of $55,000 had been paid over by the collector to the treasurer of this board of taxes collected without protest. Inasmuch as some of the taxpayers had paid nothing on their taxes and others were about to receive back the amounts they had paid, the Board of Education considered it but fair to also repay, and the Legislature was asked to give authority so to do. This was readily accorded, and the board repaid to every applicant on its list in full as the applicant applied.

But here arose an injustice and imposition. It was found that on making up the list on which the refund was to be made to protesters under the order of the court, an arbitrary date had been selected (by whom does not appear), and that all who as appeared in the collector's books, had paid before that given date were assumed to have paid the money that was turned over to the Board's Treasurer; while all who had paid after that date were assumed to have paid the money in litigation, or under protest.

The lists were made up accordingly by the collector; all who paid their taxes December 10th, 1890, and before, were put in the list who should receive their money back from the Board; those who paid after that date were put in the list who were to receive their refund from the clerk of the court, who had been made receiver for that purpose. Those on the latter list had been taxed about 3 per cent. of the full amount for court costs and in addition 10 per cent. for attorney fees. If this levy of 18 per cent. in all had been simply on those who appeared as litigants, nothing would need to be said; but, in fact, the list on which this levy was made included many persons who had not in any way appeared as litigants, and who had no desire to appear as such; and increased more than double the amount involved in the claims of those who desired to be represented in the suits, and consequently the fees involved in the order allowing the same. We are informed that the total amount actually in controversy in the suits that entailed this court refunding was less than $6000, and that the gross amount carried in the claims of all who finally consented that appearance might be made for them in court was about $13,000 even by the attorneys' claims. Yet the basis of the taxing of costs and attorneys' fees was some $33,000, and this was reckoned from, because it was the total sum at issue, whether litigants appeared or not. We are informed and believe that the representatives of much more than half of the amount would have much preferred that no notice should have been taken of them in the court procedure, preferring to rely on this board to do them justice, without waste or contention.

But another unjust feature in this matter remains to be stated. By reason of the taking of an arbitrary date, as above noted, for the line of division between those who protested against the payment of these special school taxes and those who did not, some placing the reverse of those above referred to took place. For whereas, in the case of those on the court list, many were there who did not wish to appear, and for whose dragging into court no authority whatever appears; in the case of the board's list, some appear who were in fact among the litigants; that is to say, some who actually and willingly joined in the suits were by reason of the taking of an arbitrary date instead of the fact in making up the lists, put on the board's list, and were paid in full, without rebate or taxing of costs that they themselves had been instrumental in incurring. The result of this complication was, briefly, that many who did not want to litigate were forced to do so, and court costs and attorneys fees were taxed against them, while others, who did want to litigate, and who actually did so were turned over to the board to be paid in full, without any rebate whatever.

For an exact statement of those who litigated we refer to Collector Hardy's statement as referee, appended hereto and marked exhibit "A."

In addition to the above recital, we report that some cost bills have been presented to this committee and payment asked thereon.

Our recommendation in view of the facts above cited are that the practical workings of this whole matter be presented to the court by the attorney of this board, with a view to correct such inequities as it may still be possible to reach; and that the court be asked to apply the large sum—nearly four thousand dollars—taxed as court and attorney costs in these suits, in liquidation of all fees that may have accrued, acquitting this board of all liability for the same, or any part thereof, or for any cost in any way growing out of the suit.

Reporting further your committee adds that under its direction the sum of $76,524.24 has been to August 1, 1892, refunded to the taxpayers of the $85,226.62 paid on school taxes of 1890.

EXHIBIT A.

[Title of court and cause.]

To the honorable, the said court:

The undersigned was, by order of the court, dated September 21, 1891, appointed referee in this cause, to determine what parties had paid to the collector of taxes of Salt Lake county, the fund of which is the subject of this suit, being a part of the special school taxes ordered levied in the month of December, 1889, by various school districts formerly existing, included within the corporate limits of Salt Lake city, and which has been extended upon the tax assessment roll of Salt Lake county of the year 1890, and at various times paid into the hands of the collector of said county, and to report the amount of such fund now in the custody of the court, which each of such parties have paid.

Your referee has for fifty-five days been continuously engaged in the taking of evidence upon the questions submitted in said order of reference, and upon said evidence now reports to the court, that, of the funds now in the custody of the court in this case, the parties whose names are alphabetically set forth in two books or lists hereto attached and made part of this report (marked by exhibits) paid to the said collector the sums set opposite their respective names, the said sums being the amounts of said district school taxes assessed respectively against said parties and borne upon said assessment roll of the year 1890.

The compensation of your referee, which, in and by said order of reference, was fixed at $12.50 per day of each day in which he should be employed in performing the duties of said referee, amounts to the sum of $867.50.

Your referee further reports that the time when the order was made herein, that the defendant herein, L. G. Hardy, pay into court all said special school taxes then in his hands as collector aforesaid, said defendant was unable to ascertain or calculate without complete search of said assessment roll of 1890, and said collector's receipt of stubs of said year, the exact amount of said fund in his hands as aforesaid, but paid into court the sum of $32,803.53, as being more than enough to cover said amount, and as being as near an approximation to the real amount as he was then able to make. But that in point of fact said sum was in excess of the actual amount in his hands with which he was chargeable as collector aforesaid by the sum of $2011.23.

The charges upon said fund under said order are as follows, to wit:

The compensation of the referee amounts to $867.50, which is equivalent to 2 1-2 per cent. upon the entire sum collected.

As to the compensation provided for in the decree of 10 per cent. for attorney's fees, your referee reports the following facts to the court:

That the title of the order the attorneys for the plaintiff furnished the referee with a list of persons who, it was claimed, were the plaintiffs in the suit. That list does not contain the same names as those who paid the money. The list furnished by the attorneys for the plaintiffs is to be found in a supplementary book, also herewith entered and referred to by index, and that book also contains the amount of tax thus paid by each, but in large manner the tax thus paid by each of the persons in that list have already been paid over by the Collector to the Board of Education under proceedings heretofore taken in another cause, and had been collected and paid over to the Board of Education prior to the commencement of this mandamus suit.

The names of persons who have assisted in paying money, and who have paid a part of the money which is now on hand in court, who are also clients of the attorneys who bring this suit as appears from their list, are to be found in the original two books, and are marked with the letter "S."

The additional book, No. 3, containing the list furnished by counsel for plaintiffs, is furnished at their request, together with the amount of tax paid by each.

The amount of tax collected belonging to the clients of Sutherland & Judd is $10,956.85, as by reference to the said first two books will more fully appear.

The amount belonging to the clients of R. H. Cabell is $2194, as will also appear.

The fund in court belonging to persons not represented by either of said attorneys amounts to $20,531.64, as appears by the said statement.

All the foregoing sums are to be found by reference to the said three books, which are herewith returned and made a part of this report.

The per cent. to be paid every taxpayer can be ascertained only by deducting the amount to be allowed under the order of the court, to wit: — per cent. for the collector, and if that is the order, 10 per cent. for attorneys' fees.

And your referee respectfully submits to this honorable court the question as to whether 10 per cent. shall be allowed upon any, and if so, upon what: sums collected by him.

L. G. HARDY, Referee.

ROUTINE BUSINESS.

Some other routine business was transacted after which Raybould moved that a contract be awarded to the Henley & Myers Engineering company for the heating and ventilating of the Lincoln school and the Bryant school, provided that if an engine is required to run the fans that said company shall furnish an engine for $250 for each school, which shall run at not more than ten pounds pressure; provided further, that at the figures given by them on the terms proposed by them, include entire cost of their plant and any cost of placing same in the buildings, including any changes that may be necessary in the buildings themselves.

Adopted, and the clerk and president instructed to sign the contract on behalf of the board when the same has been submitted to the board by the committee on sites and buildings.

Adjourned for one week.

MAYOR BASKIN MAKES AN APPOINTMENT WITHOUT CONSENT.

Another merry war is now threatened between Mayor Baskin and certain members of the City Council. The cause of the expected conflict was given to a News reporter today by a "Liberal" councilman who enjoys the distinction of being classed as a staunch supporter of the "minority" or "opposition." He alleges in terms more forcible than eloquent that the Mayor has been guilty of the impropriety of grossly insulting the City Council by spurning its actions and illegally assuming authority which the rights and privileges of his office do not confer upon him. The particular cause to which objection is made is what some of the councilmen term the creating and filling of an office without their consent and on which their action had been such as to give the proposition the stamp of official and lawful disapproval.

Readers of this paper will remember that Councilman Wantland and some of his councilmanic colleagues took an almost unaccountable interest in a scheme which the former embodied in the following resolution, which he introduced in the Council on April 21st last:

Resolved, That the Mayor be and is hereby authorized to engage the services of a suitable person for a period not to exceed six months, at a salary not to exceed $150 per month, for the purpose of watching the canyons and protecting the water rights of the city, said employe to also perform such duties, keep such records and make such reports in connection with the irrigation and water departments and public grounds of the city as may be ordered by the Mayor and Council.

The measure immediately precipitated a wordy and acrimonious conflict. The Democrats regarded it as a political plum to be conferred by the Mayor upon some favorite henchman for services rendered. In view of the fact that the city watermaster had a numerous corps of assistants, a number of whom it seemed were not earning all the money they were getting from the taxpayers, even some of the "Liberal" members were compelled to admit that if the proposition was carried out it would create a sinecure for which no kind of an excuse could be satisfactorily given.

The matter was finally temporarily disposed of by referring it to the committee on ways and means. After the committee had carefully considered the resolution it reported adversely upon it. The action greatly displeased the Mayor and Wantland et al., as the gift of its provisions had already been promised. It is said to ex-Councilman Pendleton.

For a time nothing was publicly said or done in the premises, but when it was presumed that sufficient time had elapsed to allow a change of sentiment to take place, the supporters of the resolution quoted introduced another which authorized the Mayor to employ Mr. Pendleton as was originally proposed. This brought Moran to his feet in an instant and on motion the resolution was tabled indefinitely. This of course shut off all debate and the opponents of the proposition considered that they had won a permanent victory. It now transpires that in this they were greatly mistaken, for while Wantland et al. were reported to have been sulking in their tents over their defeat, it seems that a plan was quietly formulated whereby the original scheme could be carried out and the majority of the members outwitted. It was done, too, but it will result in trouble. A few days ago a me of the councilmen discovered that Mr. Pendleton's name was on the city pay roll. An investigation was instituted from which it was learned that the Mayor had appointed Pendleton to the position named without consulting the council or asking it to confirm his action.

"Mayor Baskin has played his card well," said the News' informant, "but I for one shall raise my voice and use my individual and official influence against such unlawful and Czar-like methods. It must be understood once for all that we do not live in autocratic Russia. I do not want to divest the Mayor of any of his lawful prerogatives, but his appointments should be by and with the consent and confirmation of the council. To allow him to appoint his friends to office without consulting the members of the council and without a protest on our part, would be a glaring exhibition of dereliction of duty."

It is said that other appointments have been made on the quiet by the Mayor, and the matter will be further investigated. It is expected to come up for discussion at the next regular meeting of the council.

NEWS FROM STAR VALLEY.

The inhabitants of Star and Salt River valleys convened in conference today for the purpose of being organized into a Stake of Zion.

Present on the stand, President Joseph F. Smith, Apostle F. M. Lyman, President Wm. Budge, Counselor George Osmond, and a number of other brethren from Bear Lake.

Apostle F. M. Lyman spoke on the great improvement in these valleys since his last visit. He advised the Saints to start aright in their new undertaking and live in peace with all mankind. They should make their improvements substantial and in the right place, and learn our children to be patient, kind, charitable and just to all, to reverence the Deity and pray for their enemies.

President Joseph F. Smith wished the Saints to remember their covenants with each other, all parties should settle their own difficulties. He gave some excellent advice to the young.

P. M.—President Wm. Budge felt pleased to meet under so favorable circumstances; showed the necessity of good order to secure our advancement.

President Geo. Osmond expressed surprise at the rapid progress of the people during his absence on his mission.

Reports of the different wards were given by the Bishops. They were good.

Sunday, Aug. 14th, 10 a. m.—Pres. Joseph F. Smith asked the Saints if they wished to have a Stake organization. The response was affirmatively unanimous. Apostle F. M. Lyman presented the general authorities of the Church, who were sustained by the people. He named the boundary lines of the Stake and presented the name of George Osmond as President and Wm. V. Burton as his first and Anson V. Call as his second Counselor. He then presented the names of twelve men to constitute the High Council, of Bear Valley Stake.

Members of the Council:—Henry Dixon, Thomas W. Lee, Aroet Lucius, Hale, Jr., James Koford, Isaac Biglow, Joseph Corbridge, Hugh Morgan, Charles Kington, Hans J. Neilson, William Turner, Moroni Coleman, Warren Longhurst.

Alternates:—John Neild, sen., Hyrum D. Clark, Charles C. Leavitt, John Astle, B. H. Alfred, Walter R. Bulver.

Stake Clerk and Recorder—Wm. H. Kennington.

All were unanimously sustained.

They were set apart on Sunday afternoon, excepting Walter R. Barber, who was not present.

2 p. m.—The Sacrament was administered by Bishop C. D. Casler, and A. L. Hall. Brother Ezra Clark of Bountiful bore testimony to the truth of the Gospel.

Apostle F. M. Lyman explained the duties of the various officers of the Stake and advised the Bishops to keep a correct record of the wards.

President Wm. Budge hoped all would profit by the instructions given by the brethren.

Brother Thomas F. Burton was chosen to act as second counselor to Bishop C. D. Casler, of Afton ward.

Benediction by President Jos. F. Smith.

Conference adjourned for three months.

She and her deceased husband, Wm. Parsons, were among the members in Herefordshire who had left the Methodist Church and were waiting for something better and gladly received the Gospel at the hands of President Willard B. Richards, in 1831. She emigrated to America the same year, in the first ship load of Saints leaving the British Isles. Her remains were interred in the cemetery on the 15th ult., the ceremonies being conducted by Bishop Abner Allen. Solemnizing remarks were made by Prof. Monck and G. J. March, of Ogden City, and others of this place. —[Com.]

PATHWAYS THROUGH LIFE.

You say that your life is a failure,
Your future holds naught that is sweet,
That the troublous years bring little but tears,
And always, always defeat.

Mistake—aye sine, you can call them—
May cover your past like a pall,
But the soul that is strong to outlive its wrong
Is the bravest soul of all.

You long to go forth in the battle,
But your feet are fettered quite,
Remember, who serve in the corps of reserve
May be able as those who fight.

You chafe to enter the races
For pleasure and gold and fame;
Yet many who win 'mid the plaudits' din
Find the prize but an empty name.

The toil that is yours seems fruitless,
Your days are weary and long;
But the lowliest duty may glow with beauty
When wrought with a cheerful song.

The world's best sweets are denied you,
You have tasted earth's cup of woe;
But who suffers to give that others may live
Has the noblest life, I trow.

Oh let us, my friend, do bravely
The work that to us is given,
And smile in belief that what causes us grief
May keep us the closer to heaven.

The pathways we traverse are many,
And some are by barrenest strand;
But with vision grown wide we shall wonder
We are glad,
For they led to the Beautiful Land.

THE PLAGUE FROM THE STAND-POINT OF PROPHECY.

GREAT alarm prevails in Europe in consequence of the ravages and spread of cholera. Intense anxiety exists in this country because of the reports of the plague which come across the Atlantic and the probability of its visiting the United States. We regard it as one of the judgments of the latter days and a consequence of the wickedness of the nations. When the hosts of men give themselves over to unrighteousness, the spirit of God ceases to brood over the earth. That holy power is preservative and when it retires or withdraws the people are left a prey to calamity and distress.

One of the reasons for our belief that the terrible disease now making fearful havoc among our race is one of the judgments of our times is that we have unshaken faith in Joseph Smith as a Prophet. He has prophetically delineated with great clearness the whole of the conspicuous and remarkable conditions of our day. One of the visitations which he predicted was of the character of the cholera plague, as will be observed from the following passage of a revelation given through the Seer on March 7, 1831:

"And there shall be men standing in that (the present) generation that shall not pass until they shall see an overflowing scourge, for a desolating sickness shall cover the land."

This prophecy is a repetition of what the Savior told his disciples on the Mount of Olives, a portion of which is related in the 24th chapter of Matthew, and repeated through Joseph Smith in completeness, with the respective predictions in their consecutive order. This "overflowing scourge" was to perform its deadly work within the lines of the generation existing at the time of the restoration of the Gospel in the latter days. The length of time that would elapse from the Gospel restoration and the visitation of the "desolating scourge" is not sharply defined any further than that there would be men living at the time of the introduction of the last dispensation who would not pass to the other world before the plague referred to should commence its work. Although the Saints may not unequivocally take the ground that the advent of cholera is the fulfillment of that important prophecy, it is interesting for them to compare current events with the predictions of the Great Prophet who was the instrument selected by Divine Wisdom to found the Church with which they are identified.

Commendable efforts are being made in this and other countries to prevent the ravages of the plague, and the effects of their endeavors will doubtless be to ameliorate the situation. Speaking, however, from the standpoint of revelation, there is another condition, without which the result will not be entirely satisfactory. That is the repentance of the people; or, in other words, reformation. We will here quote from a revelation given through Joseph the Seer on Sept. 23rd, 1832:

"For I, the Almighty, have placed my hands upon the nations, to scourge them for their wickedness; and plagues shall go forth, and they shall not be taken from the earth until I have completed my work, which shall be cut short in righteousness, until all shall know me who shall remain, even from the least unto the greatest, and shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, and shall see eye to eye."

According to this, the only hope of escape for the people from the judgments of the latter days is for them to become righteous, as the revelation shows that, in order for the earth to rest and be freed from corruption a species of elimination will progress, until a remnant shall remain who will conform to the laws of nature and of God.

Another revelation given through the Prophet Joseph, August 2nd, 1833, indicates that whichever plague shall be the "scourge" referred to will not, after gaining a foothold, have any lengthy cessations until the Lord Himself shall come. We quote from it:

"For behold, and lo, vengeance cometh speedily upon the ungodly as a whirlwind, and who shall escape it? The Lord's scourge shall pass over by night and by day, and the report thereof shall vex all people; yet it shall not be stayed until the Lord come; for the indignation of the Lord is kindled against their abominations and all their wicked works."

The facilities for the spread of information relating to existing conditions in any part of the earth are complete. Hence the accounts of the ravages of the present plague are presented daily to the whole civilized world. These reports are causing much vexation, the minds of the people being harassed and agitated by them.

The present times are perilous and perplexing, all things being "in commotion," as the prophets have predicted. There is no human situation of the present period of agitation that has not been a subject of prophetic treatment by the Prophet Joseph Smith. Of course such views are treated by many people with derision and contempt; they are hardly ever met by those who sneer at them with fact and argument. But the prophecies are being fulfilled, and the conditions of the world are assuming more and more the aspects of the pictures which inspired men have painted by the assistance of Divine Power.

The near future is pregnant with events and situations of great moment and the Saints should not be asleep to the signs of the times.

THE LEHIGH VALLEY STRIKE.

BUFFALO, Aug. 23.—Today a trainload of western freight was drawn into the Lackawanna yards from the Lake Shore freight yards. Soon after about 125 switchmen quit.

Superintendent Seabert of the road was asked if the strike would impede passenger or freight traffic. "No, it finds us fully prepared. We have men to take the place of those who quit. Trains will move as usual."

It is learned that the freight to which the men objected was believed by them to be from Lehigh. This was a mistake, as an official declared it was ordinary lake freight. Trains were running as usual an hour after the strike. Two hours later for similar reasons, it is said, switchmen in Buffalo and Rochester and Pittsburgh road went out, adding fifteen more to the idle switchmen. The telephone wire between Superintendent Seabert's office and the yardmaster's office was cut this afternoon, thus preventing communication between the head offices of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western.

Today Messrs. Donovan, Purcell and Robertson of the State board of Arbitration attempted to learn from Grand Master Sweeney when or if ever he was going to order out the switchmen now working in the jurisdiction affected by the strike. Sweeney practically refused to give the arbitrators any information.

Joseph Hermerle, recording secretary and treasurer of Buffalo Lodge No. 3, Switchmen's Mutual Aid Association, and one of the leaders of the strike, was arrested today for interfering with a Lehigh Valley passenger train. Upon being searched a thirty-eight-caliber revolver was found in his pocket.

Shortly after the tie up on the Lackawanna this afternoon the switchmen waited upon Superintendent Seabert and offered their services to protect the company's property, and Seabert replied that he did not think the company would require guards, militia or otherwise, and thanked the men for offering their aid.

AN ATTACK WAS MADE

on pickets and non-union switchmen this afternoon. The attack was made on the picket line of the Twenty-second regiment, stationed at Toft Farm, by forty strikers. It will probably result fatally to one of their number. The crowd began throwing stones at John M. Gulchen and Charles Cable, non-union men who were working in the Toft Farm yard. Lieutenant Charles E. Aust and Sergeant William Cronow of Company C ordered the stone throwers to disperse. They refused to do so and were fired upon by order of Lieutenant Austin. Mauthar was struck by two bullets. One took effect on the left elbow, while the other passed through the abdomen to the right kidney. The injured man was taken to Emergency Hospital. His condition is extremely critical. The coroner was notified to be in readiness to take the men's ante-mortem statement should signs of failure occur.

Claughlin, Dunn, Madigan and Cotter, other members of the crowd, were arrested.

CHARGED WITH RIOTING.

The private who did the shooting was also detained by the police. The officer of the company to which the detained private belonged protested against the arrest of his subordinate and demanded his release. At the same time he informed General Doyle of the arrest and General Doyle ordered the company and battalion if necessary to set the soldier at liberty.

Allen L. Richardson, a non-union switchman, was thrown from the top of a box car in the Erie yards by a striker about 6 o'clock this evening and was badly bruised.

Thomas Cable, a non-union man while working in the Lehigh yards at East Buffalo, was set upon by four strikers and badly injured. Two of the strikers jumped on his stomach while companions held the victim down. The injured man is at Emergency Hospital.

The reports sent out from here early this morning to the effect that a conflict took place between the strikers and troops in which several were killed and others wounded is without foundation.

There was no disturbance of serious nature last night except firing by skulkers, which was replied to by the soldiers, but no one is known to have been shot.

Reputable newspaper men in the city are instituting an inquiry as to who constructed the news that caused such cruel anxiety among friends here.

BUFFALO, Aug. 24.—At midnight Sweeney, head of the switchmen's order, officially recognized the fact that the strike movement of the switchmen which was begun twelve days ago had failed. In official terms the strike was declared off. The men will, before daylight, be notified by local officials that they now are at liberty to get back to their places if they can.

By noon today each of the labor leaders, save Arthur and Thurston, were in the city. At 4 o'clock this afternoon the leaders went into conference. Sweeney immediately set forth at length the position in which he and his men were placed. At the conclusion of Sweeney's statements, Sargeant reiterated what he had already said that his men would not go on a sympathetic strike unless all the railway organizations did so. Clarke said the conductors had no grievance and that while they believe the demands of the switchmen were just, there would be no strike of conductors unless it was to redress wrongs to conductors.

Wilkins of the trainmen said he thought the demands of the switchmen were fair if ever demands were, but his order could not consent to cooperation by a sympathetic strike. In these statements Sweeney received the ultimatum. The conference broke up about 7 o'clock. Sweeney proceeded at once to a conference with local representatives of the switchmen. This proceeded until after 11 o'clock. Then representatives of the press were called into a small room adjoining the conference chamber and to them Mr. Sweeney announced that the conclusion had been reached by duly authorized representatives of the switchmen, and that it was to the effect that the strike ended at midnight tonight.

The word was carried out toward the East Buffalo yards at once by messengers, and before dawn the idle switchmen will be at liberty again to seek work where they can.

It is estimated by Arbitration Commissioner Donovan, who called upon the railway officials in behalf of the men, that nearly fifty per cent of the now idle switchmen will be employed. Probably the troops will be speedily withdrawn, local militia being left to furnish such protection as may be necessary.

THE DEPTHS OF THE SEA.

[Scribner's Magazine.]

For a century or more naturalists have known a great deal concerning the marine organisms which dwell in the shallow water next the shore. They long ago learned the amazing richness of these littoral forms. The census of species amounts now to more than one hundred thousand distinct forms; it is, however, of late that they have ascertained that the deeper parts of the ocean-floors have also an abundant and varied peopling. The greater part of these shore dwellers are exceedingly intolerant of the enormous pressure of the deeper water, as well as of the low temperature and total darkness which exist there. Certain forms have, however, acquired the ability to withstand these peculiar conditions, as generation by generation through the geologic ages that have crept away from the realms of fierce combat next the shore, to the least contested fields of the open and deeper seas. Through all the geologic ages this selection of especially prepared groups for the singular stations or habits of the ocean depths has been going on, with the result that the life of those dark and pressure-endured regions are now tenanted by eminently peculiar animals, by species which ever surprise the student who is accustomed alone to the forms which dwell near the shore.

One of the most striking features connected with the animals of the deep seas is the frequency with which we find there living specimens which remind us of kinds which in former geologic periods dwelt in the coastal districts of the oceans. It seems that many of these ancient creatures, when they no longer could hold their own against the more highly organized and developed animals which inhabited the favored stations next the shores, shrunk away into the deep water, and in that undesired part of the world found an asylum, where, amid the changeless environment, they have dwelt for ages, unaltered. Thus the vast profounds of the deep have become a sort of almshouse, whereunto antiquated forms have retired before the overwhelming pressure which the newer and higher life ever imposes on its ancestors. From the results of the relatively trifling explorations which have, as yet, been made, there seems good reason to hope that in time we may win from the deep the nearest living representations of many creatures which once occupied a large place in the seas, but now have abandoned the fields of more active combat, which are usually the seat of the greatest advance.

In the profounder seas the invertebrate life appears to have a larger share than is secured by the vertebrate, or backboneed animals; yet there are a number of fishes known in these depths, and it seems likely that these tenants of the deep may be numbered by thousands of species. Among the finned tenants of the profounder parts of the ocean, we find the most startling departures from the types with which we are familiar in coastal waters. In general shape they differ little from their kindred which dwell in the sunlit shallows. The differences are largely in the mechanism of the senses, especially of the eyes. These organs undergo surprising variations with reference to the enduring of the darkness of these depths. In certain of the species the sight not only fails, but the visual apparatus entirely disappears; in others the eyeballs become very much enlarged and the nervous apparatus increased, and are evidently arranged to catch mere glimpses of light. As it is certain that no trace of sunlight can ever penetrate through the deep which overlies the realm where these animals dwell, the adaptation of these eyes to the needs of different vision at first appeared to be a very inexplicable matter. Some recent discoveries provide us with what seem to be an adequate explanation of the enigma. It has been found that certain of the denizens of the deep seafloors have phosphorescent parts of their bodies which serve to give light in the manner in which it is yielded by the familiar fire flies and glow worms. The end secured by these light-giving parts is probably the attraction of the sexual mates of the creatures. In the utter darkness of the ocean this indispensable end could be attained in no other way; even the fishes appear to have this beautiful provision for avoiding the most serious evils of the darkness in which they are compelled to exist.

It is evident that the fishes with large eyes would also have a decided advantage in the pursuit of food, for their keen vision would enable them to discern the glimmer of the phosphorescent light for some distance through the still, clear water. The difficulty comes in the case of those fishes which under the same general conditions of existence in darkness, combined with the same need of food, and of finding their mates, have not only failed to better their sight, but have abandoned it altogether. There is, perhaps, no other simple instance in which we may so well perceive the cardinal difficulty which the extreme selectionist encounters in his effort to explain all the complications of the organic world by the single hypothesis of the survival of the fittest. Here are two groups of like creatures introduced to the conditions of utter darkness after long ages of experience in the realms of light under circumstances which, so far as we can perceive, are absolutely identical, the creatures enter upon widely divergent paths of variation. The lesson we may read in these facts seems plain; it is to the effect that environment alone is not competent to determine the way followed by a species in its process of change.

J. R. Shephard applied to Registrar H. Grinnett for registration this morning. On the presentation of the elector's oath, Shephard refused to take it. Grinnett then refused to register him. This will be made a test case by the Republicans to try the constitutionality of the Idaho test oath.

THE CENTER STREET GRADE.

The property owners on the east side of Center street, who have entered a respectful protest against the intended manner of grading a portion of that street, are very indignant because of the unwarranted statement made when the petition was presented to the Council on the 18th inst. A councilman was reported as saying, in reference to the protest, "that it was all a bluff game anyhow." A local newspaper states that the protest is not likely to receive favorable attention, and a member of the Council said that it is necessary to cut down the street because the grade is now so steep that it is almost impossible to run the fire apparatus up there. As it seems that the indications are against favorable reconsideration of the matter by the Council, I beg the privilege of presenting some of the facts to the public through your columns.

In the first place, the signers of the petition are owners of the lots on three blocks only of Centre street, the first three blocks on east side of said street, just north of Mr. McCormick's residence. That portion of the street is, for most of its length comparatively level, and does not need to be cut down for the purpose of reducing the steep grade. The steep ascent, from either end of the street, is made before those blocks are reached, therefore to cut the street down in that section is superfluous, and a wholly unnecessary expense, so far as making the ascent easier is concerned. We are given to understand that the city wants the dirt that can be obtained by lowering the grade, to fill depressions in other streets (they would "rob Peter to pay Paul,") and can thus obtain it cheaply. Surely this can not justify the city in permanently damaging the property involved in this matter.

As stated in the protest, if the street is cut down as ordered, to a level with the west sidewalk, access to the lots on the east side will be made considerably more difficult than at present; and, as most of the owners are now under the necessity of climbing lengthy flights of steps to get onto their lots, they naturally object to the contemplated great increase of their inconveniences. They are not ambitious to be elevated to the rank of cliff dwellers, without wings to aid in carrying them up the unsightly unwallied heights which the city proposes leaving in front of their habitations.

Such grading would also add very materially to the already too steep incline of streets leading eastward from Centre Street to Capitol Hill. Instead of increasing the difficulty of access to that desirable location, there should be an effort made to render it more easy. I am hardly prepared to believe the rumor that there has been, and is, a determination on the part of boomers of "additions" in other portions of the city to detract from the advantages of Capitol Hill as an eligible location for the best class of residences, certainly I can not think that any of the city councilors are parties in the matter; nevertheless the effect of grading Centre street, as intended, would be an aid to real estate schemers in such a plan.

It is true that the street should be properly graded, from the east to the west side, making its level as practicable in that direction, so that the street cars and wagons may have room to travel without danger, but the method decided upon, viz., cutting it down to a level with the west sidewalk, is a manifest injustice, and altogether in favor of the west side residents and the Street Railway company. Besides, I think it can be shown that a cheaper, and certainly more equitable way to adjust the difficulty is that suggested by some of the interested parties. I allude to the proposition that the height of the street, from level of west sidewalk to level of east sidewalk, be equally apportioned by a wall one-half each height being built along the edge of the water flume on the site, and a similar wall to retain the sidewalk on east side. This would provide the full available width of the street for traffic; it would not interfere with grading the streets leading to Capitol Hill; and it would fairly divide the present disadvantages of the grade between both sides of the street.

Furthermore, if the street is cut down to a level with the west sidewalk, as ordered, and a retaining wall is not erected to support the east sidewalk, the requisite slope will materially reduce the width of this narrow street, making traffic almost impossible, and assuredly dangerous, when the car track is laid in the centre.

I apologize for intruding on your space; this is a longer explanation than I intended making, but it seems necessary in view of the assertion that our application "was all a bluff game anyhow." Yours respectfully,

D. M. MOALLISTER.

AN ELECTION DIFFICULTY.

In the Third District Court this morning, Richard W. Young, J. Ferguson Smith and Wm. J. Tuddenham, planted a suit against Lucius E. Hall, arising out of the Salt Lake municipal election on February 10th, 1890. The complaint states that at that election the plaintiffs were duly elected to hold the office of councilmen for the Fourth Ward, for a term of two years; that the defendant Hall, one Louis Cohn and one Warden J. Noble, each pretending to have been elected as councilmen from this same ward, unlawfully usurped and intruded into said office, and unlawfully acted for a period of seventeen months; that under the laws of the Territory and the ordinances of Salt Lake City each of the plaintiffs was entitled to receive for his services as Councilman the sum of $550 per annum, and the further amount of $5 each for every special meeting of the City Council. But the defendants, pretending to act as Councilmen, unlawfully drew this allowance, claiming the same as salary, the aggregate amounting to $418.35. Plaintiffs had made demand upon the defendants for such money illegally drawn by them, but they had not returned it, nor any part thereof. Hence judgment is demanded for $418.35, legal interest, and costs of suit.

THE DANGER AT GARFIELD BEACH.

For two or three days past there have been rumors of danger from diphtheria at Garfield Beach. Stories with more or less foundation in fact, but mingled with considerable fiction, have been circulated in such a way as to cause much alarm. As soon as they reached this office we instituted inquiries as to their truth, because we did not wish to aid in spreading terror nor in giving publicity to groundless or exaggerated reports.

We learned that there was some foundation to the story, but that the superstructure was largely imaginary. There is a small frame cabin a little distance west of the powerhouse at the Beach, where a family reside the head of which is a workman at Garfield. About eleven days ago one of his boys who was visiting friends at E. T. City, caught the diphtheria there and on coming home communicated it to an elder brother. The boy was sent back next day to E. T. City, where he died. The oldest brother was also sent to E. T., a day after six days' medical and surgical treatment, he died last Monday. Another member of the family who became infected was removed to the Sisters' Hospital in this city. The building which they had been in was at once barricaded and disinfected. Capt. Douris had the bedbug and other household appliances burned on the hill side and the very ashes disinfected. A doctor was sent out to the Beach to watch for any re-appearance of the disease, but there has been none.

On Tuesday evening three physicians went out to the Beach and made a thorough examination of the matter, and in this their report:

"SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 23, 1902.

"D. E. Burley, Esq., General Passenger Agent, Union Pacific Railway:

"Dear Sir:—In compliance with your request we made a special trip to Garfield Beach this afternoon for the purpose of investigating the conditions there with relation to the question of diphtheria recently reported. We have investigated thoroughly, and find that some ten days ago a child was brought from a neighboring settlement to the section house at Garfield, ill with diphtheria.

"From this case two others in the same family were infected. All these were promptly removed, and the premises quarantined and disinfected.

"The employees at the beach have all been subjected to daily medical examination since that time, and no further cases have developed. So long time has now elapsed that we deem it impossible that other cases should occur at Garfield from this infection; especially since the company has ordered the building with all its contents burned. We believe all possible precautions have been taken by the railroad company; and, so far as we can learn, no other buildings have been contaminated."

F. S. BASCOMB, M. D.,
A. C. STANDAERT, M. D.,
A. C. MACLEAN, M. D.,
G. W. FOSTER, M. D."

Early this morning the cabin was burned to the ground so that there might not be the slightest possible reason for alarm. Captain Douris and Mr. Washburne have personally taken every precaution that there might be no danger to the public, and the U. P. agents in this city have also been energetic in making the investigation thorough and the destruction of everything possibly infectious complete. E. T. City is four miles from the Beach, and the cabin where the dreaded disease was brought is a considerable distance from the bathing place and its buildings.

There is no danger whatever from this source to visitors at Garfield. There is far more danger to some from an entirely different cause. It is the young ladies who are permitted to stay there until late at night without their parents and guardians, and return home in company of persons of dissolute or unknown character. Young people who go to Garfield or any other place of recreation should be required to return at proper hours, and they ought to be under the surveillance of older persons who will watch over their welfare.

Personally we have seen no improper conduct there, but we have been frequently told of proceedings on the latest trails which are discreditable to some of our young people, the children of respectable parents. In the excitement of the amusements in which they engage, and sometimes of the beverages in which they indulge, they become reckless and boisterous and indifferent both to the public gaze and to that decorum to which people of ordinary culture are accustomed.

If parents cannot accompany their children on excursions of this kind, they would do well to have some one as chaperone for their daughters who will exercise a kindly restraint and keep them from intimacy with strangers and persons of doubtful character. We do not believe in "seces" of any sort, but we believe that there is more danger at the Beach from the cause we have mentioned than from any infectious bodily disease.

A VALUABLE POLITICAL WORK.

"TARIFF REFORM the Paramount Issue" is the title of a work just issuing from the press which is likely to cut an important figure in the presidential campaign. It is from the pen of the Hon. William Springer of Illinois, and is replete with cogent arguments in support of that tariff reform which some political partisans persist in calling "free trade." Mr. Springer has been in Congress ever since 1874 and even before that time was an earnest advocate of the principles which he now advances, and which he has battled for all his life as a public man.

Of course this book is written from a Democratic standpoint and the reader must peruse it in that light. In order to arrive at just conclusions, the Republican arguer's should also receive due consideration. But the author has accumulated a vast fund of information, statistical and otherwise, and has been so intimately and so long familiar with the economic questions involved in this subject, that his work cannot fail to have a powerful effect upon the great issue of the hour. For, it is evident that all other points of difference between the two great parties pale their ineffectual fires in the light of the question of the tariff.

The student of this subject will find in this work not only clever arguments on the general principles involved, but valuable information on special subjects of local importance such as free sugar, free wool, and the tin plate, woolen goods and other controversies. The work is of worth to people of either national party. The facts and figures it presents could only be obtained by years of diligent research and compilation and are useful for reference no matter which side of a tariff controversy may be taken.

A sketch of the author's life, with portrait, is given at the beginning of the book, and Cleveland's famous tariff message of 1887 with his portrait and Adlai Stevenson's are presented at the close. There are other portraits in the work all finely executed, and the letter press is clear and on good paper of over four hundred pages. It will be distributed by the National Democratic committee and is published by Chas. L. Webster and Co., New York.

A DAILY NUISANCE.

WATER should be turned into the upper part of the sewers every day. There is not fluid enough usually to flush them. The consequence is a stench, every low and again, that is unbearable. People passing along the upper part of East Temple street early this morning had to hold their noses, and they were looking around expecting to see a dead animal. The stink came from the same manhole about which complaints have frequently been made. A smelling committee came up, after the situation was explained, but we are told they could not discover anything offensive. That can be explained only on two hypotheses: Either the foul matter had been removed by flushing from some source, or the smelling gentlemen have poor noses for odors. Nearly every day the fumes arising from the sewer in the upper part of "Main" Street, as the signposts call it, are foul and unhealthy, and the hose ought to be turned loose daily so that the nuisance may be abated.

A MIXED LABOR SITUATION.

The dispatches tell of a rather amusing situation connected with organized labor in Chicago. The artists who have heretofore supplied music for the parades on labor day have been paid five dollars each for their services. The Chicago Musicians' Union demands for the ensuing occasion that kind seven dollars for each man. Some of the labor unions refuse to comply with this requisition and have practically locked-out the members of the Musicians' Union and engaged non-union men to play for them.

This is a novel situation. The unions which refuse to pay the seven dollars are virtually in the position of capitalists, or employers, and they resort to the common or usual means employed by that class when disputes are on—the employment of non-union men. This shows that when positions are reversed it is difficult to tell "whether from which." "Human nature is human nature."

Some of the unions complied with the demand of the union musicians. A split, characterized by acrimony, is the result, and it is not unlikely that there will be two parades, and possibly a conflict.

The subject is serious, but the position ludicrous.

IT IS BEST TO JUST.

It never permanently helps any cause to misrepresent the opposition. Such advantage as may appear to accrue from it is only temporary, and when the reaction comes the intended injury rebounds and does more damage to the author than to the intended victim. This will be found by experience to hold good in politics. It is therefore with no disposition to do harm to any one, but the contrary, that we refer to a charge that is being made and has been many times repeated of late, that the late Utah Legislature "took off the bounty on sugar." The statement is not true and ought not to be reiterated. The argument based upon it must fall, unless it is supported by something that has the merit of accuracy.

The Utah Legislature could not take off the Government bounty on sugar; that is evident and needs no proof, for nothing short of an Act of Congress could remove that bounty. And the late Legislature did not take off the Utah bounty on sugar. The sum of $11,000 was drawn from it in 1891, and the remainder of $19,000 is open to the sugar manufacturers in 1892. The Legislature did not take this off nor attempt to take it off.

The facts in the case are, that a bill for a further sugar bounty was introduced in the Legislature of 1892 and failed of passage. A very small majority voted it down. We need not and do not propose to reproduce the arguments, pro and con, that were adduced when the subject was under debate; they were duly set forth at the time in the DESERET NEWS. It is well known that this paper favored the bounty, as an exception case calling for exceptional legislation. Therefore we cannot be accused of any partisan or personal motive in now stating the truth.

The best way in all these controversies is to adhere to facts, and in assailing the position of an adversary to accord to it all the strength it possesses, and set forth its claims fairly and correctly. Then there is some credit in overcoming it and the victory will count. There is too much misrepresentation nowadays in political matters, that the very mention of them is becoming offensive to just minds. Utah politicians ought not to fall into the methods of the demagogues and the peace-hunters, but, contend fairly for that which they believe to be right, and conduct their discussions in the spirit of justice, courtesy and honor. The truth will be sure to win in the end, and it will abide forever.

AN OCEAN RACE.

ELDER Joshua B. Bean, who returned home from England on Saturday, informs us of an unusual incident of travel across the Atlantic. The two celebrated ocean greyhounds, "Aurania," of the Cunard line, and "Alaska," of the Gulon line, left Liverpool at about the same time on Saturday, August 6th. They engaged in a trial of speed and never once lost sight of each other during the entire trip to New York. The "Aurania" was a little better trim than her competitor and made the voyage about two or three hours quicker. The race was a subject of lively interest to the passengers, and helped to make the time pass more lively than it otherwise would. During the voyage the course of each vessel was several times crossed by the other. Both are magnificent steamships.

A MYSTERIOUS PICTURE.

The press dispatches have made brief mention of the sudden appearance of a mysterious picture in a window of the steeple of a Catholic church in Canton, Minnesota. It represents a grotto in which is the form of a woman with an infant reclining on her left arm. Slightly above the face of a bearded man looking down on the pair. The woman is dressed in a loose white robe, has flowing black hair and a beautiful face. The picture was first discovered by a little girl, and has since been visited by hundreds of curious people, while some who have looked for it have been unable to see it. The glass has been scrubbed inside and out by doubters, but the picture is still there. It has been asserted by some that Father Jones, pastor of the parish, and who built the church, had the picture blown in the glass, but this the priest emphatically denies, and thinks the charge can easily be proved or disproved by inquiring of the firm from which the glass was purchased.

All these details are published in the newspapers as veritable facts, and the people of Canton are wondering what the next development will be.

REFERENCE was made in yesterday's NEWS to the appearance in a window of the steeple of a Catholic church, in Canton, Minnesota, of a picture representing a grotto in which is shown the form of a woman holding an infant. The details are given by the press as facts and, as was stated, people are at a loss to know how the phenomenon can be accounted for.

It will, perhaps, interest our readers to learn that this case is not the only one of the kind on record. In 1874 a devout farmer's wife at Zapfendorf, near Bamberg, Bavaria, discovered, to her great astonishment, after a fervent prayer, the faint outline of a madonna picture in one of the window panes in her house. The appearance was plainly visible to a number of persons, while others could not perceive anything. Dr. Hodann investigated the case and published the result in the Schlesische Zeitung, 1877, No. 241. He summarizes his observations in the following statement: "If a framed picture is for years exposed to strong sunlight, the outlines of it will, by a process not satisfactorily explained, be transferred to the covering glass. Should afterwards such a glass be used in a window, the picture is sure to be discovered sooner or later."

Assuming this statement of the doctor to be correct, the accounts of the mysterious picture at Canton may be accepted as facts, while the pictorial representation need not necessarily be regarded as the work of a supernatural power.

THAT HUGE COAL COMBINE.

WHEN the Reading Railroad, the Lehigh Valley, and New Jersey Central entered into an arrangement several months ago by which over one-half the anthracite coal output of the country could be controlled, great excitement prevailed all through the East. The New York legislature took the matter up, but nothing came of it. A bill was introduced and passed in the New Jersey Legislature legitimizing what was then called the "Coal Combine," but the Governor vetoed it. Pennsylvania also had something to say, but as the Pennsylvania Central, the Lackawanna and the Delaware & Hudson were also engaged in the anthracite coal industry, it was thought that these would form a check on the combine in the event of a rise in price, and the matter dropped.

The latest intelligence from the coal district is to the effect that the roads last mentioned are now in the combine, and in fact always were; but a mock opposition was shown in order to hoodwink the public. The anthracite monopoly is complete. The Delaware & Hudson is a Vanderbilt road, and of course this means that the whole Vanderbilt influence goes with the "combine," or "conspiracy" as it should be called. Not one bushel of anthracite coal can now be placed in the market except through an agent of this vast monopoly, perhaps the largest and most dishonest in the history of modern times.

POLITICS IN IDAHO.

THE political pot is boiling in lively style in Idaho, and the "Mormon" question is once more an ingredient in the broth. The Republicans have made their bid for the support of that element, and the Democrats, who meet today at Boise, will no doubt try to come up to the same scratch, if they do not go a little farther, for the same purpose.

The Republicans decided that the test oath was no longer needed and that the party will do its best to have it repealed. That is very good so far as it goes. It is prospective, however, and contingent upon their success.

If the Democrats can do something more immediate and practical it will no doubt be highly appreciated by our friends in the North. But we do not see at present how anything can be done which will render available to either party the votes of the "Mormon" dissent at the coming fall elections. It is certain, however, that they are not all of one party, and even if means could be devised whereby their right to vote was made secure, that they would cast their votes, not in a body but according to their individual political preferences.

COALVILLE HAS A NEWSPAPER.

We are glad to see that Coalville, that enterprising little town in Summitt County, has a bright weekly paper. The Chronicle is not pretensions, but is wide awake and contains not only the local news of the city and county, but well gleaned items from other papers and crisp and pointed editorials. The publishers will have to do some energetic rustling to make it pay in a population of the numbers of that region, but if the public can appreciate the value of a journal devoted to their interests, and will manifest their appreciation by that financial support which is essential, we see no reason why the Chronicle should not flourish in Coalville and increase both in size and days of publishing as well as in circulation and interest. We wish the Chronicle success.

NOT PARTISAN.

The demagogues who are playing for the labor vote, need not think they will curry favor by denouncing the Mayor for his veto of the so-called "eight hours ordinance," and praising the unions for framing a new ordinance. The measure introduced in the City Council on Monday evening makes the simple provision which the Mayor announced himself in favor of. The bill be vetoed was fatally defective. It legislated too much. It would not have stood the test of the courts if he had signed it. Neither be nor any one else that we have heard of opposes the eight hours limit as a day's labor on public works. Those who were against the former ordinance objected to the limits it placed on labor, and the penalties it imposed to prevent voluntary work for more than eight hours during the day, with no limit as to the time of work during the night. It is folly to try and make party capital out of this matter. It is not a party question, and the working people understand that it is not, and will only smile at efforts to deceive them in that respect. If an ordinance is passed declaring eight hours to be a legal day on all public city works, without tying up workmen and contractors so as to destroy the liberty of the laborer and cripple the enterprises of the employer, the trades will no doubt be satisfied, the suggestion of the Mayor will be carried out, and the general public will give their endorsement. And there will be nothing partisan in the movement nor any capital in it for prevaricating politicians.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Aug. 28.—A cable message announces the death on Friday in Jaffa, Ceylon, of Rev. William Ware Howland, for nearly fifty years a missionary of the American Board of that island.

THE TENNESSEE MINING TROUBLE.

LATE dispatches from the scene of the recent civil war in Tennessee state that quiet now prevails. The militia, however, are on the ground, and cannot be withdrawn for some time. There are over 1800 convicts in the State of Tennessee. A large percentage of these are leased to the Tennessee Coal and Iron company. The act under which the lease was entered into passed the State Legislature in 1889, and went into effect on January 1st, 1890, to run until January 1st, 1895. Dissatisfaction has for a long time been manifested against the leasing system. In 1889, owing to troubles then existing, the contractors surrendered their lease, and the matter was settled by a board of arbitration.

The question at issue in Tennessee is really the employment of convicts as competitors of free miners. The orials which has been brought about so tragically will have the effect of bringing the true situation before the whole American people, and attempts at a solution will be the result.

The minimum task of a convict is said to be four tons of coal per day, and his cost for feeding and guarding 20 cents. The lessees pay little more than this cost, therefore at $2.50 per ton the contractors make $10 on an outlay of little more than 20 cents. From this it can be easily seen that in time prison contractors could own and operate all the coal mines in Tennessee. Competition on such terms is out of the question.

There is still another reprehensible feature about this convict business. There are contractors and sub-contractors, and a host of other middle men. They are all political hangers of some kind. Their interest is to keep as large a number of convicts as possible in the prisons. In fact, it was proved in open court a short time ago that a convict lessee had offered a bonus to several district attorneys for each conviction.

To the credit of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, however, it must be stated that it offered to surrender its lease at the special session of the Legislature held last winter. It was not accepted. Without entering into party politics, it is a fact that the record shows that all the Republican members of the legislature voted for acceptance, while the Democrats voted the other way. As a consequence the contractors had to hold on to their lease, which does not expire, according to its terms, until 1896.

One year ago there was trouble at the mines. At that time the stockades were burned and the convicts set at liberty, as was the case a week ago.

CHOLERA INCREASING.

We see no need for any longer attempting to disguise the fact that there is real danger of Asiatic cholera reaching the United States. The reason for the present effort to make the people believe that the advent to this country of the terrible scourge is not probable is to keep down popular anxiety on the subject. Seeing that the disease has not yet reached the United States we do not think there is a likelihood of creating anything like a panicky feeling at this juncture. Apathy on the subject would be really worse than anxiety, because the former feels g produces indifference in relation to the establishment of sanitary measures and other precautions, which would be a great benefit to the country even if cholera should not visit the our Republic.

The plague is traveling westward, having broken out in Hamburg where there were 150 cases on Monday and a number of additional ones yesterday. The percentage of deaths was high, numbers of them occurring inside of an hour after the attack and none beyond six hours after the commencement of the illness. The malady has likewise appeared in Havre. It keeps on its westward way the coming of the scourge to this country is only a question of time. The government, general and local, ought to be on the alert, and institute appropriate measures.

It has been demonstrated in plague periods, that mental conditions have much to do with the liability of people to attack. No operation of the mind has a stronger tendency in that direction than the fear of becoming a victim. Indeed such is the case with disease generally, the mind having a potent influence over the condition of the body. This fact doubtless causes the authorities of the country to be slow to create an impression to the effect that there is any great degree of probability of cholera making its appearance in this nation. There is a possibility of carrying this precaution too far and thus impeding the progress of necessary measures of sanitation.

POLITICS IN ENGLAND.

A MEMBER of the English Parliament writing to the San Francisco Chronicle from London under date of August 20th, gives the following synopsis of the situation in the British Islands:

"Politics will for a time be a blank, but a large contingent of the Radicals will never forget nor forgive the slights which have been cast upon them. As for Labouchere, he is quite able to revenge himself. Some Gladstonian organs are trying to divert his wrath from Gladstone to the Queen with the insinuation that her majesty declined absolutely to accept him as a minister. The fact is Gladstone did not submit his name and never had the least intention of doing so. 'Labby' had been a thorn in his side over and over again. Gladstone would sooner have asked the father of lies to join his ministry than the editor of Truth."

"There will be a hard fight for Morley's seat, and even should he be defeated Newcastle will have occasion to regret it, for another and safer constituency will be placed at his disposal. Two or three other bills have been made to him already. The other Ministers are in no danger and they can have a comfortable six months with little work and high pay."

"Gladstone is said to have a new home-rule bill all ready, and Morley is the only other man who knows all about it. The story goes that it will satisfy all the Irish except the extreme Parnells, but it is early in the day to believe that.

A PALPABLE BLUNDER.

WHATEVER may be said by way of denial, the public remain under the impression that the chief reason why the County Court has stopped sprinkling on the most frequented streets outside of the city limits, is the failure of the voters to give that body control of $300,000 by bonding the county.

As far as Judge Barch is concerned we do not think there is personal blame. We believe he is too just and highminded a man to condescend to the pleasure of spite and vent individual resentment by retaliation on the public. But the fact remains that a good deal of ill-feeling was exhibited by members of the County court, when the returns came in and it was evident that the bonds election was a failure. Two members petulantly tendered their resignations which were not accepted, and at once the sprinkling was stopped, to the great annoyance of the public and the disgust of all citizens who interpreted this petty act to mean a paltry method of revenge.

Economy may be necessary, in view of the demands to be made on the treasury and the probable insufficient means to meet them. But we think there are other leakages that might be stopped, which would save larger expenditures than the comparatively meagre amount for sprinkling, and that would not expose the Court to the censure which this step has occasioned.

The excuses thus far set forth for the parsimonious if not revengeful act, are really too thin to give public satisfaction, and we think the County Court would do well to wisely reconsider its resolution, and not continue to throw dust in the eyes of the taxpayers, who can see more clearly than is supposed, and will show what they can see when they go to the polls in November.

THE COUNCIL AND THE MAYOR.

THIS continuous clash between the Mayor and the City Council is becoming not only monotonous but disgraceful. We do not pretend to decide who is to blame. The indications, however, are that it is mutual. The Mayor takes ground independent of the Council in some things, and that body, feeling provoked, retaliates and shows a disposition to act independently of the Mayor.

It seems to us that this can be avoided. If the ordinances are vague in relation to the respective powers of the Mayor and the City Council, they can soon be adjusted to meet the difficulty and, meanwhile, a proper disposition by both parties would avoid any such scandals as arise at nearly every meeting of the Council when regular business is introduced.

The law of 1892 which makes the Mayor an executive officer with veto power, separate and apart from the Council, does not fully harmonize with some of the old provisions which contemplated the Council as a body presided over by the Mayor. But there need not be any collision in consequence if each party has a desire to render to the other all that is due. And common courtesy requires this, if nothing else.

If it is true that the Mayor is technical, or that he assumes more authority than belongs to him, or desires to snub the City Council, we do not think that would justify the Council in taking a similar course in reference to the Mayor. That would be only retaliation, which is not right and is paltry, and between the two opposing influences the welfare of the city is imperilled.

The Mayor and Council ought to drop all ill-feeling and boy's-play and come together, literally and in sentiment, equally desirous of supporting each other in all public measures, and careful to concede to the other every right and power that have been authorized by charter or ordinance. There should be no clash among the various departments of the city government. Let us have harmony!

THE GREAT SALT LAKE RAILROAD.

THE San Francisco Chronicle of August 21st has the following:

"The subscription lists of the Great Salt Lake Railroad will soon be thrown open to the public, who will have a guarantee of the soundness and business character of the enterprise afforded them by seeing the names of shrewd men heading the subscription for large amounts. If the signs are not deceptive every share of stock allotted will be promptly taken in this city as soon as the people get a chance to invest."

AN IMPORTANT SUIT.

MESSES. YOUNG, Smith and Tuddenham have entered suit against Messrs. Hall, Cohn and Noble, to recover the amount of salary due to them as members of the City Council while the defendants unlawfully occupied their seats in that body.

It will be remembered that the first named gentlemen were duly elected Councilmen from the Fourth Precinct, or City Ward, at the election of 1890. Also that the "Liberal" majority of the Council, under advice from the "Liberal" boss and voiced by the Mayor, refused to receive these members, and that the "Liberals" who were defeated in the Fourth Precinct were sworn in and took their seats. Further, that the matter was tested in the courts and was decided in favor of the complainants, but the "Liberal" policy of chicanery and obstruction was continued until the last possible moment, and the rightful incumbents of the office were kept out of their places until the greater part of their term had expired.

They subsequently applied for the salary of the offices to which they had been judicially declared entitled, but the City Council refused to pay them. Suit has therefore been entered to recover the amount from the parties who received it, and what might have been settled by the City is now demanded of those individuals.

It looks as though the complainants had good ground for their suit. If they were legally entitled to the office they were legally entitled to its emoluments. If the City will not or may not pay the salary, it ought to come from somewhere, and where else but from those who unlawfully received it? If we are not mistaken, there is a precedent for this in the cases of the Territorial Auditor and Treasurer, in which the latter view of a similar question was taken by the Court. At any rate the matter is now in litigation and it furnishes one more illustration of "Liberal" methods in elections and particularly of the "Liberal" tactics of 1893.

RELIGIOUS REVIVALS.

SALT LAKE is to be treated to what is called a "revival." That is to say, a gentleman who possesses the influence termed "personal magnetism," is fluent of speech, and emotional in feeling, and who has had experience in stirring up the masses, is to hold forth specially on religious topics and endeavor to excite abnormal religious interest. Regular ministers of different denominations are to unite in aiding the movement and welcoming the revivalist.

There may be good arising from these periodical tempests that are fomented in the sectarian world. Agitation is very often beneficial in physical things and it may be so in spiritual things. But we have never seen any permanent good arising from "revivals." People of bad habits may be temporarily induced to reform, and that, of course, is so much gain to morality. But the cause of religion, true religion, is, in our opinion, injured instead of assisted by those emotional upheavals and the agitation that attends them.

Religion does not consist of undue excitement and exaltation of feeling. The effects of revivalism on the internal being are somewhat similar to those of alcoholic stimulants on the external being. Each is a species of intoxication. Neither is nutriment. The soul is not nourished, the mind is not informed by the former, any more than the body is benefited by the latter.

The exhortations of the revivalist are sensational rather than intellectual, and appeal to the senses rather than to the spirit of man. The antics of the "converted" are indicative of mental aberration caused by the biological influence of the revival manipulator. The whole business is outside of genuine religious faith and feeling, and the gymnastics that ensue are occasioned by spiritual inebriety.

The reaction is sure to come. When the magnetic exhorter is gone, the spell is broken, the "converted" lapses into the old ways and goes further in them than before, and the pure religion of Christ is made the subject of mockery. The infidel is encouraged in his jibes and immorality frequently makes greater inroads than ever when the "revival" is over, and sometimes while it is in progress.

Encouragement should be given to men and women who are gifted with light and power to move upon the better part of human nature and increase the sum of information and religious faith and action. But the sentimental mountebank who plays upon the fears and the emotions of weak-minded people, as is the custom at "revivals" and sectarian shouting circuses, is to be given the cold shoulder by all rational people who desire knowledge instead of noise and pure devotion instead of yelling exultation.

A SOCIALISTIC MAYOR.

ONE day last week in the Department of Tarn, France, a mining company discharged one of its workmen. His co-laborers demanded his reinstatement, but the company refused to comply. The discharged employee is mayor of the town in which the mine is situated. He is a Socialist, and was elected to that office at the last election. The district is becoming Socialistic at a rapid rate.

The miners are contemplating active measures, and it is feared that great disorder will result in the event of a strike. Most of the public officials in the district are socialists. If called on to quell disturbances, it is expected that they will side with the working-men.

THE NEW MISSISSIPPI CONSTITUTION

THE new constitution adopted recently by the State of Mississippi, according as its main features become known to the public at large, attracts proportionate attention. The New Orleans Times-Democrat says of it: "The main purpose and motive of the new constitution was to render it certain that the negroes could never, by any possible political combination, secure control of the State."

The vast majority of white people in the north, both Republican and Democratic, would not favor negro domination in any of the States of this Union. But the plan adopted by the Mississippi whites is not likely to be endorsed very generally in the north. A clause in the new constitution provides that any applicant for registration as a voter must be able to read a section of the State Constitution, and also to construe it to the satisfaction of the judges of election. An educational test for the franchise is not unreasonable, but further on is another clause which provides that if the applicant can understand a section of the constitution, if read to him, it shall qualify him for the ballot. A large number of whites in that State are illiterate, and this clause will be of assistance to them. The judges of election can thus say who is or who is not to vote. Utah people can appreciate what it means to constitute election judges the arbiters in disputed cases relating to voting.

The total population of Mississippi in 1890 was 1,287,423, of whom 559,703 were white and 747,720 colored. The total males over twenty-one was 271,000 of whom 120,611 were white and 150,469 colored. The total number of school age was 280,258, of whom 114,559 were white and 165,699 colored. These figures show that the colored people in Mississippi largely predominate, and that there is danger of race supremacy if numbers are permitted to prevail.

Although the male population of that State was over twenty-one was in 1890, 281,000, yet the total vote cast in 1888 was only 84,929. Under a registration just completed, according to the new regime, the total number of colored voters is 8000 out of a total of males over it of 150,000. The white registration is 68,127 out of a total of 120,611.

Mississippi has nine electoral votes and seven members in Congress. If her voting population were taken as the basis, her congressional representation would be limited to one. Under the Constitution of the United States this reduction could be made, provided it is proven that American citizens over 21 are denied the right of suffrage.

It would be well for Mississippi, while endeavoring to preserve good government, so to regulate its election laws as not to abridge the rights of American citizens, white or colored. Whatever may be thought of the wholesale disfranchisement of the uneducated negroes, the fact remains that they are constitutionally endowed with the ballot, and State laws must be so framed that they will apply equally to all citizens irrespective of race or color.

TO CROSS THE ATLANTIC IN SEVENTY-TWO HOURS.

THE Canadians are contemplating a scheme by which the transatlantic ocean trip can be accomplished in three days and nights. In fact there is something more than contemplation in it, inasmuch as some of the preliminary work has been performed. The survey for a Labrador railway has just been completed from a town on the Saguenay river to Port Marnham on St. Lewis inlet, sixty miles north of the straits of Belle Isle. The Quebec and Lake St. John railway now runs to the point on the Saguenay, from whence the proposed Labrador road is to start. The distance from this point to Port Marnham is 850 miles. The road can be built in 18 months. From Port Marnham to Milford Haven in Wales, the water can be traversed by ocean steamship in seventy-two hours. It is proposed to establish a steamship port at that place in Labrador. During eight months of the year navigation can be prosecuted without any trouble. The engineers who have completed the survey say that the Labrador climate is bracing and invigorating, and that mineral in vast quantities can be found in that region. English capital is at the back of the scheme, and if the Canadian government will only grant certain concessions, it is said that the work of constructing the road will commence immediately.

THE STUDENTS AND SOLDIERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

ACCORDING to the census bulletin the significance of the term "school age" varies in the States and Territories, and there is no standard in the national statistics. In some States school age is fixed at from six to twenty-one, in others four to twenty-one, and others five to sixteen. In Utah it is six to eighteen. The aggregate of persons of school age, which under the 1890 census is put at five to twenty inclusive, was in that year 22,447,392. Of this number 3,196,827 were colored and 1,384,089 foreign born. Utah had 79,987, of whom 72,982 were native born and 6,955 foreign born, while only 382 were colored.

Of the 22,447,392 persons of school age in the United States in 1890, 11,242,700 were males and 11,204,692 females. In 1880 the aggregate of school age was 18,319,880. These figures show an increase of 22.53 per cent., while the increase in the aggregate population for the same decade was 24.86 per cent.

The militia age is put at from 18 to 44, both years inclusive. The total of males for 1890 of this age was 13,168,280, of whom 1,426,204 were colored and 2,806,082 foreign born. Utah had 45,139, of whom 1,000 were colored and 15,000 foreign born. The total of males of militia age for 1880 was 10,281,239. These figures show an increase of 29.31 per cent. against a general increase in population of 24.86 per cent.

The males of voting age in 1890 aggregated 16,940,311, in 1880 12,890,348, an increase of 32.03 per cent. for the decade.

The whole number of foreign born adult males in the United States in 1890 was 4,348,459. Of this number 1,180,214 or 26.68 per cent. were returned as aliens; 2,546,087 or 58.55 per cent. naturalized; 230,069 or 5.43 per cent. first paper; and 408,139 or 9.34 per cent. information not obtained. Of the grand total of aliens 68.25 per cent. could speak English and 31.75 per cent. could not speak it. The States showing the highest per centage of aliens who could not speak English were Arizona, 65.81 per cent.; Texas, 60.54 per cent.; New Mexico, 54.31 per cent.; Oregon, 50.48 per cent.; California, 43.43 per cent.; Florida, 43.14 per cent.; Wisconsin, 42.23 per cent.; Pennsylvania, 41.40 per cent.; and Idaho, 40.58 per cent.

ACT IN "THE LIVING PRESENT."

THOSE "Liberals" who make profit out of the continuance of the fading faction, are extremely angry over any intimation that the rickety concern is going to pieces. And they are particularly savage at individuals who say or do anything to help onward the political movement which is to sweep away the last remnants of the party of hate and discord. Well, that does not matter, to anyone but themselves. When they are forced by the tide of events to come into the current or be everlastingly overwhelmed, they will see the folly of their present obstruction.

We do not think there is any prominent "Liberal" who maintains that his party can hold out beyond "one more election." Doubtful members are being entreated to stick to it just for that and nothing more. What particular benefit will that be to them or to the Territory? All that it can accomplish possibly will be to put into local office a few "Liberals" in two or three counties, and keep up a show of hostility to the majority of the people. Is that worth the trouble and the expense?

Everybody, except persons who never think, but simply allow down the doses of anti-Mormon stuff dealt out by a malignant scribe or two, knows that there is no real issue in Utah today except that between Republicanism and Democracy. The old haues are defunct. They are actually buried, and the feeble attempts of a few malcontents to drag their decaying remains from the grave of the past are as pitiable as they are disgusting. Shall Utah be a Republican or a Democratic State, is the question of the hour, and it is folly for the remaining members of the "Liberal" faction to lose sight of it in a frantic effort for a few local spoils.

The pretense that the object is to prevent immediate statehood is puerile and insincere. If that was really desirable, the opponents of statehood could fight it far more effectively within the lines of the national parties than in a factional, local, dying organization that has now no national influence and that is known to be opposed to national party interests.

It is evident that those who are seeking to keep alive this local faction by a re-utilization of these local strifes, are doing so for mere selfish purposes, and therefore it is surprising that any rational persons should lend themselves to the paltry scheme. The issue of the hour, the inevitable change of affairs that is approaching, the interests of the coming State and of every active, intelligent man in the community, all cry aloud that the past should be left in the rear, and that those who cling to it should be relegated with it, where they belong, and an alignment should be made at once, of all patriotic and progressive citizens, with the national parties, for living issues that are not only for the benefit of Utah but for the good of the nation with which we are identified.

IDAHO POLITICS.

THE Democratic Convention at Boise on Thursday night nominated John M. Burke for Governor of Idaho. Ex-Governor Stevenson showed up at first as the strongest candidate, but some of the supporters of J. M. Bullentine, finding it impossible to succeed, cast enough votes for Burke to give him the necessary majority, when the nomination was made unanimous. Mr. Burke is very popular in North Idaho and will make a much stronger candidate than Stevenson, as he has always kept his pledges, is a bright, shrewd and nifty man, and has no gubernatorial record to be criticized. He will give McConnell a close run.

Mr. J. M. Bullentine has been a strong opponent of the test oath and fought it gallantly in the Legislature, and he was therefore deservedly popular in Southern Idaho, and was supported by the Bear Lake delegation as long as there was any prospect of his nomination. J. W. Jones received the nomination for Lieutenant Governor.

The convention adopted the "Mormon" plank in its platform, as published in this paper on Thursday evening, with the following addition:

"We denounce the practices of the Republican party now prevailing in Bingham county of requiring Mormons to pledge themselves to vote the Republican ticket before they are allowed to register. The Democratic party pledges itself to do even and exact justice to the Mormon people."

Both parties have uttered a protest against the test oath created by the State Legislature and have pronounced it unnecessary under the present conditions. The Democratic party has not only pledged itself to the repeal of the law as the Republican party has, but pronounces it unconstitutional and favors action against it in the courts.

Now let both parties work for an immediate test, so that in the event that the courts view the matter in the same light as do the politicians, the much-abused Mormon citizens of Idaho may be disenfranchised, and have an opportunity of showing their party proclivities and of casting their votes for the Presidential and local candidates. Who will stand in the way of this desired consummation?

GIVE THE WINDBAGS A SHOW.

A GREAT deal of grumbling is being indulged in by the people on account of the burden of taxation placed upon them in this part of the Territory. One gentleman was bewailing the fact this morning that his special taxes alone for sidewalk and street paving, and sewers amounted to twenty-one dollars a foot frontage on a portion of his property. His remarks set the mind of the writer afloat on the subject of taxation. He began to wonder when the expression of such mossback sentiments as those uttered by the gentleman referred to would cease and the work of the building up of the this city and county go forward without being retarded by an adverse popular sentiment. From such people as the disaffected taxpayer who was bewailing the burdens placed upon him by the local government, it is refreshing to turn to a citizen of another stripe, a member of the legal profession. He was airing his views the other day with much ability and commendable generosity. They were to the effect that mossbackism must cease, because progress and development were the correct watchwords of the hour. People who complained of excessive assessments belonged to the old-fogy brigade. This city was going to be built up and become one of the greatest on the continent and the malcontents could not effectually stop its rapid, double-quick onward march.

The persons to whom these remarks of the limb of the law were chiefly directed asked the broad-minded expounder of progressive principles if he owned any property in this city, and whether he had paid any taxes. The result of the inquiry, elicited the fact that the big-hearted man not only did not own any property, but had not even paid a poll tax, and had only been in Salt Lake a few weeks. He had a great soul, however, and was willing that his neighbors should be required to hand over their last dollar to build up the city that it might become great; very great, and that he might share in its glory and fame. In fact it must be made a place suitable for such expansive people as he to live in. There was nothing of the mossback about him.

Another incident that gave a setback to Mossbackism occurred on the day of the election on the subject of county bonds. A prominent city official approached the poll in one of the precincts. He took up a ballot and flourished it with a heralric blow to the effect that he was in favor of bonding. There was nothing small about him. A well-known property-holder, who had witnessed these manifestations of liberality stepped up and made a similar exhibition, as an offset, on the "No" side of the question. This so disgusted the aforesaid city official that he expressed his mind on the subjects of mossbacks who sat on the tail of progress and shouted whoa.

A few questions from the property-holder and tax-payer made it clear that the city official owned no property and paid no taxes, while it was quite evident that he was making a fat living out of popular taxation. But he is a progressionist and insists that the county must be built up if it takes the last dollar of those who pay his wages to accomplish the end.

Are not the arguments in favor of bonding and of excessively burdensome taxation, in the form of inflated assessments, unanswerable? True they come from non-tax-payers and from some others who not only occupy that position but might, if some who belong to the mossback section of the population, be termed public financial blood-suckers. But they are patriots! They stand in the same relation to local material progress as did the late Artemus Ward with regard to the Republic. He was willing, in case of emergency, that the last drop of the blood of his wife's relatives should be shed in defense of his county.

Is it not time that the non-progressive taxpayer took a back seat and the official test-sucker and the impetuous windbag were hoisted to the front and top of public affairs? A good many of the latter have been conspicuous for a considerable time. Why should there be any growing sentiment to cover them with the extinguisher of popular execration?

THE LIZZIE BORDEN CASE.

THAT Falls River mysterious murder case still continues to attract wide attention. Lizzie Borden, the young woman arrested ten days ago, charged with the murder of her father and step-mother, had a preliminary hearing yesterday. Nothing new has been developed.

Anna Catherine Green, a famous novelist, and author of a story, "The Leavenworth Case," which so resembles the Borden murder that it might be taken as a newspaper history of the tragedy, has been asked for an opinion. She has given it in the New York World. She confesses that the Falls River mystery surpasses anything in romance. The relations between Lizzie Borden and her parents are analyzed, but Mrs. Green believes that Lizzie is innocent. She sounds this opinion on the theory that a woman did not commit the murder, because of the fearful mutilation of the corpses after death. A man, savage or civilized, might do this, but a woman never, unless prompted by jealousy, or in revenge for mistreating her children or destroying her character.

But while she contends that the girl is guiltless of the crime, the authoress does not deny that Lizzie might have indirect inferential knowledge of it. Mrs. Green thinks that some sympathizer of the Borden girl might have perpetrated the deed on his own responsibility.

If Lizzie Borden is guilty of this murder she is one of the most remarkable productions of human nature known to metaphysicians and moralists. Even on the day of the tragedy she ate, drank and slept as usual. Ever since, by reaction of hers, has she disclosed emotion or nervousness of any kind. Her sister Emma is reported to have talked with the lawyer for the defense and given what details she knew. The lawyer then consulted Lizzie, and possibly went over the ground which Emma did. On the next meeting of Emma and Lizzie the latter charged the other with revealing something, and it is said for once lost control of herself. If this is true then Emma must be aware that Lizzie is either the murderer or an accomplice in the crime.

Further developments are eagerly awaited by the public in Massachusetts.

THE DECLINE IN VALUES.

It appears that all the numerous gentlemen who appeared before the Territorial Board of Equalization at Ogden, being summoned by the County authorities, declared that the value of real estate had depreciated fully fifty per cent. from that maintained two years ago and about thirty per cent. from last year's valuation. Is it not a fact that there has also been a great depreciation of real estate values during the same period in Salt Lake City? And was it not predicted before the "Liberal" faction gained control that one of the chief effects would be the raising of the value of real estate? Was it not boasted before a congressional committee that this was the fact? Was it not explained that the $10,000 which was the bonus received by Bess Powers for carrying the "Liberal" faction to victory was given him for that very reason? The records show that from the very day the "Liberals" seized the city the value of real estate has declined, and the figures are emphatic refutations of the boasts of the faction and a proof that its pretensions are nothing but fudge.

DOES PROHIBITION PROHIBIT?

The nominee of the Prohibition party for the presidency of the United States has given to the public his letter of acceptance. In his review of existing evils he does not confine himself to the liquor question. His assertion that the traffic costs the nation two billion dollars a year may not be credited by the average citizen, but when it is remembered that liquor is the source of an immense proportion of the crime, poverty, litigation and misery of this country, it will be found that General Bisswell's figures are not overstated.

Is prohibition the panacea for all the evils resulting from drink? This is a question now being asked here and in England. In that country, as in this, the temperance reformers are divided into two factions, the moral suasionists and absolute prohibitionists. The English Bishop of Chester has recently pronounced in favor of nationalizing the liquor trade. That means something akin to what is proposed at Sioux Falls in South Dakota, and the outline of which was given in these columns a few weeks since.

Another well known English reformer, Dr. Jayne, in a letter recently published in the London Times, acknowledges that the liquor question is one which at present demands national attention. But he contends that the large body of absolute prohibitionists in England are an obstruction rather than an aid to effective legislation in the way of regulating the trade. His theory is that even if prohibition laws were enacted they could never be enforced; and that they would only lead to disrespect for all laws, and to the corruption of the constituted authorities.

However, he does not claim that prohibition laws will always be impracticable, but that by a course of regulative legislation the people can be educated or evolved into prohibition. Though he falls in with the Bishop of Chester's plan, yet he would have the government saloons provided with all kinds of temperance beverages and with amusements of various kinds. He admits that a strong order of socialism pervades this scheme, but thinks the drink evil is so enormous that an experiment of any kind promising mitigation is worthy of trial. He argues that it would be no more socialist than the post office, the school system, the sanitary board, and so on.

In this country there are several Prohibition States and districts, but it is claimed that prohibition does not prohibit, and the moral suasionists here also maintain that effective regulative legislation is retarded by the extremists of the temperance party.

CAMPAIGN TACTICS.

PRESIDENT HARRISON'S letter of acceptance of the nomination given him at Minneapolis is hourly expected. That document will, it is thought, be more or less a merely formal affair, as papers of the kind usually are. However, anticipation in the West is on the alert as to what he may say on the silver question, as well as on other important issues, such as labor, tariff, reciprocity and so on. Perhaps this is why the leaders of the Republican party are at present not more active. They have done but little in the way of open campaign work. But it is expected that when they do begin, earnestness, effectiveness and enthusiasm will be thrown into the fray. They usually wage short, sharp and aggressive presidential campaigns, and in the pending conflict they are likely to adhere closely to this method.

Ex-President Cleveland has not published his letter of acceptance. He is not expected to do so for several days after his distinguished antagonist has given his to the public. The Democratic party is not waiting for the pronouncements of its chieftain. Already its leaders have entered into the work. The New York World has started a fund "to redeem the West." That is a fund to be used specially in Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa. States hitherto unquestionably Republican, but now considered doubtful. The World has subscribed $10,000, the Boston Globe $1000, the Philadelphia Record $1000 and so on. The fund is now closely verging on $20,000. Twenty-one prominent Democratic newspapers, including the Omaha World-

Herald, the Pittsburg Post, the St. Louis Post Dispatch, and others from different parts of the country, have joined in pushing the World plan.

AN ALLEGED WILD MAN.

This is from the San Francisco Chronicle:

"A queer looking individual was taken to the Oakland County jail yesterday by Constable L. M. Lyster of Pleasanton. He has been a curiosity to the prisoners in the jail, and he is known by the keepers as the 'Wild Man from Pleasanton.' When he was brought to the prison he gave his name as James Dorrell and said he had no relatives living as far as he knew.

"A peculiar story is told about the alleged wild man by the constable. For three years past Dorrell has been living in the woods near Pleasanton. He was seen occasionally, but always made himself scarce when anyone approached. Lyster says he has been in the habit of eating grass and leaves from the trees. He is said to have seen and made a great deal of relish. It was a customary thing for him in roaming about the woods to pick up a handful of fresh grass and eat it as though it was a delicacy. Dorrell had no home. Wherever darkness caught him he made his bed for the night. When he wanted a change of diet he would venture near town and make a raid on a neighboring orchard or potato patch. The queer fellow has been known to eat a raw potato and snack his lips as though he were eating an apple.

Many complaints have been made against the fellow because he frightened people by his conduct. Constable Lyster concluded to make a search for him and had good luck in running his man down. At first Dorrell showed fight, but when he found that he was a captive he quietly submitted to arrest.

"At the jail he is a great source of curiosity to the prisoners. He imitates a flute by using an ordinary leaf in a peculiar manner. He twits his mouth and by the aid of the leaf he makes clear notes which are not unpleasant to hear. The prisoner refuses to have anything to do with the men in jail and contents himself by playing on his leaf from early morning until late at night. If he is not a wild man he is certainly a curious character.

"He is a queer creature," said Jailor John Marsh yesterday. "I hunted through the jail today to find out who was playing that flute and was surprised to find my prisoner playing on his little leaf."

PRESIDENT HARRISON'S PROCLAMATION.

In relation to the discrimination exercised by Canadian authorities on American freight passing through the Welland canal, the following from the proclamation of President Harrison will show the real situation:

"Whereas, The Government of the Dominion of Canada imposes a toll amounting to about 20 cents per ton on all freight passing through the Welland Canal in transit to a port of the United States, and also a further toll on all vessels of the United States and on all passengers in transit to a port of the United States, all of which tolls are without rebate, and

"Whereas, The government of the Dominion of Canada in accordance with an order in Council of April 4, 1892, refunds 18 cents per ton of the 20 cent toll at the Welland Canal on wheat, Indian corn, peas, barley, rye, oats, flaxseed and buck-wheat upon condition that they are originally shipped for and carried to Montreal or some port east of Montreal for export, and that, if trans-shipped at intermediate points, such transshipment is made in the Dominion of Canada, but allows no such nor any other rebate on said products, when shipped to a port of the United States or when carried to Montreal for export if transshipped within the United States, and

"Whereas, The Government of the Dominion of Canada by said system of rebate and otherwise, discriminates against the citizens of the United States in the use of said Welland canal in violation of the provisions of article 27 of the treaty of Washington, concluded May 8, 1871.

"Whereas, Said Welland canal is connected with the navigation of the great lakes, and I am satisfied that the passage through it of cargoes in transit to ports of the United States is difficult and burdensome by said discriminating system of rebate and otherwise, and is reciprocally unjust and unreasonable.

"Now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the power to that conferred upon me by last act of Congress, approved July 26th, 1892, do hereby direct that from and after September 1st, 1892, until further notice, a toll of 20 cents per ton be levied, collected and paid on all freight of whatever kind or description passing through the St. Mary's Falls Canal in transit to any port of the Dominion of Canada, whether carried in vessels of the United States or of other nations, and to that extent I do hereby suspend from and after said date the right of free passage through said St. Mary's Falls Canal of any and all cargoes or portions of cargoes in transit to Canadian ports.

In testimony whereof, &c.

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

By the President,

JOHN W. FOSTER, Secretary of State.

AN INVESTIGATION REQUIRED.

THERE is a great discrepancy between the valuations placed by the County Assessor upon city property and those made by the City Assessor. We believe this is pretty general. We know that, in a great many instances, property is valued by the City Assessor at least one third more than the amount named by the County Assessor. This refers to improvements and personal property as well as to real estate.

A great many objections have been formally made to the city assessment and they are chiefly on that ground. They have been referred to the Assessor. It is hardly probable that he will make any changes, unless it can be shown that he has made an error in regard to area, or the actual owner of property, or something of that kind. It seems to us that the City Council ought to look into the fact of the general discrepancy we have mentioned.

We notice that the County Court of Weber County has reduced the valuation of property fifteen per cent. below the figures at which it was assessed. If the taxpayers' petition had been referred to the Assessor it is not very likely they would have received any relief. The City Assessor is said to be a very competent officer. We do not dispute that. But he is working on a per-centage—a vicious and improper system—and is under constant temptation to keep up the valuations of property. Apart from that, it is not probable that if he has placed property generally at too high a figure he will condemn his own work by making a general reduction. The Council ought to take the matter up on its general merits.

The City Attorney has expressed the opinion in the case of some of the bankers, that as they did not supply a sworn statement of their property as the law provides, they cannot now claim any reduction of the figures at which it is placed by the Assessor. Of course that is according to the letter of the law. But will it hold good in a competent court? If the Assessor has placed a fictitious value on a piece of property, it being to his personal benefit to make it as high as possible, is there remedy for the wrong? We believe there is, notwithstanding the failure of the owner to fill up a blank supplied by the Assessor, which the taxpayer may or may not have received.

Only that which is fair and reasonable and for the general welfare should prevail in the matter of taxation. Property ought to bear its just burdens. There will always be objections to assessments while selfishness exists in the human breast and society continues in its present conditions. But excess ought not to be permitted and injustice ought not to prevail, whether it be for the personal benefit of an officer, or for the expected needs of a government. The City Council as a Board of Equalization is expected to do what is right whatever the result may be.

A BIGGER BID.

It seems that the Idaho Democracy has taken a step which is meant to be a bigger bid for the "Mormon" vote in that State than that made by the Republicans. Whether it will prove to be so really will remain to be seen. The committee on resolutions, appointed by the Boise convention, are reported as having agreed on the annexed as plank in the platform of the party:

"We denounce the hypocrisy of the Republican party in dealing with the Mormon question; and

"Whereas, The test oath embodied in the Constitution of the State of Idaho in relation to the elective franchise is sufficiently far-reaching to protect the rights of the State and insure the rights of electors; and

"Whereas, The Republican legislature of the last session, having in view the perpetual disfranchisement of the large class of people known as Mormons, added to the constitutional provision an ex post facto condition and has long after the Mormons, through their President and people, in the most solemn manner, had abandoned all their objectionable teachings and practices; and

Whereas, The action of the Mormon people in these respects has been accepted by the National Democracy in good faith; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we brand the provision in the election law passed by the Republicans of the last legislature as unconstitutional and radically ex post facto; that we demand its absolute and unconditional repeal, and that we favor an immediate test case in the proper courts for the determination of the constitutionality of said law in order that this proscribed class of citizens may exercise the right of franchise at the coming elections."

That is very good—on paper. It will in all probably be accepted by the convention, or something substantially the same will be adopted. But will anything be done to protect the "Mormon" citizens who are practically disfranchised by the legislation referred to, if any of them attempt to vote at the fall election?

There will be great difficulty in obtaining a final decision in any case that may be brought before the courts. We believe, however, that both parties admit the unconstitutionality of the State legislation on the subject. The State Constitution has a provision which has passed muster as not violating the Constitution of the United States in its letter, while it is open to grave objections in the light of the spirit of that instrument. But the ex post facto character of the law passed by the State Legislature will, no doubt, render it void when tested in the courts, and if we mistake not members of both parties aided in its passage.

We hope our friends in the North will be sure they are right before they attempt to go ahead in November. The Democratic party of Idaho may now be very anxious to remove their disabilities, but it is not forgotten in Idaho that both parties worked to create those disabilities, and that whatever has been done by the Democracy in later times, the "Mormon" voters who pleased themselves in jeopardy for that party did not at the time receive that support which they had a right to expect from it. This will naturally make them cautious now, and if not it ought to do so. They should run no risks, but wait on firm ground to the polls or else not go there at all.

We shall be pleased to see something practical in reference to the rights of "Mormon" citizens in Idaho, no matter from which political party it may come. Resolutions are all very well to begin with, but deeds are what will count. It may be that a demand for registration may furnish the test case that is needed, but it is quite doubtful whether that can be fully and finally determined in time to be of avail at the next election. If it can be done, it will be very interesting to see who will oppose the application, and who will try to prevent the case coming to an issue in time to be of any good for either party this year. And if the way is cleared for them at the polls, it will be quite as interesting to see how either party will view the certain fact that the "Mormons" will not rush in a body to support either the Democrats or the Republicans.

A SORRY SITUATION.

If justice gets its due a notorious and red-handed villain, known as Tail Hall, will drop into eternity at the end of a rope, at Wise Court House, near Stone Gap, Va. The list of murders committed by this wretch is said to foot up to the number of ninety-nine. This statement of his bloody record may possibly be exaggerated, but he must have been a great slaughterer to have warranted such an enormous credit of victims. Society surely has no use for such an inhuman monster. Hall is under sentence of death and ought to hang tomorrow, between the hours of 10 and 2 o'clock.

There are serious doubts as to the execution taking place. These surmises are combined with serious apprehensions, which prevail among the people of Stone Gap and vicinity. It appears that the condemned desperado was the leader of a band of bad men. The latter are now under the chieftainship of one Claib Jones and declare they will prevent the hanging of Hall or every one of the gang will sacrifice his life in an attempt to rescue him. Jones and his followers are from over the mountains across the Kentucky line, and have, in addition to small arms, a Gatling gun and a cannon. Preparations have been made to give the proposed rescuing party a hot reception, should they seek to carry out their avowed purpose.

If Claib Jones and his crew are going to get in their work in behalf of Hall they will have to be quick about it or they will be too late. If they make the assault the lovers of law and order will fervently hope that they will not only be baffled in their purpose but properly and thoroughly wiped out, that an object lesson may be furnished that will have a salutary effect upon other characters of the same stripe.

It is largely customary in these times, especially in the Southern States, when a person is even only charged with committing a crime, particularly if he be a man of color, to show the most sublime contempt for legal and authoritative processes in dealing with the individual accused. This sentiment is exhibited by taking the man (generally colored) against whom the allegation is laid out of the hands of the frequently too willing officers, and hanging him to the nearest tree. Another favorite method of summarily disposing of colored people accused of crime is to perforate their bodies with bullets. There is said to be an opposite to every condition. The proposed rescue of the notorious Hall furnishes it in this line. In the case each great anxiety is displayed lest the law should fail to do the work it is claimed it ought to accomplish; in the other the a reluctance in the direction of preventing the due and proper execution of the law.

This is a sorry state of affairs.

THE WORKERS AT A DISADVANTAGE.

THE switchmen's strike is ended. Their defeat was luevitable from the first. Such will be the result in almost every similar contest unless the employers happen to be willing to accede to the demands made upon them. The latter have on their side, in a dispute, the non-union element, and, when necessary, all the resources of the government. United labor is impotent to contend successfully with these forces, unless it shall employ force more potent than that directed against itself. For this purpose we feel assured that united labor will yet organize in a military capacity. Should this opinion be realized, a civil revolution would be as sure as that night follows day.

We see that Mr. Gompers and other labor leaders declare that the Home stead people will yet be victorious. We believe these statements are misleading, and we doubt the sincerity of those who make them. If these assertions are honestly made the only basis for them is that the Carnegie business is being placed at a disadvantage. On the other hand, the hardship upon which the workmen involved are placed is overwhelming y greater. The latter must find employment or starvation will overtake them and their families. If success or failure be based on the question as to which side can hold out the longer, it must go to the capitalists, who, in this case, are wealthy that they could afford to stop the whole business, not being dependent upon it. In view of the evident situation it does not seem to be proper for intelligent labor leaders to deceive the workmen, and thus throw them into the most distressful conditions, ending with complete defeat.

When the switchmen's strike was opened the most sanguine assertions were made to the effect that they would be victorious. Such a result was plainly out of the question, the odds being overwhelmingly against them.

It is easy for a man to go around with his hands in his pockets, most of the work he does being done with his mouth, to hold out chimerical hopes of victory to striking men whose living has been taken away by their being ordered out of their employment. The sufferers are not so comfortably and securely situated as the men who do the "bolsing." Otherwise their assertions of final victory would not be so pronounced.

PROPOSED PROFIT SHARING.

PROFIT-SHARING as a settlement of the troubles between labor and capital has been recommended by many persons who are recognized authorities on both economic and industrial matters. The system prevails in some large manufacturing concerns in this country. The Iron firm of Crane & Co. in Chicago has a system of profit-sharing, which appears to work satisfactorily. There is a regular scale of wages for all employees, but if the profits go beyond a certain specified percentage, then this surplus is divided among the workers.

The latest proposition in this line comes from Mr. Ingalls, president of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad. In his annual report to the stockholders that official recommends a system of profit-sharing as the only remedy for labor troubles. The directors of the road endorse the report and the stockholders are called on to assemble and appoint a committee to consider the new scheme. This committee will outline a plan by which the president and board of directors can make an attempt to test the practicability and success of the method in railroad industry.

MORE ABOUT THE GREAT SALT LAKE RAILROAD.

THE following editorial from the San Francisco Chronicle of August 22nd has a special interest for this city:

"At the meeting of the Transcontinental Association today in New York it is expected that there will be razors in the air and that something will 'drop with a dull thud' before the meeting adjourns.

The Southern Pacific will find itself in opposition to all the other lines, especially on the Pacific Mail subsidy and the question of through rates and the chances are that it will be forced into a surrender of some of the points upon which it has insisted so strenuously heretofore.

"California is deeply concerned in the impending struggle, but what it wants especially is to see the contest maintained by the building of the San Francisco and Great Salt Lake Railroad. If the Southern Pacific Company reduces through rates only and maintains its present high local rates it will do no good either to San Francisco or to the State. What is needed is cheap rates within the State, so that freight of all kinds brought here by water can be distributed on such terms that San Francisco can undersell Chicago as far east as Salt Lake City.

If the new road will make a proportionate way rate so that the Southern Pacific will have to meet it, and will assist the city to become a distributing center for the whole Pacific coast, the reign of the monopoly will soon come to an end.

Transcontinental railroads ought to bring us coal from Wyoming and from Tennessee at such low rates that we can manufacture at advantage here and ship the manufactured articles eastward over the same roads that brought us the crude products. In this way, and with the aid of ocean carriage, San Francisco could become a great manufacturing city, and the railroads would have their hands full in distributing the finished products over an extent of territory larger than all the Atlantic States put together. That is the work for the San Francisco and Great Salt Lake Railroad company to inaugurate."

GOLD STILL MOVING ABROAD.

"THE continuance of the overflow of gold (nearly $2,000,000 having been shipped to Europe last week) makes a state of affairs almost without a parallel in recent years." Thus it is that Bradstreets, the well-known financial and trade authority of New York, speaks on the situation, which it further describes as both anomalous and extraordinary.

The authority above referred to confesses itself unable to give substantial reasons for the existing state of affairs. The sale of American securities in Europe, the silver agitation here, the rates of exchange between New York and London are all touched on, but none of them, nor all combined, would be sufficient to produce the results described. The anti-option legislation projected in Congress is also touched on, and considerable stress laid on it as a factor in the deportation of gold. On this point Bradstreets says:

"In former years offerings of commercial bills drawn against sales of cotton and grain to importers in Europe were an element of primary importance in maintaining the equilibrium of exchange. Such purchases were usually made for future delivery, the exporting houses here protecting themselves by the purchase of options. The proposed anti-option legislation restricted such transactions to an extent from which the markets have not yet recovered. It is stated that the purchases were used by three large New York houses drawn against cotton futures up to August 1st no less than $70,000,000 of bills of exchange. In the present season the drawings of the same establishments are not believed to exceed $10,000,000. These facts exemplify a general tendency. They furnish at once a valid explanation of the causes which derange the mechanism which should regulate our international financial relations."

INTERNATIONAL REPRISALS.

A MILD form of canal war is now in progress between Canada and the United States. It appears that during the past winter and spring Canadian authorities levied tolls on American freight passing through the Welland, St. Lawrence and other canals, which tolls were said to be unjust, and to the detriment of American commerce. It promised at one time to become a political issue. But President Harrison made a recommendation to Congress which was immediately acted on. By an overwhelming majority the House passed a special bill empowering the President, in case of discrimination against American shipping in any of the Canadian canals, to retaliate on Canadian shipping passing through St. Mary's Canal. The measure became law in due time, and in accordance with the power thus vested in him, President Harrison issued a proclamation a short time ago in relation to the canal question. Canadian freight passing through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal is now subject to tolls and discriminated against in the same manner as American freight using the Welland canal between Lakes Erie and Ontario is treated by Canadians. The injury inflicted on Canadian commerce by the President's proclamation is tenfold greater than that inflicted by Canadians in the Welland canal on American shipping. The practical closing of the St. Mary's canal to Canadians deals a heavy blow at Canada's most vital shipping interests—the grain and ore-carrying trade from the Northwest via Lake Superior ports.

The situation in Canada now is likely to become a political issue. The Conservatives are in favor of isolating that country as much as possible from the United States. The Welland canal discrimination was in line with this policy. The Liberals want more commercial intercourse with their Southern neighbors. The agricultural classes and business interests also favor this view. At present Canada is on the verge of bankruptcy; trade there is paralyzed, and general stagnation prevails. The closing of the St. Mary's canal will aggravate the situation and it is likely that an agitation will spring up which will involve domestic politics, as well as the governments of Great Britain and the United States.

The Canadian authorities seem determined to let the matter rest as it is at present. They have decided that they will reimburse their own shippers for any losses incurred during the present season by reason of President Harrison's action.

THE WOOL MARKETS.

"BRADSTREET'S" review of the wool markets for the week ending August 20th, 1892, is as follows:

"Wool is not selling as freely in any of the leading markets as it did a year ago.

Prices are unchanged, but firm. Receipts continue large, and the markets are heavily stocked. It is due to this large supply that dealers have been unable to secure an advance. The mills are busy, the outlook for the goods market is very satisfactory, and the consumption of wool is heavy, yet with so much wool offering and the strong pressure to sell prices are kept stationary. Fleeces continue to have the call. They are relatively lower than territories, and buyers continue to take them quite freely. The worsted mills are now taking them in place of Australian wool; and this produces a quiet feeling in foreign wools. The rush for Australian wools is disappearing. The stocks are large, but include but few fine, choice lots, and these are held so high that manufacturers find it more profitable to supply their wants in domestic fleeces. Quarter-blood wools are quiet. Delaine wools are only moderately active. Texas wools are moving slowly, though occasionally a large sale is reported. Pulled wools are fairly active. The light stocks prevent heavy buying. The next London sales, which open in September, are expected to show lower prices because of the depressed condition of the English mills. German manufacturers have been underselling them in the English market, and as a result many of the oldest and largest Bradford mills have been forced to shut down. Carpet wools are moving quite freely.

HONOR TO UTAH.

It is announced that as a recognition of Utah's importance in the approaching political campaign some of her orators will be called upon to fight in the bloodless battle to be fought before the nation. Among them Hon. C. C. Richards, of Ogden, Chairman of the Democratic Territorial Central Committee, has been requested to take the stump for the Presidential nominee. As a further mark of the estimation in which Utah is held, we find the following special dispatch from Washington, D. C., in the San Francisco Examiner of August 26th:

"The National Association of Democratic Clubs has determined to pay more attention to the Pacific Coast. Hitherto that section has had no representation of its executive committee. At the last meeting of the general committee an increase of the executive committee by the addition of five new members was authorized. Secretary Gardner today announced the appointment of the following five gentlemen, of whom three are from the far West: John L. Sharpstein, Walla Walla, Washington; C. C. Richards, Ogden, Utah; N. W. McVicar, Corvallis, Ore.; Benton McMillen, Carthage, Tenn.; and Robert A. Smith, Helena, Mont.

"Hon. William L. Wilson of West Virginia, chairman of the executive committee, will call that body together in New York in a few days. A design for the official button of the National Democratic Club association has been adopted, and the manufacture of the button is now going ahead rapidly. It is unusually handsome, being made entirely of white celluloid, with a portrait in colors of Thomas Jefferson on the face of the button. Above the portrait are the initial letters of the organization, 'N. A. D. C.'"

This is an important national association, and the honor done to Utah in the person of one of her native born sons, will no doubt be appreciated by all our citizens, to whatever political party they may belong.

EDMUND RUSSELL'S LECTURE.

MR. EDMUND RUSSELL delivered the first of his series of lectures on Deism, at the rooms of the Conservatory of Music, in the Postoffice building, last evening. The subject was, "The Teachings of Deism." The room was well filled. The lecturer made his appearance at 8:30. He spoke from an elevated position in the corner of the room. His shapely form was clothed in a black dress suit. His face, which is closely shaved, is not particularly striking, the features being short and somewhat round and, taken altogether, not specially expressive. His hair is brushed on the forehead, this peculiarity being liable to attract attention, on account of being uncommon.

Mr. Russell designates his lectures as "talks," which is appropriate, because, aside from his physical gesticulation, there was nothing oratorical about his speech. There was no soul in his utterances, and they therefore made no play upon the emotions of the audience. As a consequence he had changes of facial expression and the appearance of being mechanical. Yet there was a certain charm about the lecture which held the audience. This evidently arose from the fact that it was to a considerable extent anecdotal and comprised a large number of varied statements, the speaker darting from one feature of his subject to the other with such celerity that the mind of the listener had no opportunity to fall. Then the audience were not required to engage in any great mental exertion, as the enunciations were not profound.

The lecture, which was a clear exposition of Deism, embodied many useful suggestions in relation to the use of the body as an aid in the expression of thought and feeling. In this utilization of the human system, it was demonstrated by example that the whole structure ought to be brought into play, and that the hands and arms occupied a subordinate place in this relation. What made the lecture specially interesting was that defects arising from neglecting to use the body as an aid to expression were, as a rule, at once recognized by the audience, when illustrated by Mr. Russell.

There is a class of people who are in special need of a few hints from this exponent of Deistarian philosophy. We refer to persons who are met everywhere on the street. They are always rushing along as if they had just been awarded a contract to construct a tunnel under the Atlantic and were hunting for workmen to begin the labor. One of this class on meeting a friend will say, "Sherellb? Shilok? Cainsseem," which, being interpreted, is, "How is your health? How are the folks? Call and see me." Probably the last word is uttered after the man in a hurry is four or five yards past the person addressed, who generally does not rush after him to give elaborate answers to the interrogatories, which mean worse than nothing. Deism and good sense and breeding would require the interrogator to stop and, by voice and gesture, give at least the appearance of solicitude to his questions. As Mr. Russell is an enemy to sharp angles and jerky gestures, it would not be a bad idea for some of the young men of Salt Lake to attend his lectures. We refer to those who, when saluting lady acquaintances on the street seize their hats, draw them down over their faces with a sudden jerk, up again, back and down, on to the head. All this is opposed to Mr. Russell's explanation of the beauty of undulatory or rhytmical motion.

While Mr. Russell kept along in the main thread of his lecture, he uttered much that was entertaining and instructive. When he stepped aside from its main track, his ground was shaky. For instance, in speaking of the necessity of taking life easy and caring for the body, he said, "The world has been taught the principle of self-sacrifice too long." This expression had the appearance of opposition to self-denial, one of the noblest and manifest qualities of the individual mind. Apart from it there is no nobility, no real love, no Christianity. Without it a person may have all the outward semblance and polish of gentility without its soul. Its opposite is the cause of most of the woes with which humanity is afflicted. Self-sacrifice for others has not been taught too much, while its opposite is not near sufficiently conspicuous among the race.

Another unqualified expression by the lecturer was in the form of advice: "Never do anything you do not want to do." This is opposed to physiological principles of the highest order. No person can build up character in that way. Character construction requires the will to be subordinate to the judgment. There is no better method of building up a vigorous and consequently capable individuality than to make it a part of each day's conduct to determine with regard to what actions are in accord with the demands of duty, but whose performance is against the inclination, and do them. This cultivates the judgment, subordinates the will to it and causes the manly or womanly qualities of the individual to shine with admirable luster.

Take the lecture in the main, it was characterized by an elucidation of principles and suggestions the adoption of which would enable the good to emphasize their goodness by strengthened expression. Such a result, however, would not be attained by acting on the idea that people ought not to do anything they do not want to do. In listening to an exposition of any theory the exercise of proper discrimination will enable a person to select the gems and discard the dross.

EDUCATION IN ILLINOIS.

JUDGE ALTGELD was interviewed a few days ago in relation to the school question, by a News Record (Chicago) reporter. It should be noted that the educational problem is now a political issue in Illinois, and it promises to be a bitter one. The Germans of that great State don't want any interference with their language or with their parochial schools. They are not opposed to compulsory education, but they are opposed to State dictation in educational matters. In this both Catholics and Lutherans are agreed. The English, Polish, Bohemian and French speaking Catholics to a certain extent endorse the Germans.

Judge Altgeld states that he believes in and is an advocate of, compulsory education, but the public schools should be maintained independent of all religious sectarian teaching. As to parochial schools he says:

"Therefore, the State school system is for the purpose of taking care of all those children whose parents cannot or do not choose to send their children to private schools. There was a time in the history of the world when there were no common schools. Every learner had to purchase teaching of some private tutor or school. But the public school system, well managed, backed by the immense resources of the State, has practically superseded in the business of education, especially in the primary and grammar grades, the instruction by private schools. But the parochial school system, being an adjunct of a church, an auxiliary of religious teaching, having to do with a church religion. At the time they were established the church, wisely thoughtful of the welfare of its youth, provided a combination of secular and religious instruction by one and the same set of tutors. Thus the parochial school, being a part of the church as much as the Sunday school, a part of the English protestant churches, it cannot justly be assailed. There is nothing in the common-school system or in the fundamental theory upon which it rests which prompts the belief that it should be forced upon the people who are unwilling to accept it. As already explained, it is maintained to supply a deficiency and not to wrench the control of the education of children from parents."

When asked as to State control of parochial schools he replied:

"No; for the State contributes nothing to maintain them. If these schools do anything or teach anything contrary to law the State can stop it. When it became obvious that the railroads were making unjust discriminations between their patrons the State stepped in and undertook to rectify the abuse of power. Likewise if it were apparent that the parochial schools were teaching doctrines contrary to the welfare of the State or people, or, if they were mistreating the scholars or in any way miseducating them, I should say that the State ought to step in and correct the defect. But I have never heard that any such charge is made even by the most virulent enemies of the parochial schools. It is admitted that they are good from an educational point of view."

When asked as to the State inspectors of parochial schools, he said:

"No. Upon the same ground the State might inspect the management of the home circle in order to see that a parent does not mistreat his children, that a husband does not mistreat his wife. The presumption of the State is that where complaint is not made no abuse exists. Thus the schools need not be inspected, because there is no presumption of an abuse. If there is anything wrong and anybody knows it complaint should be made. The same is true of the mistreatment of children by parents or guardians."

Mr. Altgeld gives further reasons for opposing State control of church schools. He contends that the movement for State inspection endorses a Catholic or Lutheran school, the school immediately, by reason of the religion it represented, made that religion a State one. As this inspection involves expense, the State having ordered it should pay for it, then the first principles of American government become subverted. The moment money was paid from the public funds for any sectarian purpose. This could not be done, as he says:

"Simply because the Constitution forbids the recognition of any church by the State. For the State of Illinois investigate the parochial schools and then have the inspector nail up over the door, 'Inspected and accepted as a school by the State of Illinois,' would be to recognize the authority and power behind the school—a church, or a religion. Control of parochial schools is the first step toward the recognition of a church. But it would be much less practicable to give money out of the treasuries of the State to schools of sectarian churches. Such a proceeding would be stopped by the courts."

WORLD'S FAIR DEDICATION CEREMONIES.

When the Congress of the United States authorized the commemoration of the Four Hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by an International Exposition to be held in Chicago during the summer of 1893, it also provided that the exposition buildings should be dedicated on the twelfth day of October, 1892, with "appropriate ceremonies." Subsequently, by act of Congress, this date was changed to October 21st, 1892.

Aside from the international interest in this fitting prelude to the magnificent picture of the world's progress that will be presented in 1893, this dedicatory service will furnish an opportunity for the world to behold the extent of the preparations which are being made for the exposition.

The task of preparing a programme of ceremonies which will appropriately herald the greater spectacle commemorating the discovery, development and progress of the New World, has been a work involving great care and the consideration of many difficulties. The following programme of the dedicatory exercises and incidents connected therewith is submitted as the result of this thought and purpose:

The evening of Wednesday, October nineteenth, a grand reception will be rendered the President of the United States, his Cabinet and other distinguished guests at the Auditorium. After the glories of the ceremonies on each of the three succeeding evenings, there will be magnificent pyrotechnic displays.

Thursday, October Twentieth.

THE CIVIC CELEBRATION.

The first day will witness an imposing procession, indicative of peace, contentment and prosperity, participated in by civic organizations, which will be reviewed by the President of the United States, his Cabinet, the Congress and other honored guests.

In the evening, at Jackson Park, amid myriads of electric lights and other displays, a water pageant, "The Procession of the Centuries," will move through the beautiful waterways of the Exposition grounds, illustrating with beauty and historic accuracy some of the great facts of history connected with the discovery of America, such as the condition of this country prior to the landing of Columbus; striking events in the life of the great discoverer; important epochs in American history and the world's progress in civilization. The vessels upon which these tableaux will be represented vary from 40 to 53 feet in length, modeled after the naval architecture of the period represented; for example, "Columbus before the Court of Spain," will be represented upon a vessel modeled after the lines of the "Santa Maria."

The following subjects will be illustrated:

1st. Aboriginal Age; representing the American Indians.

2nd. The Stone Age; representing the Cliff Dwellers.

3rd. The Age of Metal; representing the Aztecs, their religious rites, manners and customs.

4th. Columbus at the court of Ferdinand and Isabella.

5th. Departure of Columbus from Palos.

At one o'clock in the afternoon in this building the following dedicatory

At the close of this programme a special electric and pyrotechnic display will be given, with a repetition of "The Procession of the Centuries."

Saturday, October Twenty-second.

THE MILITARY CELEBRATION.

A series of military manoeuvres and parades will constitute the main portion of the day's programme. In the evening attractive and appropriate celebrations will be provided, followed by a magnificent display of fireworks.

A number of brilliant social entertainments will be given by the citizens of Chicago during the three evenings of the dedication celebration.

NAMES OF THE STATES.

The name of California first originated in the imagination of a Spanish romance, "Les Serges de Esplandian. Here the "Island of California," where great abundance of gold and precious stones is found," is described.

The name was probably given to the territory now embraced in this State by some of the Spaniards with Cortez, who, no doubt, had read this sensational romance.

Oregon was a name formerly given to an imaginary river in the west. Carver, an American traveler, mentions it in 1783. In describing it he evidently confounded it with the Missouri, but the name was finally applied to the present State of that name.

New Hampshire was named from Hampshire county, in England, by John Mason of the Plymouth company, to whom the territory was originally granted by the English government.

The State of Massachusetts was named from the bay of that name. The origin of the word Massachusetts is from the Indian word "mass," great, "wa-tubash," mountain or hills, and the suffix "et," meaning at or near.

There are many conflicting opinions concerning the origin of the name Rhode Island. Some believe it to be named from the Isle of Rhodus; others from the Dutch Roode Eiland, signifying red island. It might also have been called Road Island or Roadstead Island, being near the harbor.

Connecticut, spelled in an Indian dialect, Quin-neh-tuk-quot, signified "land on a long tidal river."

New York is named from the Duke of York, the original grantee. In the charter he was given all the lands "from the west side of the Connecticut river to the east side of the Delaware bay."

The territory of New Jersey was given by royal charter to Sir George Carteret and Lord Berkeley. Carteret, in England's great civil war, had bravely defended the Isle of Jersey, in the British channel, and his new possessions in America were named in commemoration of this fact.

Pennsylvania was founded by William Penn, and it was the only State named from its founder. The suffix "sylvania" signifies "forest land," and is descriptive of the general character of the country. Three counties lying southeast of Pennsylvania were formerly territories of that State. In 1701 they were granted a charter and named Delaware after Lord de la Ware, who first explored the bay into which the river empties.

Maryland was named from Queen Henrietta Maria. In the charter its name in Latin was Terra Mariae, meaning the land of Maria or Mary's land.

Virginia was called in honor of Queen Elizabeth, who was known as the virgin queen.

The Territory of the Carolinas was granted to the French settlers in 1662 and named after Charles I of France.

King George II of England was the sponsor for the Southern State of Georgia.

The name of Maine was given to that State descriptively, since in the original charter it was considered "the mayne land of New England."

Vermont was also a descriptive name, being formed from the French words, "vert" and "mount," meaning green mountains.

Kentucky is from Kentucker, an Indian Shawnoese word, signifying "the head of a river," or "long river."

Mississippi is from the Indian Messeyseper, meaning not "the father of waters," but "the great water."

Colorado is named from the Rio Colorado. The name is of Spanish origin and means "ruddy" or "red," referring to the color of the waters of that river.

Tennessee is supposed to have been named from Tenas See, one of the chief villages of the Cherokee Indians, which was located on the banks of the Tennessee river.

The name of Minnesota is derived from the Indian Minnissotab, meaning "colored water."

The State of Nevada is named from the Sierra Nevada mountains, which in turn are said to have been named from the Sierra Nevada of Grenada.

Nebraska takes its name from the Nebraska river. The name is of Indian origin, meaning "shallow river." Kansas is also named from its principal river. A tribe of Indians, formerly in that locality, were known as the Konesoe or Kowa, and the State is probably named from them.

The ori in of the name of the peninsula State of Florida is told by historians as follows: "In 1712 Ponce de Leon sailed from France to the west in search of the fountain of youth. He first saw land on Easter day, and on account of the richness and quantity of flowers found on the new possession, he called it Florida."

Alabama is named from an ancient Indian tribe of the Mississippi valley. The name itself signifies "here we rest."

Ohio takes its name from the river on the southern boundary. The word is from the Wyandotte Indian dialect, "O-be-shah," and means "something great."

Iowa is named from the river of that name, the river from the Ioway Indians.

Missouri was named also from a river. The word is from the Indian Min-he-sho-shey, signifying "muddy water."

The name of Wisconsin is of French-Indian origin. It was formerly spelled Ouisconsin, meaning, "westward flowing."

Illinois is derived from the Delaware Indian word "Illin," or "Leni," meaning "real men," and the sort French termination "ois."

The name Michigan comes from Indian words of Algonquin and Chippewa origin, "Michea," great, and "kan," lake.

Louisiana was named in honor of Louis XIV of France, and was formerly applied to the French possessions in the Mississippi valley.

The word Arkansas is of Indian stock. A tribe of Indians who rebelled and separated from the Kansas nation, were celebrated for the fine quality of their bows. From this they were called Arrow Bow Indians, and afterwards "Arkansas."

A STARTLING CONSPIRACY.

ONE of the principal subjects of public interest today, is the alleged discovery of a plot to betray the Chamber of Commerce, in its suit before the Interstate Commerce Commission against the Union Pacific Railroad Company. The facts are simple, the inference sought to be drawn from them is at present rather strained.

The facts are these: Much to the surprise of people interested in the case, an effort was made to have the examination removed from this city to Washington, D. C. This was endorsed by a number of business houses in this city. It was not astonishing that the railroad company desired this, but it was that firms here should want the investigation conducted there.

This movement, however, seemed to be on the point of failure, when another application was made, asking for a postponement of the investigation and signed by the principal shippers in this city. The Chamber of Commerce consented to delay for sixty days. This also occasioned surprise and many queries as to the cause. It now comes out that these shippers considered they might be able to adjust their difficulty with the railroad company and avoid litigation, and also that the suit was not in proper hands for prosecution.

The cause for reaching the latter inclusion was some information placed before them by the railroad company, in the shape of correspondence between Mr. S. W. Eccles, general freight agent, and S. W. Sears, Jr., son of the Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce. In connection with this was a mystical personage named as "E. E. Edwards," who figured as the chief actor in the affair.

On the 26th of July a letter was sent to Mr. Eccles, signed by E. E. Edwards, box 283, city, containing a proposition to turn over to the railroad company, for a consideration, a copy of the speech which Secretary Sears was to make before the Commission, sundry affidavits bearing on the case and other documents, which would put the company in possession of the points which the Chamber of Commerce expected to make in the suit against the company. He claimed to have worked through Mr. Sears' clerk and to have a key to his office.

Mr. Eccles, it appears, conferred with Mr. P. L. Williams, the attorney for the company and by his advice answered the letter. The correspondence continued and Mr. Eccles endeavored to obtain an interview with this Edwards, but he interposed S. W. Sears, Jr., as a better person to talk with, claiming that they roomed together out West, that Edwards had a hold upon young Sears through some indiscretion that the latter desired to keep from his mother, and that it was to the great advantage of the railroad to enter into this negotiation.

An intimation from Mr. Eccles that he would prefer to see Edwards was followed by another communication enclosing one from young Sears himself, showing his willingness to engage in the affair, followed by others from S. W. Sears, Jr., to Mr. Eccles direct, the last named gentleman having kept up the correspondence by advice of the General Freight Agent at Omaha and the general attorney for the company. After several ineffectual efforts to get hold of Edwards, an appointment was made for S. W. Sears, Jr. and he and Mr. Eccles met at the Knutson Pharmacy and went to Mr. Eccles' office. The proposition was to turn over, for a sum that does not yet appear in figures, the following documents:

Speech, eighteen pages, type-written. Two affidavits certified by Secretary of Interior. List of names to be subpoenaed. Men who have agreed to testify. Statement showing discrimination against the Territory. Statement showing cost of movement of freight on various lines. Proof that relates have been given.

At another interview Edwards was represented by young Sears as having left town and two letters purporting to have been received from him were produced. But meanwhile special agents of the railroad company were at work as detectives and they claim to have obtained from a waste paper basket, in the office of Secretary Sears, the pencil originals of which these letters from Edwards are copies with but trifling verbal alterations.

The detectives also learned that box 283 had been rented by S. W. Sears Jr.; that he received letters for himself and E. E. Edwards; that he had taken at least two letters addressed to Edwards and placed them, unopened, on a desk in one of the rooms in the office of his father, the Secretary; that the purported Edwards letters had been written on the same kind of paper as that issued in the Chamber of Commerce room; and that these letters had been dictated by some one to young Sears. Several conferences were had with the young man which Mr. Eccles contrived to be overheard by the detectives. A letter addressed to Edwards, from a person named Chidester at St. George, was taken out of the postoffice on August 2nd by young Sears and found mutilated in Mr. Sears' office on August 7th.

So much for the facts; now for the inference. It is deduced from the foregoing, that Edwards is a myth; that young Sears wrote the letters, but that some one else dictated them; that these papers were worth a large sum to the railroad company and that some one was figuring through young Sears to get the money; that this was a betrayal of the Chamber of Commerce; and that S. W. Sears, the secretary, ought to rise and explain. The chief inference evidently ought to be made is that this gentlemen has something to do with the infamy involved in the transaction.

We have carefully examined all that has been brought forward by way of facts, and we cannot see that there is at present any ground for the insinuation—there has been no direct charge—against Mr. Secretary Sears. The Directors of the Chamber of Commerce have taken the matter in hand, and will thoroughly investigate it before they will permit any statement from the Secretary. We learn, however, that as soon as Mr. Sears saw the morning paper which contained the first news to him, of this affair, he called his son into his office, handed him the paper and told him to read it but not to leave the office. At once he summoned the Directors who could be reached, and they heard what young Sears had to say. He declared that his father knew nothing about the matter but that there was another person engaged in the transaction, that this person had a hold upon him and it was through that at first that he took up the matter, but that afterwards he determined to pursue it for all there was in it.

It is well known by the friends Secretary Sears that he had set his heart upon making a success of the suit against the railroad company, and that he has turned the full force of his mind upon it. He gained an important case against it in California, and considered he had a much more important case for Utah. The company was aware of these facts and knew that it involved a great deal of money, which if saved to the people of this Territory would be a big loss to the company. Therefore, it is not surprising that every effort possible has been made to postpone and if possible to defeat the suit.

But we are of the opinion that, notwithstanding the sensation which has been sprung on the community the case will go on and that while Mr. Sears has received a severe blow in the conduct of his son, it will be shown that his own course has been and is incompatible with the idea that he would betray the Chamber of Commerce, or do anything to damage the cause to which he has devoted his energies and experience so earnestly.

We lay the facts, summarized, before the public as a matter of news and of common comment, and advise a suspension of judgment until the mystery surrounding the case has been dissipated and both sides of it have been fully and fairly brought to light.

THE B. Y. ACADEMY.

The circular for the B. Y. Academy for the years 1892-3 stated that entrance examinations would begin August 19th, and regular instructions would commence August 23d. Yesterday ended the first week of this school year, and your correspondent called at the principal's office to obtain a few facts relative to the commencement and the showing thus far made. The principal, Professor Benjamin Cluff, Jr., did not happen to be present, but from Professor J. B. Keeler the following was learned: Over 800 students are present. This is an increase of about forty per cent over all previous years. The average attendance during the first term in the past has been from 150 to 175. The fact that the school now occupies the new build'g, which has more conveniences, and is more commodious, together with an increased faculty and a broader field for students, has much to do with the fine showing of this the first week. The professors and teachers all feel encouraged with the outlook, and before Christmas time they anticipate having 800 registered students. The desire for education is rapidly increasing, said the professor, and these wants and desires of the young people are finding much satisfaction in the academies and church schools of this Territory. The educational wants and requirements are receiving careful consideration by our church schools, and every endeavor is being exercised to meet the rapidly accumulating demands, and as this institution has been foremost in the past, in its adaptation to advancement and in its assimilation of new ideas, it now bids fair to even lead the vanguard of education in this Territory. The great difficulty throughout the existence of the academy has been the lack of funds and who that ever has been associated with the institution in any manner can forget how nobly "The Grand Old Man of Utah," Brother Maeser (not Dr. Maeser, for it is only by that effective appellation that he is known to his students and the people of Utah), has labored for its existence and welfare. Today a brighter star seems to have arisen and the clouds of adversity which for long years have overshadowed its course are now fading away. Fear has been supplanted by hope, adversity by prosperity.

The present building when completed will accommodate at least 1000 students and every arrangement is being made for their convenience and welfare. All the modern improvements are being considered in its construction, and it is by far the best ventilated building in the Territory. There is a continual current of fresh air passing through the building and it can be regulated according to the weather. When it is cold the air is warmed and currents of pure, fresh air are sent into every part of the building. In summer the air can be made to pass over refrigerators and every room made as an ice house.

Prof. Keeler stated that his health had never been better than since he had been in this building and he attributed his present condition wholly to the good pure air. The building can also be heated by steam. The electric light and water systems are of the best.

During the ensuing year Elder George Reynolds of Salt Lake will deliver regular lectures on the Book of Mormon. Elder David McKenzie has also been engaged for a regular course of lectures, while Apostles George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith will give special instructions. A class of ethics and moral philosophy has been organized. The teachers still speak of the same good feeling and kindly spirit which has always pervaded the school and made it indeed a "temple of learning," as their motto describes it.

The commercial department is now being made a special feature under the direction of Prof. J. B. Keeler. This gentleman during the past year has written a text book on bookkeeping, which will in future be used in the academy. A portion of this work is devoted to the theory of bookkeeping, and illustrations are given of the application of his theory. Lectures will be delivered on the theoretical part, and as soon as a student is sufficiently advanced he will commence the essentially practical part of bookkeeping; banks, real estate, railroad, insurance offices, etc., will all be established, together with all kinds of mercantile businesses, and the students will enter these various departments and conduct the business of the same as in actual transactions of life, thereby acquiring the familiarity with such things necessary to success.

The theory and its applications will require about one-half year's course, and the practical portion the same length of time.

Hon. W. H. King, D. D. Houtz, E. H. Wilson and J. E. Booth have all been secured to deliver regular lectures on law. These lectures will deal generally with the fundamental principles of law.

The Polysophical society will hold meetings every Friday evening, and the Petlogium class will hold weekly meetings.

The Faculty has been very much increased and the corps of professors and teachers now numbers about 25. Dr. Joseph Whitley, late of England, Dr. George E. Phillips, of Glasgow, Scotland, and Prof. W. M. Wolfe, of California, will add much to the strength of the scientific department. It would be impossible in this brief review of the academy to mention specially every department; all, however, are regulated for the interest and benefit of the students. The teachers have their welfare at heart, and are laboring earnestly for the success of the scholars and the institution. The main success in past years has not been due to special instructions, but to the general ideas that have been advanced. Spiritual education has been the first consideration—planting and establishing in the mind of the student the fact that he had a Creator and to Him we are responsible for our acts.

NEW YORK 150 YEARS AGO.

Peter Kalm, the Swedish botanist, and the favorite pupil of Linnaeus, was sent by the Swedish government to the American colonies a century and a half ago to find what they were like, who inhabited the country, what grew there, how the budding cities compared with those in Sweden, and whether it would be a good place for the subjects of King Frederick to come to or to stay away from. His expenses paid by the Swedish government, Kalm landed in Philadelphia, and from that town came by post chaise to New York, and, putting up over night at Elizabeth, was rowed over to New York a little after sunrise on a cold morning in October.

The first thing which impressed him about New York was the frogs, according to the New York Sun. These were so clamorous and created such a disturbance that he declared they drowned the singing of the birds and made it difficult for a person in old New York to make himself heard. The streets, he observed, did not run so straight as those of Philadelphia, and had considerable bendings; however they were very spacious and well built, and most of them were paved, except in high places where paving had been found useless. Most of the houses were built of brick, and were generally strong and neat; some had turned the gable ends toward the street, but the newer houses were altered in this respect. Many had a balcony on the roof, on which the people used to sit in the evenings in the summer season, and from thence they had a pleasant view. Kalm's investigation led him to the conclusion that there was no good water to be met with in the town itself, but at a little distance there was a small spring of good water, from which the inhabitants used to make tea. The wine drunk in New York was brought, Kalm declared, from the isles of Madeira, and was very strong and fiery.

There were but two printers in the town, and every week some gazettes in English were published by them which contained news from all parts of the world. The inhabitants of New York he found to be greatly troubled with mosquitoes, which either followed the hay made near the town in the low meadows which were quite impregnated with salt water, or they accompanied the cattle at night when the beasts were driven home. "I have myself experienced," observed Kalm, "and have noted in others, how much these little animals can disfigure a person's face during a single night, for the skin is sometimes so covered over with little biters from their stings that people are ashamed to appear in public."

The watermelons which Kalm found cultivated in New York were large. "They are esteemed delicious," he says, "and are better than in other parts of North America, though they are planted in the open fields and never in a hot-bed. I saw a water-melon at Gov. Clinton's which weighed forty-seven English pounds, and at a merchant's in town another of forty-two pounds weight; however, these were the biggest seen in the country."

The Scandinavian observer gave this description of the introduction of lobsters into New York: "Lobsters are plentifully caught hereabouts, and I was told of a very remarkable circumstance about three lobsters. The coast of New York had already had European inhabitants for a considerable time, yet no lobsters were to be met with on the coast, and though the people fished ever so often they could never find any signs of lobsters being in this part of the sea, they were therefore brought in great well-boats from New England where they were plentiful, but it happened that one of these well-boats broke into pieces near Hell Gate, about ten English miles from New York and all the lobsters in it got off. Since that time they have so multiplied in this part of the sea, that they are now caught in great abundance."

One advantage which Kalm enjoys as an authority over the other historians of old New York, with its crooked streets, quaint dwelling houses, brick walls, wooden gables, and scattered farm settlements, is the fact that a majority of these chroniclers have been Englishmen of strong prejudices against everything American and of acknowledged distaste for all things not essentially English. The other historians of the town in its infancy have been, for the most part, mere superficial continental tourists who have given flattering expression to the delight which all intelligent persons experience in a locality which is entirely new to them, and in which they are hospitably entertained. But they furnish little data and but few facts of present interest, so, if you want to get a clear-cut, matter-of-fact, unembellished and trustworthy view of old New York as it existed before the revolutionary war, Kalm, the Swede, is a safe dependence, notwithstanding his quaint views about the lobsters, the melons and the mosquitoes.

SHOPPING IN LONDON.

The first difficulty the American girl has is that of finding out which are really the first-rate shops. "Use and importance have nothing whatever to do with it, as they have to some extent at least in New York. Here in London the shopkeeping light seems to be hid under a bushel as far as the most noted and swiftest of the shops are concerned. One walks down Bond street and sees a modest window hung with solemn colored draperies, and perhaps—out of consideration for the onward march of advertising and commercial progress—there will be a simple costume, not displayed upon a lay figure, be it well understood, but lying ostentatiously on its side as the symbol that within there lurks a smooth-spoken personage more dreaded of the average husband than even the dentist or tax collector. As a contrast one may pass in Regent street or Oxford street a huge establishment whose plate glass windows may be measured by the acre and serve but to shield from the elements and sacrilegious hands scores of costumes which to the masculine eye seem to reach the height of fashionable gorgeousness. Yet between the two the woman of knowledge will never hesitate a second. At the latter she may get the essence of the gathered flower of fashion, commercial and commonplace; at the former she may get the very flower itself, with its dewy fragrance fresh upon it.

THE CHOLERA.

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—In spite of the spread of cholera in Europe, the local health authorities adhere firmly to the belief that there need be no fear of the disease getting to this country. All possible precautions have been taken. They are now prepared to care for cholera patients to the number of 5000 at a moment's warning.

Commissioner Mullie of the quarantine board was seen today and stated that the quarantine board had taken every precaution to keep the dreaded scourge within prescribed quarters. Superintendent David H. Starr stated that everything was being done to ward off the disease. Dr. Cyrus Edson, sanitary superintendent, says: "Personally, I feel very secure in regard to cholera and dread the epidemic much less than I would one of typhus fever. It would be absolutely impossible for an immigrant to come into the country with latent cholera, which might develop after he passed the quarantine."

LONDON, Aug. 25.—No special precautions are being taken by companies running ships between Hamburg and London against the cholera, except to enforce more strictly the rule that no pauper emigrants will be carried. All persons arriving in the Thames supposed to be infected with cholera will be sent to an isolated hospital prepared below Gravesend.

The local government board met today to decide upon a measure for the protection of the metropolis from cholera.

The Hamburg American Packet company, in view of the prevalence of cholera at Hamburg, have decided to entirely withdraw the fast steamers from that port for the present. Henceforth their vessels will make Southampton the port of departure and arrival.

PARIS, Aug. 25.—The sanitary chief of the war office declares that the cholera in Paris, Havre and Rouen is abating and will soon disappear. Thus far in August there have been recorded 365 cases of cholera and 104 deaths from the disease in Havre. Medical authorities declare that the disease there is not of the Asiatic type, although many of the victims died immediately after seizure.

The French steamer "Saint Andre" from Havre, which has been quarantined at Panillac, has four cases of cholera on board, and one death from cholera occurred abroad.

Heavy rains the last three days lowered the temperature.

Twenty-eight cases of cholera and several deaths were reported in Havre yesterday.

HAMBURG, Aug. 25.—Considerable excitement is caused by the appearance of cholera among the troops. Three cases of the disease and one death have occurred in a regiment temporarily quartered here.

The regiment has been ordered to leave Hamburg and remain isolated until all risk of their spreading the infection have passed.

The weather continues intensely hot and the sun, unfortunately, is favorable to the growth of cholera germs. There is, however, more wind prevailing today and this adds somewhat to the comfort of the city.

Yesterday there were eighty two new cases of the disease reported, and one death.

BERLIN, Aug. 25.—The carriages of all trains arriving at Berlin and Cologne from Hamburg are locked until the passengers are examined by physicians. Professor Koch is reported to have said that the number of cases of cholera in Hamburg was not great in proportion to the population, but the virulent character of the disease gives ground for the greatest possible anxiety.

VIENNA, Aug. 25.—A strict watch is kept at the Austrian frontier on all passengers arriving from Hamburg.

COLUMBUS, O., Aug. 25.—Dr. Probst, secretary of the Ohio board of health, will tomorrow meet Dr. McCumbe, of Kentucky and Dr. Baker, of Michigan, in Indianapolis. The three gentlemen compose the executive committee of the National conference of State boards of health, and the meeting is called to consider the threatened invasion of cholera, together with other subjects that interest the National organizations.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—There is no doubt that cholera has at last entered England. The disease was brought here by the steamer "Gomma" which arrived at Gravesend yesterday from Hamburg. It was reported that the steamer was infected, but the authorities, after examining the passengers, allowed them to land. A few hours afterwards two aliens who arrived on the "Gomma" were taken sick. They were at once removed to the hospital at Gravesend, where the doctors pronounced their misadventure. In spite of medical aid they both died shortly after being admitted. This has caused considerable anxiety and close inspection of all incoming vessels has been ordered.

The report of two deaths from cholera at Gravesend, telegraphed through out the country, has produced great excitement. Today the steamer "Laura," plying between Hamburg and Lynn, arrived at Lynn. The health officers found two cholera suspects on board. The vessel was immediately ordered to put back to sea. The officers and passengers protested against such summary treatment, but the health officers were obdurate and refused to let a single person land from the steamer.

Prince Esterhazy, an attaché of the Russian legation, has been suffering from an attack of cholera, but is recovering.

BERLIN, Aug. 26.—A most welcome thunderstorm has passed over the city. The air is cleared and the weather is much cooler.

Despite every effort to check it, the cholera is increasing at Hamburg. Over 800 cases have been recorded with 300 deaths.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 26.—The cholera returns for yesterday show another upward jump in the number of new cases. There were yesterday 6822 new cases, an increase of 700 over the previous day. The deaths were 2977, an increase of 230. In St. Petersburg alone there were 103 new cases and 24 deaths.

BERLIN, Aug. 26.—Orders have been issued to stop railway traffic with Russia at every point on the frontier of east Prussia except Eydkuhne and Protken.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The Liverpool health authorities have been discussing precautionary measures against the cholera. The Lynn authorities are taking rigorous measures to prevent the arrival of emigrants from Hamburg.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—The health officers of New York are today prepared to fight off the cholera should it make its appearance here. Dr. Edison, the sanitary superintendent, thinks the cholera will undoubtedly reach this port within the next week.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 26.—A special meeting of the health board has been held to advise means of keeping out the cholera. It was decided, in case the cholera crosses the Atlantic, to establish quarantine stations at every railroad depot and all emigrants will be quarantined.

WASHINGTON, D. D., Aug. 26.—During the afternoon the State Department was advised by the health officers to quarantine Staten Island. Stringent regulations were adopted to prevent the introduction of cholera. Later Secretary Foster sent to the consul at Hamburg the recommendation of Health Officer Jenkins that all emigrants undergo the most thorough inspection abroad with the detention of those from infected or suspected districts for at least five days. That they be bathed and all clothing and baggage disinfected by steam, and that a certificate of such cleaning and disinfection, signed by the consul, be given to the ship's surgeon for presentation to the health officer at the port of entry.

The treasury department is much gratified at the attitude of the steamship companies as so promptly manifesting a desire to assist the department in all ways possible to keep out the dreaded scourge. With hearty cooperation it is felt that much can be accomplished toward the desired end.

The government, having charge of the enforcement of the quarantine laws of the country, is unquestionably much concerned over the serious hold the epidemic of cholera has taken on Europe and views the situation, as regards the admission of the disease into the United States, with some alarm. Though they feel fully prepared and able to cope with it in case by any chance cholera should become epidemic here, the thing, however, is not at all anticipated. The Marine Hospital service which is immediately under the supervision of the treasury department, has all matters relating to the quarantine service in charge, and is better able now than since its establishment to prevent the introduction of the disease into the United States. Surgeon-General Wyman has taken every step thought to be necessary to prevent cholera from making its appearance in this country, and has strengthened the service and made it as effective as possible.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Aug. 26.—President McCormick presided at the meeting of the international health board conference. A quarantine inspection commission was appointed to inspect all quarantine stations in the United States, Canada and Mexico. This committee is to report to the international board.

A telegram was received from Illinois State Board of health and sanitary board of Chicago requesting that steps be taken to memorialize President Harrison asking for the prohibition of all immigration during the prevalence of Asiatic cholera epidemic in other countries. This telegram was referred to the inspection of the commission, with instructions to report after its investigation.

The executive committee of the international conference of the State board of health met here today. The purpose was for asking precautionary measures to prevent the invasion of cholera into this country. The committee appointed a commission of experts to examine the equipments and methods of quarantine stations along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts and the Gulf of Mexico. The commission will meet Wednesday next to begin work. Before adjourning they issued an address to all boards of health throughout the country calling attention to the importance of placing cities and towns throughout the country in good sanitary condition.

BOSTON, Aug. 26.—The steamer "Kehrweder" from Hamburg was boarded by the port physician when she reached quarantine this morning. She had seventy passengers, all of whom, with their baggage, were transferred to Galloupe's island, where the passengers will be cleaned and their clothing and baggage fumigated. The captain of the steamer reported that there had been no sickness whatever on board and she was allowed to proceed to the wharf in Boston.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 26.—Joseph Hot, one of the most distinguished sanitary scientists in the United States, in an interview regarding the cholera, said:

"When I consider the exposed, or very imperfectly protected line of the Atlantic seaboard, including the St. Lawrence, the situation appears to me to be one of the extremest gravity. I will regard it as only a little short of a miracle if the cholera fails to follow its old and accustomed line of travel, involving an invasion of this continent. If we escape it will only be through awakening to our perilous situation and by extraordinary efforts of an immediate enforcement of rational and scientific methods of defense as embraced in our own quarantine system."

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 26.—All boarding houses here are subjected daily to a vigorous inspection to see that they are kept clean, and all sanitary regulations are complied with to prevent the introduction of cholera.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—Officials of the local government board charged to watch the progress of cholera are tonight less confident of the metropolis escaping a visitation of the disease. The Gravesend cases are undoubtedly Asiatic cholera. With cholera at Gravesend and infected persons probably roaming about in our midst, by some an outbreak of the disease in London is considered inevitable. The port of London sanitary committee has applied for a vast increase in the staff, otherwise it cannot undertake the surveillance of ships entering the Thames from infected continental ports. But the Thames cordon will suffice to shut out the danger of infection. Steamship arrivals from the continent come via Harwich, Southampton and other ports by train without inspection and the railways and steamship companies, excepting the transatlantic lines, show no intention of suspending ordinary arrangements. The authorities expect an outbreak and are preparing to meet it. In the East End the water supply was tested and found to be of doubtful quality and changes were ordered in the filtering apparatus. The people of South London were warned of their water source danger.

HAMBURG, Aug. 26.—The police have issued orders forbidding inhabitants drinking water from the Elbe unless it has previously been boiled. The bathing places along the river are closed. The police will make a house to house inspection to insure their being clean and to enforce sanitary measures whenever they are required. A special corps has been organized to disinfect the houses infected with cholera.

Official statistics show that on Wednesday there were 188 new cases of the disease reported, while the deaths numbered 32. Up to noon Thursday there were ninety new cases and forty-one deaths. There were eight deaths from the disease at Altona yesterday, most of the deaths occurred among laborers employed about the docks, batmen, etc.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—Anton Potzel, an Austrian, who arrived here from Hamburg, Germany, two weeks ago, was taken to Bellevue Hospital this afternoon suffering from an ailment some of the symptoms of which resemble those of Asiatic cholera. The fact that he came from the cholera infected city caused some alarm. The hospital physicians were unable to determine whether he had genuine cholera or not. They thought he was suffering from a severe attack of cholera morbus, but to be on the safe side they isolated Potzel in a tent on the river front which was used for typhus patients. He will be kept there until the nature of his affliction is accurately known.

The steamships "Servia" from Liverpool, "Lydan Moarab" from London, and the "Tormenta" from Hamburg arrived today and were subjected to a rigid inspection. No cholera nor suspicious cases were found and after being thoroughly fumigated the vessels were permitted to dock.

DETROIT, Aug. 28.—Somewhat of a sensation was created this evening by a report that cholera had been discovered among the immigrants who arrived today. It was found upon investigation that Carl Lenta, an emigrant accompanied by his wife and family had exhibited symptoms which made the examining physicians for a time suspicious of cholera. After a careful examination, however, Health Officer Duffield decided that it was not the dread disease, but as a matter of precaution, Lentz was sent across the river to Windsor and placed in a detention hospital, where the case will be more thoroughly diagnosed.

BERLIN, Aug. 28.—Emperor William receives exhaustive reports of the progress of cholera and the measures taken to combat it. He devotes several hours daily to studying the epidemic. He ordered stringent measures taken to insure the safety of troops. Sanitary officials tonight reiterate the assertion that there is no Asiatic cholera in the city. However, a woman yesterday arrived from Hamburg and was seized with the cholera symptoms. She and her husband were immediately sent to a hospital where they are still detained. Frequent reports of cholera are reported.

Great surprise is expressed at the action of Hamburg authorities in giving cholera figures up to Thursday as 573 cases and 194 deaths, whereas the Reichsanzeiger gives the figures up to Friday as 1028 cases and 358 deaths. It is reported that the steamer "Sylvia," bound from Hamburg to New York, landed at Cuxhaven two of her crew suffering from cholera.

HAMBURG, Aug. 28.—The epidemic here is assuming truly alarming proportions. All Sunday excursions and amusements were stopped. Three hundred and twenty interments were made during the half of today (Sunday), the average number normally being eighty-five. The Senate demanded extra credit of £150,000 to buy medicines, etc. The disease is increasing rapidly in the suburbs.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—The steamer "Talavera" arrived at Grimsby from Hamburg today. Two sailors were suffering from cholera symptoms. They were removed to the floating hospital and the "Talavera" was towed to the quarantine station.

The sickness aboard the Hamburg bark "Helen," which arrived off Dover last night, proves to be a number of diarrhoea cases; but the patients are recovering. The vessel was disinfected but was not allowed to communicate with Dover.

PARIS, Aug. 28.—A lady called at Made St. Montmartre today to register the death of her child from cholera. Persons in the office drew away in terror, when suddenly the lady fell to the floor writhing with pain. She was at once removed to the cholera barracks, where her husband was taken on the previous day. Her husband died.

Three deaths from the cholera are reported at Lemaunt. English liners are loading at Havre as usual. Italy is rigorously excluding all commodities likely to be vehicles of cholera and is exercising scrupulous vigilance over passengers.

A number of new cases of cholera are reported in this city. Three deaths from the disease occurred today. Three persons died of cholera in Limans today.

HAVRE, Aug. 28.—Seventy-one new cases of cholera and twenty-five deaths from the disease were reported in this city yesterday.

MADRID, Aug. 28.—The official Gaceta publishes a decree ordering stringent measures to be adopted against cholera. Rigorous precautions are being taken on the frontier.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 28.—Twenty-eight cases of cholera have occurred in the charitable asylum here, the outbreak being due to bad food. Cholera continues to spread in several towns in central Russia and Lublin, though the mortality is not alarming. Official returns show that throughout Russia on Thursday there were reported 6657 new cases of cholera and 2869 deaths. In St. Petersburg yesterday 75 new cases and 37 deaths were reported.

CITY OF MEXICO, Aug. 28.—It is rumored in Vera Cruz that there is cholera in Havana.

A Honduras special says the rebel General Bonilla was to have been shot today.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 28.—The Treasury Department is acting promptly on all matters having a bearing on the cholera epidemic, and nothing will be left undone that may tend to keep the infection from the shores of this country. To all intents and purposes there now exists a National quarantine co-operation of National and State authorities resulting in the formation of a cordon which will make it extremely difficult for a case of cholera to reach the shores of the United States. Surgeon-General Wyman of the marine hospital service is now considering the proposition of continuing the disinfection of baggage during the winter. This, it is thought, will prevent the importation of cholera germs. After the present alarm is over and the matter has subsided, the old revenue cutter "Ewing" will be taken to Chesapeake Bay, anchored off shore and fitted up for a hospital, so if any cholera patients are found aboard incoming ships they will not have to be landed, but can be kept entirely isolated.

It is evident that the people living along are apprehensive that the disease may enter the United States by that route, as two telegrams were received at the treasury department today, one from Troy, N. Y., and the other from Milwaukee, regarding the precautions taken. Acting Secretary Spaulding replied that the provisions of the department circular regarding disinfection of baggage will be immediately enforced along the Canadian border under direction of the supervising general of the Marine hospital service, who has taken steps for the appointment of medical inspectors at all points where emigrants cross the border.

The consul of the United States at Hamburg, in a dispatch to the department of state today, after giving the number of new cases and deaths yesterday, said the prospects were worse.

NEW YORK, Aug. 27.—The outgoing transatlantic steamer today carried a very small passenger list, which is due to the prevalence of cholera in Europe. So thoroughly have the people become frightened that a number cancelled the passage secured for today.

BERLIN, Aug. 27.—Delegates from all Federal States held a conference today on the subject of cholera. The president of police reported that not a single case of Asiatic cholera had yet been certified to in Berlin. The statement of Professor Koch and Councilor Rabha, together with the general report covering the whole health condition of Germany, was reassuring, although Koch thinks the worst period of the epidemic in Hamburg and Altona has not yet passed. The first outbreak occurred in Hamburg August 14th, and at Altona August 19th. The Imperial health office is making arrangements to publish the daily health record of Berlin and other cities.

Consul-General Edwards has taken the necessary steps to keep the State Department at Washington informed of the situation throughout Germany. Tonight's advices have every populous place in Germany free from Asiatic cholera except Hamburg. There the disease has spread over the whole city and to the suburbs. Doctors, with a number of hospital assistants, left Berlin to assist the Hamburg physicians. The exodus of the wealthier Hamburg families are now proceeding on a large scale, though leading thoroughfares present their ordinary aspect. Shopkeepers declare business stagnant. The public depression wants but little to become an absolute panic. While many have fled others are doing much to relieve the stricken or menaced. Donations, disinfectants and medicaments are plentiful.

The epidemic around Presburg in Hungary appears to be fading. A number of choleric cases are reported at Sollenau, in Austria, and even in Vienna itself where the rapidity of death is suggestive of Asiatic cholera. In the meantime the Austrian doctors declare that the post mortem examinations do not disclose the presence of Asiatic cholera.

Prof. Rabha expresses himself as satisfied with the measures taken by Hamburg authorities and says he believes they will suffice quickly to stamp out the epidemic from Hamburg. It is reported that the epidemic is extending from the city proper to the suburbs and abating in the harbor quarter where cholera first appeared. There were thirty-two new cases and fifteen deaths in all today. At Wandersbeck today there were seven new cases and four deaths. The schools are all closed. Of four members of a Hamburg family stricken with cholera in Kiel, two died.

HAMBURG, Aug. 27.—Official statistics show that up to yesterday there were 1028 cases of cholera and 358 deaths from the disease. At Altona, between Tuesday and Friday, there were thirty-four cases and twenty-two deaths.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 27.—Antwerp's cholera record shows fourteen cases with one death today.

PARIS, Aug. 27.—A total of forty-five new cases and eighteen deaths represents Havre's cholera record yesterday. The bedding and furniture used by the sick are being burned, the authorities indemnifying the owners.

LONDON, Aug. 28.—Dr. Whitcomb, sanitary officer at Gravesend, who is expected the steamer "Gemma," which arrived from Hamburg on Thursday, three of whose passengers subsequently died from what was supposed to be Asiatic cholera, denies that the disease was the true Asiatic scourge and declares it was merely cholerae. It is difficult in the multiplicity of assertions and denials to accurately determine the real truth of the matter. It is now declared that the sickness on the steamer "Laura," which arrived at Lynn on Friday with two suspicious cases, is not cholera, but acute diarrhoea.

There is excitement at Gravesend this morning caused by the arrival of a steamer from Hamburg on which a lady died en route. Investigation showed that the lady died of infantile disorder and those on board were all well and allowed to land.

A London firm has received an order from a Hamburg firm for 88,000 gallons of disinfecting fluid, and 85,000 tons of disinfecting powder.

The steamer which has been in quarantine at Elbe owing to two deaths of Cholera is expected to arrive at Gravesend tonight with a large number of poor immigrants. There is much apprehension concerning the matter. Gravesend is only twenty miles from London and an outbreak of cholera there is much feared. The announcement is made this afternoon that the company which conveys most of the aliens to Gravesend had decided to cease the passenger traffic from Hamburg.

LONDON, Aug. 29.—There is no doubt that Great Britain is having a visitation of cholera. From Gravesend, Swansea, Glasgow and Dundee, towns in England, Scotland and Wales reports come of death from the disease showing that the efforts of the health officials to keep it out of the country have proved fruitless, and now this afternoon came the report that a person had died from Asiatic cholera at Bottom, a large town twelve miles northwest of Manchester. The place is one of the principal seats of the English cotton manufacture, and thousands of mill operatives live there.

The permission given by the health officials of Middlesbrough for landing the crew of the steamer "Gerona," from Hamburg, promises to have most serious results. As announced in these dispatches, the vessel was placed in quarantine after one of the crew had been attacked by cholera, but in the meantime a number of the ship's company had departed for their homes. Six of them went to Dundee, where they reside, while another of the crew went to Aberdeen. Among those who went to Dundee was Walker, the engineer of the "Gerona." Shortly after his arrival there he was taken sick and died in a few hours. The physician who attended him says there is no doubt but his death was due to cholera. When it became known that Walker was dead, the greatest excitement prevailed in Dundee, and also in Aberdeen, where the seventh member of the crew ashore had gone. Steps were at once taken by the health officers to isolate the remaining members of the crew in Dundee and one in Aberdeen until the danger of their spreading the disease is past. The residents of both places, however, believe the men have been allowed to go about town long enough to spread the contagion if they carried the infection and there is widespread anxiety prevailing in every quarter of the towns. An extraordinary watch will be kept in both places for the first appearance of choleraic disorders.

A sailor arrived at Swansea today from Cork. He was found to be suffering with cholera and was immediately removed to the cholera hospital. The appearance of the disease in Swansea awakened the port authorities to the responsibilities of their position and a meeting was summoned to decide upon measures for prevention.

M'DONNELL AND HILL FREED.

A cable dispatch from London announces that the English Government has released from prison Geo. McDonnell and Edward Noyes Hill, the two men who were connected with the Bidwell brothers in the forgeries in 1872 by which the Bank of England was swindled out of half a million pounds sterling, on condition that they should leave the country.

It is said that the two men are now on their way to America. Geo. Bidwell, Austin Bidwell, Geo. McDonnell and Edward Noyes Hill were sentenced in 1878 to life imprisonment.

It was in 1872 that Geo. Bidwell discovered a way in which the bank of England could easily be swindled. He found it was customary for the bank to allow customers to draw against bills of acceptance drawn by responsible institutions without investigating into the genuineness of the bills.

He opened an account at the western branch of the Bank of England in the name of Horton & Co. He told Col. Francis, the manager, that Horton & Co. were about to engage in the building of Pullman sleeping cars. He then secured some bills of exchange in the name of prominent banking houses including the Rothschilds, and, after making forged copies of them, passed them through the bank and drew out the money.

After the firm had thus established good credit it began to pass forged bills made payable to F. A. Warren. Austin Bidwell impersonated Warren. In this way the gang drew out about £500,000 before a failure to date one of the bills led to the discovery of the fraud.

All the men concerned in the scheme were finally captured, convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment.

George Bluwel was released from Woking prison on ticket of leave in 1887 on the representation by the governor, Dr. Clarke, that he would otherwise die in a year or two.

Henrietta C. Mott, his sister, was unopposed in her efforts to secure the release of the other men. She and her brother enlisted the sympathy of a number of prominent persons in the country and in England, and finally their arguments prevailed upon Home Secretary Matthews to release Austin Bidwell on February 13 1892. On September 13, 1891, the home secretary had commuted his sentence to twenty years.

Austin Bidwell's saving the life of a convict was the chief cause of his release.

Since then both Bidwells and their sister have worked steadily to bring about the release of McDonnell and Hill.

Most of the stolen money was recovered by the police at the different places where it had been left for safe keeping, but it is generally understood that they were unable to find about £80,000.

U. S. MARSHAL PARSONS.

The following sententious telegram was received late yesterday afternoon by Marshal Parsons:

WASHINGTON, D. C.,
Aug. 29th, 1892.

To E. H. Parsons, U. S. Marshal, Salt Lake City, Utah.

I am requested by the President to ask for your resignation as marshal of the Territory of Utah. Letter follows.

W. H. H. MILLER,
Attorney-General.

This intimation did not take Mr. Parsons altogether by surprise, as for several days past inquiries had been made of him, among some of his friends in the city, on the strength of certain rumors which had been going around, as to whether there was any probability of his resignation. The Marshal could only answer these queries by expressing his entire ignorance of any such contingency, and it was not until the telegram, of which the foregoing is a copy, reached his hands yesterday afternoon that he had the slightest knowledge of the true state of affairs.

Marshal Parsons qualified for the post of marshal on July 18th, 1889, and has since discharged the duties of the office uninterruptedly. He was seen by the Court representative of the News this morning, and, in answer to questions, said he had not, so far, received any additional communication from Washington. He supposed, however, that the promised letter would explain the reason for his resignation being thus peremptorily demanded. He believes that there has been influence brought to bear against him, in Salt Lake, with the department at Washington, and thinks that the Grovesbeck affair has very likely something to do with it.

"Have you any idea, Mr. Parsons," asked the reporter, "who are likely to become candidates for the marshalship?"

"Not the slightest," replied he, apparently quite indifferent as to the whole affair.

"How long would it take you to straighten up, so as to be ready for your successor to step into your place?"

"I could be ready in an hour, if needs be," responded the Marshal, with a smile of satisfaction. "Everything is quite in order."

Several names were mentioned today as probable candidates for the post, prominently those of Col. Page, secretary of the Utah Commission, and Mr. Arthur Pratt, Territorial auditor.

The first-named gentleman was interviewed by a News reporter this morning, and, when asked whether it was his intention to apply for the marshalship he returned a most emphatic "Certainly not," remarking that there was no ground for the mention of his name at all.

Auditor Pratt was also seen, but declined to talk on the subject, as it was a "rather delicate" matter for him to say anything about just now.

Attorney Arthur Brown was also interviewed. Although he talked "cautiously," as one who knew more than he cared to tell, Mr. Brown ventured to hope that Marshal Parsons might yet be retained in office. "We have only seen the telegram," said he, "and that gives no reasons for this sudden action of the department. Wait until we learn something more, and then perhaps some other steps may be taken."

"Do you know whether Arthur Pratt is likely to become a candidate in the event of the Marshal going out?"

"I really cannot say, but I think the government ought to give us a Republican, anyhow."

TOOLEE STAKE ACADEMY.

The people of Toolee Stake assembled in the new school premises just completed in Grantville, at 10 a. m. yesterday, to dedicate that building for the purposes for which it was designed. After music by the Grantville brass band, the audience was called to order by President H. S. Gowan of Toolee Stake. The choir then sang a hymn and Elder Wm. Lee offered prayer. After singing by the choir, Counselor Chas. L. Anderson explained the object of the building and the circumstances connected with its erection.

It has been erected almost exclusively by the people of Grantville ward, who have been very liberal in their donations. The first meeting in connection with the building was held on May 1st, 1887, when the following were selected as a building committee and had continued to the completion: Chas. L. Anderson, Jas. Wrathall, Wm. J. Berles, W. C. Rydaleh, Jas. Ratoliff, Gustave Anderson and A. G. Johnson. They have shown great energy and determination, and have thus far completed the building in the face of many discouragements. The cost of the new structure is $14,000, and probably another $4,000 will be required to put in heaters and furnishings.

The building is a two story and basement. The outside measurement is 45x75 feet. Down stairs there are two rooms with a nine foot ceiling, 17x36 feet, well lighted with windows on the sides. To the front of these are two other rooms, one for the heater and the other for coal.

The second floor is divided into four apartments by a hallway 10 x 18 feet. In the front are two rooms, one on each side 13x18 feet, designed as offices. To the rear are two more rooms, 18x37 feet, with a 14-foot ceiling, well lighted. The third floor is reached from the second by two flights of stairs, one to the right and one to the left. The main room on this floor is 39x42 feet, and the other 17x40. The house is admirably adapted for school purposes.

President H. S. Gowan said that Toolee Stake was in harmony with the movement in favor of Church schools. The desire of the people is to encourage the education of our children in true theology as well as in the elements of a secular education.

James Wrathall, one of the building committee, said that this house had not been built particularly to benefit the aged, but to help the young, who he hoped would appreciate it.

W. C. Rydaleh said the building committee could not have done much without the united efforts of the people, who had been liberal in their voluntary donations.

President Joseph F. Smith felt gratified to be with the people on this interesting occasion. It has been said that this house had been built for the benefit of the children. This was true in one sense, but the children are not the only ones benefited, as it was a help to us to have our faith, works and charity represented, that our children may be taught to represent us and our hopes in the God-given religion. Faith and God are excluded from our common schools. This is wise as to the union, but as individuals we have accepted the Gospel, which enforces us to teach our children its precepts. We want to choose the instructors for our children—those who have high moral tendencies and a love of God and truth, as these have a great impression on the youthful mind for good or evil.

After singing by the choir and music by the band, President Smith offered the dedicatory prayer.

It is expected that school will be started in a short time.

ABNORMAL BREATHING.

Neither man nor animal breathes through the mouth normally. The only natural way for respiration and inspiration is through the nose. When we breathe through the nose, the cold, dry, impure air is sufficiently warmed, supplied with watery vapor and freed from dust. When we breathe through the nose, smelling at the same time through our organ of smell, which assists respiration, we become aware of the presence of an injurious or of a generally abnormal mixture drawn in by the breath, and can then either correct so unfavorable an atmosphere or escape from it. Furthermore, only in the nose are found those fine arrangements which can prevent the entrance of injurious substances into the deeper respiratory organs (larynx and lungs) and thus stop the further advance of the hostile body (painful smoke, irritating dampness, thick dust, etc.) besides defying that which has already effected an entrance. This is done by the so-called nasal reflex breathing, to which class belongs sneezing. If we breathe through the mouth the air is neither sufficiently warmed nor satisfactorily moistened, and laden with all its bad mixtures of dust of mineral, animal and vegetable origin, added to injurious gasses, reaches the larynx, the air-tubes and the lungs.

Sneezing is only the least among the evil consequences of breathing through the mouth. The swollen, sore, constantly chapped lips, bad condition of the front teeth and decay of the back ones, defective development of the sense of smell, frequent inflammation of the throat, attacks of fever, diphtheria and catarrh, and soreness of the larynx and lungs are consequences of breathing through the mouth which have been frequently observed in children one often sees a habitual and peculiar weak or even stupid expression of countenance. It is also been found, through the experiments of different trustworthy observers, that there is a causal connection between stammering and breathing through the mouth. On the other hand, however, certain forms of nightmare and asthma are caused by breathing through the mouth. That infants are sometimes brought almost to death's door when prevented by a cold from breathing through the nose is a fact well known to physicians.

When a child or grown person begins to breathe with the mouth open, there must exist some sufficient cause for the occurrence in the uppermost air passages. No one would voluntarily exchange the only healthy, comfortable manner of breathing through the nose for the burdensome and unhealthy breathing through the mouth. Let anyone attempt to breathe through the mouth for five minutes, instead of, as one is accustomed, through the nose, and he will soon be convinced that it is almost impossible. Almost of itself, that is, without muscular force, through the mere pressure of the air, the mouth closes and the original manner of breathing is resumed.

Whoever snores can, as a rule, not breathe through the nose. That it would be useless in such cases to desire to close the mouth mechanically is entirely comprehensible. Every mother, who frequently gives to her child the useless command "Close your mouth," is aware of this. Here it is better to seek, without delay, the advice of an experienced specialist, in order to determine the cause of this mouth-breathing. In the case of children in particular, an unnecessary delay might prove fatal.

Now there are certainly cases in which the cause of this habit may be determined and the habit itself removed. But these are the exceptions; as a rule normal breathing results as soon as the air enters the correct passage; if the snoring and breathing through the mouth returns as an evil habit, then and only then can mechanical means be used with advantage to stop this opening of the mouth.

The simplest and oldest of these is to place a band from the chin to the top of the head. This often suffices. As the mouth remains closed by pressure of the air, some of the mechanical appliances to produce this effect might be used. Sometimes it is even sufficient to place a piece of celluloid plate between the teeth, but one would not lightly decide to place a foreign substance in the mouth of a sleeper, particularly a restless child.

All of these apparatus must be put on every evening and worn over night, until the normal position of the lips and lower jaw is regained. But the most important thing is to remove the obstructions to normal breathing.—From the German of Dr. E. Bloch, in Schorer's Familienblatt (Berlin.)

PRESIDENT HARRISON in his proclamation relating to Canadian canals referred to the violation of one of the articles of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain regulating commerce between Canada and this country. The Canadian Conservatives are now clamoring for the abrogation of this treaty, on the ground that its provisions are of no earthly value to the Dominion. What England will say in the matter is awaited with interest.

THE REFORM OF HUMANITY.

A GREAT many well-meaning thoughtful people are mentally distorted over the increasing criminality shown by current publications. They are casting about for remedies, but are unable to fix upon anything feasible, except it be to recommend, under the mistaken idea that it is new, some plan that has been tried times without number.

We have received a circular from the World's Advanced Thought, of Portland, Oregon, which proposes to deal with the question of the reformation of humanity—a wide as well as important subject. The introductory portion of the leaflet is devoted to a statement of belief that this reform must be brought about largely by individual self-reform. It seems to be unnecessary to lay down such a proposition as this, because its correctness is self-evident. Apart from individual efforts reform is an impossibility. To reason otherwise would amount to an assumption that man is a mere machine which can be changed and operated by outward operations exclusively. In the work of improvement external influences are unavailing unless they meet with a response from within.

After the preamble part of the circular comes the following set of resolutions:

"Resolved, That we, the undersigned, constitute ourselves into a Society for Self-Reform, to try to live in harmony with all life.

"Resolved, That we shall endeavor to so guard our thoughts, that we shall only evolve good ones; that we will neither think nor speak ill of another, no matter how great the provocation; and that we will strive persistently to be the embodiment of love and good will.

"Resolved, That so far as lies within our power we will not leave any effort untried, nor let an opportunity pass to help our fellow beings."

It will be observed that although individual effort is insisted upon as the chief factor in human reform, external assistance is recognized as a necessary part of the process, this latter being aimed at by the formation of societies the members of which have a mutual object. By association they are placed in a position to aid each other to attain the end in view.

We hope the projectors of this movement do not claim that their position has any novel feature connected with it. Christianity is neither more nor less than a system which brings into play internal individual forces and external influences to produce human reformation. And beside it the scheme of the World's Advanced Thought pales into insignificance. The method instituted by Jesus includes the application of divine as well as external individual assistance in the work of personal reform. This higher aid seems to be ignored in the plan enunciated by our Oregon friends.

When speaking of Christianity we mean the genuine article, embodying the principle of personal self-sacrifice, which had its perfect embodiment in Christ; and the organization and divine authority necessary to carry on the work of rendering external assistance to the individual. No system is entitled to be called Christian in the full sense unless it possesses divine authorization and is organized officially, with the functions of each officer clearly defined; it must also be characterized by the possession of spiritual power. These were features which distinguished the Church established under the personal supervision of Christ and His chosen representatives selected by Himself.

These characteristics also belong to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. When the members of that association fail to exhibit a high degree of moral reform, such a situation is the result of a failure to apply the principles which are embraced by the system. The forces are within it, and one of its requirements is individual reform, which is simply another way of defining personal repentance of wrong doing of every kind.

We are in sympathy with all people who are exercised in relation to the growing necessity of the times for individual and general reform. We see no other means of avoiding a perilous future situation for the race. We expect the day to come when the world will recognize the fact that the Latter-day Saints have a great mission to accomplish in the work of regenerating the human race. The elements of success for the attainment of this result are within their grasp.

THE IDAHO TEST OATH.

THE Idaho politicians seem to be in earnest about breaking down the barrier which is in the way of the "Mormon" citizens of that State to the polls. First, the Republican State Convention resolved to move for the repeal of the obnoxious test oath at the next session of the Legislature. Then the Democratic State Convention adopted a similar resolution and, further, pronounced the test oath unconstitutional and declared in favor of testing the matter in the courts. On Saturday Republicans at Paris, Bear Lake County, took the initiative by making a test case with a view to the immediate determination of the issue.

A "Mormon" citizen applied for registration, was tendered the test oath, and refused to take so much of it as was added to the provision of the Idaho Constitution. The registrar declined to register him, whereupon suit was at once entered, we suppose by application for a mandamus to compel the officer to register the applicant. This will bring the case before the District Court and the question of the validity of the oath will be argued. If the Court decides against the oath, in all probability the "Mormon" voters will register and vote, as it is not likely that the registrar will carry the case farther. If it is decided in favor of the oath, an appeal will doubtless be taken to the higher courts until the question is finally settled.

As both political parties are desirous that "Mormon" citizens shall now exercise the suffrage, it is reasonable to suppose that the matter will be immediately adjudicated. Neither party will care to figure as an obstruction. The "Mormon" vote is wanted by both, and the party leaders who are bidding for it will scarcely risk their chances by appearing as a hindrance to "Mormon" political emancipation. However, it will be found that the nearly solid vote of the Idaho "Mormons" is a thing of the past, no matter how much some of them may be influenced by party action in reference to the test now being made. If the case is carried up by either party to the suit, from the Court which now has it on file, the "Mormon" citizens of Idaho will not be likely to cast their votes in November, and will most likely take due notice of the power that prevents them from exercising that privilege.

THE DELSARTEAN PHILOSOPHY.

THE Delsartean wave has struck Utah. Mr. Edmund Russell, known as "Prince of Delsarteans," is sojourning in this city. He has already delivered two lectures, or, as he prefers to characterize them, "talks," and will, during the current week, deliver a series of three others. Beside Mr. Russell there are two or three others in Salt Lake who profess themselves exponents of the famous Frenchman's philosophy, and we are informed that a lady from the East, who is also an enthusiastic disciple of Delsartean art, contemplates a visit here in the near future.

Delsarte was born in 1811 in the north of France. His early life was one of misery and suffering. He gravitated to Paris when a child, and it is said that a ragpicker noticing what appeared to be a bundle of rage protruding from a snow bank in one of the Paris parks, inserted his hook in the bundle and fished out a human being. It was young Delsarte. The ragpicker aided the embryo philosopher.

Delsarte had a special taste for music, and pursued its cultivation under great difficulties. He departed from the accepted canons of the musical masters of his time. He succeeded, after a hard struggle with opera managers and theatre directors, to obtain a place before the footlights, and in his first effort made a name. In time he became the idol of Paris, where he died during the Franco-German war in 1871.

Many years of Delsarte's life were devoted to investigating the principles underlying all art and expression. He founded a system of philosophy for the guidance of those who would make the body, voice and gesture render the highest service to the soul and mind. In expression he held the essentials to be pose, gesture and articulation, and that these are the external evidences of internal conditions. He did not believe in tearing the air with the hands, nor in leaving a passion to fatten with his tongue. His definition of art is as follows:

"Art is at once the knowledge, the possession and the free direction of the agents, by virtue of which are revealed the life, the mind and the soul. Art is not an imitation of nature. It elevates in that it idealizes nature."

"To each spiritual function responds a function of the body. To each grand function of the body corresponds a spiritual act."

The Delsartean philosophy embraces the whole of human life, the moral, physical, mental, intellectual, spiritual and ethical. It aims at perfection in physical structure as well as excellence in art, oratory and science.

A STUPENDOUS WORKS.

MANCHESTER, England, is about thirty-two miles inland from the port of Liverpool. For some time a canal has been in progress of construction, through which, when completed, the largest ocean vessels and steamships could enter Manchester. The original projectors of this formed themselves into a company, and in this manner commenced operations. Though several millions were at the command of the construction company, yet about eighteen months ago the funds became exhausted.

It was estimated that it would take fifteen millions of dollars more to complete it. The City of Manchester obtained from Parliament the right to subscribe for canal stock, and it did so to the extent estimated. It is now found that eight millions more will be required to complete the canal, and Manchester is again asked to subscribe.

It is supposed that the city will complete the work, but subject to the condition of ownership and control. The city of Liverpool has expended $90,000,000 on the docks of that city, but it owns them, and controls them, and they prove a paying investment. It is said that the Manchester ship canal will also prove remunerative in the end, but if the city controls it the original promoters will lose heavily.

A PRESIDENT WHO OPENLY VIOLATED THE LAW.

THE Indianapolis News gives a synopsis of some queer laws still existing on the statute books of this country. It appears that tobacco according to law is still a legal tender in the District of Columbia; and that if members of Congress were tendered their salaries in Virginia leaf they should accept or go without. Of course this is an old colonial law, enacted long ago in Virginia, and carried into practice for some time. Tobacco was then made a legal tender for debts of all kinds. The District of Columbia was at that time part of Virginia, and when ceded subsequently to the Federal government retained the old Virginia laws, none of which have been repealed.

Another law which is enforced would make quite a stir in our times is that relating to religious belief. It is a crime, according to this law, to deny belief in the Holy Trinity, and severe punishment, involving imprisonment, is provided for this disbelief. Under it no Unitarian minister could preach in Washington. It was on the statute books when John Quincy Adams was President. He used to attend Unitarian services every Sunday, but he was never interfered with, the law being treated as a dead letter.

THE PROFIT-SHARING PLAN.

PRESIDENT M. E. INALLS of the "Big Four" and Chesapeake and Ohio railroads, in his annual report advises the shareholders to adopt the following plan as a settlement of labor troubles:

"A large portion of the time of your officers and managers is taken up meeting and consulting and discussing with the organized bodies of labor on the road the question of wages, etc. Your directors would recommend to the stockholders to consider the plan of establishing a community of interest with the employees. If the company has arrived at a financial position, as your directors think it has, when it can safely be expected to earn its fixed charges and a surplus, they would recommend that the surplus be equally divided with the employees. For instance, if your capital is $60,000,000 and the wages of the employees in a year amount to $5,000,000, let that be the rate of division. If your surplus earnings are $600,000 a year, it would be 1 per cent for the stockholders and 1 per cent for the employees. As the earnings of the company increase the per centage will be still larger. In any event, the employees would still receive regular compensation and would also share to some extent in whatever prosperity the company had."

Mr. Inalls says the plan has been tried successfully on one of the French railroads.

INTER-STATE WOOL CONVENTION.

NEW MEXICO is pushing to the front in the industrial line. One of her principal cities, Albuquerque, is at present brought prominently before the public. On Monday, the 12th of September, the Territorial fair will open in that city, and continue for five days. On Friday, the 11th of September, the Inter-state Wool Convention will assemble, and continue its deliberations for two days. This latter is one of the great events of the western country, and is already engaging the attention of woolgrowers throughout the nation.

Each State and Territory west of the Mississippi is entitled to delegates, each county to five delegates, each city of 25,000 or more to five delegates, each city or town under 25,000 to three delegates, each agricultural college, wool growers' association and board of trade to two delegates, and each newspaper to one delegate. The Governor of this Territory yesterday appointed ten delegates, all men of ability and well known in this region.

Albuquerque is a thriving commercial centre. It is situated in the midst of a great cattle and sheep country. Its population in 1890, including the old and new towns, was about 6000. Two great systems of railroads, the Santa Fe and the A. & P., centre there. There roads are not inimical to the interests of the town and Territory. The Santa Fe has made a special rate of one cent a mile from all towns on its lines within New Mexico, during the Fair and Wool convention. It has also made very liberal round trip rates from points in Colorado, Kansas, Texas and Arizona.

The area of New Mexico is 122,460 square miles. That of Utah is 82,190. The population of New Mexico in 1890 was 153,593, in 1890 only 119,000. It has 14 organized counties, and eight cities and towns of 1000 each and over. Its wool industry is very extensive, and it is creditable to the Governor and people of that Territory that they should take the lead in considering an article of production which enters largely into the manufactures of the United States. As the circular of the arrangements committee says: "This is the first attempt that has ever been made to bring about any organized effort for the mutual protection and benefit of those engaged in this important industry, and 'wool men'" from all parts of the States and Territories west of the Mississippi are cordially invited to attend and participate in the proceedings."

FRUIT AS A MEDICINE.

A noted medical authority of Philadelphia gives the following test of the medicinal action of various fruits. He says, however, that no edible fruit has a strict medicinal effect, but operates by assisting the natural tendencies of the system. Under the category of laxatives, oranges, figs, tamarinds, prunes, mulberries, dates, nectarines and plums may be included; pomegranates, cranberries, blackberries, sumach berries, dewberries, raspberries, barberries, quinces, pears, wild cherries and medlars are astringent; grapes, peaches, strawberries, whortleberries, prickly pears, black currants and melon seeds are diuretic; gooseberries, red and white currants, pumpkins and melons are refrigerants, and lemons, limes and apples are refrigerants and stomachic sedatives.

Taken in the early morning an orange acts very decidedly as a laxative, sometimes amounting to a purgative, and may generally be relied on.

Pomegranates are very restringent and relieve relaxed throat and uvula. The bark of the root in the form of a decoction, is a good anthelmintic, especially obnoxious to tapeworm. Figs split open form excellent poultices for boils and small abscesses. Strawberries and lemons locally applied are of some service in the removal of tartar from the teeth.

Apples as a correctives useful in nausea. They immediately remove the nausea due to smoking. Bitter almonds contain hydrocyanic acid, and are useful in simple cough, but they frequently produce a sort of urticaria or nettle rash. The persimmon or Diospyros is palatable when ripe, but the green fruit is highly astringent, containing much tannin and is used in diarrhoea and incipient dysentery.

The oil of the coconut has been recommended as a substitute for cod liver oil, and is much used in Germany for phthisis. Barberries are very agreeable to fever patients in the form of a drink. Dutch medlars are astringent, and not very palatable. Grapes and raisins are nutritious and demulcent, and very grateful in the sick chamber. A so-called "grape cure" has been much lauded for the treatment of congestions of the liver and stomach, enlarged spleen, scrofula, tuberculosis, etc. Nothing is allowed but water and bread and several pounds of grapes per diem. Quince seeds are demulcent and astringent; boiled in water, they make an excellent soothing and sedative lotion in inflammatory diseases of the eyes and ears.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 31.—The President has recognized Joaquín Díaz Durán as consul-general of Guatemala at San Francisco.

THE officials of the city crematory in Toronto, Canada, have been detected in one of the worst frauds known to modern civilization. The clothing and bedding of fever patients brought to the crematory to be destroyed, have been preserved and sold to clothes dealers and peddlers.

RELIGIOUS.

Sunday Services.

Religious services were held at the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday, August 21st, 1892, commencing at 2 o'clock p.m., President Angus M. Cannon presiding.

The choir sang the hymn commencing:

Lo, the mighty God appearing
From on high Jehovah speaks

Prayer was offered by Elder John Galleher.

Again we meet around this board,
Of Jesus, our redeeming Lord.

The Priesthood of the Third ward officiated in the administration of the Sacrament.

ELDER JUNIUS F. WELLS

was then called upon to address the congregation. He asked an interest in the faith and prayers of the Saints, that he might be directed by the Spirit of the Lord while he was speaking; for without the guidance of the Spirit it would be vain to attempt to say anything that would benefit the hearers.

It was a source of pleasure to the speaker to have an opportunity again to worship with the Saints of God and to partake with them in the Sacrament and in the exercises in which they engage according to the principles which God has revealed. It is the greatest blessing given to mankind in this age of doubt that God has again revealed a form of worship acceptable to Him.

There are many forms of worship and various churches set up in the world. And the question is still as important as it ever was, Which is really the Church of God? The Catholic Church with its pontifical succession claims to be the only true church, and the Episcopal Church with its alleged apostolic succession sets up the same claim. Now, early in this age, there was commotion in the world on this subject, each church claiming to be the right one and that all the others were wrong. Strife was a consequence. "Here is Christ and here" was the common cry. The honest in heart were led to inquire for themselves, and among the enquirers was Joseph, the Prophet of this age. He asked the Lord to make it manifest to him, which was the true Church and what is the right way to salvation. He was led to take this step by the promise given in the Word of God, that, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him."

He retired to a secluded spot to test this promise, and received in answer to his fervent prayer a holy vision.

The power of darkness at first apparently seized him, but he continued to pray, for he had come before his God with the purpose of obtaining knowledge. When almost at the point of destruction, he beheld a pillar of fire of exceeding brightness and thereafter two personages whom he knew to be the Father and the Son. It was revealed to him at the same time that the churches of the world were all wrong, having assumed their authority and perverted the doctrines of the Lord. It was also declared to him that he was to be an instrument for the restoration of the everlasting Gospel.

This is the foundation, in one sense, of what is known as "Mormonism." It is founded on true revelation, proven to be so by the results that followed.

1. Spiritualism: many manifestations are claimed, but there are no principles revealed in it, no authority. But the revelations given to Joseph Smith resulted in the restoration of the principles upon which the Church of God is built. None of them were given to satisfy the curiosity of men; all were timely, and for a purpose. That which has been given through Joseph Smith is the restoration of the Gospel in its perfection and fulness, as once revealed through Jesus Christ, with all its gifts and graces, its prophecies, its authority to rebuke sin and to call upon men in the name of the Lord to repent. These revelations have been given to those who can believe in them the assurance of a living testimony as to the truth of this work. Though having this assurance our Elders have gone through almost every county proclaiming the Gospel and promising the believers that they also should obtain a knowledge of the truth of the work. The result of this work we see in these valleys, and indeed everywhere where the Saints come together.

The speaker had met many who had received this testimony, after having embraced the principles of the Gospel enunciated to them. They had been told to repent of their sins, and repentance was explained to them. They were then to be baptized for remission of their sins and then to receive the Holy Ghost, through the laying on of hands, and when complying with these conditions the promise was given that they should have a testimony, which promise was faithfully fulfilled, enabling them to proclaim that they had received it, not only by their words but also in their lives, or rather their change of life from one of sin to one of the service of the Lord, and the performance of those ordinances and practices which belong to the Gospel. And now they profess to be able to answer the question, Which is the Church of Jesus Christ? They submit for the consideration of their fellowmen the principles which they have embraced, and for the comparison of them with the Scriptures to see if they do not harmonize with the teachings of ancient prophets and holy men. We declare that these doctrines are true and ask only to be judged according to the old adage, that the tree is known by its fruit.

The speaker had met Saints in various countries of Europe and various parts of the United States and found here the same unity and harmony of spirit which cannot be found, perhaps, elsewhere in the whole world. This is a fruit of the Gospel.

As one of the results of these revelations stands the beautiful temple reared here to the Almighty. We are often questioned why we build temples. We do it that we may administer in the ordinance of God. Baptism for the dead is one of them. This doctrine is repeatedly referred to in the Scriptures, although the churches of the world do not seem to understand it.

Another testimony is the wonderful organization that exists among the Saints. This is a marvel even to the world, that does not realize that this is the order revealed from heaven.

The effect of the acceptance of the Gospel on the individual is another testimony. It changes his course of life into conformity with principles of righteousness. One who does not continue to live honestly and virtuously cannot maintain his place in this Church.

That the Saints were able to go through the persecutions they have suffered and remain faithful, is another testimony.

If "Mormonism" were not true, it could not be in the world today. But it is the truth, and as such it cannot be destroyed.

The testimony that it is true strengthens the Saint and helps him to overcome trials. Thus the people went victorious through the trials of Missouri and Illinois, and they came out of them all better and more acceptable than ever to our heavenly Father.

There is need for such a body as the Saints in the world, and such teaching as the Saints have. Many are sincere though groping in darkness. Whether we are doing our whole duty as we should do, the speaker said, is often a question in his mind. But we should bear our testimony by living faithfully according to what we have learned. We have proved in the past that the fruit of the Gospel is purity, honesty and good order. Are we bearing the same testimony and with as much enthusiasm now as in the first days of the Church? However, the work shall go on until the purposes of the Almighty are accomplished and the promises of God fulfilled.

APOSTLE ABRAHAM H. CANNON

was the next speaker. He said, in substance, we have listened to a brief and lucid explanation of some of the principles of our faith. It would be well if we could always comply with the requirements of the Lord upon us or the requirements of the world, even of those who do not believe in the Lord.

We hold that the Gospel is meant to apply to all conditions of life. It does not alone pertain to spiritual things or to the future, but it covers temporal matters as well, as we know through the revelations given to us. Through the Gospel even the earth shall be changed and become a paradise fit for the children of God to live on. The earth is rich in all that is needful to the comfort of man, but the unequal distribution of these things causes so much dissatisfaction that something is needed to restore happiness to mankind. The Gospel is calculated to do this, and as Saints we should set a pattern in both spiritual matters and in temporal matters. It should be the ambition of all Saints to follow the injunction of our Savior, "Be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect." This does not only mean spiritual perfection, for such perfection cannot be comprehended if separated from what is called temporal matters. We should have the best institutes of learning that our children are not under the necessity to go abroad for instruction. Our mechanics and artisans should be the best. Our lands should be best cultivated. We should study the science of government, and the history of other nations, and above all, live in constant communion with God. For if prophecy is true, the day will come when all nations shall come and see the glory of Zion.

The Lord has led us to view many things in a different light from what we did formerly and to cultivate a spirit of toleration. We believe that we are all the children of one Father, and we should deal with all our fellow men in that spirit. The Saints should realize that all will be exalted according to what they have done in the flesh, and but few will be eternally cut off from the glory of eternity. We should be willing to show charity in all our dealings with men and strengthen them and help them that they may feel they have friends here. This is our mission. The world should be benefited by our existence in it. May God help us to be inspired, at all times, by this spirit of love and charity.

LEGAL OPINIONS IN THE ASSESSMENT OF BANK PROPERTY.

The following opinion from the city attorney was read:

Mr. Leonard, Assessor and Collector:

Dear Sir,—You handed me yesterday the petition of a number of the banks and bankers filed with the City Council sitting as a board of equalization, wherein they claim they have been discriminated against in the assessment for the year 1892. They say "the property of and the shares in said banks have been assessed higher than money and other capital in the hands of individuals and other corporations."

The intention of the law is that all capital and property should be assessed equally. The statute provides that money shall be assessed as money; that is, the actual amount of dollars the taxpayer may have. The above proposition depends entirely upon the facts. The national banks, as also their stockholders, are especially protected against any such discrimination by section 5291, revised statutes of the United States. The facts should all be laid before the board of equalization, and if it be found they are assessed as claimed, it should be corrected and equalized.

I am informed the national banks claim a further exemption under the amendment to section 2019, laws 1888, by the law of 1892, page 31, which adds to said section 2019 subdivision 13, in which mortgages and trust deeds are exempt from taxation.

The law of Congress expressly forbids national banks from loaning money on real estate security and I do not believe they can avail themselves of the law of 1892 by violating the law of Congress and thus avoid the payment of just tax. If I am correct in this they are not entitled to a reduction for or an exemption or paying taxes on any capital loaned upon real estate security. The banks cannot take this advantage of their own wrong.

I again repeat that tax laws and assessments should act equally on persons and property, and that no discrimination should not be made in any case.

Section 2011, compiled laws 1888, provides that: "The property, real and personal, of corporations shall be assessed and the tax collected to the extent as such property was owned by individuals."

Section 4 of the laws of 1890, which amends section 2023 of the revenue laws of 1888, provides among other things that banks shall be furnished by the proper officer to each taxpayer who shall fill the same up with a statement of all his taxable property and return it to the officer. The officer shall leave this blank at the residence or place of business of the taxpayer, which shall be filled out and returned to the officer within twenty days from date of service, and any person, corporation, firm or association who neglects or refuses to return the same, properly filled in with a list of taxable property of such person, corporation, firm or association as provided in said section, the officer must make an estimate of the value of the property of such person, corporation, firm or association, as provided in said section, and the valuation so fixed must not be reduced by the board of equalization, but may be increased.

I take it this section applies to all the assessing banks, whether private or national.

If among the petitioners any of them have failed to make any such return as required by the section above referred to, and the assessor made the assessment as in said section specified, I do not think any reduction can be made or that such are entitled to relief.

As to the school question, I do not find any law exempting property belonging to private schools from taxation. The law covering exemption from taxation, so far as I have been able to find, is contained in section 2008, first volume Compiled Laws, 1888, subdivision 3 of said section, which is as follows: "Property owned by this Territory or by any county, city or school district is exempt." Subdivision 4 refers to property used by any religious denomination as long as used for public worship and no income is derived therefrom. This subdivision excludes the residence of the minister, etc., and makes it taxable. In other words the parsonage is not exempt from taxation. I understand that the property claimed as exempt in this particular case is residence property and used as such, but is claimed as exempt because situated on the same lot upon which the school building is erected. I do not think this property is exempt from taxation.

The following is the opinion of the city attorney on the question presented Tuesday night by Zion's Savings bank:

To the Honorable City Council sitting as a board of equalization of taxes for the city of Salt Lake.

Gentlemen—Your honorable board at last evening's meeting referred to me the claim for a reduction of taxes made by Zion's Savings bank of this city, which is now before me. It seems the bank claims that they have been assessed at too high a figure and instead of having on hand at the time of the assessment the amount of personal property for which it is assessed, there was only on hand $50,000 in cash and to that extent, and that only, in addition to the real estate and improvements, should the bank be assessed.

Section 2011 of the revenue law of 1888 makes shares of stock of national banks assessable to the shareholders.

Section 2011. "Shares of stock in corporations other than national banks when the same are taxable, money and taxable bonds shall be listed," etc.

Subdivision 9 of Section 2009, exempt "shares of stock in corporations when the property of the corporation is taxable." It seems the property of the corporation is taxable and is in fact really taxed in this case, and such being the case, reading the two sections together, the capital stock or shares of stock representing the capital cannot be taxed.

It is further claimed that all the capital of the corporation, including the surplus, except $50,000, is loaned out and secured by mortgages and deeds of trust on property which is taxable, and therefore the same is not taxable. If this be true, I am of the opinion that all such capital stock or shares of stock would be exempt.

If I am not mistaken the Council for the bank claimed that it was exempt from paying taxes on money held by the bank which has been deposited by customers, on the ground that they were indebted for the amount to the customers.

When money is deposited, generally, the relation of debtor and creditor exists as between the bank and customer, the money is the money of the bank, and I fail to find any law exempting any such money from taxation while in the possession of the bank.

Any personal property other than money, such as bank furniture, etc., is certainly assessable.

E. D. HOOK, City Attorney.

THAT POLE TROUBLE.

The Salt Lake City Railway company has submitted a petition to the City Council protesting against the resolution ordering the removal of its poles and feed wires from Second East street, in which it says:

"The recommendation that your petitioner be required to remove its electric supply wires extending from its power station along Second East street to Fifth South street ought not to be passed. This proposed action is urged on behalf of the telephone company, upon the ground that these wires interfere with the telephone lines extending along Second East street and connecting with Murray and Sandy.

Before the removal of the telephone lines from Second East street to Second East street your petitioner, in order to furnish electricity for the operation of its railroad lines upon Second South, Third South and Fifth South streets, pursuant to authority of council erected the wires complained of. These supply wires are necessary if the railroad runs on the last named streets as operated and are an essential part of the system of railroad of your petitioner. They afford the most direct connection by which a supply of electricity can be furnished. If they are removed from Second South street, your petitioner would be compelled to put up five large wires, extending from its power station on Second East street, along First South street to Main, and thence down Main as far as Fifth South street, a distance of seven blocks. This would be a much greater burden upon the streets than the present simple and direct method of connection. If the present supply wires on Second East street interfere to any extent with the telephone lines on that street, the same wires when erected upon First South and Main streets would parallel the same telephone lines and many others, and create a great disturbance in the telephone system.

"The fact is, and it could be readily ascertained by the telephone company if it had in its service a competent electrician, that the supply wires on Second East do not create the disturbance which exists in the telephone lines extending to Murray and Sandy. These telephone lines within the city have a return metallic circuit, so that there can be no communication of electricity from the railroad supply wires. The two sets of wires are more than ten feet apart, and all the leading electricians of the United States, including Edison, in the various contests between the telephone companies and electric railroad companies, concur that no appreciable disturbance can occur by induction between railroad lines and telephone lines that distance apart.

"The true cause of the disturbance in the telephone lines mentioned is found in the fact that the telephone lines connecting with Murray and Sandy are grounded south of the city, and beyond the place of grounding, the electric railway system of the Salt Lake Rapid Transit company is being operated. The current of electricity passes through the cars of that company on its lines to Forest Dale and Calder's Park into the earth and thence in their return to the central power station of that company within the city, directly across the place of grounding of the telephone line. Experiments would show that when this company is not operating its line, the disturbance on the telephone lines referred to would not exist; and it must be self-evident to your honorable body that if five supply wires paralleling the telephone lines on Second South street a few blocks materially interfere with the operation of the telephone, that the same wires strung along First South and Main streets, under similar conditions, would produce similar results.

"Hence the change proposed cannot benefit the telephone company, but would create an extra burden upon the most important streets in the city, and be a direct and material injury to you, petitioner, not only in the expense of making the change, but in depriving it of the shortest and most direct method of furnishing power to its railroad lines on Second, Third and Fifth south streets.

"It is well understood that the power of a given current of electricity decreases in direct proportion as the distance the current is carried increases. Your petitioner therefore asks your honorable body not to pass the proposed resolution, or at least to suspend action and give your petitioner an opportunity of being heard in support of the statements herein contained."

CITY COUNCIL.

An adjourned session of the City Council was to have been commenced at 2 o'clock this afternoon, but at that hour there was no quorum present, the following councilmen only being in attendance: Rich, Hardy, Lawson, Evans, Simondt, Beardsley, Helms. Folland came in twenty minutes later and on motion of Helms, Simondt was chosen chairman.

The minutes of the previous regular session were read, after which Rich noticed that Councilor Evans had left the council chamber and asked the point that there was not a quorum present and consequently whatever business thus transacted would be illegal. The chair declared that the point was well taken and Clerk Vandenberg was sent in search of Councilman Evans, with whom he soon returned, and after a brief informal recess business was resumed. At this juncture of the proceedings Councilman Wantland entered with a bundle of papers and took his seat in a business like manner.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

On motion of Rich the unfinished business was taken up.

REQUISITION RESOLUTION.

Evans' resolution requiring heads of departments to furnish requisitions for supplies came up.

Hardy moved its adoption.

Evans asked that it be laid over for one week, as he wished to offer some very material amendments.

Rich said the resolution should be amended, but he was in favor of doing the necessary remodeling without further delay.

Lawson took the same view of the matter and moved that the amendments be made immediately.

On motion of Wantland the matter went over until the next meeting. Lawson and Rich only voting in the negative.

GARBAGE ORDINANCE AMENDMENTS.

The following amendments were suggested by the committee having under consideration the garbage ordinance recently returned to the City Council unapproved by the Mayor:

The following will show amendments to garbage ordinance. Heading of bill should read:

"A BILL FOR AN ORDINANCE"

Providing receptacles for ashes, garbage and sweepings of sidewalks and for the removal of same, also providing for the protection from paper and other refuse matter. Also, for the disposition of night soil and manure; also, for the removal of all surface closets and cesspools within the sewer districts where pipes are laid, and prescribing penalties.

Section 1 should be amended as follows: The business districts on Second South street should read to Fourth West street instead of Sixth West street, and on Fifth West street to Third South street instead of Fifth South street.

Section 2 should be amended by adding the following, to wit: That the removal of garbage within the said business districts shall be at the expense of the city. The removal of ashes, within the said business district, shall be at the expense of the city, when in receptacles, and when in bins, at the expense of the owner, agent or occupant.

Section 3 should be amended by adding the following, to wit: That the removal of ashes, garbage, night soil and other refuse matter within the city limits, and outside of the business districts mentioned, shall be at the expense of the owner, agent or occupant.

The garbage ordinance should be further amended by adding the following as an additional section:

That all surface closets and cesspools within the sewer districts, where sewer pipes are laid, shall be removed, filled up and connections made with sewer system within thirty (30) days after the date of the approval of this ordinance.

TO OPEN AND IMPROVE STREETS.

The following from the city attorney was read by the recorder:

To the Honorable City Council of Salt Lake City:

Gentlemen,—As you are aware, South Temple street has been closed to travel from Eighth West street to the Jordan river. That some months ago your honorable body granted to the Saltair Railroad Company a franchise or right of way over said street from Eighth West to the western limits of the city, which said company accepted and laid a track on said street as far west as the Jordan river.

I have arranged with the property owners of blocks 52, 53 and 56 and 57, being the property on both sides of said South Temple street, between Eighth and Tenth West streets, to have the city open and improve said street so as to put it in reasonable condition for the use of the public.

I therefore recommend that the work be done at once by the street supervisor, under the direction of the city engineer.

A NEW LABOR ORDINANCE.

The following bill drawn up at a recent special meeting of the Federated Trades council was read and referred to the committee on municipal laws and city attorney associated:

"Section 1. Be it ordained by the City Council of Salt Lake City, Utah Territory, that eight hours labor constitute a legal day's work in all cases where the same is performed under the direction, control or by the authority of this city, or under direction, control or by authority of any officer of this city acting in his official capacity, and a stipulation to that effect must be made a part of all contracts to which the city or any officer acting in his official capacity is therein a party.

Sec. 2. Any officer violating any provision shall, upon conviction, be found guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100, or by imprisonment not less than six months, or by both fine and imprisonment, and be deprived of his office.

Sec. 3. This ordinance shall take effect upon and after its passage and approval.

COMBINATION POLE QUESTION.

The question of compelling the street car, electric light and electric power companies to use combination poles was discussed at length, after which it was laid over for one week.

WAGON ROAD TO MORGAN.

Wantland, Rich and Folland sent in a report recommending the construction of a wagon road to Morgan county via City Creek and Hardscrabble canyons.

Moran announced his intention to fight the proposition from first to last. Speaking on this subject Mr. Lawson said: "Like Mr. Wantland, I was originally opposed to the building of the road, but since I investigated it I have changed my mind. It will bring the city a handsome revenue yearly, by opening up a trade with Morgan county."

CREMATORY PROTEST.

A petition from Barnes & Byrne and 250 others protesting against the location of the crematory near the Warm Springs, was read by the recorder.

Folland moved that the petition be granted.

Horn said that could not be done without revoking the power that was given to the Mayor, the health commission and sanitary committee.

Evans spoke in favor of the erection of the crematory on the site selected.

Chairman Beardsley of the sanitary committee said the matter had been originally referred to the officers named with power to act. They had arrived at their conclusions after several days of careful deliberation. They had acted in good faith from the beginning and would not back out now. They had gone entirely too far for that. The building was now in the course of construction and would be erected.

Hardy said that he was utterly opposed to the city locating its crematory near the greatest sanitarium in the Territory. It was a piece of property for which the city would probably not take half a million of dollars. A hospital for the sick was being erected there.

Lawson said he coincided with what Folland and Hardy had said in regard to the question. He wanted to go on record as being opposed to it. The protest of the property owners should be heeded.

Moran inquired if the Council's power was revoked, what effect it would have on the work now being done.

Wantland asked how long work had been going on and Heardsley replied that men and teams had been actively engaged for two weeks and the excavation had been completed. If the protests were heeded to the contractor would have to be paid for his work. He moved that the committee be discharged.

The matter was temporarily disposed of by reference to the Mayor and sanitary committee associated.

This action virtually denies the petition.

ANOTHER POLICEMAN.

The Mayor sent in a communication in which he announced the appointment of Frank Davenport as policeman. Committee on police.

GUTTERING REFUSED.

The following communication from the Board of Public Works was referred to the street commissioner and city engineer:

Honorable President and City Council: Gentlemen—Some time ago we were ordered to proceed with the construction of cobble stone gutters on North State street from the capital grounds to City Creek.

We did not take action, as we did not consider it advisable to do the work at once. For a long distance on the street there is a deep fill which is liable to settle or slide out of shape for some time to come, and if the gutters are constructed before the new ground becomes well compact, it will incur the extra expense of repaving them, and probable in some places rebuilding. We do not think the next rainy season will do damage sufficient to warrant putting in the gutters this fall, and we therefore recommend that the work be postponed for the present.

BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS.

CHAIRMANSHIP FILLED.

The chair appointed Mr. Simond as chairman of the committee on public grounds to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Ewing's resignation.

RAILWAY TROUBLE.

A bill for an ordinance amending the franchise of the Great Salt Lake & Hot Springs Railway company, allowing it to use regular steam engines instead of dummies, provided the company commence the construction of a broad gauge line to the Deep Creek country within four months, was then presented and read the first time.

Evans said as he understood it the company had merely asked to be allowed to change their line from a dummy to a regular steam line, and yet the committee had reported on something foreign to the petition. He was in favor of granting the petition as asked for, but no more.

Rich objected strongly to the passage of the bill. The managers of the Great Salt Lake & Hot Springs railway had said to the people of the Third precinct that when the franchise was granted they would convert the road into an electric or cable road within six months. But they have not done so, and do not propose to. They have violated every word of their agreement. Let us compel them to keep their word with the Council. To allow them to put on big steam engines now would deplete $500,000 worth of property to benefit some men who had not to exceed $20,000.

The matter went over until the next meeting, a copy of the resolution and franchise to be furnished each member.

THE EIGHT-HOUR BILL.

Moran's eight-hour bill was taken from the table and referred to the committee on municipal laws.

THE POST PETITION.

The special committee to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Mary Paul and others complaining of the houses of prostitution on Franklin avenue, reported recommending that the petition be referred to the chief of police.

Lawson became indignant. The special committee had been appointed to take some action on the matter, to meet the situation like men, and not crawl out of it like a lot of little children.

Rich sarcastically said that it was evident the committee had done nothing at all, and they might just as well say so.

Wantland said he thought the suppression or control of these houses was really the duty of the chief of police. He did not believe that the council should say where the houses should be located.

The petition was finally referred to the Mayor and chief of police.

AN ALLEGED NUISANCE.

The Utah National Bank and other business men in the same vicinity protested against the building that now stands at the southwest corner of Main and First South streets and occupied by the City Railroad Company as a station house. They held that this was the only obstruction that remained on the street, and that by reason of the congregation of street railway employees and loafers there is a nuisance and interfered with their business.

PROTEST ON A FENCE.

White & Sons Company and others protested against the fence now guarding an excavation in the center of the block on First South between Main and West Temple streets. Committee on streets.

AN INVESTIGATION.

Rich moved that the committee on irrigation be instructed to investigate the pay roll of the irrigation department, and report at the next meeting. Carried.

THE CITY PAY ROLL.

Rich moved that the paymaster be instructed not to pay any employee of any department except on his personal appearance.

Laid over until next meeting.

The joint city and county building committee recommended the payment of the following bills, for half of which the city is liable:

The City Council met in regular session this afternoon at 2:30, President Looftbourrow in the chair. Roll called about the following members were in attendance: Rich, Folland, Horn, Simond, Wantland, Heles. The chair announced that a quorum was not present and business could not be proceeded with. Councilman Beardsley was observed in the hallway on the outside and Rich humorously suggested that the Black Maria be sent after him. This had the desired effect, for Mr. Beardsley at once entered and the transaction of business commenced.

GAS ORDINANCE AMENDMENT.

A communication was received from the Indiana Natural Gas company asking that its ordinance be amended. Committee on municipal laws.

PIONEER SQUARE POLICEMAN.

Henry Sautler and others asked that Thomas Darsey be appointed custodian and special policeman of Pioneer square.

Rich said that the proposed appointee was living at the square and that he had allowed the same to fall into a disgraceful condition. Committee on police.

AFTER THE HACKMEN.

A. C. Smith & Company, druggists, complained against the manner in which hackdrivers allowed their teams and vehicles to stand in front of their place of business at corner of Main and Second South streets. Committee on streets.

HIS OWN SIDEWALK.

J. D. Updegraff asked to be allowed to construct his own sidewalk. Committee on streets.

CENTER STREET GRADE.

John W. Donnellan and a large number of others asked that Center street be brought to a permanent grade. Committee on streets.

WATERING TROUGH.

A number of residents on South State street asked that a watering trough be erected near Burton Gardner's Lumber company. Committee on streets.

A MESSENGER BOY.

A communication was received from the mayor in which he announced that he had appointed Charles Greenman in place of Archie McKay, resigned, as messenger boy. Confirmed.

WITHOUT COMMENT.

The board of public works sent in a communication, without comment, received from the Pacific Paving company.

Moran—That the proposition to send in a communication without comment was ridiculous in the extreme. It should be referred back for particulars.

Rich moved that it be referred to the committee on claims with the city engineer associated. The latter was the arbitrator between the Council and contractors. He received $8000 per year for the work he had done for the city, and his opinion was worth something and he wanted to hear from him. If the committee on claims should differ from the city engineer on this proposition he should have the right to bring a protest into the Council. The motion carried.

CEMENT SIDEWALKS.

The board of public works reported that it had entered into a contract with Frank Harrigan for the construction of sidewalks on the following streets, his bid being the lowest: On East Temple street between South Temple and Sixth South streets; on the west side of East Temple street, between South Temple and Third South streets; on both sides of West Temple street, between South Temple and Second South streets; on the east side of West Temple street, between Fourth and Sixth South streets; on the west side of Fifth East street, between South Temple and First South streets.

Lawson moved that it be referred to the committee on streets for investigation. He was not in favor of swallowing the entire contract in one gulp without examining its ingredients.

Wantland moved as a substitute that the report be accepted and the contract approved.

Lawson opposed this. He did not propose to act ignorantly. Perhaps the contract and specifications were all right, but it was entirely likely that they were not. The matter should go to the committee on streets.

Rich took the same view. It could be considered during the time that intervened between now and Tuesday night next, when it could be approved. The recorder proceeded to read the contract but was cut short by a motion from Moran carrying, to the effect that it be laid on the table until later in the evening.

SIDEWALKS ACCEPTED.

The board of public works reported that it had accepted the sidewalks laid by Rudolph Alf, James Hogle and John Lollin, and recommended that the specialist tax assessed against them for sidewalk construction be cancelled. Adopted.

RETURNED CORRECTED.

The city engineer sent in a communication in which he announced that the city maps prepared by the Salt Lake Abstract, Title, Guaranty and Trust Company had been returned to his office corrected.

Harly said that he knew that the maps were not complete. Certain pieces of valuable real estate belonging to the city was not on the records. He knew an abstract company that would be very glad to get 10 per cent. of the value on all the land it should find for the city that was not described in the plat recently made.

Wantland said such a proposition was merely a big bluff. He considered it a very clever advertising scheme.

The city engineer, with whom the city attorney had been associated, explained that under authority given by a resolution he had allowed the records to be taken from his office for correction. The company had simply made the corrections, but nothing about lands unaccounted for.

The matter was referred back to the city engineer and city attorney.

THE CITY GAS STOCK.

Councilmen Bearley and Folland of the ways and means committee reported that they thought that the offer of $125 per share for the city gas stock was a good one, but they did not wish to take any decisive step in the matter, and therefore desired to ask the Council for further instruction.

Blomond said that he understood that the city could only sell its property to the highest bidder. He moved that it be referred to the city attorney for an opinion as to whether the city could really dispose of the stock at private sale. Referred.

ELECTRIC LIGHT.

An electric light was ordered at the corner of Fourth North and Fifth West streets.

APPOINTMENT CONFIRMED.

The committee on police recommended that the appointment of P. H. Fitzmaurice as policeman be confirmed. Adopted.

SPRINKLING TAX REMITTED.

The committee on sprinkling recommended that the sprinkling tax on the west side of Second East, between Sixth and Eighth South be remitted, because no sprinkling had been done.

Rich wanted to know whether, in remitting the tax, the amount was deducted from the contract with Mount & Griffin.

Harly—Yes.

Rich—then I am satisfied.

The report was adopted.

PURCHASE OF WATER PIPE.

The committee on waterworks recommended the purchase of 830 feet of sixteen-inch pipe in order to complete the line to West Temple, on First South, also that the work of laying eight-inch pipe on Second South be at once prosecuted. Adopted.

WANTLAND'S HURRY.

The committee on streets presented a report recommending the "payment of sundry bills."

Loofbonrow objected to any such manner of making out a report. In fact it was not a report.

Wantland said the report had been made up in a hurry, otherwise it would not have been sent in that way.

Rich—Well, if it was made up in a hurry, how do you know that the bills were correct?

Wantland—Oh, they have been audited.

Rich—Well, I take the same position as the chairman. Bills should not be sent in that way.

Wantland—I stand corrected.

THE GARBAGE ORDINANCE.

The garbage ordinance then came up for consideration. It was read in full and laid over until next meeting.

CAN'T SUBSTITUTE.

Heise submitted a resolution instructing the city attorney to submit his opinion as to how the position made vacant by the resignation of Ewing could be filled.

Rich moved to lay on the table.

Lawson wanted to present a substitute.

"You can't substitute anything," said Moran, who was in the chair, and Heise's resolution was laid on the table.

THE GARNISHMENT QUESTION.

Rich offered the following, which was referred to the city attorney for an opinion:

Be it resolved by the City Council of Salt Lake city that the city hereby waives its right to refuse to answer to garnishment process of the courts of Utah Territory, and hereby makes it the duty of the treasurer of Salt Lake city to answer all garnishment processes and to make payment from the funds of Salt Lake city, as provided by law in all cases of garnishment.

MUST PAY INDIVIDUALS.

Rich offered the following:

Resolved, That the treasurer be authorized not to pay any employee in any department of the government, unless paid to the employee entitled to the same, and his signature signed on the pay roll, except when otherwise ordered by the committee on finance.

Adopted.

EAST TEMPLE SIDEWALKS.

Wantland moved that the city engineer and city attorney be instructed to report the necessary action to be taken in order to have sidewalks 20 feet wide on East Temple street. Adopted.

NOT A STONE YARD.

Wantland also moved that the street supervisor be instructed to see that contractors in charge of curbing work on Main street have the stone dressed before it is placed on the street, and that the contractors be not allowed to place the stone on the street except just before they are ready to use it. Adopted.

SUPPLIES' REQUISITION.

Evals offered the following:

Resolved, That all officers in charge of departments be required to present to the Council at its last meeting in each month requisitions for such supplies and materials as in the judgment of such officers will be needed during the next succeeding month.

Such requisitions, when received by the Council, shall be referred to the proper committees in charge of such departments, either with power to act or for recommendation, as the Council may direct.

Purchases involving an expenditure of $500 or less for any single item or bill may be made by the committee, when immediate action is necessary, unless otherwise ordered by the Council.

But purchases involving an expenditure of more than $500 for any single item or bill shall not be made until reported to the Council, and the direction of the Council had thereon.

No purchase requiring an expenditure of exceeding $500 for a single item or bill for material shall be made until competitive bids have been secured by the committee, which bids shall be reported to the Council, subject to such action as the Council may determine.

The resolution precipitated a good deal of discussion. The opposers were, Wantland, Heiss and Simondi.

Wantland said it was a "pretty smooth resolution." He was willing to meet the other members of the council half in the matter.

Lawson said there appeared to be a good deal of trouble with Wantland's mind. The idea of the resolution simply was to buy goods on a business basis. The resolution would protect the city, and allow goods to be bought cheaper than any other way. He didn't see how any man could stand upon this floor and oppose the resolution.

Rich was surprised that Simondi should take the stand that bids would have to be advertised for. It was all rot. The heads of departments had spent thousands and tens of thousands of dollars without getting even competitive prices. The question was whether the merchants of this city should be allowed to bid on supplies for the city.

Wantland sought to defer action by referring the resolution to the city attorney for his opinion as to its legality. [Laughter.] Lost.

Heiss wanted the resolution amended so that all bids should be opened in the presence of the mayor. [Laughter.]

The discussion here assumed a personal character and lasted for several minutes.

Loofbourou said that the resolution might as well be passed. Everybody knew the attitude of the council toward the mayor and the attitude of the mayor toward the council, but he did not think that this resolution infringed upon the mayor's prerogatives in any manner.

More discussion followed which terminated by the passage of the resolution on the following vote:

Ayes—Evans, Horn, Lawson, Moran, Rich, Folland, Hardy, Loofbourou—8.

Nayes—Beardsley, Heiss, Simondi, Wantland—4.

THE SEWAGE PROBLEM.

The city engineer presented a communication in which he stated that another pump could be put in at the sewer pump for about $5,500. This would enable the city to carry off the entire sewage. Steam would be substituted for electricity and this would enable the running of the present pump eight hours longer each day than at the present time. He called the attention of the council, however, to the fact that whatever was done would be of a temporary nature, as the system of gravity would be lost.

Hardy presented a resolution authorizing the mayor to provide some other means of power to run the sewer pump, as the Rapid Transit company could not furnish power for more than eight hours a day.

Wantland spoke in favor of the resolution. Something must be done at once. The case had reached a point when it could be no longer pool-poohed. It was time the council acted.

Folland was glad that the Council had at last awakened to the fact that the danger should be met, and at once. Simondi was of the opinion that a motion was imperative.

Both matters were referred to the committee on sewers.

TO PUT IN STEAM.

The following resolution offered by Folland was adopted:

Resolved, That the sewer committee be authorized to have put in at the sewer pump the boiler and engine as suggested by the city engineer, in his report referred to the sewer committee, if in his judgment it will fill the purpose.

STATE STREET PAVING SQUABBLE.

The board of public works submitted without comment a communication from the Pacific Paving company, asking that the city engineer be required to make an estimate upon the stone block part of the State street paving, and also a sworn statement from Inspector Wood.

The Pacific Paving company sets up that it has performed the work in a substantial manner and that a better piece of paving can not be found in the West, and also that it is responsible to the city for the period it has guaranteed in its contract, and the city has accepted a bond to secure the performance of petitioner's guarantee and has the right to retain 10 per cent. of the price of said work for the period of two years. The city engineer, the company says, has refused to make said estimate because he says first, that the blocks are laid above the grade; and second, that they are not laid in courses or perfect lines; third, that the interstices between the blocks are more than a quarter of an inch contrary to the specifications. In reply to this the company says that the work was done under the eye and immediate direction of an inspector appointed by the city. The affidavit of Inspector Wood is attached as follows:

A. M. Wood, being first duly sworn, deposes and says: That I am a resident of Salt Lake City, Utah; that I was formerly inspector of State street paving in said city; was appointed to said position by the city authorities in the year 1891 and began inspecting said work about November 30, 1891; that said work was discontinued after several weeks on account of bad winter weather until the following spring.

The paving blocks were set under my supervision and I governed myself by the verbal instructions of Chief Engineer Doremus.

Mr. Doremus instructed me to have the gutters for the gutters (which was ten feet in width from the curb) to be set at least an inch to one and one-fourth inch above the grade stakes, so that the same (as he instructed) could be rammed to the grade after being laid by the paver. That he further instructed that the sand for the foundation of the stone blocks be rolled with the steam roller, which was tried time and time again under my instructions and in each and every instance proved to be an absolute failure, and upon said failure I was instructed to require the contractor to furnish a tamping beetle and a man to use it in tamping the sand in advance of the stone block pavers, which was done and was perfectly satisfactory to Mr. Doremus.

After superintending the paving of about two-thirds of the first block the city engineer estimated to me that it would be absolutely necessary to put an extra inspector on to call out the stone blocks already on the ground in advance of the men known as the block pavers or block setters, which was done. All calls were thrown out in the street and carried away by teams ordered by Superintendent Reed.

The rest of the stone block setting and curb setting continued under my supervision as inspector of State street, duly appointed by the city authorities, down to Third South street, from Brigham, and in means as I required the tearing up of the setting of fifty feet of said stone block paving, and had the same done according to instructions received from Mr. Doremus in the early part of the work, viz., reset from one inch to one and a quarter inches above the grade stakes; that according to the official specifications furnished me from the office of the Board of Public Works, and page 14, Sec. 8, first and second line, which states explicitly, "When laid, the paving shall be immediately covered with clean, sharp sand, which shall be raked or swept into the joints until all are completely filled."

That the setting of the curbstone on State street the specifications were complied with as near as it was possible, with the exception of twenty-five feet of curbstone already set north of the Kauford Hotel, and when within from twenty-five to thirty feet of the said curb already set I discovered a discrepancy in the grade of three-eighths of an inch, and upon said discovery I telephoned Mr. Doremus in regard to the matter, and he instructed me to have the curb we were now setting to conform to the others and let it go at that, and in other cases where the curbing had been set the fall of 1891 around and over from catch-basins which I found to be out of grade I was instructed to make them conform to the catch-basins anyhow. This was the case at the corner of Second South and State streets and Third South and State streets.

I have made a tour of the East very recently, and made it a special business of examining the different paving contracts that were going on in the various cities, and I conscientiously believe this to be better than any piece of work of stone paving I saw, and that I failed to find in any city in the Union that I visited while I was away during my six weeks' absence the old, time-worn idea of malaria traps or catch-basins.

The people tell me in the East that catch-basins are relegated to the past, and that the board of health will not permit anything of the kind to be used as it is very injurious to the health of the community and an unnecessary expense to the cities that will not be tolerated. Further this affiant saith not.

A. M. Wood.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The city school board met in regular session last night. Vice-president Nelson presided, and there were present at roll call Messrs. Dooley, Pike, Alf, Baldwin, Duke, Pratt and Newman.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and, after correction, adopted.

WANT TO BE JANITORS.

The following persons made applications for positions as janitors: John Alexander, William Wooley, Mathew Miller, William Hurd, William Shoemaker and James P. Morris. Referred to committee on school supplies.

TEACHER OF VOCAL MUSIC.

The following communications were then read:

To the Board of Education:

Gentlemen.—I hereby apply for the position as teacher of vocal music at the public schools of Salt Lake City.

Respectfully,

ANTON PEDERSEN.

Gentlemen of the Board of Education:

I take pleasure in stating that Professor Anton Pedersen is one of the most able and thorough musicians we have residing in this city. My personal acquaintance with him, as well as his labors as conductor of the Salt Lake Symphony orchestra and other similar organizations, where his great ability has been put to the test, warrant me in saying that the children of our public schools would be most fortunate if their musical education were directed from such a musicianly teacher.

Yours respectfully,

EVAN STEPHENS.

They were referred to the committee on teachers.

LAID ON THE TABLE.

The following was read and laid on the table:

Board of Education:

Gentlemen.—I based my bid of the Nineteenth ward school on the figures of Clombek & Parsons as to the brick and stone work. Afterwards Mr. Pinney told me not to employ them on the Nineteenth ward building. Mr. Parsons gives good reference as to pressed brick work done here and in St. Paul and Kansas City, and says he will do a good job on the Nineteenth school in every respect.

I will work a great financial loss to me now if I am put at the mercy of other brick and stone contractors, as I can get no satisfactory figures now I have the material but which I think is satisfactory to Mr. Pinney. I therefore ask you to let me give Messrs. Clombek & Parsons a trial. If the work is not of first class and as per specifications, I will see that they stop at once.

With due respect to Mr. Pinney as superintendent, I remain yours,

F. M. WRIGHT.

KLETTING'S CLAIMS.

To the Board of Education:

Gentlemen—Three weeks ago I submitted to you my bills for services on three school houses, the Twentieth, Eleventh and Nineteenth.

As I understand these bills have been referred to the committee on sites and buildings, and have been reported back to your honorable body with recommendations to only pay part of the amount of the same.

The amount charged in the above bills being correct, I herewith take the liberty of submitting them again, hoping that the explanations attached to each will make it possible for you to favorably act upon them, or if there are any objections to give me an opportunity to verbally explain.

Very respectfully yours,

R. KLETTING.

It was explained to the board that the bills had been sent back to Mr. Kletting for explanation, and they were referred back to the committee on sites and buildings.

SITES AND BUILDINGS.

The report of the committee on sites and buildings was then read.

To the President and Board of Education:

Your committee on sites and buildings recommend that authority be granted the officers of the board to make a lease with C. Stevenson for the rental of a building for school purposes situated southwest of Liberty Park, for the ensuing year at a cost of $25 a month for building and of $15 per month for janitor's services.

Pike moved to strike out the clause relating to a janitor, which was lost. The report was then adopted as read.

IN THE INTEREST OF ECONOMY.

The following report was also adopted:

Your committee on sites and buildings beg to report that bids were received on August 23rd for the erection of an eight-room building in the Third ward, to-wit:

C. R. Bryan.....	$34,975
Wm. J. Lester.....	35,000
W. J. Jay.....	74,500
B. O. Sherell.....	36,500
P. Van Houten.....	57,500
Salt Lake Building and Manufacturing Company.....	36,500

Your committee recommend that the specifications be revised and we be authorized to re-advertise for bids on the revised specifications for a term of five days.

We believe that this will result in lessening the cost of the building about $5,000, without materially injuring its efficiency.

ATTORNEY WILLIAMS' OPINION.

The opinion of the attorney of the board, on the matter of the Hendley & Meyer contract, was then submitted:

Board of Education:

Gentlemen—I have looked over the original and supplemental proposal of the Hendley & Meyer Engineering Company, submitted to me by your clerk, for furnishing a heating and ventilating plant for the Lincoln school; also the draft of contract submitted by Mr. L. Plunket, representing that company.

I observe that the proposals to furnish this plant are general in their nature and applicable to five different school buildings; that much of the original proposal consists of representations in the nature of advocacy of the particular plan provided by this company. Their representations or statements in the proposals are, I find, treated by Mr. Plunket as specifications with reference to the proposed plant. It seems to me that as such they are unsatisfactory. I think there should be definite specifications made out for each of the school buildings included within this general proposition and which it is agreed shall be supplied with the plant proposed. My reasons for this is that I cannot conceive it possible and even probable that referring to this general proposal as specifications for a particular building, many disagreements as to the true intent and meaning will arise. However, this is a matter of knowledge with which I assume your committee has familiarized itself and with which I am not familiar, and therefore submit to you in lieu of the proposed contract submitted by Mr. Plunket, a draft which I have prepared briefer, and I think more comprehensive designed as you will observe, to make all the representations contained therein on the part of the contractor with the change or modifications with reference to plans indicated by the draft and making everything in connection with the construction, furnishing and installing of their plant, subject to the inspection and acceptance of your superintendent and yourselves. If the proposals containing the specifications are deemed by you sufficiently definite, I recommend the draft of contract which I hand you as a substitute for the one furnished by the agent of the contractor, although that is more respectfully submitted.

P. L. WILLIAMS.

Pike moved that the matter be referred to the committee on sites and buildings, which was lost.

Then a motion that authority be given for the contract to be signed was lost by a vote of 4 to 4.

Pratt then moved that the matter be referred to the committee on sites and buildings, which was carried.

MAY SELECT ANOTHER SITE.

The committee on sites and buildings reported verbally, asking that permission be granted them to put in a solid foundation in the Jackson school building, on account of the condition of the land.

Young moved, as an amendment, that the committee be given power to select another site, and report back at the next meeting. The amendment carried, and then the original motion, as amended, was adopted.

A MUSIC TEACHER.

The committee on teachers reported as follows:

Board of Education:

Gentlemen—We, the undersigned, recommend the election of Prof. George C. Young to the position of supervisor of music in the Salt Lake public schools for the ensuing year at a salary of $1400.

Respectfully,

H. T. DUKE,
WILLIAM NELSON,
CHAS. BALDWIN,
Committee on Teachers.

Pike wanted to know why home talent was not employed, and Baldwin replied that nobody had applied for the position.

Pike then wanted to know why the communication received tonight was not considered and said the action of the committee was a reflection on the musical talent of Salt Lake.

Newman coincided with Pike and said Professor Pedersen was an excellent teacher.

The report was adopted, Newman and Pike voting in the negative.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The committee on school work asked authority to have 600 copies of the reports, rules, etc., printed, and that they make such changes in the rules as they deem expedient and report at next meeting. The authority was granted.

The committee also reported that the slips submitted to them by the publishers of the geography (Cobb edition) were unsatisfactory, and they had prepared a statement of the resources, climate, etc., of Utah to be forwarded to the publishers. The report was approved.

The action of the committee on sites and building in procuring a room to store books was approved.

Young moved that the board buy from Mr. Campbell such additional Kyune stone as may be necessary to finish the Washington school, the price to be uniform with the contract price. The motion was adopted.

Joseph B. Toronto and L. C. Worstel were elected examiners.

LIFE IN DAHOMEY.

The kingdom of Dahomey is inhabited by one of the finest races who live on the mysterious African soil, according to a writer in the New York Post. We do not find there a horde of savages, who live like the common brute, from hand to mouth, without any object, but rather a laborious people, which is ruled by a crafty tyrant and shrewd councilors. The kings of Dahomey, as in the dark ages of feudalism, rule their subjects by the terror a d awe they inspire, and are regarded by them as the representatives of the invisible Deity. In order to preserve this religious character they are bound to follow the practices of their ancestors. A king who would suddenly break with the gloomy practices of his forefathers would at once forfeit all prestige in the eyes of his subjects. To this condition of things the still prevailing practice of the shocking human sacrifice must be attributed, for, as will be shown further on, they are a political and, above all, a religious necessity, and strikingly recall the bloody pages of the Inquisition.

Yet we must not forget in severely censuring the barbarity of the kings of Dahomey that we find in the country ruled by them, laws, institutions and an organization that are perfectly adapted to the country, besides a police and a custom-house system which are not inferior to any in the world. As a rule the administration in the kingdom works like clockwork, although affidavits and official documents are unknown. Crimes are severely punished and consequently very rare. Europeans and wealthy Christian native merchants from the coast, who are at certain periods traveling in the interior, have never been attacked by robbers, nor have they ever lost a single object by theft.

The King, called Daah by the natives, is absolute master of everything, for people and property belong to him; individual possession of land or wealth is legally only a usufruct, and even the European factories on the coast, though duly paid for, are called "the King's houses." Land and other property is granted to the leading families, and slaves, who till the ground, raise cattle and extract palm oil. At any moment, however, the king may deprive his subjects of land, wealth and even life, or claim, without any reason whatever, a part of their profits.

The King has attached to his person a number of principal chiefs, who are all members of his family and are his principal advisers; yet in spite of these powerful ministers, who always agree with their master's opinions, the King's authority is subjected to the occult power of the fetish priests, to whose highest degree he is admitted the day he ascends the throne.

Women, who in Dahomey, as all over Africa, are generally regarded as inferior beings, are elevated to a high rank when they become the King's wives, the number of whom under some dynasties has been very great. For instance, the late King Glegle was said to have possessed more than 1000 wives. Everybody gets out of the royal ladies' way, bows respectfully and shuts his eyes when they pass by in the public square. Wee too, those who would dare to look at these ladies or insult them. They are under the surveillance of eunuchs and play a very important part in the country's politics. The assist at the State councils, and their advice has great weight with the king and councilors. They refresh the king's memory on certain subjects and prepare the speeches he delivers to the chiefs and the people.

Whatever has any connection with the royal wives becomes sacred. There is, for instance, a pretty little bird in the country called "the queen's bird," to touch which or annoy is severely prohibited, and these little creatures are surprisingly familiar. They enter the house, eating the food out of your hands and behaving like domesticated creatures. The influence of the favorite beauties is so great that every European factory is represented at court by one of them who is called "the white man's mother," and who has charge to defend the interest of her proteges. The leaders of the Amazons enjoy the same prerogative and have precedence before the most influential chiefs of the country.

ANOTHER SCHEME.

Another class of confidence men is now operating in this Territory with a view to swindling such persons as may be foolish enough to enter into contract with them. The following letter was received by a prominent Federal official today:

Dear Sir:—Although we are strangers to each other, I have concluded to take a dare-devil chance of jeopardizing my liberty in endeavoring to secure your confidence and friendly co-operation in a scheme which, if grasped now, will make you independently rich, and will at the same time better my own condition.

There is no doubt but what this communication contains some rather startling and unexpected information. Indeed, it is in relation to a matter of great importance and requires serious and careful consideration.

I am now going to write plainly and to the point. Before I begin, however, I wish to assure you candidly that no harm or insult is intended, so if I have made a mistake in addressing you, or the proposition I suggest should prove objectionable, I trust you will not be so heartless as to betray one who is willing to be your friend and benefactor.

The writer is now nearly 75 years of age, and for 28 years was the superintendent of steel engraving in one of the largest and best equipped bank-note companies in this country. During my leisure time I took up as a side issue the engraving of some Duplicates which, I can conscientiously say and prove to your entire satisfaction, cannot be distinguished from the genuine articles that are issued by the government.

Now, my dear sir, my age and physical condition is such that I require the assistance of others throughout the country to assist in the distribution of these articles; I therefore seek a trustworthy individual, who has a few hundred dollars to invest in a scheme of this kind, to act as agent and push their circulation in your locality.

If you think favorably of this matter and wish to have me present evidence which will satisfy the most skeptical of my statements are pure and unadulterated facts, I will, on receipt of a telegram from you, be more than pleased to appoint a place of safety for an interview where you can thoroughly examine the goods and subject them to any test whatever you may desire.

My terms are twenty per cent. on the dollar. The lowest amount you can invest is $200 and the highest $5,000.

Yours sincerely,

W. E. GRAHAM.

P.S. Correspondence on this matter through the mails is illegal, and extraordinary precautions must be taken by being order to avoid being arrested for this abuse.

The only way you can reach me is by telegraph. (No letters—remember that.) Simply send a prepaid telegram addressed "W. E. Graham, _____" and say, "Write insurance policy for," then sign your name and address, where a reply will be sure to reach you.

Remember, your address must accompany your name, as the one I now have will be immediately destroyed, to avoid any unforeseen accidents.

Of course no one but ourselves will know its meaning, so have no fear.

IS THE COUNTRY SAFE?

If you don't think the country 's safe, jes' take a look around.

Where the molen vines are runnin' and a-corrin' up the ground;—

Where the cotton bolls are bendin' with their fleecy clouds of white,

An' the tall corn is a-ravin' of its blades from left to right!

If you don't think the country 's safe, jes' stand and look your fill

At the moonlight on the clover an' the moon-light on the still,

Where the candidates are runnin' an' a-kickin' up the dirt,

An' the 'possum an' the 'gator is jes' full enough to bust!

If you don't think the country 's safe—but what's the use to talk?

She's a-go'in on to glory in the fastest kind o' walk!

An' there's peace enough, an' plenty, an' she wears a smilin' face,

As she draws up to the table where the world's a-sayin' grace!

ASHLEY VALLEY.

While traveling over the mountains and deserts, and through canyons and forests during the past few years of my life, endeavoring to reach all the settlements of the Saints in the Rocky Mountains, I have often had reflections like these: Suppose the Saints had not been driven from their homes in Jackson County, Missouri, nor from any of their former places of gathering in Ohio, Missouri and Illinois, how comfortably and conveniently could we not have been located today. A few fertile counties of Missouri—say a scope of country consisting of about fifty miles square, with Jackson County as the centre, could contain and sustain all the Latter-day Saints now existing upon the earth in an organized capacity, provided, that the same heavenly blessings and prosperity followed them which has characterized their movements in these mountains. Were we thus located as a compact community, it would be an easy matter for an Elder with a special mission to visit all the wards and organizations of the Church; but as it now is it takes a man several years of hard and constant travel over some of the worst and most dangerous roads imaginable to get around to all the stakes of Zion, as they are organized at the present time. It seems as if the Saints are being gathered in from the different nations of the earth to scatter again immediately on their arrival at headquarters. This is undoubtedly all right and consistent with the great plan of Jehovah in the consummation of the latter-day dispensation, but the facts in the case are, nevertheless, as I have stated, and they have been deeply impressed upon my mind during this my first visit to Ashley Valley, or the Uintah Stake of Zion, to reach which I have had to cross a wild, uninhabited country, which put me in mind of crossing the plains with teams many years ago.

On Wednesday the third inst., I set out from Heber City, Wasatch county, with a one-horse buggy, accompanied by one lady passenger and a child, for the purpose of visiting the Saints in Uintah Stake. Five miles traveled in a southeasterly direction brought us to the mouth of Daniels Creek canyon, up which, over a rocky and somewhat dangerous road, we continued the journey for nearly twenty miles further, which brought us to the rim of the basin, or the divide, which separates the waters that course their way through Daniels Creek, the Provo river, Utah Lake and the Jordan to the Great Salt Lake from those that reach the Pacific ocean by the way of Strawberry Creek and the Duchesne, Green and Colorado rivers. The summit of this divide is nearly 8000 feet above the level of the sea, and the traveler at this point finds himself surrounded by forests of pine and quakensap, and his views cut off by the surrounding mountains.

From this elevated point the road descends gently for three miles to Strawberry Creek, where we camped for the night, after being overtaken by two teams containing two families who were to be our traveling companions to Ashley. The altitude being so high the night proved cool and the air was so thin that at least the baby part of the company failed to sleep, and instead kept up a regular scream during the night, preventing the rest of us from getting that rest and repose which our mental and physical organization stood in need of.

Thursday, the 4th, we continued our journey down Strawberry Valley, which at this time of the season was dotted with camps, whose occupants were principally rusticated Salt Lakers, who, finding the August sun in the lower valleys hot and the air sultry, had sought a high altitude where the atmosphere is cooler and the mountain breezes purer. There were also a number of Indian wigwams pitched on some of the bends of Strawberry creek. Evidently their occupants were here for the purpose of fishing.

After proceeding down Strawberry Valley for several miles our captain, Brother McCarroll, led the way over a cut-off leading over a very swampy and springy part of the valley, where on several occasions our horses came very near miring down, and our vehicles too; and before getting across we had fully determined to take another road coming back.

Leaving Strawberry valley, which by the way was covered with luxuriant grasses representing a vast meadow, our road led over a succession of steep hills, until finally we looked down from an eminence upon Currant creek, a tributary of Strawberry creek, and the next half hour found us travelling down one of the rockiest and steepest dugways that I ever drove a team over. But good fortune favored us with a safe descent, and next we proceeded to cross several other ridges, until we at last reached Red creek, another tributary putting into Strawberry from the north. There we encamped for the night, having traveled during the day twenty-eight miles.

Friday, 5th. Our forenoon drive consisted of crossing a 23-mile stretch of "bad lands," or desert, without water but abounding with cedar-covered ridges, rocky gulches and dangerous dugways. On one of the latter which was very steep our youngest driver came near emptying the contents of his wagon, consisting of two women and half a dozen children, into the rocky abyss to the left, from which there would have been no hopes of escaping alive. With both man and animals panting with thirst, we finally reached Strawberry Creek, which takes a different course through the mountains to the one mapped out for the road; and here we stopped for noon, expecting trout for dinner, but our captain, who was also our chief hunter and fisherman, had had luck; the fish refused to "hook on," so we made our dinner on bacon and bread, and as the loaf of bread, which my friends in Heber City had kindly furnished me for the trip was all gone by this time, I had to invite myself to partake of the hospitality of my traveling companions. In the afternoon we traveled seven miles over a rough country, including a divide which travelers have chosen to nickname "Nigger Heaven"—a steep, rocky ridge with rocky slopes, crossed by a rocky dugway. It has no resemblance whatever with what is locally known as "Nigger Heaven" in the Salt Lake Theatre. After crossing this ridge we found ourselves on the bank of the Du Chene, where we camped for the night, finding plenty of good feed for animals, and also plenty of water, wood and mosquitoes—the latter I shall never forget. Ordinary mosquitoes generally rest after dark, and thus also allow travelers to rest; but that particular species of mosquitoes who live on the Du Chene seemed only to renew their exertions to get a square meal, after we had made our beds in the beautiful grass. And instead of getting a good night's rest, as we fondly had expected in so lovely a place as this was—a striking contrast to the surrounding "bad lands"—we found ourselves slowly but surely being eaten alive by these unmannerly pests. Finding that we could not sleep in the edge of the willows near the bank of the stream where we had encamped, "took our beds and walked" out into the open meadow; but, alas, the mosquitoes did the same, and out there where the moon shone brightly down upon all, the increased light seemed only to increase the appetite of our tormentors, and we either had to leave ourselves to their mercy or fight for our precious blood which was slowly leaving our own veins and passing into the combination of the insects. Some of my traveling companions partly submitted for the sake of a little sleep, and the consequence was that when daylight came they could not see out of their eyes, the swelling of the eyelids in consequence of mosquito bites having closed up their vision.

Being somewhat combative by nature, I chose to fight and for this purpose walked about the most of the night, realizing, as I always have done, that my corpulence was nothing to brag on and that I positively had neither flesh nor blood to spare for hungry insects; and when daylight at length arrived from beyond the "bad lands" on the eastern horizon, I was the first in camp to announce that fact, and recommended that all hands arise to prepare for another day's journey, and leave Mosquitoland behind.

Consequently, bright and early, on Saturday, the 6th, we broke up our encampment on the Du Chene, crossed on a very dilapidated bridge, ascended a steep hill, crossed a sage brush bench, descended "Blue Hill" (a very steep and, in wet weather, slippery point,) and finally reached Lake's Fork, fifteen miles from our encampment on the Du Chene, when we halted for dinner near an Indian lodge. Against captain tried his luck at fishing, but to no purpose. Perhaps our Lamanite friend who wanted to sell us half a dozen very mail trout for $2 in hard coin, had caught the last fish in the creek. As he refused fifty cents for the lot we again had to contend ourselves with an ordinary dinner of Chicago cured bacon and fresh bread, just cooked by one of the ladies of the company.

The crossing of Lake's Fork on huge boulders instead of a bridge tried our horses and wagon timber to the utmost. I came out with my buggy twisted out of shape, and with one of two iron wheels, but finding that the wheels would still revolve we continued the journey twenty three miles further, (down Lake's Fork, up the Du Chene river and across the desert to Fort Du Chene, which is situated on the Uintah River. There I and my part of the company, who had gone ahead of the rest stopped for the night, with a family belonging to the Church, who were very kind to us, and on account of a storm which was threatening, they would not permit us to sleep in our blankets out-doors, but invited us into an unoccupied log dwelling, where we expected to get a good night's sleep, to make up for the previous night that had been such an eventful one to us because of the mosquitoes, but, oh, how we were again disappointed. Bed-bugs—yes, that is the common name for them—but in this instance they by no means confined themselves to the bed, for they issued forth in almost countless numbers from every crack in the floor and in the logs of the house, the particular spot in the room where we had laid down being the centre of attraction. The mosquitoes, the night previous had announced their approach by their well known "whistling," but the bed bugs marched right on in profound silence without warning whatever, and commenced any their meal in dead earnest before the sleeper could have an opportunity of making a move to defend himself. Sleepy and tired as we were, it was impossible to sleep in such a nest; the contest was uneven; thousands against a few; the majority gained the victory, and kept the battle field; and at midnight we arose from a sleepless bed and started out on the thirty-mile desert which intervenes between Fort Du Chene and the Ashley valley at 1 o'clock a.m. August 7th. But after traveling along several hours in the darkness, over a sandy and rough road, sleep and weariness overcame us to such an extent that we found it unavoidable to stop and lie down on the sand scales and sand bars for a nap, and thus we slept till the dawn of day, when we traveled on. Creeping along with a tired animal, mile after mile, we at length reached the "last ridge," from the top of which a beautiful landscape opened to view, in the shape of an extensive valley abounding with well cultivated fields and orchards and dotted with pretty white farm houses, etc. The contrast between the bad lands, over which we had just come, and this valley could not possibly be greater. And this was Ashley, the Uintah Stake of Zion. An hour later, when we met the genial and cordial welcome of President Samuel R. Benson, we were fast forgetting the experience of the one hundred and fifty-mile desert travel which we had just completed.

ANDREW JENSON.
ASHLEY WARD, Uintah county, Utah,
August 18, 1892.

A PROPOSED amendment to the garbage ordinance, including a scale of prices for hauling, will be a sensible addition to it.

MR. SEARS, SR., EXONERATED.

The board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce held a special meeting last night for the purpose of making a thorough investigation of the alleged conspiracy to betray the chamber to the railway companies.

President John W. Donnellan occupied the chair, while a short-hand reporter reduced all questions and answers to writing.

S. W. SEARS, JR.

admitted his connection with the whole affair, but gave his reasons as being other than financial. He had known E. E. Edwards for several years, yet he knew but little about him. He had first met him in San Francisco. Edwards had succeeded in getting complete control over the witness by reason of obtaining damaging information against his private life. In San Francisco Edwards was known as handsome Jack Ellsworth, and was supposed to be in the employ of the Southern Pacific. He always wore a black suit and silk hat, and is about twenty-five years old. Some three years had passed since witness had seen him, when very unexpectedly he walked in the secretary's office on the 20th of July last, and announced that Mr. Eccles of the Union Pacific had made a proposition to him looking to the securing of certain papers of great value in the contest pending here concerning freight rates. Holding as he did this unexplained power over witness he frightened him into the scheme.

Many questions were asked young Sears and among others this one:

"Was any money paid you?"

"No, but I understood from Edwards that Mr. Eccles had offered to pay $2,500 for certain documents."

At this juncture the witness was told that, while not under oath and his statements purely voluntary, yet he was in no wise bound to state anything that would criminate himself. It seems that early in the morning Mr. Simon, of the transportation committee, under the press of the excitement, made some threats that might cause the young man to hesitate in making a clean breast. However, Mr. Simon withdrew all such remarks and the examination proceeded.

"Where is Edwards?" he was asked.

"I don't know, unless he is in Chicago. He told me to let him hear from me there. I last saw him in Denver."

"Where the papers ever given to Edwards? If so, by whom?"

"Not unless he took copies of them. He had access to these rooms and knew what papers he required. The originals are all here and have never been taken away to my knowledge."

"Do you know of your father having any knowledge of this transaction?"

"Nothing further than this: Edwards told me he had met my father one day in the office and told him about it. But I never talked with him about it, and do not now believe that he had any knowledge of the deal."

"What about that eighteen-page speech and other papers you were to deliver, etc.?"

"I was not to deliver anything. Such papers as were wanted were to be left in a drawer here, and some representative of the railroad would come in and take them. This speech or argument on the case was to be among them when prepared."

President Donnellan here stated that the board had no safe, but at the suggestion of Secretary Sears the latter was permitted to place his own safe in the office just a few days ago.

"Did you show the papers to Edwards?"

"No; he told me he had been in here and read them. He generally dropped in when my father would go to luncheon."

The witness was then shown the bundle of letters now in the possession of P. L. Williams, attorney of the Union Pacific.

"I recognize every one of them. They are in my handwriting and were written at the instigation of Edwards. While there are apparently several hands—back and running—I used both."

The documents were then shown to Heber M. Wells, W. H. Rowe, Mr. Shearman and others, who for many years had been familiar with the handwriting of S. W. Sears, Jr., and they all testified that none of these documents were his production.

"What of the Pucello letter?"

"All the letters were written here. This one was gotten up at the suggestion of Edwards, in Denver. If Mr. Eccles asked me for authority, I was to write this kind of a letter giving it, and it would be followed by one confirming it. Edwards was not in Pucello. He went east."

"Were you to get any money out of this deal?"

"Not a cent. Edwards held me down, and promised if I would do this he would forever keep quiet on that other matter. I was afraid of this man and for that reason only I consented to do the act. I saw him often about noon in this office and would meet him at the Walker, but never spoke to him in the presence of a third person."

"Is there any such man as E. E. Edwards?"

"Upon my honor there is. I knew him in San Francisco, also in St. Louis, in Denver and here. What I say now is the truth. What I say now is done at the suggestion of Mr. Donnellan and Mr. Shearman and my father, all of whom advised me to tell the whole truth."

"Who got the mail for the Chamber of Commerce, and what about these letters?"

"I did, and whenever there were letters for Edwards I gave them to him, up to the time we got a box. I never visited his room. One letter sent him had a postoffice order in it, but I knew it was not for him, so I enclosed it and put it back in the general delivery. No such letter as the one said to have been picked out of the waste-basket was ever received, by me. These letters were simply 'built up' and were all made here."

"Did you ever pass as Edwards?"

"No, I never did, nor as any other assumed person."

"What were you to do with the money coming from Eccles?"

"I was to forward it to Edwards at Chicago to the general delivery."

"What did you tell Eccles about your father's chance to sell out in a similar case?"

"When I went to his office I said—

"Of course you spoke to Edwards"—to which he replied—"I never saw Edwards."

"I was much astonished at this and in speaking of the amount may have said my father once had a chance to sell out in a similar case for $75,000, but don't recall it. I never saw Edwards with anyone, except a strange woman, while he was here."

P. L. Williams—The railway people have all along supposed Edwards to be a person and upon this theory the detectives have been working. Young Sears was shadowed for the purpose of finding him, as we desired to get at the person who was the author of this base proposal. We did not think young Sears was the man.

Mr. Simon—We want to get at the truth, and I'll give $100 to help find him.

S. W. Sears, Jr.—Edwards knew what he wanted and picked out the special sheets. Everything needed by the railway was to be placed where they could be reached. As to the so-called blind or decoy letter, I never saw it.

In reply to a question by Mr. Wells young Sears expressed his willingness to write or wire a letter to Edwards or use any means of identifying the mysterious personage.

When asked if he had anything to say, Sears, Jr., replied:

"All I can say is, I have no statement to make. I know no more about this than anyone of the directors—never saw any of these letters and had no intimation of the matter until it was in print, and never told any one about it."

On motion the board then went into executive session.

MR. SEARS EXONERATED.

When the doors of the executive session were opened the following resolutions had been adopted on motion of Fred Simon, seconded by S. W. Morrison:

Resolved, That we, the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce and members of the transportation bureau, in view of the evidence submitted to us and after having duly considered the same, extend to Septimus W. Sears, Sen., secretary of the Chamber of Commerce and commissioner of the transportation bureau, a vote of confidence for the work carried on by him as such secretary and commissioner and tender him our support and sympathy, and pledge ourselves to continue our assistance and support in the adjustment of the grievances of the people of this city and Territory against the railway companies to a final issue.

The following statement can be fully relied upon and appears to throw some light on the mystery about the man Edwards:

THE MYSTERIOUS VISITOR.

"For nearly eighteen months I have been in the habit of calling daily at the office of the County Clerk for items for publication. Some time in May or June last, the Chief Editor of the DESERET NEWS suggested that I had better call at the Chamber of Commerce on my way from or to the County Court, and obtain any items Secretary Sears might have for publication. I did so. My time of visiting the Chamber was invariably between 1 and 2 p.m. I had been going for some weeks and had never met Mr. Sears, Sr., and as I did not get some items which other papers had I concluded Mr. Sears, Jr., was not fully conversant with the details of the office. One day I asked young Sears what his father's office hours were. He told me that his dinner hour was from 1 to 2 invariably; and that I would in future get what there was for publication."

"In the early part of July I noticed a young man in the office with S. W. Sears, Jr., who made himself so much at home that I concluded he was in some official way connected with the Chamber of Commerce. For a full week in succession I noticed this person in the office every day from 1 to 2 p.m. Then I called one day and the person was absent. I asked young Sears who his friend was. He told me he was a young man recently from the Pacific coast; that he was a railroad man expecting employment of some kind in Salt Lake. I asked several questions in relation to his freedom in the office, but young Sears replied by saying this man was a particular friend."

"Next day on my visit I found the Pacific coast man again in the office. I entered into conversation with him without an introduction. He told me he worked on a railroad in California; that he had also worked in railroad offices in Chicago. He named the roads, with one of which I was very familiar. He knew all the officials, and all the prominent railroad men of Illinois."

"During the whole month of July he was in the office almost every day during my visit between one and two. One day it was near two p.m. when I called at the office, and on my departure he accompanied me, walking with me as far as the postoffice. I visited one day when he was absent, and I made him the subject of a conversation with young Sears. I told the young man that his friend seemed to be rather a queer character, but Sears championed him by saying that he was all right, except in the matter of drink, for which he had a particular predilection. Sears told me of several places which he had visited in company with the Pacific coast man. I remember distinctly telling Sears that if he kept on associating with this person he would find himself some morning in jail or in the pen."

"I remember meeting this person as late as the second week in August, but since I have not seen him I asked young Sears what became of him, and he replied that he had not seen him for a week, and wanted to see him badly on business."

"As near as I can remember, this young man appeared 27 or 28 years of age, of slender build, and rather neatly dressed in dark, well-fitting clothes. He wore a mustache of a rather dark brown color, twisted a little at the ends. He had a somewhat pleasing appearance, but his eyes gave the impression of a scowl. What kind of hat he wore I can not now remember, except that I am sure it was a hard, dark hat.

"I might mention that I made some remarks about this person to Mr. A. C. Ivins of the Times, who visited the Chamber sometimes in company with me, and I think that gentleman will also remember the visitor who is here spoken of. DANIEL J. BROWNE, DESERT NEWS."

AGAINST HOME INDUSTRY.

Dear Sir:—Feeling sure that you at least are friendly to our homes and home interest, I am impelled to an appeal to you to make public a danger that I think will prove a serious loss if not a lasting disgrace to our community. In church and out of it you have persistently advocated home industry in whatever guise it presents itself. What then can be your thoughts and that of your readers in the action taken yesterday by the board of public works regarding the awarding of a contract involving an immense amount of money to people who are wholly without other interests in this Territory than the profit they will make out of our hard-earned money.

The opening of the bids revealed the fact that we have a local firm of contractors who appear to show that they are in every way able and worthy to receive the award. Although their bid was some thirty thousand dollars lower than the highest bidder and thirteen thousand lower than the next it was still unfortunately four thousand higher than the wealthy and powerful Barber Paving Company, to whom the contract was given; and this paltry amount which scores of our citizens would willingly donate to make good must be the excuse for sending a hundred thousand dollars entirely out of our chance of ever handling again. More than this, with what kind of satisfaction can we work over our benches, our desks and our tools, earning hardily the special tax we are compelled to pay, and see in our mind's eye hundreds of laborers in far away Trinidad, South America, digging up asphaltum that is to go to New York for refining, and then comes here for us to walk and drive on. This in the face of the proven fact that we have a street in this city that has been constructed entirely of Utah material by home contractors and home labor that has passed the examination of its owners, and been accepted and paid for willingly by the city authorities. More than this the people who own this street referred to, with some sixty or seventy others who will have to pay for this present award, have begged the city authorities by petition to give Utah a chance by adopting this material in all future road making and have signified their willingness to pay for it.

One year ago when State street was to be paved a local bidder offered to do this work for some $2000 less than would any one else. I am told their bid was rejected for the reason their material was not known and the city did not wish to experiment with the people's money. Since that time, and to overcome this objection these local paving have expended many thousands of dollars in experimental work, improvement of machinery, mine and plant, have executed to the avowed satisfaction of the city's engineer and other authorities, one whole block—besides many thousand feet of sidewalks—have convinced the citizens generally that they have and can do good work, and yet the tables are turned against them. The former objection must be removed. Their material is proven and still because they are asking a trifle more this time, we who have to pay for it must submit to an experiment after all; for while it is known that the Barber company have done good work many times we also know a great deal of it has been condemned in other cities. If we are met by the argument that their work must ultimately be made good under their bond, can we not answer that this applies with equal force to the home contractors.

In a word, must we suffer this injustice without protest. For one, had I ten thousand voices, they should be heard loudly against this folly. I feel ashamed and mortified that greater considerations and greater charity is not bestowed at home.

JAS. C. WATSON.

THE HAWAIIAN COLONY.

By invitation of President H. H. Cluff and the Hawaiian Saints, quite a number of visitors attended the Pioneer day celebration at Iosepa. Leaving this city Friday, August 26th, part of the company went through in conveyance, the remainder taking the train to Garfield Beach, where they found vehicles from Iosepa awaiting them. A pleasant drive of twelve miles brought the party to Grantsville, where they enjoyed the hospitality of the good people of that place. Here the company was augmented by friends from Tooele and the Grantsville brass band, making quite a big train. The trip from Grantsville to Iosepa, thirty-five miles, was made in about four hours, and the visitors arrived at the last named place at 9:30 p.m. The road into Iosepa for the last two miles was lit up by brilliant torches. On the near approach of the party fireworks were let off, the grounds were lighted with Chinese lanterns, and everything presented an appearance of welcome, gladdening the hearts of all and causing them to forget the dust of the thirty miles' ride.

While supper was being partaken of the Glee Club and Mandolin and Guitlar Club regaled them with vocal and instrumental music, occasionally interspersed with music from the brass band.

The Mandolin and Guitlar Club is composed of young Hawaiians who were tastefully uniformed, as also were the young ladies of the Glee Club. The latter wore caps, the bands of which were made of peacock feathers; the crown was composed of red, white and blue bunting. They were attired in white waists and their skirts were made of bunting. With their dark complexions this formed a very pretty contrast and pleasing effect. The training of the performers has been chiefly undertaken by Brother Nahie, a native Hawaiian.

On the morning of the 27th the people were aroused by the firing of a salute, and at 10 a. m. all assembled under the shade of the trees, where seats and a platform had been arranged. The exercises opened with music by the band and singing by the choir. The assembly was then called to order by Brothers H. H. Cluff, Peter Keakalohoua the chaplain of the day, offered prayer. There were present on the stand President Joseph F. Smith, Hon. John T. Caine, President W. W. Cluff of Summit Stake, President H. S. Gowans and Charles L. Anderson of Tooele Stake, Enoch Farr of Ogden, W. H. Branch, Coalville; Albert W. Davis, Edward W. Richards, Robert B. Taylor, Henry P. Richards, Elihu Barrell and R. G. Lambert, many of whom were accompanied by ladies. There were also a goodly number of other visitors from Salt Lake City and Tooele valley. Addresses were delivered by President Joseph F. Smith and Hon. John T. Caine, W. W. Cluff, H. P. Richards and H. S. Gowans. These were interspersed with vocal and instrumental music. The assembly was dismissed with the benediction. An adjournment was then made to the bowery, where a regular Hawaiian feast was prepared. This was partaken of with a relish by the initiated, but the "po" was too much for the novice.

At 4 p. m. all again assembled and there were addresses by E. Farr, W. H. Branch and Albert W. Davis, with more singing by the Sunday school choir, Glee Club and music by the Grantsville band and the Mandolin and Guitlar club.

At 8 p. m. the people gathered at a concert by the clubs and the Hawaiian Saints. At this considerable talent was displayed and all were entertained with the portrayal of ancient Hawaiian customs. During an interval in the concert Brother R. G. Lambert made a few remarks.

At ten a. m. Sunday morning the people met for religious services. After singing by the choir, Elder W. H. Branch offered prayer. The sacrament was administered, and President Joseph F. Smith addressed the Saints, giving them some excellent counsel in their every day duties of life, and exhorting them to greater spiritual efforts. The following then spoke briefly: R. B. Taylor, H. P. Richards, W. W. Cluff, R. G. Lambert, W. H. Branch, H. H. Cluff, and the meeting was dismissed with benediction by Elihu Barrell.

The occasion was one that will not soon be forgotten by the Hawaiian Saints, or the visitors; the kindly spirit which was manifested will long be remembered.

Shortly after noon the visitors left on their return home, some of them making the thirty miles to Grantsville in buggies in three hours. The commendable manner in which things were arranged and carried out is due to President H. H. Cluff and S. E. Woolley and the Hawaiian Saints.

The place looks to be in a prosperous condition and the people contented and united and determined to make that portion of the desert "blossom as the rose."

OPPORTUNE SUGGESTIONS.

These are days that try men's souls if they have any—at least these are times that will prove whether we have proper local feeling, natural patriotism, love of home and home interests. The next few days will show whether all of our Chamber of Commerce talks, the effort of our industrial journals, our Territorial fairs, our home talks by real estate men about houses for building industries our way, etc., meant nuncumb, or whether our citizens and their representatives in the City Council really have our best interests at heart. The board of public works, in their report to the Council on Tuesday night say they have awarded a contract for street paving, amounting to $150,000 to the Barber Asphalt Co. of New York, and have the gall to say that "It is the unanimous opinion of this board that it was to the best interests of the city that the Barber bid be accepted, as it is an old and experienced company, etc. The board had in their possession other bids, one of which was from a firm well known in this city, responsible business men who have already done public work for the city in an acceptable manner, and offered in manner of proof as to their capacity and ability to handle this job. There is no complaint about the bonds of these gentlemen, and so far as the board have made it public, no reason for their not getting the job, other than that their bid was a trifle higher than the New York people. There was a still lower bid than the one they chose to accept in the name of Ryan and Griffin. The board, however, for reasons they do not care to make plain, pass over this lowest bid and accept the next. Why? If it is within their province to pass over the lowest bid, why not the others, until they come to one that suits them? And may we not suppose that this is what they did do, and that for insupportable reasons the Barber bid appeared to them best? Are they correct in their opinion that the best interests of the city are served in awarding a contract that will carry one hundred thousand dollars out of the city that could be avoided? Certainly not, and it is the citizens' duty to loudly protest against any such misinterpretation of their wishes. I know full well that a big majority of the owners who subscribe to the cost of this work are willing to give preference to home material. In fact, they have begged the Council to provide home material for them. Over 50 per cent. of the actual abutters who are thus taxed have signified their willingness to use Utah paving, provided the city engineer will pass it as all right. The Utah product has stood the test, the engineer has carefully scrutinized and expressed his preference for it. The city's inspector has also pronounced unmistakably in its favor. Richards' street stands as a monument of strength in favor of Utah stuff and the enterprise of our citizen contractors. The Messrs. Richards who own and who paid for the paving of this street are pleased with it, and fully endorse its being used elsewhere in their interests. If we are afraid that the Utah contractors cannot make good their promise of good and speedy work, does not their bond protect us against any possibility of loss? As a matter of business fact, are we any more sure of being swindled by the Utah than by the New York pavers? Have we not some good reason for placing most confidence in our own citizens, whom we know, whom we now trust, and whom we can watch? And is it not to our interests in every possible case to give this work to people who we know will spend both principal and profit right at home? In my opinion people are taking too little interest in this most important matter. If, by our apathy, we fail to arouse the Councilmen Friday night to a fulness of their duties to home interests, you will hear hundreds of us "cussing" and kicking ourselves for this negligence, when we see Trinidad pitch being put down, and the Assessor crowds us for money which we can never, never hope to see again. It must be terribly discouraging to our local capital to see so little interest taken in its safe investment. It must be a complete block to any capital that may be on the eve of investment in any industrial enterprise here. Is it possible that any one would start an industry in the face of such a throttling of one we have? I have invested all I have in an endeavor to build up Utah. I have religiously trained my family to work in home interests. I have prayed for, hoped for, worked for its advancement. Such disaster as now threatens us makes me feel like I ought to convert all my cash before ruin comes and flee the country. Up, everybody, and show you have no sympathy in this attempt to block home manufacture.

Yours truly,

WILLIAM FULLER.

UTAH AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Your journal has a very extensive circulation throughout Utah. For this reason I ask the favor of a notice in its columns. As chief of the department of mining and arcology, I would ask the inhabitants of our great and prosperous Territory to give every assistance to the work which we have now in hand of worthily representing Utah at the World's great exhibit in Chicago 1893. Our resources are almost unlimited along with the blessings of a climate which so varies that we can in Utah raise almost everything which can be produced in the temperate and semi-tropical climates. We have also the most varied mineral field of any State in the American Union, inasmuch as we have every mineral from gold to molybdenite. It is for this reason that I desire a perfect representation of our minerals and ores that I call public attention.

We want ores of gold, silver, lead, copper, zinc, antimony, tin, bismuth, aluminum, nickel, manganese, tellurium, quicksilver, iron, sulphur, salt, soda, nitrate of potash, coal, coal shale, mineral oil, crockery, mica, magnesite, hornblende, lake, steatite, koolin, fireclay, natural cement, slate, limestone, granite, jasper, onyx, serpentine, marble, volcanic tuff, lava, gneiss, meteoric iron ores, guano, also gems and precious stones in their uncut state, such as ruby, topaz, emerald, garnet, amethyst, turquoise, malachite, jade, chalcedony, moss agates, rock crystal and wood opal.

There exist in our Territory relics and remains of a race which occupied the land anterior to the Indians found here by the pioneers of 1847-49-50. They seem to have been quite numerous in the great chain of valleys now settled by the present population. They dwelt here in a remote period of the world's history and led a half agricultural, half nomadic life, and of this extinct people, together with the present Indian, we desire to gather together an interesting collection of antiquities.

Those who are amongst the numerous readers of the DESERT NEWS can assist the commission a great deal if they will prepare samples from any mineral deposits they may possess, no matter of what class, so that time may be saved to the collectors when they reach the neighborhood, and I would ask the assistance of those in whose locality there may exist any mound or cliff dwellings, that they give all information and assistance in their power to the commissioner so that of this class of material a fine exhibit may be made by our Territory. The entire collection which will thus be drawn together will become the property of the State and after the great World's Fair at Chicago, the entire lot of ores, minerals and antiquities will be placed in the halls of the Utah University, there to remain the property of the people forever.

Not only do we desire prehistoric relics, but all such as appertain to our own times, all books and newspapers printed in the early days of white settlement in Utah, the implements of first use in agriculture, hunting knives of domestic make, pistols and guns that were made here between the years 1850 and 1870, the early product of our looms, all early work of art in painting, music, sculpture, or any of the industrial arts. There was a local coinage of gold in Utah many years ago, and of this coinage we desire specimens, together with those of every class of paper money or scrip issued during our history. We also want a copy of every book ever issued upon Utah or its people and by its people, the poems of Miss Snow, Mrs. Carmichael, Mrs. Crozier, and many other writers in verse, as well as history, we must gather together for our exhibit.

Having taken this work in hand, it behoves us as the inhabitants of a rich and prosperous commonwealth to do all in our power that will add to the success of the undertaking. This is a work that, if properly carried out, will reflect honor upon the mouldering dead that live in every valley and mining camp from Logan to St. George. It will do credit to the living generation and reflect a blessing upon the generations yet unborn. Therefore, my fellow-citizens, as your servant in the work of collecting Utah's resources for the great exhibit, I ask your help in hastening forward the work to a successful end.

All letters of information or inquiry may be sent to the office of the World's Fair commission at Salt Lake City, or to me personally at 549 Twenty-fifth street, Ogden, Utah.

DON MAGUIRE,

Chief of the departments of mining and arcology, Utah World's Fair Ex.

THE COLLAPSE OF THE SENSATION

No local topic of the times has excited more interest of late than the Chamber of Commerce scandal that was sprung upon the public on Monday. The salient points in the attempted deal with the Union Pacific railroad company, by which certain documents, which gave away the arguments and evidence relied upon by the Chamber of Commerce in its suit against the railroad, were to be turned over to the Union Pacific officers for a valuable consideration, were given to our readers last evening.

As we then informed the public, the matter was in the hands of the Board of Directors of the Chamber of Commerce, and the question of the purported connection of Secretary Sears was to be thoroughly examined. We advised a suspension of judgment until both sides of the affair were fully brought to light. We also expressed the opinion that the case, if it goes, notwithstanding this sensation, had been created, and that while Mr. Sears had received a severe blow in the conduct of his son, it would be shown that his own course had been incompatible with the idea that he would betray the Chamber of Commerce, or do anything to damage the cause to which he had devoted his energies and experience so earnestly.

Particulars of the meeting held on Monday evening, at which the Board Directors and the Transportation Bureau of the Chamber were present, will be found in another part of this paper. They show that we were correct in our statement and our opinion. Those gentlemen fully and completely exonerated Secretary Sears from the suspicion that came upon him by a local morning paper, and expressed their full confidence in his integrity. They also declared their intention of continuing the case which he is conducting until a satisfactory termination is reached.

The impression is sought to be conveyed that the third party, whom young Sears has represented to have a hold upon him and to have dictated some of the letters written, is a myth. There may be no such man as "E. E. Edwards," or that may be one of the aliases by which a man known to be an associate of young Sears has figured. But that there has been a person answering to the description he gives of Edwards, who has visited him almost daily in his father's office when the latter was absent, is certain. The statement of an attaché of the DESERET NEWS to this effect will be found on another page.

We believe this man to be the associate of young Sears in this now exploded scheme. We believe he was employed to do the work which he attempted. We believe that he has been sent out of the way. We believe that the real starting point of this conspiracy has not yet been disclosed. We believe that if this man can be found, and induced to tell the truth, something still more sensational than that which startled the town on Monday will cause a vigorous shaking up in certain quarters.

An idea is entertained that the disclosures that have been made will prejudice the case against the railroad. That is not well founded. They can have no such effect. A postponement has been agreed upon to meet the desires of a number of shippers. Some of the gentlemen who signed the request for postponement on the ground that they were not satisfied with the hands in which the case was placed, are now among the signers of the resolution endorsing Mr. Sears, expressing confidence in his course, and pledging their assistance in the conduct of the case.

It should be understood that the suit has not been planted by the shippers who have moved for a postponement, and for a change of place of trial. It has been entered by the Chamber of Commerce. That body, through the Transportation Bureau, is the complainant against the railroad. It is claimed that at the present freight rates, Utah loses from one to two millions of dollars annually, over and above what is reasonable and just. Mr. Sears gained a case against the railroads of a similar character as it affected California. The Chamber thinks he has at least an equally strong case now. If it is so, it concerns not only the business firms throughout the Territory but all the people of Utah, who are the real financial sufferers, because the freight charges form part of the cost which they have to pay for all the goods they purchase, besides the merchants' profits that are added.

So that the Chamber of Commerce, not merely a few of the business firms, will determine whether this case is to be continued. That we understand will depend upon the terms which will be made with the railroad companies. If they prove satisfactory within the sixty days' limit—to the Transportation Bureau and Chamber of Commerce, the suit will come to an end; if not, not. That is the situation.

We should think the railroad companies will find it to their interest to make reasonable terms, by which we mean reasonable rates, and so make friends instead of litigants of the people of Utah, and prevent all those unpleasant complications and consequences which the intended investigation will encounter.

In any event this episode will not affect the result. Secretary Sears has discharged his son as his assistant, he remains in his own position as Secretary, and he has his argument and his evidence ready if the case comes to a trial. We hope the matter will be amicably settled "out of court."

PUBLIC attention in this country seems to be about equally divided between Sullivan and Corbett, and cholera. The germs of it is prize-fighting malady seem to be spreading rapidly.

THAT WRETCHED GARBAGE ORDINANCE.

THE City Council wrestled with the garbage ordinance again on Tuesday evening and had a hard time of it. Several improvements have been made on the original document, but it is still very faulty and the Council wisely laid the matter over for further consideration. One provision of the ordinance, as it now stands, we think is inequitable and would not stand a judicial test. It is sure to be contested if passed in its present form.

It provides in section ten for the removal of garbage and ashes within the business district—which has been very properly cut down in area—at the expense of the city, while in all other districts it is to be removed at the expense of the owner, agent or occupant. This is special legislation, and it is in favor of a class more able to bear the expense than the classes which are required to bear the burden.

If the general funds of the city are to be expended for the removal of refuse in one district, they will have to bear the expense for its removal in other districts. If the people of one municipal ward are required to pay for the removal of refuse matter, the people of all the other wards must be subject to the same requirement. The public money, contributed by all the taxpayers, must not be expended for special privileges to a favored few.

Comparing sections three and five, it appears that no house slops can be disposed of or deposited, except in some vessel, free from leakage, outside the building. It is to be emptied once a week in summer and two weeks in winter, and all garbage is to be put in the same vessel. If that does not create a far greater nuisance and much more ill-health than the ordinance is intended to remedy, we fail to understand its significance.

Then, ashes and "non-combustible rubbish" must not be deposited in the same vessel with garbage—why, does not appear—but the inference is that combustible rubbish may go with the garbage.

There are other crudities and contradictions still left in the bill, although it has been out and patched and modified greatly. We suggest that a competent attorney or other person who understands plain English and simple legal principles, be employed to draft a new bill. The hand that fixed up the original piece of imbecility is not out for the work. The crafts of ordinances presented to the City Council of late display incapacity and folly that are pitiable to behold, and humiliating to people who have respect for our municipality.

THE TEACHER THE CAUSE OF OF.

THE present Emperor of Germany is noted for his love of war and whisky. On the whole this is not a German characteristic. Perhaps the following from the London (England) World will explain how William came by his belligerency and conviviality:

"Sidney O'Donne, the adventurous Irishman and ex-captain of the Prussian army who was sentenced at Berlin the other day to three years' imprisonment for making false charges of treason and perjury against the military attaché to the German Embassy in Paris, can only be compared in respect of the boldness and variety of his career to his illustrious countryman Barry Lyndon, who similarly figured at the court, as well as in the camps, of Frederick the Great.

"What was the precise Hibernian origin of this latter-day Lyndon is not so clear, history having only become acquainted with him after he had somehow procured a commission in the Prussian army; but being gifted in a high degree with that glibness of tongue and insinuating address which are at once the glory and the danger of his Celtic compatriots, he managed to ingratiate himself to such an extent with the Crown Princess, an indiscriminating devotee of everything British or Irish, that he was actually appointed a kind of military tutor to her eldest son, Prince William, now the German Emperor. The French war, in which he took part, brought him the rank of captain, but it also brought him nine months' fortress confinement for the military crime of plundering in an enemy's country, and now his downward career was swift."

ELECTION OF COUNTY SUPERINTENDENTS.

The following question has been put to the DESERET NEWS:

"Can the County Superintendents of District Schools hold over, or are they to be elected at the election in November next?"

We presume this query arises from the apparent conflict between the law on elections of March 10, 1892, and the school law of the same date. The first named provides:

"That on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1892, and biennially thereafter, a general election shall be held throughout the Territory for the election of Territorial, county and precinct officers, who by law are or may be made elective, and all such officers so elected shall qualify and enter upon the duties of their respective offices on the first day of January next succeeding their election, and continue in office for two years, and until their successors are duly elected and qualified."

This would convey the idea that county superintendents of district schools are to be elected in November of this year, because they are county officers and are made by law elective. But the school law, approved on the same day as the general election law, makes this special enactment:

"At the general election for the year 1893, and biennially thereafter, there shall be elected for each county in this Territory a County Superintendent of District Schools, who shall be a registered voter therein, and whose term of office shall be two years and until his successor is elected and qualified."

In addition to this, section 147 of the same law provides that:

"The terms of office of all county superintendents now in office are hereby continued until the expiration of the full terms of office for which they were elected have expired."

Taking all these provisions together, we are of the opinion that the county superintendents of district schools hold over until 1893, and that there will be no election for those officers in 1892, unless there were some counties in which there was no election of county superintendent in 1891, in which case the term would expire this year. We believe, however, that all the counties elected superintendents last year, and if so the present incumbents will hold their office until their successors are elected and qualified in 1893.

THE REASON FOR IT.

AN eastern gentleman who has several times visited Utah, writes thus to an acquaintance in this city:

"I would like to see you and your Mormon friends, that I might have a good religious talk. It always strengthens me. Here it almost seems as if I were alone, like a lost sheep. I always feel an inward power or strength whenever I defend the Mormon faith. Where that inward power comes from I do not know, unless it be from a higher source. I am called a Mormon not only by my own church associates, but I receive letters from friends in which they state that they infer I am a Mormon."

Such expressions from persons not identified with the Church, but who have defended its doctrine and people, have been exceedingly common. Those who have thus acted have felt an influence which they were unable to account for, not being aware that in defending the truth they have been aided and sustained by the Spirit of Truth, which responds to the individual effort. It is a degree of that influence which fortifies the Saints to endure hardships, contumely and wrong, enabling them to endure when they would otherwise falter. People not connected with the Church who have had this experience do not always maintain their position in defending the doctrine of the Gospel as embraced in the faith of the Saints. On the contrary, it is probable that most of them turn the other way, because they draw the fire of persecution upon them and are not fully equipped for standing against it. After they recede they often become enemies, because the degree of the Spirit of Truth which they formerly possessed is diminished, in consequence of repelling the light. The strength and power spoken of by the gentleman whose letter is quoted is from a "higher source," and his expression reminds us of a statement made by a veteran of the Church who was on familiar terms with the Prophet Joseph Smith. The latter said to him: "I will give you a key of power. Always sustain and defend the truth and God will sustain you." The man to whom these words were addressed made the suggestion embodied in them the rule of his life, and it never failed him.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

THE Springfield (Mass.) Republican, an influential independent paper, in reviewing the political situation, says, that with September will open the storm of which the midsummer dullness is the foregoing calm. Elections are coming off in Maine and Vermont a few days hence, and politicians are awaiting the results in these States, as an indication of what way the northern pulse beats.

The paper referred to is of opinion that the fight in the pending campaign will be sharp and bitter. The Sulkers on both sides are few, and in the heat of the battle they will be more scarce. On the Republican side Quay, Platt & d Blaine will not be conspicuous at headquarters, but they will nevertheless be active workers in the rank and file. Blaine will be heard from in due time both by tongue and pen, while Quay and Platt will work with old time vigor.

On the Democratic side there is no longer any question as to the fidelity of Tammany. Mr. Cleveland in his Madison Square speech dwelt strongly on the tariff and on the "force bill," and it is evident that both will be made leading issues in the campaign by his party.

The Republicans, though always in their advocacy of protective tariffs, contend that the "force bill," is not and cannot be made an issue of this campaign.

In relation to silver, the managers of both sides seem to maintain a masterly inactivity, which almost gives the idea of a mutual understanding that it be made purely subordinate.

So far, the question of foreign relations has not been ventilated to any great extent. The administration of Mr. Blaine in this line has been successful, and Democrats know that a great deal of capital can not be made out of it in their interest.

The Republican, however, does not ignore the People's party as a factor in the campaign. In the West and South its influence cannot be sneered at. Developments are in progress there which show that old traditions are no longer party shibboleths.

Chairman Carter and Chairman Harry are both puzzled as to the attitude of the People's party, though they profess to regard it with indifference. There is no doubt that silver is a burning question in the West and South, and the adherence of the People's party to free coinage complicates the contest in both regions, while east of the Mississippi and north of the Tennessee the fight will be on old party lines.

SCHOOL TEACHERS AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

ONE of the most serious obstacles in the way of a visit to the World's Fair will be the doubt about findingsuitable accommodations at anything like a reasonable price. This difficulty will be removed from the path of lady school teachers by a plan devised by Mrs. Solomon Thatcher, Jr., of Chicago, who visits this city a short time ago and spoke in the Tabernacle. We made brief allusion to her plan recently but we find the following giving further details, in the Chicago Herald, and therefore clip it for the benefit of Utah teachers who contemplate going to the Fair:

"Mrs. Solomon Thatcher, who originated the plan of utilizing a large number of school houses in Chicago as dormitories for school teachers who will visit the exposition, has been given charge of the buildings generously tendered by the board of education for this purpose. Mrs. Palmer has selected Mrs. Thatcher to supervise these buildings in consideration of the interest she has displayed in the project. Mrs. Thatcher has already developed a plan for the management of these buildings that meets the approval of the city board of education. The school buildings have been tendered to the board of lady managers for use as dormitories with the understanding that they will be insured, seats removed and replaced and the buildings restored to their previous condition without any expense to the city. For the observance of these conditions a large bond is exacted by their contract. In addition to these expenses the ladies having this work in charge will be compelled to keep the buildings clean and fit the rooms up with cots, mattresses and toilet facilities. It is the desire of the lady managers to place these buildings at the disposal of woman teachers of small salaries who could not otherwise attend the exposition. They will charge but 25 cents a day for lodging, and efforts will be made to secure board in close proximity to the schoolhouses at reasonable rates. The buildings selected for dormitories will be chosen with reference to their convenient location to the exposition grounds. Some of them will be within walking distance of the fair, while all of them will be near car lines leading to the exposition. Mrs. Thatcher proposes to issue certificates to teachers for $1. Each certificate will entitle the holder to a night in one of the dormitories for 25 cents a night for a term not to exceed two weeks. That will be the limit unless vacancies exist, when arrangements can be made for staying in the dormitories for a longer time. One room in each building will be fitted up for a reading and writing room, where teachers can assemble in the evening and discuss matters of general interest. Each building is expected to accommodate from 150 to 200 persons, and it is believed that the membership fee of $1 will pay all the expenses of keeping the building in order, insurance, gas, water etc.

Mrs. Thatcher hopes to secure the parochial schools of the Catholic church for use of parochial teachers during the Fair. She also has hopes of getting the lecture rooms in churches to be used as dormitories for ministers.

A HUGE TRUST TO BE INVESTIGATED

It is not all smooth sailing with the Reading anthracite coal combine at present. On the 25th inst., the Attorney-General of New Jersey obtained an injunction from Chancellor McGill, at Trenton, prohibiting the Port Reading Company from operating the Central Railroad Company, and so on in the matter of all the roads in the syndicate. The object sought by the New Jersey officials is to destroy the "trust" void "on the ground of public policy in that it tends to create a monopoly of anthracite coal trade in the State, and thereby increase its price to the people."

This vast combination was inaugurated several months ago. At first only three corporations joined, and they did it under a system of leasing so as to disguise the public mind of the idea of a trust. So on after another road came into the combine, and about two weeks ago all the roads interested in the anthracite coal trade entered the combination. A few of the Eastern papers waged war from the first against the monopoly. The officials of Pennsylvania and New York also took some cognizance of the movement, but nothing was done.

New Jersey has now taken the matter up, and if the huge monopoly cannot be subverted, its objects and aims will at least be ventilated in the courts, and the public will see whether it was a "trust" or a co-operative project. This combine has secured the services of the ablest jurors and legislators in the United States. It has in its employ men whose salaries will quadruple that of the President of the United States. It has a reserve fund for legislative work reaching into millions.

A NEW REMEDY FOR SEA SICKNESS.

DR. GRAILY HEWITT, an English professor, claims to have made a curious discovery. While dressing recently in front of a wardrobe door mirror which moved slightly he was troubled with sensations akin to sea sickness. This led him to make further experiments, and he found that he was on the verge of a great discovery—the cause of sea sickness. He had a mirror six feet by four constructed, and suspended in such a way that it was made to oscillate as if on board a ship. He placed several subjects in front of this and they were all affected with seasickness. Even the carpenter, who fixed the mirror in position complained of giddiness while in front of the awaying glass.

The doctor claims that sea sickness is all in the eye. When one is aboard of a ship and feels that terrible feeling coming on him which all victims of the malady know so well, he has only to look at some fixed object away in the heavens, or better still, bandage his eyes and all will be well. He recommends bandaging the eyes before going aboard and keeping them so until the stomach is all right, and able to relish ship rations. The question now arises are blind men sick when they go to sea. The professor thinks they may suffer a little, but he is confident that bandaging the eyes will ameliorate the malady, if it does not completely avert it.

Everybody who has traveled on the ocean and is liable to sea sickness knows that the doctor's ideas are so much rubbish. No matter on what the victim fixes his gaze, if he keeps his eyes shut or staring wide open, or whether he is enveloped in darkness or in full blaze of day, the motion of the vessel will make him wish he was ashore.

TO LIMIT THE COLORED VOTE.

A FRESH feature in politics is being operated in Mississippi. The new constitution adopted by that State provides as a qualification necessary to the exercise of the franchise, that the citizen shall be able to read and write the English language. Those who have failed to pay a poll tax are also excluded from voting. There is, however, a limitation in the educational clause to the effect that illiterate persons who are able to explain a portion of the constitution of the State when read to them shall be deemed eligible to vote. This qualifying provision holds good until 1895, by which time it is presumed that all who value education and the voting privilege as they ought to be estimated will have equipped themselves for the franchise.

The recent registration was the first conducted under the new conditions. It exhibits some interesting features. The last census showed that there were in the State 157,205 colored men over the age of twenty-one years, and 110,000 white men. All of these could vote under the former constitution and election laws. The books of the registration lately completed show a grand total of electors of both races who took the necessary steps to exercise the franchise of 75,742. Only 8615 of these are of African descent, while 65,127 are white.

The effect of this new condition is to practically exclude from politics the majority race in Mississippi. Unless ample opportunities are provided for the education of the people at large, irrespective of race or color, it will appear as if the new legislation was enacted for the express purpose of keeping the colored people in a perpetual condition of political subjugation.

AN ALLEGED POLITICAL MURDER.

CALIFORNIA is intensely excited over what is supposed to be a political homicide. The subject has been briefly alluded to in recent press dispatches. Louis B. McWhirter, a lawyer and journalist, of Fresno, was called out into the back yard of his residence at 3 o'clock on the morning of Monday last, and there murdered. In politics McWhirter was a Democrat, but he violently opposed certain schemes projected by the leaders of his party. He did this so effectively and so aggressively that the leaders found they could not carry their plans into practice while McWhirter combated them. Finding that he could not be brought to their side by either threats or persuasion, by promises of lucre or office, they resolved to "remove" him altogether. This was done as related above.

It should be stated that this is the account given by the Republican party organ, while the Democrats contend that the murder was the result of one of those personal quarrels which the rivalry of faction leaders generate. Future investigations will doubtless disclose the real cause of the tragedy.

A) PECULIAR LABOR STRIKE.

THE San Francisco granite cutters are out on strike. They have been getting $4 a day of eight hours' work. They had no grievance of any kind whatsoever. But in Fresno county and in other interior towns the rate was $4 for a day of nine hours. These terms were all decided on some time ago in a conference between the union and employers. This contract they ignored, and demand a uniform scale of $4 a day and eight hours.

The real cause of the trouble, it is thought, lies deeper. The granite cutters of the East have been on strike since last May. It is one of the rules of the union that all working cutters pay 50 cents a day each to the strikers' fund, while a strike is in progress. The California unionists found this a heavy tax, and went on strike in order to evade payment without breaking the laws of the Granite Cutters' Union.

THE PROPOSED INCREASE OF TAXES.

THE taxpayers of this county were alarmed when the statement was given publicly, that the Territorial Board of Equalization had added ten per cent. to the assessment on all property in Salt Lake County. But it appears that this addition has not been made, it is only contemplated. Before a decision is reached, Salt Lake County must have an opportunity to be heard and to show cause why the addition should not be made. The situation therefore is not so bad as reported.

We hope the case of the taxpayers will, if necessary, be strongly presented. The value of property has declined. As to the cause of the decline we will not argue. The fact is, it has steadily decreased ever since the "Liberals" laid hold of the local government. This cannot be disproved, though some "Liberal" scribes froth at the mouth whenever it is mentioned, and with their usual lack of logic, deny the fact, yet attribute the cause of the decline to something outside of "Liberal" influences. They thus admit and deny in the same breath. But everybody knows that the value of property here is less than that of a year ago, and still less than that of two years ago.

The assessments made by the County Assessor this year, so far as we can learn, have given general satisfaction. We do not care whether he is a "Liberal," a Republican or a Democrat. That cuts no figure in the conditions. His valuations are considered fair, and the county authorities, most of whom are very familiar with real estate values, have heartily approved of his work. The movement to change it all should be strongly opposed on principle, and also on the ground of the confusion and expense it will entail.

There is another consideration. A large amount of taxes has been paid and payments are continuing. Receipts have been issued to the payers of taxes. Those receipts are in full for the territorial, county and school taxes for the year 1892. Can a new assessment be made now which will be legally collectable of those who hold such receipts? If not, can the property on which taxes have not been paid, be assessed at the rate of ten per cent. more than the property on which the taxes have been paid? Would not this destroy the very equalization which the board was organized to promote?

But if we read the law aright, the board is estopped from making any change in assessments after the present date. The statute of March 2, 1892, says:

"Sec. 11. That the county court of any county in which it is proposed to increase the assessed valuation as a whole, or of any class of property, shall have ten days' notice to appear by representative and resist such increase."

Sec. 12. That said board shall file a full and complete report of all the changes made by it with the Territorial Auditor of Public Accounts, on or before the first day of September of each year, and immediately any change is ordered, the secretary of the board shall notify the county court of the county affected by said change, of the same."

The notice to the County Court to appear and show cause was not made until August 8th. Ten days from that brings us to September 10. But the law requires the Board to file a "full and complete report of all the changes made by it, on or before the first day of September." The change proposed has not been made, nor can it be made until the County Court has appeared before the Board, and that appearance cannot be made until September 10. That will be too late to make any change legal. Notice of a contemplated change is not the chance itself. We do not think there can be any reasonable doubt that the Territorial Board of Equalization has procrastinated, and that the day of its power for the year 1892 is past.

We presume the county authorities will be prepared to appear by attorney and resist the increase, if necessary, so that no point may be lost. But we think they can object to any hearing and any change after the date provided in the law for the full report to be filed with the Auditor of Public Accounts. If this is correct, the taxpayers need be under no concern in relation to this matter.

CHOLERA AT THE DOORS OF THE NATION.

THE cholera news is not re-assuring. The reports of its presence at the doors of our country are causing much uneasiness. This anxiety is shared by President Harrison, who has returned to Washington on account of his solicitude on the subject.

The attempt to assume that the cases on board the ship "Moravia" were choleric is absurd. No such comparatively mild form of bowel disorder is as fatal as that which carried off the immigrants attacked on the vessel named. Out of twenty-four persons seized with the malady only two recovered, and all the deaths occurred within twenty-four hours after the beginning of the attack. These facts were sufficient to prove that the disease was either Asiatic cholera or something equally infectious and deadly.

Some physicians are stating that cold weather does not kill the cholera germs, but merely causes them to be temporarily dormant. According to this view they might be brought to this country during the winter in clothing, etc., and as soon as warm weather set in they would revive and multiply. Others insist that the plague is not necessarily a summer disease, but that it occasionally gets in its deadly work in winter.

We observe that Assistant Secretary Spaulding, at Washington, D. C., is credited with saying, "If decreed by divine Providence that we shall have cholera here, we cannot prevent it, but it is as nearly impossible for it to get here as we can make it." Here is a chance for some of our local contemporaries to tell the assistant secretary that there is no such thing as "divine providence," in affairs of this kind, and that plagues are simply the result of the want of personal cleanliness and proper sanitation, and of peculiar atmospheric conditions. They have an opportunity to say to the gentleman that "Providence" cannot use the elements to accomplish its purposes.

We observe that some people who profess great things about the freedom of opinion and its expression are ready to leap furiously upon persons who happen to announce views in favor of the idea that God has anything whatever to do with the affairs of mankind. They act and speak as if it were out of the sphere of divine providence to interfere in any way with earthly conditions. They even seem disposed, had they the power, to seize by the throat people whose religious convictions lead them to the conclusion that the Almighty takes cognizance of poor humanity by administering corrective chastisement as well as blessings upon the race. We have no objection to people disbelieving in divine intervention, but when such persons set up a howl because some other people do not agree with them on the subject, we regret that they should be so contemptibly contracted and small. However, we will qualify this statement by saying that these intolerant individuals have the right to show their disposition toward egotism and tyranny if they wish to, but the spectacle they present is neither consistent nor attractive.

ADDING HORRORS TO HORRORS.

IN addition to the horrifying particulars of the Borden murder in Fall River, Mass., another dreadful feature has been introduced. It is said that the case has now assumed a religious sectarian phase. Lizzie Borden, the accused murderer, is a Congregationalist. She is supported by her church, and escorted to and from the court by her pastor, a Mr. Buck. The prosecution, which of course is the State, it is said is aided by the Baptists, and a bitter feeling already prevails.

It appears that before burial the heads were detached from the bodies of the murdered Borden, and the trunks buried. The heads are in possession of the State physician. He testified that he was instructed by the State attorneys to perform the operation, and preserve the heads for purposes of evidence in the trial. When he so testified at the last examination the court was horrified, and the audience shuddered, even Lizzie Borden looked ghastly when the surgeon coolly made the announcement. The court asked: "Do you mean to say that the bodies of the Borden were buried without the heads?" To which the stolid medico replied: "Yes, your honor."

This mutilation may have been necessary for the purposes of justice, but the general public will be greatly shocked at this realization of the great play-wright's words, "On horrors head, horrors accumulate".

IS THERE A EUROPEAN GOLD CONSPIRACY.

IN Dun's review of trade for last week it is stated that imports of merchandise to New York for three weeks ending August 27, 1892, exceeded the imports of last year for the corresponding period by 45 per cent. This means that for every $100 worth of merchandise imported in August, 1891, nearly $150 worth were imported in August, 1892.

This seems anomalous in the face of our existing tariff laws, and it is a circumstance which campaign orators on both sides should try to explain to the public. For the same period exports from New York only exceeded those of last year by 4 per cent. This presentation of trade relations must result in a heavy balance of trade against us at the end of the year, provided it continues.

Another rather curious feature of our trade relations presents itself in reference to gold. During June and July, $25,000,000 of the yellow metal left these shores. During the month of August just closed $6,000,000 left New York City alone. In former years the outflow of gold was heaviest in April and May. In this year it was heaviest in June and July, and according to acknowledged authorities, heavier than for any two months combined on record. In the month of August there has usually been an inflow of gold. It 1887 it was nearly $8,000,000, and in 1891 (last year) it was over $1,000,000, but this year the tide has been $6,000,000 outwards.

Where this gold goes is not definitely known. Some say to Austria, others to other countries. Is it a conspiracy of European governments to corner American gold and produce a panic here? or what is the secret cause of this change?

AN EXPLANATION OF PREVAILING STRIKES.

DURING last week there were reported about fifty labor troubles in various parts of the country. These include strikes, lockouts, and grievances relating to union organizations. The vast majority of the strikes failed in their object, only a few succeeded, there were some compromises, and a number yet remain unsettled.

In one of his messages to the Forty-ninth Congress, President Cleveland said:

"The discontent of the employed is due in a large degree to the grasping and heedless exactions of employers, and the alleged discriminations in favor of capital as an object of governmental attention. Laboring men are not always careful to avoid causeless disturbances. But I suggest that instead of arbitrators there be created a commission of labor, consisting of three members, who shall be regular officers of the government, charged among other duties with the consideration and settlement, when possible, of all controversies between labor and capital."

This suggestion was ignored by Congress. Compulsory arbitration is now talked of, but its practicality is questionable. One authority asks whether if the case were decided in favor of the employers the laborers could be compelled by force to work. Orrin W. Weaver, chief assistant of Carroll D. Wright, commissioner of labor, says that compulsory arbitration would not do. It has been tried in Ohio, New York and Massachusetts, but it has achieved very little good. In the last named State it has accomplished a little.

Mr. Weaver was asked recently by a St. Louis Globe-Democrat correspondent to what he attributed the prevalence of strikes in this age. He replied as follows:

"To human nature. We are undergoing a great transition, which has been in course of development for the past forty or fifty years. There are periods in the history of civilization when all things, so to speak, are stationary. There is no perceptible change. The established order of things moves in its established groove, without any remarkable or violent mutations. These periods are succeeded by periods of radical social revolution, and all at once we are in the middle of changes and a general turmoil, like the great labor strikes of the present. The causes are not always outwardly apparent. It is to be sought in the immutability of human nature. The conditions are changing by which society is surrounded. A new direction is given to human thought. Socialism is an entirely modern phenomenon. It was not known during the periods of industrial stability. Workingmen read more and reflect more. Literature is cheaper, and ideas, right or wrong, are spreading faster than they did fifty years ago. New machinery is constantly introduced; new inventions follow fast one upon another; and the minds of people are receiving new impressions and keep constantly alert for changes. In short, we are living in a time of rapid changes, when no settled order is to be thought of. Strikes are being arising for the first time, which probably continue for a hundred years longer. It is a question we have been unable to solve satisfactorily, and it is not likely to be solved until the course of intellectual activity once more subsides into a regular and definite channel."

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS.

A PROMINENT character has departed from the journalistic arena of New York. For many years George Wm. Curtis ranked as one of the literary and political lights of Gotham. A dispatch in last evening's DESERT NEWS states that he passed away at 5 o'clock yesterday morning.

Mr. Curtis was a native of Rhode Island, where he was born in 1824. In 1842 he and a brother joined the Brook Farm association near Roxbury, Mass. In 1846 he visited the old world, and on his return to this country published a book entitled "Nine Notes of Howadji." Two years later he published "The Howadji in Syria." His next step was as editor of Lutnam's Magazine, and he also contributed to the New York Tribune. Subsequently he became connected with the Harper, and in these publications his lectures and essays formed a noticeable feature. He was the writer of "The Editor's Easy Chair" in Harper's New Monthly Magazine, but it was as editor of Harper's Weekly that he was best.

Though an extremist in Republican party politics until 1884, he was an ardent civil service reformer. In fact he might be said to have made a sad of this idea. And to a great extent the civil service laws now in force in this country may be attributed to his exertions. He attended the Republican National Convention of 1884, and made a speech of unusual severity and bitterness against the Democratic party which he characterized as an "organized appetite." But when Mr. Blaine was subsequently nominated he withdrew from the party, and became one of Grover Cleveland's most earnest adherents.

His death at the present time will remove one great complication from New York party politics. It was his adhesion to the Democratic party that caused the disaffection among New York Democrats, and not personal dislike to Cleveland. For a quarter of a century Harper's Weekly had been a violent and extreme caricaturist of Irish Democrats. At that time Nast flourished, and his grotesque and sometimes indecent daubs stared at one from every stationer's window in the city.

Eugene Lawrence was a contributor to the Weekly. His efforts were entirely of the old know-nothing type, and Catholics looked on Curtis as a revivifier of old hates. When extreme Catholics and sensitive Democrats found Harper's Weekly and its editor at their side, they naturally enough felt alarmed. This was really the secret of the disaffection. And now that Mr. Curtis, who was looked upon as head of the Nast-Lawrence clique is gone, New York Democrats will not be heard in denunciation of Cleveland.

What is called the Mugwump element on the Atlantic seaboard has, in the death of Curtis, lost one of the leaders who gave it character. He was a strong writer, an acute thinker, and his influence in the political world was more than is generally understood.

THE CHURCH SUITS AGAIN INCOURT

THE litigation over the property of the late corporation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has been simplified greatly by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, at the instance of the counsel for the Government, of the following case: F. H. Dyer, receiver, vs. David M. Stewart, Robert McQuarrie and Church of Weber Stake and City of Ogden; F. H. Dyer, receiver, etc., vs. R. J. Taylor and L. W. Shurtliff; H. W. Lawrence, receiver, vs. James A. Eldridge et al. The last named involved the Salt Lake property known as the Council House corner, and the others, property formerly owned by the Church in Ogden, including the Tabernacle square, titling office grounds and the old Stuart property. These are now exempt from sequestration.

The case now before the Supreme Court of the Territory comes up on exceptions taken to the report of the Master in Chancery, who, after a long investigation decided in favor of the turning over of the personal property of the late corporation for the use and benefit of the district schools.

It will be remembered that the Supreme Court of the Territory decreed the personal property of the Church had "become escheated to and the property of the United States." This was based on the assumption that the personal property of the Church had been used for and devoted, among other things, to the promulgation and maintenance of polygamy or plurality of wives. We say the "assumption" because no such evidence had then been before the court. The Supreme Court of the United States subsequently dissented from this part of the decree, and ordered that the personal property should be devoted to "such charitable use, lawful in their character, as may most nearly correspond to those to which it was originally designed," to be ascertained by a Master in Chancery subject to the approval of the court.

It is now contended that the Master erred in his decision; that he should have granted the petition of the First Presidency of the Church to have the property vested in them as Trustees to be applied to the relief of the poor of the Church and the maintenance of houses of worship, the Trustees to report annually to the court an account of the administration of the trust; and that the devotion of the property to the district schools is opposed to the decision of the Supreme Court and repugnant to justice, equity and the genius of our government.

The Master ruled that this application of the Presidency was res adjudicata, because the Supreme Court had already denied the petition of George Romney, Henry Dinwoody, James Watson and John Clark, on behalf of the members of the Church, claiming that they and said members were "equitably the owners of said property," and asking the court to decree that the said property belongs to the individual members of said Church. But counsel for the Church now show that there is a different claim and scheme entirely.

Romney et al. claimed the property for the members of the Church absolutely. The Presidency of the Church ask that it be regarded as a trust, and that they administer it as decided by the Supreme Court, for those charitable uses nearest to those designed by the donors, and subject to the supervision of the court. Further, the Supreme Court ruled that there was no ground at that time for the application of the claimants, but that "the rights of Church members will necessarily be taken into consideration in the final disposition of the case." This all goes to show that the denial of the former claim is no bar to the granting of the present petition and scheme.

It is further set forth now that the whole ground of the action of Congress and the rulings of the Courts in relation to this property was that the Church was a "contumacious organization" employing its resources in "attempting to oppose, thwart and subvert the legislation of Congress" that is, in supporting the practice of polygamy. But this is all changed by the action of the Church in relation to plural marriage, and there is now no reason or excuse to withhold the property from the lawful uses to which it was originally destined.

It is contended that there were lawful uses, as well as those said to be unlawful to which it was alleged the property was applied, and that to these the means ought to be devoted instead of to uses never contemplated by the donors, and for the benefit of persons never intended to receive such benefit.

All this is set forth in the brief of Hon. F. S. Richards, attorney for the Church and amplified in his plea before the Supreme Court today, a brief synopsis of which appears in our court report. Mr. Richards further contended that under the changed conditions the Church could not only ask for this use of the property under a trust, but could claim it absolutely as their right but would not do so. W. H.

Dickson, Esq., also of counsel for the Church, showed that the power claimed to exercise in this way was never exercised under this government and could not be so used even in monarchical England by a Court of Chancery, except under the sign manual.

The argument is of great interest apart from the pecuniary interest which the Church has in the property. We can't believe that in this free country the property of a religious body, lawfully held, will be wrested from it and appropriated to public uses and for persons who never contributed to it in any way. The case is in able hands and will be watched closely by many people besides the Latter day Saints.

THAT PAVING CONTRACT.

The recommendation of the Board of Public Works to let the big contract for paving to the Barber Asphalt Company has occasioned more stir and indignation among business men than anything heretofore contemplated by the City Council. There seems to have been some misunderstanding in regard to the lowest bid for the contract.

Several objectors have stated, as one of the grounds of their protest, that a home company had made the lowest bid and that the Barber bid was next. They argue that if the Council can, for any reason, pass by the lowest to the next, they can pass by that to another for some other good and sufficient reason. But it appears from the actual figures that the Barber bid was really the lowest, taking the whole job in the aggregate. In some of the details there was perhaps a difference in favor of another company, but the total bid of the Barber Company, we understand, was nearly $4,000 less than the lowest of the other bidders.

We presume the Board thought that as the Barber bid was the "lowest," and the company was "responsible," the law and the regulation would require the letting of the contract to that company. So that a little less denunciation and a little more reasoning and light will probably be proper under the circumstances.

The rule to employ home talent, home material and home capital, whenever justice and economy will permit, we believe will find favor with the representatives of the people because that is what the people want. But when home contractors want higher figures than work can be done, or materials furnished for by outside firms, surely fault will not be found with officials who consider themselves bound by the rule. At contra, it must be let to the lowest responsible bidder.

However, in this case we think there are sufficient reasons why the Barber Company should not have the contract, but that it should be let to the home company offering the next lowest bid and the comparatively best materials. These should be considered by the City Council before the recommendation of the Board is acted upon.

From many reports coming from various places where intense dissatisfaction prevails, it appears that the Barber pavement is very defective, that it has to be constantly repaired, that the company, notoriously, by low bidding drives out competitors, and then manages to keep the letter of their contracts by frequent patchwork until the five years limit expires, and that then the public are put to endless expense by the inferiority of the materials employed and the consequent renewal or removal of the pavement.

This is a very serious matter in view of the large expenditure involved. And as most of the money will go out of the Territory if this company is employed, the loss will be still more serious. If the means can be kept at home by the employment of home materials, labor and skill, and in addition the probabilities are that better work can be secured, true economy and public interest would demand that the spirit rather than the letter of the law should govern in this matter.

It appears, further, that the home company making the next lowest bid is not presuming on the fact that it is a home concern and therefore seeking to obtain high figures, but have put the price down to the lowest living rate. Also that its work already done is open to investigation; that it has erected expensive works for the business; that it is ready with suitable guarantee; that it is supported by public sentiment; and that business men whose property abuts on the streets proposed to be paved, are willing to pay the difference between the Barber bid and the figures of the home company.

With all these considerations it looks as though nothing could stand in the way of the Council to the awarding of the contract to the home company, unless it be some private understanding or agreement, or something that does not now appear which would justify concurrence in the report of the committee. Until something definite is produced to show to the contrary, we shall believe that the committee and the City Council are acting on what they believe to be the law in relation to the matter, and for the best interests of the city. But the public are much aroused over it and we think the wide-spread opinion of thinking men should have due weight with the municipal authorities.

ANTI-CHOLERA PRECAUTIONS AND THEIR EFFECTS.

The circular issued over the signatures of Supervisor Wyman, of the U. S. Marine hospital service, Secretary Foster and President Harrison, will have the effect of practically closing the ports of this country against immigration from Europe. No shipping company could afford, except by at least trebling the rates of passage, to bring immigrants to this country and conform to a regulation compelling them to remain in quarantine for a period of twenty days. The increased cost would not only arise from providing food and accommodations for passengers for such a length of time, but during the detention the expenses incidental to a voyage would be running on, with the exception of coal for propelling purposes. The ships would during that time be worse than idle so far as profit to the owners would be concerned. The regulation would virtually make the time of the voyage from Europe to New York about one month. In any case the loss to shippers will be enormous during the ensuing three months, owing to the necessary stoppage, under the new rule of European emigration to this country.

Whatever may be the consequences of the step financially, the administration is entrusted with the duty of protecting the nation, so far as lies in its power, from one of the most fearful calamities that could befall the people.
If rigorous measures were not taken the President would be subjected to severe censure. The situation is one of great gravity, Mr. Harrison fully senses this fact and takes prompt action in the premises.

Complaints are being made to the effect that Canada is manifesting carelessness in the matter of precautions against the introduction of the plague into that country. If this is so and should the Dominion government continue to manifest indifference on this subject, the preventive measures adopted by the United States will be rendered to some extent nugatory, as it would be difficult to prevent the introduction of the dreaded infection by overland avenues.

In the event of the breaking out of the plague in the East, it is not unlikely that there will be a heavy influx of people westward. Many who have means of removal from the centres of attack will be likely to seek for places of safety. Europe, which is plague-infested, affords no safety; Canada may be a good refuge for thieves and scoundrels who break the laws in this country and wish to escape its just penalties, but would give no hope of immunity from cholera.

At the onset of a panic this intermountain region would probably be deemed a good place to come to. But these ideas are necessarily conjectural or speculative, and one can but watch the course of events as they occur, fervently hoping that it will be consistent with the divine will to save our country from the terrible visitation, and that God may also be merciful to all the nations.

THE AMERICAN FLAG INSULTED.

VENEZUELA, one of the South American republics, is in the throes of revolution. It appears that the rebels have the country completely in their possession. But an incident occurred on the 26th ult. which is likely to em-broil the United States government.
Six persons who had taken refuge on board an American vessel were forcibly dragged therefrom by Venezuelan soldiers. They were members of the last Congress and their lawyers, all natives of Venezuela.

The American captain, Woodrick by name, protested against the assault on his ship, and pointed to the Stars and Stripes flying at the mast head. The Venezuelans fought desperately, claiming that they were under American jurisdiction. They were, however, forcibly dragged from the vessel and taken away. The American consul also entered a protest, but it was entirely ignored.

The State Department at Washington, it is thought, will take some action in the matter. That an insult has been offered to the American flag is admitted almost on all sides, but there is some dispute as to the rights of American ships in foreign waters. The incident may lead to some arrangement whereby a fixed line of policy can be pursued in similar cases in future.

THE BERING SEA HEARD FROM.

A DISPATCH from Victoria, B. C., states that Russian gunboats have seized four sealing vessels, three Canadian and one United States. The particulars so far are meagre, but it is presumed that the seizure was made on what are alleged to be Russian waters. It appears that the Czar has large seal interests also in this region, but heretofore American and Canadian poachers have not had any conflict with Russia. This incident revives the Behring Sea dispute once more and adds to it a new feature.

The modus vivendi entered into last May between the United States and Great Britain, it appears, it being lived up to by both nations with more or less fidelity. There are four revenue cutters, two men-of-war, and several other vessels belonging to our government in and around the disputed waters. England has three large men-of-war there, the "Melampus," "Nymphe" and "Daphne." No warning need be given to offending vessels.
Their mere presence within the waters, provided they are fitted with sealing equipment, is sufficient cause for seizure. Several captures have been made during the summer, but except in one or two cases nothing serious is likely to occur.

A Columbian vessel, the "Coquill-an," was seized a few months ago by the "Corwin," a United States revenue cutter. The captured vessel posed as a supply boat for the British fleet, but when examined she had a blank manifest showing neither cargo nor passengers, and yet had 6000 seal skins aboard, valued at $45,000.

The Sealers' Association made quite a noise at the time, as they are making now in regard to Russia. Complaints have been forwarded to the Dominion government and also to the Imperial government in Britain. English seamen are being seriously exercised over these colonial complaints. Lord Salisbury, a short time ago, said to a deputation of the Imperial Federation League:

"From time to time we have to exercise great vigilance lest we should incur dangers which do not arise from any interests of our own, but arise entirely from the interests of the important communities with which we are linked."

Speaking directly on these colonial issues the London Times says:

"How long is this to go on? How long are we to fight the battles and battle the quarrels of semi-independent states that lend us no helping hand, and treat us in all other respects as a foreign country?"

According to the dispatch referred to, it looks as if complications might arise between England and Russia in the Behring sea region. But future details of the recent seizure may give some satisfactory explanation. The Canadians are expecting, perhaps, too much from the parent country. Their action in regard to canal tolls between this country and theirs they want England to endorse. Canada has imposed restrictions on British commerce, and treats England in all commercial respects as a foreign country, and yet calls on her for protection when domestic interests are involved.

A FRENZIED POPULACE.

ACCOUNTS are given of a fearful riot in one of the towns of Asiatic Russia, occasioned by excitement because of cholera. The report was rife that Russian doctors were poisoning the patients suffering from the epidemic.
The deaths were so frequent that the common people actually believed it.
They formed themselves into a mob, attacked the hospitals and Governor's residence. The Governor they stoned to death. The doctors who fell into their hands they treated similarly.

During the excitement, doctors, nurses, and other officials of the hospitals concealed themselves in coffins so as to escape the fury of the mob.
Subsequently, the mob found these coffins and their live occupants, and jumped at the conclusion that they were cholera victims to be buried alive.
This aggravated the fury of the enraged men. Hospitals were burned, and private residences supposed to be owned or occupied by any of the Russian officials were destroyed.

Troops were hurriedly mustered from neighboring towns and massed in force against the mob. Desperate fighting took place. By the aid of a body of Cossacks the mob was finally vanquished, but at a sacrifice of 100 killed and 300 wounded.

LABOR DAY.

MONDAY will be Labor Day. It is made a legal holiday. Some people and some journals make a great deal of fuss—with their mouths and on paper—about the dignity of labor, the rights of working men, the liberty which the laborer should enjoy, etc.
That is all very good as far as it goes.
Now how many of those persons and papers will arrange their affairs so that their employees can participate in the ceremonies and pleasures of Labor Day?

We make it a rule to observe the law and give to workmen as far as we can the benefit of the law in relation to holidays. Our subscribers, who favor the cause of labor, we are sure will excuse the non-publication of the DESSERT NEWS on Monday evening in consideration of the circumstances.
We desire that all hands in this office shall have the opportunity to enjoy Labor Day, and we think this is greater evidence of our recognition of the rights of labor than columns of pro-testation and pages of rhetoric.

We favor movements to ameliorate the condition of working people, and for a fair division of the results of the products of labor and capital. We do not favor combinations for unlawful purposes, or for the deprivation of any human being of his lawful freedom.
Labor has struggled for centuries against oppression; we want it to be free. We also wish to see the interests of capital and labor identified or recognized practically as mutual, and a spirit of fraternity and equity prevail which shall cause humanity to recognize the rights of all, and fill the world with harmony and the glorious fruits of industry and peace. We hope Labor Day of 1892 will prove both pleasant and profitable to all concerned.

LONG DISTANCE READING.

A RECENT experiment in electric light signalling has proved successful. The summit of Mt. Washington was chosen as the point to operate from. The flash-light which were transmitted therefrom were read at Portland, eighty-five miles distant. The operator at the latter place, who read these lights, estimated that they were eighty miles above him.

Other experiments have been made during the past week between Mt. Washington and towns not far distant. At North Conway, about twenty-five miles from the electric station on the mountain, common print was read by aid of the light, and at Littleton, a town about the same distance, a letter was read without trouble.

Great things are expected in the line of the electric system of signalling. Some are enthusiastic enough to think that the day of conveying signals to Mars or Venus or Jupiter is not far distant.

THE REAL ISSUE IN IDAHO.

A DISCUSSION has been going on for several days between our morning contemporaries over the Idaho test oath.

It has been stated on the one hand that test oaths had their origin in this country with the Republican party, and an infamous one prevailed in the South shortly after the war, the object of which was to perpetuate Republican rule in the South, by the disfranchisement of all citizens who ever participated in or countenanced the rebellion. This was settled by the famous Cummings case, in which the Supreme Court of the United States pronounced the test oath unconstitutional.

On the other hand it is claimed that the test oath in the South was justified by the rebellious spirit of the people, and that the persons named who refused to take the oath were perhaps, or no doubt, in sympathy with the rebels even if they fought on the other side. And as to the Idaho test oath, it was framed by a Democrat and was defended in court by a Democrat, and the opinion sustaining its constitutionality was rendered by a Democratic Justice of the Supreme Court.

A good deal of recrimination is indulged in and much partisan feeling, all of which which is unnecessary in this case and most of it wide of the mark. The old Idaho test oath which the Supreme Court declared was not unconstitutional was supported in Idaho by both parties. However, on the rule established by the "Liberal" organ, it was a Republican measure, even if framed by a Democrat, because it was passed by what it would call a Republican Legislature. When referring to the killing of the silver bill in Congress, it casts the blame on the Democratic House of Representatives because the Democrats were in the majority, although it is well known that members of both parties voted against it. The Republicans were in the majority in the Idaho Legislature that passed the original test oath.

But the truth is that neither party is clear from blame in the enactment of that measure, which while declared not unconstitutional because it does not violate the letter of the supreme law was clearly in contravention of its spirit, and while framed so as to appear to be for the suppression of unlawful polygamy, was in reality intended to deprive members of a particular church of their franchise simply on account of their church membership, without reference to their individual acts.

But this is all foreign to the present issue. It makes little difference who framed, or passed, or sustained that old test oath because it is not now in the way. We do not think the record of either party is unspotted in reference to it. But it is a dead issue. The oath now to be tested is another thing entirely. The substance of the old test oath is in the State Constitution. Both parties or rather members of both parties, helped to fix it there. No one is fighting that. But the first Legislature of the new State enacted an additional provision, which was at the time admitted to be ex post facto, and therefore unconstitutional, and which is of the same nature as the infamous oath declared unconstitutional in the Cummings case. It is this new oath which is being tested, and that alone, in Idaho.

No person who has been a member of the "Mormon" Church for a certain length of time immediately preceding registration can either register or vote. The provision was framed, not to support any law or oppose any particular practice, but to prevent a certain class of citizens against whom no violation of law could be alleged, from participating in the affairs of the State. They are subject to all the laws and taxes and other duties of citizens without any of the political privileges of citizenship. That is now under test.

As the matter stands, the movement for its repeal is not a partisan effort. Both parties have declared against the oath. Both profess to be anxious for its repeal. The Democrats declared their desire that it might be immediately tested. Republicans at once proceeded to make up a test case. The important thing now is to see who opposes the movement. It is rumored that the success of the case to come before the court depends on a canvass now going on, to see how the "Mormon" vote will stand as to parties. If that is true it is abominable. It seems to us that public journals would do better to advocate justice in this case in spite of parties, than to throw the blame of the evil to be remedied, in this direction or that.

The Constitutional provisions stand. The shameful enactment of the first Idaho State Legislature ought to be stamped out. Both parties should forward the movement for its destruction. The only immediate means to kill it is by the power of the courts.

When the case is tried will be the time to see who really wants the Mormon citizens of Idaho to exercise the suffrage and who does not. Until then we must credit both parties with the sentiments enunciated in their respective platforms. Let the dead past lie buried.

THE WOOL TRADE.

"BRADSTREET'S," the well known trade journal, gives the following review of the wool markets for the week ending August 27, 1892:

"The demand for wool is not as strong as it was a week ago. Manufacturers are now well supplied. The goods market is in excellent shape, and the mills are all busy. The consumption of wool is heavy, and has greatly increased during the past year. There are at present no indications of wool prices advancing, and manufacturers feel confident of securing wool at a month hence on as favorable terms as it can be bought now. There is therefore little pressure to buy, and dealers show very little inclination to force sales. Quotations on all grades are firmly maintained. The markets are more heavily stocked with domestic wools than has been the case in previous years at this time. This is an element of strength rather than weakness, for the wool is in stronger hands. Dealers are much better able to wait for manufacturers to buy than growers. The receipts from the country are beginning to fall off, and the accumulation from now on will be less rapid. The buying is still largely of fleeces. They are lower relatively, and buyers have availed themselves of this advantage. There is less doing in Territories. Texas wools are quiet. California and Oregon wools are dull. Pulled wools are moving slowly. Socks in puller's hands are light. Skins are costing more than they did a year ago, but wool is on the average 8c. lower than in August, 1891. Australian wools are quiet. The next London sales will open September 13. About 300,000 bales will be offered, but very little of it will be suitable for this country. French and German Manufacturers are expected to be the principal buyers. At the June sales the French were not strong competitors, and their stocks are now thought to be light. The depressed condition of the English mills may have some effect on prices, but the general opinion is that the advance will be maintained. Carpet manufacturers continue to buy quite freely. Now that wools from the cholera districts are to be excluded, there is a better demand for Scotch, china and Mediterranean wools. Values are very firm, but unchanged."

THE CHURCH SUITS.

What is generally known as the Church case—the United States of America, plaintiff, vs. the late corporation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, defendant—came up for argument before the judges of the Territorial Supreme Court this morning. The petitioners, Wilford Woodruff, George Q. Cannon and Joseph F. Smith, were represented by Hon. F. S. Richards and Attorney W. H. Dickson; on the side of the government were United States District Attorney Varian and Attorney J. L. Rawlins.

As before stated in these columns, the case now comes up for argument on the report made some time ago by Master in Chancery Looftbourg, upon the inquiry had before him with regard to the method of application of certain escheated property of the Church.

Mr. Varian said there was a preliminary question which must be settled on the merits of the case before the arguments were reached. At the hearing before the Master four schemes were presented—one on behalf of the Church, one on behalf of the government, and two outside of these—one on behalf of the Brigham Young University and another on behalf of five counties in the Territory. These matters were heard and considered by Master Loofbourow, and after the case had been finally submitted to him another scheme was presented. It was a written document. Upon this, filed with the Master, no evidence was taken, and subsequently his report was filed, and exceptions were taken thereto by the parties proposing this scheme. Counsel now desired to interpose an objection, to go on record, against the consideration by the Court of any of these outside schemes attempted to be lodged by parties not connected with the litigation, and who had not heretofore obtained leave of the court to intervene and be heard. He had made a motion to strike out, in particular, the exceptions made by the Brigham Young Academy, and strongly objected to the consideration now of the so-called scheme presented on its behalf. No outsider to the litigation had a right to introduce himself into the body of the suit, much less after the decree, take up the time of the court, and, therefore, a portion of the funds in controversy. If these schemes were to be admitted, practically any member of the "Mormon" Church who chose could come forward and ask to be heard on any pet scheme. The entire people of that Church were now before the court through their chosen representatives. Mr. Varian expressed his desire to file on behalf of the Master, a supplement to his report.

This simply set forth that at the hearing had before him four schemes were submitted, that afterwards, about December 19th, 1891, the Hon. J. W. Judd presented to him the petition of A. O. Smoot and others in behalf of the Brigham Young Academy, which he enforced and filed on the day on which it was presented. Nothing was done thereon, however, beyond that he examined the petition and brief submitted and returned the petition with the original report.

Mr. Varian said he believed counsel on the other side were of the same opinion as himself, when he urged that the outside schemes be not considered by this court. To this the Hon. F. S. Richards assented.

Judge Judd said he had no idea that it would be necessary for him to interpose at this time. When his scheme was presented to the Master, that gentleman informed him that it was in good time. If that scheme were now admitted and considered, his clients would have no objection to pay their share of any additional tax upon the funds that might be incurred. This scheme, he insisted, presented absolutely more merit than any of the others. Judge Judd asked Mr. Varian why he did not give him notice of his present motion.

Mr. Varian—I do not recognize your right. Then why should I give you notice?

The judges consulted and Chief Justice Zane said—The court is of opinion that the application on behalf of the Brigham Young Academy, filed with the master in chancery be stricken from the files and that the application for leave to file a petition now on behalf of that institution be denied. The arguments will therefore be confined to the schemes presented by parties to the suit.

Judge Judd remarked that he had prepared a brief upon the scheme presented in his position, which of course would be applied upon the arguments in a general way. It dealt simply with the main ground of the question, and he asked leave now to file it.

Attorney Dickson said his side were willing, of course, to admit Judge Judd's brief dealing with the main issue; the only objection was to the introduction of anything relating to the Brigham Young academy.

The court admitted the brief on this understanding.

Judge Zane then invited counsel to proceed with the arguments, which he stipulated must be confined to two days.

It was, therefore, mutually agreed that each side should occupy one day, and that Judge Judd should be given reasonable time.

Attorney Richard W. Young here came forward and observed that he presented to the Master, at the hearing before him, a scheme on behalf of the Young University. He asked whether the decision of the court in reference to the Brigham Young Academy governed the case of these petitioners whom he represented.

Judge Zane—The same rule will apply to your institution as well.

Hon. F. S. Richards then proceeded with his argument on the part of the petitioners. He presumed that there were now only two schemes under consideration, the one that of the Government asking that this property of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints be set apart for the use of the public schools, and the other proposed by the First Presidency of the Church, asking that it be devoted to certain charities, enumerated in the scheme, for the benefit of the Church. Counsel then directed attention to the latter scheme, and stated the substance of the same. He said it was clearly proven before the Master, in evidence, that this property, or these funds, had been contributed solely by members of the Church for religious and charitable purposes, and that the same was under the direction of the First Presidency. An effort was made on the part of the government to show that the purposes to which the fund should be applied were general and might be devoted in any way the First Presidency might see fit, but a careful examination of the whole testimony showed that while it was under their direction and subject to their control—for the support of the poor, the building of temples, and the repair of houses of worship—still it was left to their discretion in that regard only. As to titling that was a purely voluntary contribution by the members of the Church. No man's fellowship was called in question because he did or did not make this contribution. He supposed that the reason why the Master did not approve of the Church scheme was because he was precluded from doing so by the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States.

A large part of this fund had been contributed for years for the benefit of the poor and distressed members of the Church—a larger sum than could possibly arise from the income of this fund. In view of the circumstances of the case, it would be an absurdity, if which neither this court nor the Supreme Court of the United States would surely be guilty, to say: "We will set aside these lawful trusts and uses, which were the actual intentions of the donors, and hunt up some other use that most nearly corresponds to these lawful uses, and substitute that for it." Counsel dwelt at some length with the case of Romney et al., wherein it was claimed that they and the other members of the Church in whose behalf their petition was filed were equitably the owners of the property, and beneficially interested therein, and pointed out the clearly apparent difference between that claim or scheme and the present one. One claimed the absolute and unrestricted ownership of the property; the other only asked to have its proceeds applied to some of the uses or which it was contributed, in conformity with the decision of the court. Besides the difference in the issues, there was another reason why the Romney application did not bar the present one. The Supreme court of the United States, in its opinion, clearly recognized this fact. It was clear from the records in this case that the Supreme court of the United States had upheld this legislation because of what it termed the "continguous character" of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

It treated on the question of polygamy and showed it to be the practice of the Church. This lay at the foundation of this litigation. Counsel referred to what the Master in Chancery, in his report, had described as the "changed conditions," and said it was abundantly proved in evidence at the late inquiry that not only had plural marriage lapsed, but had been absolutely forbidden; by the authorities of the Church, any person who practiced it would be excommunicated. That appeared prominently in the testimony and could not be controverted. What more could the heads of the Church have said than they did on this subject? In view of the facts, and that the Church had eliminated everything illegal from its precepts and practices, there was no reason and there was no excuse, for any longer withholding this property from the Church. The petitioners might with good conscience and good grace have come before the courts and asked that this property be absolutely turned over to the Church. But they did not do this. They were willing that the safeguards of the courts of law should be thrown around them, and to show to this court and the country that they were in good faith in this matter. They did not ask the court to place this fund beyond its reach, though he believed that if they did so it would ultimately grant the application. And he believed it ought to keep this fund, by all means, under the eye of the Court, but let it be devoted to the purpose for which it was contributed. Such a thing as the court was now asked to do by the government had never been done in any free country; and this court did not possess the power to perpetrate such an act of injustice and oppression. The proposition of the Master to devote the property to the use of the public schools is not only wholly devoid of every element of justice and equity, but was opposed to the decision of the Supreme court of the United States, and repugnant to the very genius of our government. It asked the court to arbitrarily take property which had been donated by its members, and divert it from the lawful charity to which it was dedicated to another, with different beneficiaries who never contributed one cent towards the fund.

Attorney W. H. Dickson followed. He showed how the fund had been created by members of the Church and stated fully the intention of the donors. He argued that the court had no power to grant the application of the government in this matter, and said that no court of justice either in this country or in England had ever undertaken to execute such power—to do such an outrageous thing as the government asked this court to do with the Church's property now. It would be a lasting disgrace and shame to this or any other free country to undertake by its legislature or courts to perpetrate such a wrong as this would be. Counsel then proceeded at length, to discuss and question the power of the court to accede to what the government sought to obtain, and quoted largely from English and other legal authorities in support of his contention.

Mr. Dickson began his argument just before noon, and was speaking when the court adjourned at 12:30 till 2 p.m.

When the Supreme Court re-assembled at 2:30 this afternoon Attorney W. H. Dickson continued his address for the petitioners, and further read various legal authorities bearing upon the distribution of charities, and showing how closely courts of law had adhered in the past to the intention of the founders of a charity. "Perry on Trusts" was also quoted from. Would anybody, counsel asked, in the light of the evidence in this case and the circumstances surrounding it, contend for a moment that it was the intention of any of the contributors to this Church fund that such fund should be devoted to the use of the common schools of this Territory? If that must be answered in the negative, then it followed that to apply the fund in the way the government now asked would be to apply it to a use in manifest opposition to the donors' intention. To say that that was carrying out the doctrine of cy pres was simply a contradiction in terms and involved absurdity.

This fund would never have been created by the members of the "Mormon" faith if they had supposed for one moment that it was to be wrested from the charitable and religious work of the Church and handed over to the common schools of the Territory. The personal property of the late corporation of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, not having been acquired in violation of any law, was not by the death of that corporation forfeited to the government. It went to the government because there was nobody else to claim it, but impressed with trust, and so far as these were prize-worthy the court must see that the funds were devoted to commendable purposes within the wish of the donors thereto.

When Attorney W. H. Dickson had closed his address on behalf of the petitioners in the Church case, before the Supreme court, yesterday afternoon, Judge Judd proceeded with his argument on behalf of the Brigham Young Academy. The court having ruled, however, at the commencement of the day's hearing, that only parties to the main suit could now be heard as objectors, the remarks of counsel were confined to that line of argument. He maintained that the act of Congress neither confiscated the property of the Church nor undertook to make any disposition of it, and that the decree of the United States Supreme Court exactly defined the power and scope of this court in the premises and settled three things: 1. The money in question was a trust fund; 2. The purposes to which it was devoted were in part unlawful; and 3. The property has been devolved to the United States. The right to hold and enjoy property existed before all constitutions, and the only limitation to this is that such use shall be lawful. The question that concerned that high tribunal was whether it had any authority to proceed in the matter at all, and not whether the property could be disposed of by arbitrary action. The duty of administering upon this property has fallen upon the courts, and they must devote it to such purposes as most nearly correspond with those originally designed, to be ascertained and defined. It is a matter of history that Senator Edmunds introduced a bill in Congress to dispose of this fund to the common schools of the Territory (amended by Senator Butler so as to limit to those of the Church), for the very purpose of settling the doubts as to the power of the courts and to relieve them. As to the doctrine of cy pres, it is that of a simple intention. Counsel quoted from Story as follows:

"The court will not decree the execution of the trust of a charity in a manner different from that intended, except in so far that it is seen that the intention cannot be literally executed. In that case another mode will be adopted, consistent with the general intention; so as to execute it, although not in mode, yet in substance. If the mode should become by subsequent circumstances impossible, the general object is not to be defeated if it can in any way be obtained." Coming as near as may be to the intention of the donors of this fund, where and from what source can an intention be applied to the common schools of the Territory. It may be asked if such an intention can be found it must be deduced not from anything given in—before the master, but from general assumption. Why make such an assumption? What is there in the case to authorize it? The Supreme Court of the United States could have done this if it had thought it a proper thing to do. Congress refused to do this when the question was brought directly up upon a bill for that purpose. In his opinion, to devote this fund as the government asked would not only not be nearest to the intention of the donors but farthest from it. In fact, he did not understand counsel for the government to have the hardihood to even suggest such a thing as invoking the rule of intention in its behalf.

Judge Sutherland closed the argument on the same side. He observed that an act of Congress was passed in 1857 disincorporating the Church. This act did not deal with the personal property, which was left to the courts. The property came from a great many. It could not be returned to donors or distributed to beneficiaries. It was to be disposed of according to law. When a corporation dissolved, its personal property went to some administrator. In this case the property was left without an owner and must be disposed of according to the law of charitable uses. "Because some of the former uses had been unlawful, this was referred to a master to examine and report some scheme for its disposition nearest to the use as originally designed. The master took the decree of the Supreme court and came to the conclusion that all the uses to which this property was applied rested under the condemnation of this decree and could not go back to any of those uses. Aaron's rod was powerful, remarked Judge Sutherland, but when it turned to a serpent he fled from it. I will not spend any time in denouncing the United States Supreme court from the aspersions cast upon it by the master. He has fled from the decree, and since it is based on a misconception of the Supreme court decision this report should be disapproved. The decree assumes there are objects to which the fund can be applied and all the reference desired to do was to find a scheme, not to find an object, but to administer the trust judicially. This court has judicially ascertained the uses severed from all that was unlawful, and they are more nearly to that to which the fund was originally destined. Devoting to common schools is to ignore almost entirely the original intent. The sect which has formerly used the fund fixed the limit to the doctrine of cy pres, I assume on account of the fundamental error of the master, his decree must be set aside. The only question now is, will this court approve the scheme of the master, and if not, we are no further along than when the reference was made. If another is made, then I will ask to present the claims of one branch of that constituency.

The judges of the Territorial Supreme Court took their seats at 10:15 this morning, and after delivering several opinions (which are given elsewhere in these columns) the Church case was again taken up.

Attorney W. H. Dickson called attention to the fact that Judge Sutherland yesterday referred to himself as "counsel for defendants." He (Mr. Dickson) now desired it to go on record that such was not the case, and that the Judge in no way represented the defendants. It was a mistake altogether. (Laughter, in which District Attorney Varian joined.)

argument on behalf of the government at 10:45. He referred to what he termed the manner under which the contributions to this fund had been acquired, and called attention to the law of the Church "as set forth by revelation on this subject and published in its book of creeds." He next made mention of the law of the Territory passed by the first Territorial legislature "in aid of Church purposes." Then he briefly dwelt upon the history of the Church in Utah. As to how this fund was dedicated, counsel on the other side contended that there was a specific intent in the mind of each of the donors, having in view some definite charitable purpose. He insisted, however, that there was nothing of the kind—that if it were possible to ascertain an opinion from each and every member of the Church who contributed to the fund, it would be found that there was an intention to devote it simply to religious and charitable purposes. It was quite evident that the money was given as tithing, practically exacted as taxes. Congress enacted a law because of the diversion and misappropriation of this fund devoted to charitable and religious purposes—its misuse in aid of illegal and unlawful objects. Counsel dealt with the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States, and argued that nothing now remained but to carry it into effect. It would seem that since the final judgment and direction of the court "this trustee" had reformed and now promised to administer this fund in accordance with his duty under the law. The Church, he insisted, or the applicants for its scheme, as well as this court, were absolutely precluded from applying this fund to its original purpose, in the manner and form at least in which it was once applied. Until another decree was formulated on different principles, the contention of counsel in regard to its application could not be maintained. It had been stated by counsel for the petitioners that the practice of polygamy having ceased, there was no reason why this property should any longer be withheld from those who heretofore had charge of it. But what was the teaching and promulgation of the doctrine of plural marriage, the scattering of the seeds throughout other peoples and communities, which the Supreme Court of the United States said was a blight and a wrong on civilization. It was in no spirit of criticism or fault-finding against the "Mormon" people, or through any doubt as to their sincerity, that he spoke thus; it was rather because of their good faith and sincerity on this question that the argument gained strength and force. We had seen, said Mr. Varian, all the power of this government, great as it is, exerted for months and years with what the "Mormon" people were pleased to call "a savage ferocity," in order to enforce this law against polygamy, and practically without effect so far as the people themselves were made to believe it to be their duty to submit to the law. We had seen the simple word of the head of this Church, sent forth throughout the Territory, change the entire practice in a day. Why? Because the people believed that Almighty God stood behind their President and that he was speaking with the voice of Deity. But suppose Deity changed His mind and another revelation came, what security had the government or the court that their former resolution would be adhered to, or that this fund would be applied as was now promised.

Mr. Dickson—The court would still have this found under its control.

Mr. Varian, continuing, remarked, if the scheme of these petitioners was allowed, would it not be devoted to the erection of buildings where the people could still teach all the doctrines and principles of their religion? This fund ought not to be applied to the building of meeting houses so long as this doctrine of plural marriage was sound doctrine in the creed of the Church. This was simply an application by the "Mormon" Church, and under the law and organization of that Church no man in it could control the disposition of the funds by the authorities or heads thereof. This application of the petitioners was to appoint private individuals as trustees in an unincorporated association, to administer this fund, and the court could not, he urged, grant it.

Attorney Rawlins followed with his argument on the side of the government. He said this property could not revert to the donors or those who contributed it, and if the charity failed, it fell back into the residuum of property belonging to the United States. Counsel cited legal authorities bearing on the subject of charities and the disposition of their funds. Here, said he, they had a property given to a dissolved corporation without a successor, and if the object had failed, it must go to the State. The Court not being able to designate a new object, it was freed of any taint of trust. Judge Gray, counsel instanced, referred to a case where the gift was to a charity generally. The court could not supply a charity not expressed, and the doctrine of cy pres was left without a standard to guide. Where property was given to a trustee to devote as he might designate, it was not for the courts to handle, but would go to those legally entitled to it. In this case, unless this court disposed of the property it must be administered upon by Congress. All counsel for the government now asked was a useful, lawful and beneficial application of this property coming within the intention—if it could be lawfully done—or those who originally dedicated or gave it.

Upon the re-assembling of the Supreme court this afternoon, Attorney Rawlins resumed his arguments on the side of the government. It was expected that when he closed the case would be submitted to the court without reply from counsel for the defendants, as two of the judges had expressed their desire to get away at an early hour. In that event, in order to accommodate the court, it is just possible that the reply of counsel, if made at all, will come in a documentary form. The opinion of the court will be awaited with interest.

THE CHOLERA.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 30.—The official information of cholera in Europe received in Washington today was very meagre and confined to one dispatch from the consul at Bremen. He cabled that there was no Asiatic cholera in the city and every precaution was taken to prevent it. The treasury officials received assurances of the effectiveness of the national and State quarantine services, and they say the department has done all it can to prevent cholera from gaining admission into the United States. A cordon of inspection and disinfection is being rapidly established on the seaboard from Louisiana to Maine and along the Canadian and Mexican frontiers. A circular on the subject was issued by Acting Secretary Spaulding this afternoon to collectors of customs and others. The collectors of customs on the Canadian and Mexican frontiers were instructed to use special vigilance in examining immigrants and effects, and co-operate with the officers of the hospital service and local health officers in such action as they may deem advisable to prevent the introduction of cholera into the United States.

At the request of Collector Hopkins of Detroit Surgeon-General Wyman appointed Dr. Mulhern special inspector at that port to assist the local authorities in examining the immigrants and baggage from Canada. If it be found necessary inspectors will also be appointed at Sault Ste. Marie, Port Huron and other lake ports to assist in preventing the introduction of cholera. The collectors of customs at Ogdenberg, N. Y., and Milford, Me., are requested to nominate an inspector to assist in the inspection and disinfection of immigrants at those points. Should it be necessary, at many immigrant stations on the north medical inspectors will be stationed to assist the regular immigrant inspector. In cases of the establishment of absolute quarantine a cordon can be drawn out within an hour by telegram from the secretary, and the United States would be shut out from the work on the east.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 30.—The steamship "British Princess" from Liverpool with 600 immigrants aboard, 250 of whom are from Hamburg, is still detained at quarantine. The work of disinfecting is completed, but although there was no sickness aboard the steamship, she will be detained at the quarantine until the board of health shall be satisfied that all danger of cholera is passed.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—Considerable uneasiness is felt here because of the knowledge that cholera has certainly obtained a foothold in London, and in the worst place in which it could appear. Notwithstanding the quarantine, people from Hamburg are allowed to land, and the result of all this is that two new cases of cholera have appeared in the city today.

VIENNA, Aug. 30.—The postmaster at Pilsen, Bohemia, died from cholera after one single day's illness. It is supposed that he contracted the disease while handling German letters and parcels. No other case of cholera has been reported in the whole monarchy.

BERLIN, Aug. 30.—There is a slight statement in the severity of the cholera epidemic at Altona. From Sunday to midnight Monday the record there shows twenty new cases and eight deaths. At Wandsbeck for the same period the record shows seventeen new cases and nine deaths. Three children and the conductor of a sleeping car attached to a Hamburg train were seized with cholera during their journey today and removed to a hospital at Ludwigslust. The conductor's wife died from the disease on Sunday. A traveler from Hamburg was stricken with Asiatic cholera at Darmstadt today and the authorities at once ordered the town to be covered with placards containing special sanitary regulations. The price of disinfectants, especially carbolic acid, has risen 100 per cent. In the city since the appearance of cholera. The abnormal increase is placing the purchase of disinfecting articles beyond the reach of the poor. The newspapers advocate the gratis distribution of disinfectants.

HAMBURG, Aug. 30.—Since last night there has been an enormous increase in the number of persons attacked and who have died, 810 new cases and 310 deaths having occurred today. The interments yesterday lasted far into the night, the total of the day being 291. A feeling of deep gloom has settled over the city. The loss to the commercial community is rated at several million marks daily. The exodus from the city is increasing, and the number of foreigners arriving has fallen to the lowest on record. There were only twenty-nine arrivals at all the city hotels on Monday. The weather is dull and sultry, the temperature 84 in the shade. The condition is favorable to the progress of the epidemic.

TEHERAN, Aug. 31.—Cholera in this city has apparently run its course and is visibly decreasing. The deaths yesterday amounted to 200, a decrease of 600 compared with ten days ago.

NEW YORK, Aug. 31.—Aboard the "Moravia" at the present time there are three cases of measles and two women are recovering from slight attacks of the disease. The entire steerage comes from the infected district and tonight Dr. Jenkins is exceedingly anxious and worried over the outlook. The "Moravia" arrived last night at 10 o'clock and strange to say notwithstanding her terrible record of deaths on the voyage the captain passed through Sandy Hook up the bay and through a fleet of steamships which were anchored off a boarding station. She did not stop there but moved up several hundred feet north of the fleet within about eight miles of the battery and there dropped anchor. No word was sent ashore all night, nor did any of the quarantine officers board her.

It was early this morning when they started on the usual round to board vessels anchored in the stream, and the "Moravia" was the last one which Phyeleas Tallmadge and Sanborn drew up alongside. It was then after 10 o'clock, and it was known that the "Moravia" was from an infected port.

Within five minutes after "Moravia" was boarded for the second time, she hoisted anchor, got up steam and turned her bow in the direction of the ocean. She made a long detour around the fleet, hugging the Long Island shore and passing out of the Narrows for the lower bay shortly before noon.

The phase of the case of the "Moravia" which deserves investigation and which should be looked into with thoroughness is the action of the captain of the "Moravia" in continuing his voyage to this country under the conditions which prevailed on the ship.

If the cases broke out the day following his departure from Hamburg, why did not he, those connected with the quarantine department ask, turn back home instead of bringing the disease to a new country? Representatives of the Associated Press received a message from New York at quarantine stating that it is reported that Dr. Jenkins pronounced the cases aboard the "Moravia."

There is now no doubt that the 22 persons who died on the steamship "Moravia," which arrived here Tuesday night from Hamburg, died of Asiatic cholera. Dr. Jenkins practically made the admission this evening when he returned to quarantine after having spent the afternoon on board the plague-stricken vessel. This is HAMBURG, Aug. 31.—There is no questioning the fact that the present cholera epidemic is the worst that has ever visited this city, and every hour the situation becomes worse. People are dying off like sheep and the plague is spreading. It was thought early yesterday that the epidemic was abating in violence. The number of new cases and deaths reported for Monday were far below those for the day previous.

Unfortunately these hopes were not well founded. It was only a temporary halt in the onward march of the plague. It is now marching forward, mowing down its victims by scores.

VIENNA, Aug. 31.—The Neue Presse contains the important announcement that the mortality among cholera patients at Hamburg was reduced fully 50 per cent. by injections of warm salt water. The effect was immediate and marvelous and many patients whose pulses were so feeble as to be indiscernible often recover after the simple treatment. In many cases, however, the effects are short and a relapse follows.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—The two women on board the "Moravia" still sick, are on a fair way to recovery. The passengers will be given a bath this afternoon. The steamer will remain at lower quarantine till all traces of the disease are removed.

Dr. Jenkins this morning said he is not prepared to say whether the disease on the "Moravia" was truly Asiatic cholera until the examination of the infected clothing is completed. No one could say positively what the disease was. He admitted that some of the symptoms were such as are not known to exist except in case of the Asiatic scourge, and few doubt it is that.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 1.—The following circular was issued this afternoon by direction of the President:

Quarantine restrictions upon immigration to aid in the prevention of the introduction of cholera into the United States. Treasury Department, Office of Supervising Surgeon General of the United States Marine Hospital Service.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1, 1892. To collectors of customs, medical officers of Marine Hospital service, foreign steamship companies, State and local boards of health:

It having been officially declared that cholera is prevailing in various portions of Russia, Germany, France, and at certain points in Great Britain as well as in Asia, and it having been made to appear that immigrants in large numbers are coming into the United States from the infected districts aforesaid, that they and their personal effects are liable to introduce cholera into the United States, and that the vessels carrying them are thereby a direct menace to the public health; and it having been further shown under the laws of several States that a quarantine detention may be imposed upon these vessels for a sufficient length of time to insure against the introduction of contagious diseases, it is hereby ordered that no vessel from any foreign port carrying immigrants shall be admitted to enter at any port of the United States until said vessel shall have undergone a quarantine detention of twenty days, (unless such detention be forbidden by the laws of the State or regulations made therewith), and for such greater number of days as may be fixed in special cases by the State authorities.

This circular is to take effect except in cases of vessels afloat, at this date, which will be made the subject of special consideration upon due application to the Department.

WALTER WYMAN, Supervisor Surgeon General of the U. S. Marine Hospital Service.

CHAS. FURBER, Secretary of the Treasury.

Approved: BENJAMIN HARRISON.

Tonight Dr. Wyman notified the leading health officers of Canada of the action taken today in issuing a circular, and while no request was made that like action be taken by Canada Dr. Wyman hopes that it will be done.

The postmaster-general this afternoon issued an order instructing the superintendent of foreign mail service to immediately take such steps as may be necessary to thoroughly disinfect mails reaching the United States from foreign ports where contagious diseases are said to be prevailing. Telegrams were also sent to postmasters on the Canadian border, instructing them to consult with local health officers and ascertain if there was any necessity for fumigation of the mails.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—A dispatch from Quarantine received at 10 p. m. says that Dr. Jenkins has just returned from Hoffman Island and the steamer "Moravia," and found no new cases and no new developments. One of the crew of the steamer "Hazel Kier" was taken sick and either knowing or fearing he had cholera, jumped overboard and drowned himself. Arrivals of steamers from Europe, particularly those from infected districts, are now anxiously awaited by the quarantine officials.

The cholera scare is rough on fruit dealers in Washington market and elsewhere, for since eating unripe or overripe fruit has been tabooed by the board of health, peaches, pears and plums have been at a discount, and large dealers say they are having hard work to find a market at any price. Big trainloads of fruit are coming in from the country every day and the stock is accumulating with such rapidity that some of the dealers can hardly find a place to store their crates, boxes and barrels.

Today watches were stationed on the wharves and also along the shores of the island from Stapleton to New Creek at South Bench, a distance of four miles, to prevent any landing of small boats which might have on board any one who came from any vessel. A strict watch is being kept also to prevent emigrants from Swinburne or Hoffman Island from landing. Tonight everything at Quarantine is very quiet. The search for bacteria in foulness on board the "Moravia" up to the present has been fruitless but further experiment will be carried on tomorrow. A strict guard is being kept on board of the "Moravia," and orders have been given to her captain to fire at any one endeavoring to go alongside the steamer. Although things have been very quiet at the quarantine station today the health officers expect livelier times tomorrow as several ships are expected in from infected ports.

HAMBURG, Sept. 1.—The official report of the total number of cases of cholera and deaths in the city since the first outbreak of the scourge shows that 3,888 persons have been attacked by the di-cane and that death resulted in 1,778 cases.

HAVRE, Sept. 1.—There were fifty new cases of cholera in the city yesterday and nineteen deaths from the same disease. The epidemic thus far has been confined to the quarters of the city occupied by workmen, who pay no attention to the hygienic instructions for their benefit.

St. PETERSBURG, Sept. 2.—The official returns of the empire for August 30, show new cases to the number of 5273 and deaths 2722. This is an increase of 414 new cases and 193 deaths over the previous day. It is known that these figures are incomplete, many smaller villages not being heard from.

BERLIN, Sept. 2.—The statistics of the Imperial board of health show 628 new cases of cholera and 116 deaths at Hamburg yesterday.

In Antona there were 26 new cases and 8 deaths.

On the island Wilhelmshurg in the river Elbe, opposite Hamburg, there were 16 cases and 8 deaths.

There were 18 cases and 7 deaths in Schleswig; 8 cases and 4 deaths in Lauenburg; 5 cases and 2 deaths at Magdeburg; 5 cases and 2 deaths in Mecklenburg-Schwerin, and 1 case and 1 death in Berlin.

HAVRE, Sept. 2.—Fifty cases of cholera, and fifteen deaths were reported yesterday.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Another of the Ruseians stricken with cholera died today. It is reported that a woman died of Cholera at Macclesfield, near Manchester.

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—It seems probable that a clash in authority is arising between the Federal government and State authorities as represented by Dr. Jenkins. The recent order of the President forbids any vessel carrying immigrants to enter the port until after twenty days' quarantine. Dr. Jenkins said he would use his discretion about keeping a vessel in quarantine for twenty days. If he saw fit he would quarantine the vessel more than twenty days, or less. He claimed he had full authority and the President's order could not affect him or cause him to do otherwise than as his judgment induced him.

"I don't want to be understood as defying the Chief Executive," said Dr. Jenkins. "I shall do all in my power to assist the National authorities in keeping cholera from entering the country, but I certainly think I have a right, by virtue of the authority delegated to me as health officer of this port, to decide on the number of days that a ship shall be kept in quarantine. I shall decide the question in the case of each ship according to sanitary conditions prevailing on board at the time of its arrival here."

Collector Hendricks said he did not think Dr. Jenkins would bring on a conflict between the Federal and State authorities. If such a thing should arise, Federal power would prevail.

No vessel can land passengers or cargo until the vessel is entered at the Custom House, and Collector Hendricks will act according to the instructions of the Washington authorities.

The first symptoms of overriding Dr. Jenkins's orders was when the Customs House officers withdrew from the steamer "City of Berlin" shortly after she arrived in the early afternoon.

The withdrawal of the Federal officers naturally prevented the declarations of cabin passengers being made, all of whom Dr. Jenkins intended should be allowed to land today in the same manner as those of the "Gallia" and "Lahn" on previous days. There was some discussion over the matter at Quarantine. At four o'clock the steamer "Iceland" which arrived in the forenoon, was given her clearance by Dr. Tallmadge. She arrived from the ports of Copenhagen, Christiania and Christian Island, with fifty-eight cabin and 777 steerage passengers. The latter are all Scandinavians and have not been near any infected port. After immigration on board the vessel she was allowed to proceed. At 5:45 she returned, having only reached as far towards the dock as Liberty Island. Here she was stopped by a revenue cutter and returned to Quarantine. Dr. Jenkins was still absent, and shortly before his return to Quarantine the revenue cutter returned to Quarantine and released the "Iceland."

The collector of the port said the action was taken owing to a communication from Assistant Secretary Spaulding to that effect. There is much discussion as to what action Dr. Jenkins would have taken had the "Iceland" and "Gallia" not been released.

Dr. Jenkins said to a representative of the Associated Press that having once granted the vessel that privilege he should not grant her a second, and if the collector chose to return the vessel to Quarantine for twenty days it was the duty of the general government to look after them and take charge of them. They had nothing more to do with him. He said he thought, however, that the circular of the President was misconstrued by the collector and many others. It especially stated that it was not to conflict with State regulations, and it was chiefly meant for certain ports where there are no State authorities, and where the ports are in charge of a marine hospital force.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 2.—A copy of a New York dispatch containing Dr. Jenkins' views in respect to the twenty days' quarantine order was shown President Harrison this afternoon. He declined, however, to say anything in regard to the matter at present. Secretary Charles Foster was not inclined to comment very extensively on what Dr. Jenkins had to say. It is his opinion, however, that the doctor did not read the circular very carefully, for he said it was expressly drawn to reserve his (the doctor's) power in the premises.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—[Copyrighted 1892, by the New York Associated Press.]—President Harrison's circular relative to quarantining vessels carrying emigrants finds general approval and even admiration here. It arouses some feeling of envy also that American law enables the government to take such prompt and thorough steps to stop the importation of cholera. The British government, in cooping up emigrants at Gravesend and elsewhere, is acting illegally, and will be obliged to ask Parliament to pass a retrospective act legalizing what they have done.

It is feared that one result of President Harrison's movement will be to stop the stream of alien immigration to America and make England the permanent location of many families who intend to seek new homes across the water. The prolonged quarantine declared by the United States is not regarded in anywise as hostile to England, but with a view to counteract an undoubted tendency to throw a crowd of infected emigrants into Great Britain. Officials of both boards urge the government to make immediate assent to the prohibition to landing emigrants from infected ports.

In the absence of an act empowering such measures, it is held that the privy council could issue an edict.

Gladstone and Fowler, secretary of state, for war, today communicated with Sir Charles Russell, attorney-general, and Rimbey, solicitor-general, to obtain their advice with regard to the means to meet the legal difficulties.

Agents of the leading steamship companies think the President's circular needlessly severe. Despite the circular, however, some vessels are certain to take a full complement of emigrants. Several steamship companies now refuse to look even first and second class passengers hailing from Germany and other continental ports, but some companies having thousands of stowage passengers already booked are in a quandary. In the meantime cholera in Great Britain seems to have been fairly mastered. The chief physician of the local government board told an Associated Press representative today that the outlook was entirely satisfactory. He said although about thirty cases of cholera at all the ports of Great Britain had been dealt with during the last ten days there was no single instance of the disease spreading beyond the person first attacked. The fact is palpable to everybody that the public has become utterly unconcerned an imbued with the conviction that the disease will not be allowed to spread, and it will never assume an epidemic form.

Physicians of the city will discuss the proposal of the establishment of an internal cholera commission to report on the origin of the plague, its line of march through different countries where it has made its appearance, and the various methods of treatment employed in the cases.

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—The steamer "Rugia" arrived this morning from Hamburg and reports twenty-three deaths at sea from cholera and has ten more cases now on board. The captain at once notified Health Officer Jenkins and was ordered to the lower bay. "Rugia" left Hamburg on August 23rd and touched at Havre. She had ninety-eight cabin and 428 steerage passengers.

The steamer "Stubbenhuk," with 249 passengers and "Normannia," with 485 cabin and 482 emigrants on board, also arrived during the night and have been sent to the lower quarantine. They have no sickness on board. The steamers "Lahn," "Gallia" and "City of Rome" were all wed to leave quarantine for the docks this morning. The "City of Berlin" and "Europe" are still detained here.

The first reports regarding the "Rugia" were wildly erroneous. It is officially reported that only four cases appeared and all in the steerage. No sickness of any kind developed among the cabin passengers.

QUARANTINE, N. Y., Sept. 3.—The steamer "Normannia," from Hamburg, which arrived this morning, had 266 stateroom, 229 second class and 552 steerage.

Advices from the health official of the quarantine received at the Hamburg-American Packet Company's office, report five deaths from Asiatic cholera on the "Normannia," two cabin and three steerage. Four other people on board now have the disease.

In addition to the deaths there are now five cases of cholera. On-board the "Moravia," an eight-year-old child this morning has the cholera. The deaths on the "Normannia" were Col. Hegert, second cabin, aged 57. Diagnosis, cholera; died on August 29; Jacob Higeman, first cabin, aged 45; Othello Hamill, aged 11 months, died on August 30; Willie Harm, aged 3 years, died September 1; Adolph Schalts, aged 1 year, September 1. The convalescents are as follows: Heinrich Herzer, one of the crew, aged 39; Rudolph Henrich, aged 11 months; Selma Horn, aged 6 years; Morris Bonhorner, aged 59 years.

On board the "Rugia" the following deaths occurred: Bertha Koenig, aged 39 years, died August 28; Carl Koenig, aged 39, died August 28. The two were presumably man and wife. R. S. Star, aged 39, died September 1.

The convalescents on the "Normannia" are as follows: Ellen Pigaski, aged 27; Paul Koenig, aged 8 years; Johanna Burt, aged 54; Arlton Peters, aged 63; Disipio Kosmio, an Italian, aged 24.

It was 11:45 at Quarantine when Dr. Jenkins received the reporters. He said: "Gentlemen, according to my reports there were nine cases of cholera on the 'Rugia'; four deaths and five convalescents. On the 'Normannia' there were five deaths and are now four convalescents. On the 'Moravia' there is one additional case today, an eight-year-old boy. All the dead were buried at sea. All convalescent cases are serious and further deaths are expected today. These patients have been isolated in the ship hospitals. All three ships will be held in 'quarantine'.

Dr. Jenkins is in a very serious mood this morning. He has sent a number of telegrams to New York and, it is probable, will hold a conference this afternoon. The "Normannia," "Rugia" and "Stubbenhuk," all from Hamburg, at first passed into port this morning, but before they had time to dip their anchors they were ordered out to quarantine. With further arrivals today, more work is promised to devolve on the quarantine officials than they can well handle.

This morning the "Lahn" got under way and started for the city.

The "Rugia" left Hamburg and the first death occurred on the 23th, five days after. Bertha Koenig and her husband Carl died on that day. Several new cases developed on the 31st; Rosina Seerr, a one-year-old baby, died, and on Thursday Edward Steerr, 30 years old, died. On the 30th of Aug. Helen Bergardski, 27 years old, was taken ill and on the 1st, Paul Koenig, 54 years old, and Aaron Peters, 53 years, were stricken down. Kosmia Dipia was attacked the day previous to the arrival of the steamer.

The "Normannia" left on the 28th and two days after her departure from Hamburg, Carl Hegert, aged 57, died. Jacob Heineman, 45 years, died on the 1st. On the 30th of August three little children, eleven months, three years and one year, all died among emigrants. A large party of friends are on board the "Black Bird," waiting to take Parson Davies, Jackson and Choyuski up to New York if they can get permission from the health authorities to land them from the "City of Rome." "Umbria" and "City of Rome" are the only vessels lying at upper quarantine at present.

RETURNED ELDERS.

Elder John Middleton of Cedar City, Utah, arrived in Salt Lake on August 30th, having just returned from a mission to Great Britain whither he went on February 22nd of the present year. He was appointed to labor in the Norwich conference. His health failing him he was released to return home.

Elder John J. G. Webster of Cedar City returned home with Elder Middleton. The former left on a mission to England August 30th, 1890. He spent the first thirteen months in the Cheltenham and the remainder of his mission in the Manchester conference.

Elders Middleton and Webster crossed the Atlantic on the steamship "Neveda," leaving Liverpool on August 12th. The voyage was a stormy one, the last and heaviest gale occurring on Sunday the 21st.

NEW YORK, Sept. 6.—The steamer "Elbe," from Bremen via Southampton, arrived off Fire Island at 10:15,

SALT LAKE STAKE CONFERENCE.

The semi-annual conference of the Salt Lake Stake of Zion convened in the Assembly Hall September 3d, services commencing at 10 o'clock. President on the stand of the First Presidency George Q. Cannon; Apostle A. H. Cannon; the Stake Presidency, President of the High Priests' Quorum, and several Bishops. President A. M. Cannon presided.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn commencing:

Our God we raise to Thee
Thanks for Thy blessings free
We here enjoy.

Prayer by Elder Caud and V. Spencer.

The choir sang:

Lord, Thou wilt hear me when I pray.

Stake roll called and responded to by one High Councilor, President of the High Priests' quorum, ten Presidents of Seventies and nine Home Missionaries.

All the wards of the Stake were properly represented, excepting the Tenth city ward, and Sugar House, Farmers, Mill Creek, Big Cottonwood, Bluff Dale, Graeger, Hunter and North Point wards of the city.

The First, Second, Fifth, Tenth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Twentieth and Twenty-first quorum of Elders were represented by their presiding officers.

The Stake presiding officers of the Relief societies, Sabbath schools, Young Men's and Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Associations and the Primary associations responded to the roll call.

BISHOP L. G. HARDY, of the Second Ward, reported the condition of his ward. He stated that the people there are endeavoring to do their duty in the various departments pertaining to the carrying onward of the work of God. He bore his testimony to the truth of the Gospel and the permanence of the work established through the instrumentality of the Prophet Joseph Smith.

ELDER WILLARD DONE

spoke upon the general principles of education, and the condition and aims of the Latter-day Saints' College, and particularly of the formal class for the free instruction of school teachers.

BISHOP WILLIAM THORN

represented the condition of the Seventh ward. The Bishopric of the ward are united in their labors. He spoke of the neglect on the part of some of those who received the Higher Priesthood in performing their duties. Much good might be done by those Elders in missionary work among the strangers who visit us. There is no disunion in the Seventh ward, and the members of the Priesthood there are performing their duties well. Offerings for the Temple, etc., are very free, and the various associations are in a favorable condition. The Saints are in a condition of faithfulness and prosperity, and are advancing in a knowledge of the things of God.

BISHOP ALBERT W. DAVIS, of the Center ward, reported: This ward was organized November 22nd, 1891. There are but few people living there, most of them in rather poor financial circumstances, but the Teachers and Priests are doing their duty in visiting the Saints and ministering to them. The officers of the various organizations are faithful in their labors. Donations to the Temple and for other purposes have been free, and tithing is quite general. The meeting house has been enlarged, the attendance is good, and the Spirit of the Lord is enjoyed by the Saints.

BISHOP ROBERT MORRIS

spoke of the faithfulness and unity of the Saints in the Eleventh ward. The great majority of the members are faithful and are sustaining the officers of the ward in all their duties. All the organizations of the ward are in good condition and the officers are faithful in the discharge of their duties. The quorums of the lesser Priesthood are being increased, and the young men are becoming more interested in their meetings. The speaker closed by expressing his joy in the work of God.

COUNSELOR CHAS. W. PENROSE said it is necessary that both officers and members should be trained in their duties, and to this end visiting Priests and Teachers are appointed to give them the necessary instruction. Young men should be brought into use as soon as possible, and the selection of these is a duty resting particularly upon the Elders. Young men should be trained in the Priesthood before being ordained to the Higher, and the members of the Lesser Priesthood should be fully taught their duties. The Bishopric of the ward preside over all the Lesser Priesthood, and should give the necessary instructions.

It is important that regular meetings of all Priesthood quorums should be held, but these meetings should not be held at such a time as to conflict with the regular meetings of the ward. There should be a mutual understanding between the Bishop and the presiding officers of the quorums. The officers of the various organizations in the wards are under the direction of the Bishops and all these organizations are established for the good of the whole.

The speaker mentioned the necessity of instructing the young people in all principles of true modesty, and also in dignity and decorum, that all may be in truth models of propriety under all circumstances. It should not be false pride but real modesty and chastity, inspired by purity of thought and action. It is as necessary among the young men as among the ladies. We should not partake of the spirit of the world, for we are called out of the world as ministers of salvation. We are the salt of the earth, but if the salt has lost its savor wherewith shall it be salted?

Young men recommended to be ordained Elders are sometimes guilty of breaking the covenants they make before being advanced. They will not be prospered; but if these covenants are kept, the spirit and power of the Priesthood will rest upon them. The Bishops are chiefly responsible for the recommendations given to these young men, although their recommendations are endorsed by the Priesthood meeting.

Marriage should be encouraged; but we should not recommend persons to the House of the Lord who are unworthy of its privileges. The blessing and peace of God will rest upon the faithful Saints, and all words spoken concerning the accomplishment of God's purposes shall be fulfilled.

The choir sang:

"Look up and put your trust in God"

Benediction was pronounced by Counselor Jos. E. Taylor. After adjournment Bines Dixon was set apart under the hands of the Stake Presidency to be first counselor to Bishop W. B. Hardy of Mountain Dell ward, and Edward Laird was ordained a High Priest and set apart to be second counselor. Adjourned till 2 p. m.

Saturday, 2 p. m.

The choir sang:

On the mountain tops appearing,
Lo, the sacred herald stands.

Prayer by Elder Geo. B. Wallace.
Singing:

Praise ye the Lord, my heart shall join
In work so pleasant, so divine.

APOSTLE ABRAHAM H. CANNON

was the first speaker. He referred to the remarks made by the speakers during the morning session, and stated that he had been led to think of the blessings of God toward His people. The accomplishments of labor by this people are wonderful. On every hand are evidences of the blessings of God. These blessings have been of a material nature, and we have also obtained through the work of God, a wonderful influence for good among the people of the earth, and this in spite of false rumors against us. It is the purpose of our Father to continue these blessings. He will gradually lift from us the burden it has seemed necessary for us to bear, in order to prepare us for the great things which God has in mind concerning us. Our duty is to become more and more like our Savior, our great Exemplar in all things righteous. Looking back upon the works of the past, and neglecting the duties of the present, will not accomplish this. Greater efforts will be necessary in the future, for the opposition will increase, though it may not be of the same nature as that of the past. The temptations to be resisted are directed toward the young in particular, and many are being led away by evil influences. Young men are neglecting their duties in the Priesthood, and the young ladies are forgetting their labors in their special direction of work. This is seen in the fact that many of the young men who in Priesthood meetings make solemn covenants to magnify the Priesthood about to be conferred upon them forget those covenants and fail to do their duties. Pleasures are sought on the Sabbath Day, and the results of this are seen in the loss of faith on the part of those so indulging. Round dancing is engaged in to an unwarranted extent, and thus many are led to improprieties and sin. While amusement is necessary, it should be of an innocent character, and the older people should direct these pleasures for the benefit of the young.

Another rapidly growing evil is the excessive card playing indulged in by young Latter-day Saints. This leads them in many instances to gambling, and even where this result is not seen, the minds of the young people are so taken up with this amusement as to leave no time for serious reflections.

The Word of Wisdom is frequently referred to, and still it is persistently broken by Latter-day Saints. Great danger will result from a continued course in this direction, for if this commandment is disregarded, the blessings predicated upon its observance, freedom from the plagues and scourges sweeping over the earth, will not be realized. Calamities are abroad among the nations, and some may find their way hither. The best way to gain immunity from these evils is to avoid the use of liquor, tobacco, hot drinks, etc., and to carefully live according to the commandments of God unto us.

The Temple in course of erection in this city is of great importance to the Latter-day Saints, and their duty is to sustain by their means the brethren who are in charge of its erection. The magnitude of the work to be accomplished in this temple is beyond our power of comprehension. The ancestors of the Saints are anxiously awaiting the redemption to come to them through the ministrations to be performed therein. In the present prosperous circumstances of the people there should be no neglect of this duty.

Tithe paying was referred to by the speaker, and the blessings resulting therefrom were spoken of. These blessings do not depend alone upon amount paid, but upon the spirit actuating the payment. Fictitious observance of the commandments of God will not gain the promised reward, but such observance must be continued to the end. Our faithfulness during times of prosperity will result in comfort to us in days of trouble. We should do all in our power to relieve the financial embarrassments of the First Presidency, brought upon them by circumstances beyond their control. Faithfulness in these particulars will result in the triumph of the people and the work of God.

COUNSELOR JOS. E. TAYLOR

stated that since the last Conference the Stake Presidency had visited the forty-six wards of the Stake, twenty-three in the city and twenty-three in the country. On the whole the Stake is in a prosperous and favorable condition. Some of the members are of obstinate spirit, and persist in disregarding the word of God, and there are some evils in need of correction, but there is a living faith dwelling in the hearts of a great majority of the people.

The proper control of parents over children should be maintained, or there will be cause to mourn the growth of evil among the young. There should not be so much levity as is manifest among the youth of this people, and the responsibility of correcting this evil rests upon the parents. Often a foolish love on the part of parents will deter them from doing their duty to their children, until evils have assumed an uncontrollable stage.

Men are not out of the Church for neglect in paying tithing, but the law of tithing should be recognized as having emanated from God, associated with promises of certain temporal and spiritual blessings. Yet there are prominent men in this stake of Zion who have no credit to their names on the tithing records.

Bishops are reminded that the responsibility attached to the recommendation of people to receive blessings rests largely with them. They should therefore be prepared to refuse the requests of unworthy individuals, and adhere to such refusals until such persons have proven their worthiness. It has been proven that young men desiring to get married will make almost any promise in order to obtain a recommendation to the house of God, but frequently these promises are disregarded. Some of the presidents of Elders' quorums have asked what they shall do under the circumstances. One thing would be to have these quorums more fully represented by their presidents in our Priesthood meetings, thus setting an example to the members.

We are essentially a temple-building people, and the time is coming when this whole land will be dotted with temples, surrounded by the dwellings of the Saints, for they are sure to spread upon the land of Joseph. There is no doubt that the Prophet Joseph and the other faithful Elders who have gone into the spirit world have opened up the Gospel to the spirits in prison, and these are waiting for us to perform the necessary ordinances for them in the temples here. There should be the same spirit manifested among this people as was shown among the Israelites in the time of Moses, when the tabernacle was in process of construction. By general agreement was made to the call for material, that the Lord spoke through Moses and commanded the people to cease bringing things, as there was enough and to spare. And this work should be done mainly by the people of this temple district, as other districts have already discharged with faithfulness a great duty in the erection of other temples.

Indications are that a time of scarcity is coming, and hence the sisters of the Relief Society would do well to continue the storing of grain against such emergency.

It is necessary that complete records of trials before Bishops should be kept, so that in case of appeals to the High Council that body will not be forced to retake all the testimony presented before the Bishop, an account of which can be brought up from the records.

The speaker referred to the importance of individual testimonies of the truth of the Gospel, and the way in which such may be retained.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH said in substance: It is a glorious thing that those who are in search of truth are able to obtain a knowledge of it. It is a very easy thing to ask questions, but it is not always so easy to answer them to the satisfaction of the question. Especially is this the case with questions concerning religion. Still, every man and woman should strive for ability to give a reason for the hope within. We should feel thankful to God for the testimonies we have of the truth of the Gospel. Many men in the world doubt the truth of all things which do not appeal to their judgment, so as to be readily understood, for to these individuals the testimony of the Spirit does not come, its office being to take of the things of the Father and give them to men in the earth. But to those who are honestly seeking for the truth, this testimony will come through the ministrations of the Spirit.

The young men among the Latter-day Saints need to know something of the first principles of the Gospel, for they will likely be called upon in early life to go among the children of men and proclaim and teach those principles.

The speaker here bore his testimony to the truth of those principles, stating that they are all absolutely good, and adapted to those who receive and practice them. There is something in connection with these principles that appeals to the judgment and understanding of the honest seeker after truth, and it will be well with us in life or in death if we will give heed unto them. They will lead us to do good to all with whom we associate, and it will be found that those living in accordance with them are honorable and reliable, firm in their acts and in their lives. Any man who is honorable, pure and praiseworthy in action is a son of God, no matter where he is or what his beliefs are. There are as honorable men and women in the world as have been taken by the Gospel net, but they are so surrounded by the traditions and prejudices of the world that they cannot understand the Gospel. The principles we have espoused will tend to elevate us, and bring us into harmony with the works and purposes of God. They will make us unselfish, tractable, humble, and teachable, and willing to do good to our fellow creature. He who cannot sacrifice his own wishes and feelings for the good of others has not become in truth a son of God.

We are told that if we perform the labors connected with the principles of the Gospel, we shall know of a surety as to their truth. If we are told to perform a duty attached to the performance of which are blessings, including a knowledge of the principles, we can obtain that knowledge and receive those blessings only by compliance with the request. So may we put to the test all principles. And it is a fact that no officer of the Church enjoying the Spirit of his calling has asked or ever will ask any member to perform an evil action, or to do a good thing blindly. The principle of faith, of repentance, of baptism, of conferring the Holy Ghost, all these are good and elevating in their nature, as are all other principles of the Gospel of Christ. No one who has conformed in sincerity to any of these principles will doubt their tendency toward good.

The principle of tithing has been referred to. That it is a true principle cannot be doubted for a moment, for all who observe it in sincerity receive the spiritual and temporal blessings promised. No matter how small a man or a woman's income may be, if an honest tithing is paid the residue will go farther than the whole amount could do, to say nothing of the strengthening of the faith of those who observe the principle. We should be so faithful in performing the duties revolving upon us in the Gospel that we would not need to be reminded of them. Indeed if we have tested these principles fully, we shall see that one who advises us to neglect them is not our friend, for he is trying to deprive us of the blessings attendant upon obedience to them. This is as much the case in the principle of the payment of tithing as in any other. All we have is given us by the Lord, and we should acknowledge this fact by returning one-tenth of it to Him, thus entitling ourselves to the blessings of His work.

If a man willfully and persistently neglects any of the duties pertaining to the Gospel, he gives proof that he is not a true Latter-day Saint, that he is still unconverted, no matter what his professions may be. If he is dishonest enough to call himself a Latter-day Saint, he is in reality a latter-day sinner; and there are too many professing Saints who belong to this class. There are some men who try to drive a sharp bargain with the Lord in regard to the payment of tithing, arguing that they must deduct from their income all or part of their expenses, and pay but one tenth of the remainder. The Lord might be considered just if He should deal with such individuals after the same principle. At any rate, He would not regard them as very good Saints. "The liberal man deviseth liberal things, and by his liberality shall he stand." The Lord has been liberal with us, and we should be so with Him. Tithing may be used for the building of temples, the feeding of the poor, or for any other benevolent purpose that God through His servants may direct.

The question, said the speaker, may be asked, "Do you live up to your belief concerning the principles of the Gospel?" He stated that he, like all men, was mortal and full of weakness, but he could truthfully say that he tried to show his faith by his work, and if any person saw him disregard it in his actions any of the Gospel laws, he would bless such a person for setting him right.

He closed by invoking the blessings of God upon the Saint.

The choir and congregation sang:

Do what is right, the day dawn is breaking.

Conference adjourned till Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, in the Tabernacle.

Benediction by Bishop L. H. Mousley.

Sunday Morning.

President Angus M. Cannon presided.

The services began at 10 o'clock with the choir and congregation singing the hymn:

Come, let us anew our journey pursue;
Roll round with the year,
And never stand still till the Master appear.

Prayer was offered by Elder A. W. Winberg.

The choir sang the hymn beginning:

O'er the gloomy hills of darkness,
Look, my soul, be still and gaze.

ELDER GEORGE M. CANNON was called to address the congregation. He asked an interest in the faith and prayers of those assembled. The Latter-day Saints at this time needed the Spirit of the Lord in order to resist the temptations by which they are surrounded. They had come out of the world, and yet had all of the world's evils around them. They could not, if they would, separate themselves from the world; but it was their duty to resist the dangers which meet them on every hand, and live the religion which they had espoused. They must learn to choose the good and reject that which was evil. Many promises had been made to the Latter-day Saints, many bright things had been pictured to them which were worthy of the efforts of any people on the face of the earth to try and secure. But all those promises were conditional. No man could pass that for which he did not work, and no people could receive the blessings which they did not deserve at the hands of the Lord. The Latter-day Saints should be humble and diligent in the performance of their duties. The speaker knew that the Lord had power to hear and answer their prayers, and also that the work in which they were engaged was the work of God. If they were faithful He would fulfil every promise which He had made unto them. Let them seek to know the Lord's will and obey it. Elder Cannon spoke upon the necessity of faith, and said that if the Saints put their trust in the Lord He would protect them from any scourge with which the earth might be visited. Let us keep the commandments which God has given us, and encourage each other in all works of righteousness. We must not become discouraged, because it was only by persistent effort that we could overcome the weakness of the flesh.

ELDER JESSE W. M'CURRIN was the next speaker. We had been commanded by the Lord, he said, to seek Him when we desired any blessing at His hand. He had promised that if we asked we should receive, that if we knocked the door should be opened unto us. We had much need to be thankful to our Heavenly Father for the favors which we enjoyed at this time. The speaker referred to the advent of the Pioneers into these valleys, and drew a comparison between those times and the present. He called upon the people to help as far as in them lay towards the completion of the Temple here, and said that seeing how merciful God had been unto us, surely we should now give unto Him with a free and willing heart, so that that building might be dedicated at the appointed time. He thought there was no better opportunity for making such a suggestion as this than at a Stake conference. Let us be faithful and alive to our duties, and magnify our Priesthood.

ELDER HARVEY H. CLIFF, counselor to President A. O. Smith, of the Utah Stake, rejoiced in the testimonies which he had received concerning the truth of this great latter-day work. He dwelt upon the duties and obligations of the Saints, and as President of the Hawaiian colony in Skull Valley made some interesting remarks with reference thereto. He gave a most encouraging account of the present situation there, and said that the Sabbath school embraced every man, woman and child in the colony. As to the crops, everything looked bright; they would have an abundance of grain this year, and the people were seeking in every way to convert a desert into a fruitful field.

COUNSELOR CHARLES W. PENROSE read the statistical report of the Salt Lake Stake of Zion for the six months ending July 31st, 1892, showing as follows: First Presidency of the Church, 8; Apostles, 5; Patriarchs, 13; Sevenths, 184; High Priests, 444; Elders, 2,103; Priests, 487; Teachers, 380; Deacons, 1,682; members 16,434; officers and members 22,752; children under eight years, 7,771; total of souls, 30,525; families, 8,947.

The statistical reports of the following named organizations for the six months ending August 31st, 1892, were read: High Priests, Elders, Sunday Schools, Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association, Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Association, Relief Societies and the Primary Associations. As a rule these organizations were in a flourishing condition. The reports as read were received by the conference with unanimous vote.

PRESIDENT ANGUS M. CANNON referred to the gratifying increase which had taken place in Salt Lake Stake during the last few years. The Stake now numbered 30,500, and it was gratifying to know that the Bishops were displaying an interest in the matter of looking up delinquent members in their respective wards. A great number of names had been found upon the ward records of persons whose present residence was unknown, and it had entailed quite a labor upon the Bishops to trace up many of them, in order to ascertain their condition and standing. The speaker urged the great importance of the ward records being kept in a complete and careful manner, so that they might be handed over to their successors in good shape. It was frequently said that the Teachers did not visit the various families in their wards as they should, and on this account reflections were sometimes made upon them. But it should be remembered that these of their brethren sometimes found it difficult, in the face of their daily work, to visit as extensively as they might desire. President Cannon gave some excellent counsel to the people on their general duties, and expressed his regret at the fact that the names of several prominent men in this Stake had not appeared on the tithing records for several years past. He remarked that our home industries were languishing for want of encouragement—a condition of things which should not prevail in the face of our general prosperity. The people in the forty-six wards of this Stake were today, he said, in as prosperous and healthy a condition as he had ever known them.

The choir sang the anthem, "The Song of the Redeemed."

The benediction was pronounced by Elder George Goddard.

Conference adjourned till 2 p. m.

Afternoon Session.

The choir sang:

● "Let the mighty God appearing, etc."

Prayer by Elder Homer Duncan.

The choir sang:

"Agile we enter and its board, etc."

The Sacrament was administered by the Bishopric and Teachers of the Fifth ward.

Accordingly, the names of the following brethren were presented and unanimously sustained as the Salt Lake Stake Board of Education:

Counselor Penrose gave notice that the Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Association of the Salt Lake Stake of Zion would hold their quarterly conference on Tuesday next, at 2 and 7:30 p. m., in the Salt Lake Assembly Hall.

The choir gave a selection entitled "Light and Truth," after which addressed the congregation, and delivered a lengthy and powerful discourse on the mission of Jesus, the restoration of the Gospel, the testimonies which the Lord has given concerning its truth, its excellent effects upon those who have embraced it and the general characteristics of the Latter-day Saints who are living up to its principles. The speaker also explained the manner in which God generally gives testimonies to those who desire to know the truth and obey it. This interesting discourse will be published in full.

"Hallelujah" was then rendered by the choir and benediction was offered by Elder B. H. Roberts.

Evening Session.

7:30 p.m.

The choir sang:

Come dearest Lord, descend and dwell
By faith and love, in every breast.

Prayer by Patriarch Joseph C. Kingsbury.

Singing:

We're not ashamed to own our Lord,
And worship Him on earth.

ELDER B. H. ROBERTS

was the first speaker. He stated that one of the chief subjects of interest to him during the conference was the statistical reports. It is a matter of grave concern to some that all the district schools in the city have passed out of the hands of our people, teachers being chosen who are not of our faith. An extra burden is placed upon those who would pay the tuition in Church schools; hence nearly all of the children go to the district schools. This, according to some, leads to a growth of Gentile influence among our people in a self-interest, and the introduction of amusements foreign to the spirit of the Gospel. The speaker did not share these gloomy forebodings, as he thought the Gospel had not lost any of its power. The simple preaching of the Gospel had been sufficient to lead many, surrounded by adverse conditions, to lives of righteousness and self-sacrifice, causing them to be willing to brave the evil opinion of others by throwing in their lot with a despised people. If the Gospel of Jesus Christ in its simple preaching by illiterate Elders had such influence on the minds of our parents under the conditions of their embracing it, would it not also appeal to the youth of Israel, who will receive it under more favorable circumstances. So when the statistical reports of this Stake of Zion were read the speaker felt a conviction that the forebodings of those referred to in the beginning of his remarks were groundless. The eight Apostles and the many Seventies living in this Stake are special messengers of God, and their Priesthood is upon them always, and must be used at home as much as abroad. When there is so great a body of witnesses, if they are doing their duty we ought not to be afraid that infidelity will creep to any great extent into our midst. The High Priests enumerated in the reports have special power in this direction of ministering to the people, and the Elders, over 2000 in number, assisted by the Priests, Teachers and Deacons, may do much toward keeping out evil. The organizations of an auxiliary character, especially the Sabbath schools, do their work in the same direction; and lastly, the home influence, powerful for good, if so used, may perform mighty work among the young.

But no association can relieve the parents of the duty and responsibility of teaching their children, and a proper influence at home will do much to keep the young people from the evil influences surrounding them. The organizations now in existence should be fostered and sustained, and if they will perform their duty we need have no fear for the outside influences; for God has organized His Church with stability to resist all attacks, vindicating the truth and its purity. Hence it is weaker in us to believe it will not save the children of Zion. If the officers of the Church will preach the Gospel effectually to the young people, it will not be long before they will be building upon the foundation of faith.

The children of the Latter-day Saints have not been born here without a special reason for it; for they were among the choicest spirits of God, and they will take naturally to the principles of truth. Their devotion to the principles of the Gospel is seen most clearly in times of danger, as an incident related by the speaker clearly showed.

Some of the youth of Zion may wander from the fold, but the great majority of them will be saved. God in His infinite wisdom and power will not save all His children. Some of them will not be worthy of salvation, even in the least of God's kingdoms; hence it cannot be imagined that parents, with their limited wisdom, will save all their children. But parents and Elders should do their duty towards the youth, and then leave them in the hands of God.

The work of the Lord is sure to prosper; the future is full of brightness and labor; and we will have all we can do to keep pace with the progress of the kingdom of God.

APOSTLE A. H. CANNON spoke of the comprehensive nature of the Gospel, in temporal as well as spiritual things. The labor of the Elders abroad should be supplemented by earnest work at home among the converts of missionaries, that they may not wander back into darkness. They should also be given employment, that they may not be idle and consequent want. There has been of late a great scarcity of work among this people, but the way will be opened up whereby all may be employed. God has blessed this land in making it suitable for the dwelling-place of so many people. The water supply has increased under His blessing, and this in fulfillment of the predictions of the Prophets of God.

We have not fully utilized the facilities God has bestowed upon us, for the lands of this region can be used as a habitation for millions instead of thousands if all the blessings are shared. There are evidences of thrift on every side among this people, and God desires that His Saints should share these blessings with those who come here from foreign lands.

There is a tendency, especially among the young, to disregard and undervalue the counsels of the Priesthood in these and other respects. These counsels, if followed, will prove of value to those who receive them, for they will be directed by the Spirit of God. The giving of counsel is a duty devolving particularly upon the Teachers.

There is danger that young people who receive training in theology may feel that those older but less trained than themselves are not fit to counsel them; but the advice of such should be regarded, for the Spirit of God will ever influence those who have proven themselves worthy by their faithfulness and integrity. We should therefore seek counsel from men of wisdom, for thus may troubles and dangers be avoided.

When we get false notions concerning any subject, we are apt to disseminate them among our associates, and thus a great deal of harm is done, especially if our counsel to others is founded upon our erroneous opinions. When an army goes into battle the officer in charge must direct all movements, and so it is in this Church. It is our privilege to know the will of God regarding our duties, both temporal and spiritual, and if we gain this knowledge and observe it, prosperity will attend us.

PRESIDENT GEO. Q. CANNON spoke in an encouraging manner regarding the Church schools of the Stake. The necessity of training the children in the faith for which parents have suffered so much was emphasized, and all tendencies in the direction of weakening their faith were deplored. Modern text books are insidious in their character, and there is nothing to counteract this tendency; there is great danger that evil results will follow. He stated the necessity of attendance at the district schools in the case of the smaller children who do not enter one of the Stake academies until they are far enough advanced to attend the Latter-day Saints' College, when special pains should be taken to send them there.

Choir and congregation sang:

Now let us rejoice in the day of salvation.

The conference was adjourned for six months, benediction being pronounced by President Joseph F. Smith.

DROWNED WHILE BATHING.

There was a sad accidental drowning at Beck's Hot Springs on Sunday evening between 6 and 7 o'clock. A number of persons were bathing in the big pool when some one raised the cry that there was a dead man at the bottom of the pool. Doorkeeper Gates of Wonderland immediately plunged to the bottom and brought up the body, which was recognized as being that of William Nuillgan, a carpenter who lived at the corner of Tenth South and Second West streets. The body was removed to an adjoining building, where Drs. Bowers and Allen made an unsuccessful attempt to resuscitate the unfortunate man.

The body was brought to this city, where Coroner Harris held an inquest yesterday. Several witnesses were examined. He was seen by some of them about twenty minutes before his dead body was discovered. It is believed that his head came in contact with the bottom as he dived from the slide and that he was rendered insensible, after which he was strangled.

The jury returned the following verdict: "We find that the deceased came to his death by coming in contact with some hard substance, either floating board or the bottom of the pool, as a result from diving from the platform, or sliding down the toboggan, causing insensibility and strangulation, resulting in death."

"We, the jury, advise further precautions by the Beck's Hot Springs company to prevent the accidents that may occur to those who may not know the danger attending the diving from the high platform and sliding the toboggan."

The deceased was an Odd Fellow, was 35 years of age, and was unmarried. He had lived in Utah about two years, but had no relations here. It is said that he has a sister in Canada.

PROVO POINTS.

Late on Saturday Joe White and Ann Miller, both of Provo, were arrested by Deputy Monahan, on a complaint sworn out before Commissioner Dudley, charging White with adultery and Anna Miller with fornication. The offense is supposed to have been committed about Aug. 20th. They waived examination and were bound over in the sum of $500 and $500 respectively. The bonds were furnished.

On Sunday afternoon a prisoner at the County Jail by the name of Simon, who is awaiting the action of the grand jury on the charge of attempted rape, tried to commit suicide by taking strychnine. The dose he took was too large and before any serious result could follow Dr. Simmons was called and succeeded in saving the fellow's life.

An inmate of the asylum by the name of Blake ran away yesterday evening and as yet nothing has been heard of him. He was brought here from the St. George country, and once before succeeded in getting away and was gone for several days before he was captured. An inmate by the name of Yost has been gone for six days, but was found and brought back last evening by Sheriff Fowler.

Two plain drunks were run in last evening by the police officers. They had celebrated Labor Day too much.

Hon. W. H. King left on Saturday for an extended trip through the Star Valley country in the interests of Democracy.

A SAD STORY.

Brigham Chapman, a lad about eleven years of age, and Fred Morton, two years older, were arraigned in the police court September 6th on a charge of petit larceny. The offense consisted of stealing a $5 gold piece from a young companion. The Chapman boy claimed that he found the money in the weeds. Young Morton acknowledged taking the gold piece and getting it changed; he also admitted having divided it equally among his juvenile associates.

He justified himself by saying that he needed the money more than the owner, inasmuch as he was much poorer. He stated that his parents resided at Omaha; that he lived here alone and did whatever he could. He ran away from home because his father whipped him. When asked by Assistant City Attorney Coad if he had a mother and if he loved her, he burst forth tears and wept bitterly and refused to be pacified. When asked where he got a watch and chain that he wore he said that Charles Young, one of his youthful pals, had stolen the articles from the clothing of a Hot Springs barber on Sunday last. Charlie strongly protested against being denominated a thief. He said that he had owned the watch for more than a year. Finally he admitted having "wiped" them, after which he gave them to Fred.

The case here took a decidedly dramatic turn. A gentleman from Sevier County named Charles Anderson stepped forward and said, "Judge, I would like to take this Moreton boy to my home and make a man of him. He's the worst in the lot, but I believe that I can redeem him by putting him to work and giving him an education." On this showing sentence was suspended, and young Moreton left the courtroom with Mr. Anderson. The Chapman boy was also released under a suspension of sentence.

SAN JUAN STAKE CONFERENCE.

The quarterly conference of the San Juan Stake was held at Monticello, San Juan county, Utah, August 20 and 21, 1892.

The Stake Presidency, a portion of the High Council and a few of the Bishops and counselors were present. The Spirit of the Lord was poured out abundantly upon the speakers, and much valuable instruction was given. The reports from the wards showed an increase of faith and good works by a majority of the Saints.

The weather was beautiful and we had an excellent time.

The Relief, Y. L. and Y. M. M. I. associations and Primaries held their respective conferences, which were well attended.

THE People's party leaders have commenced an aggressive and earnest campaign in Idaho. It is thought that Logan and Alturas counties are largely Populist in their politics.

RELIGIOUS.

Sunday Services.

Religious services were held in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Aug. 28, 1892, commencing at 2 p. m.; President Angus M. Cannon presiding.

The choir and congregation sang the hymn commencing:

Joy to the brightness of Zion's glad morning,
Joy to the lands that in darkness have lain.

Prayer was offered by Bishop Robt. Morris.

The choir next sang the hymn:

Earth, with her ten thousand flowers,
Air, with all its beams and showers.

The Priesthood of the Fourth Ward administered the ordinance of the Sacrament.

ELDER JOHN WELLS

was the first speaker. He felt, he said, his weakness in attempting to address the vast congregation before him, and he realized the responsibilities of the position he held. He therefore desired the sympathy and prayers of his hearers that he might be able to say something to benefit them.

The Saints have much for which to be grateful. We live in an age of which ancient apostles and prophets have spoken. They lived and died without an opportunity to see and hear what we have, by the grace of God, been permitted to partake of. Nor did they have the same glorious hope as we have. They knew that the dispensations in which they lived would be but temporary, but we have the promise that the Gospel has now been restored never more to be taken away from the earth. Seeing this, we should be anxious to learn the things that belong to the Kingdom of God. We are sometimes apt to forget our duties in this regard.

The Gospel is broad in its scope and can cover all emergencies that can arise to the world. Herein is its peculiarity. Human societies are generally formed for one purpose alone, while the Gospel embraces all that is good and noble.

The speaker referred to an evil tendency existing among the Saints, to copy the world in its various vices, and said, "We cannot afford to follow the world in such things. We have many and vastly important duties to perform. When we see Saints use tobacco or liquor and partake in Sunday excursions, etc., we may well ask, 'What has the Gospel done for such?' Evil practices are bad examples to set for the rising generation. We should all live so as to set a worthy example to imitate for those who are around us. We came out from Babylon, not to bring its vices with us, but in order to be free from them and to carry out with great zeal the work of the Lord. But this cannot be done except we live a pure, righteous life. The genius of the Gospel is contrary to all bad habits. We must therefore look to these things and, if possible, conquer them among the people. Evil habits do not come all at once but grow gradually, and it is therefore all the more surprising that they should be so prominent as they are at present are.

The speaker was thankful that he had been permitted to hear the Gospel and that his heart was opened to understand it. There was no temporal inducements that had been held out to him to come here. But the acceptance of the Gospel carried the desire with it for him to be with the Saints. He knew that Joseph was a prophet of God and that this work is the work of the Lord. He hoped and prayed that the Saints might all remain faithful in the Gospel and receive the reward of the faithful.

ELDER SEYMOUR B. YOUNG

was the next speaker. Referring to the Unitarian conference held in Salt Lake City some time ago, he said: There were many different speakers present, having various ideas of the plan of salvation. Among them was one Latter-day Saint Elder, and when he was called upon to speak he said something like this, that our God had obtained His exalted condition of supreme knowledge and intelligence from a lower condition, something like that of His children on the earth at the present time. There had been an advance. At the conference, there was a reverend gentleman who replied somewhat like this: Though this gentleman (referring to the Elder of our Church) may think he knows something about the intelligence of the Almighty, yet he (the reverend gentleman) could not except the doctrine of the Mormon Elder. Yet, as far as true sympathy for mankind had been expressed, and the desire for all good to come to the human race, he could advance with the former speaker and unite his faith and prayers with him.

The tendency of the age is not to know how to serve God acceptably, but to gratify our own desires, to gain the fleeting happiness in the present without looking very far into the future and without regard to a happiness to come. At the same conference another gentleman arose and remarked that all men had essentially the same desires and would go to the same heaven—that, in his view, all had received light and knowledge sufficient to guarantee them a flowery path to heaven. This seems to be the idea of many people at present.

The words of Paul to the Ephesians are sometimes quoted in support of this view: "For by grace are you saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God. Not of works, lest any man should boast." But we must remember that this was said to those who had already received the Gospel as taught by Paul. They had received, been baptized, etc. To these the Apostle could say they were saved by grace and not by works. But they had already done the works required by the Gospel. Works had not been excluded by grace.

At the late conference of the Young Men's and Young Ladies' Mutual Improvement Associations Apostle Lyman explained the meaning of prayer and of exercising faith in the Lord. He dwelt upon the fact that even prayers should be appropriate for the occasions. The prayer offered in the hearing of a congregation, for instance, should be consistent with the occasion for which the gathering was held. A family prayer would not be proper at the opening of a divine service. At such an occasion we should rather ask our heavenly Father to bestow His Spirit on the speakers and hearers. At the close of a meeting a simple thanksgiving and prayer that our memories may be strengthened to treasure up the word of God would proper. And the congregation should respond with Amen to the prayer. The speaker said he liked that idea. When he spoke before a congregation he always felt blessed and gratified when the hearers repeated the word "Amen" after him. This was to him a sign that the sentiments expressed were endorsed, and it would foster a kind, brotherly feeling between speaker and congregation.

In regard to the remarks made by the previous speaker, Elder Young said, we have not all of us yet reached to a perfect understanding of the Gospel. There is a necessity constantly to be reminded of the "Word of Wisdom." This was given with a promise that the observer of the rules laid down should receive certain blessings. We need to be reminded of this, for we are still in a school and need the admonition of our brethren and have to be taught the first principles. The Word of Wisdom should be considered earnestly and be obeyed just as much as the commandment to be baptized. No command of God is unessential or can be disregarded without retarding our advancement in His Kingdom. If it is necessary that we should be baptized, it is equally binding to accept the command of the Lord to abstain from the things God said were not good for us to have.

There is a feeling among the young that they have plenty of time to sober down and enter the service of the Lord in earnest. There is a parable about a man who employed laborers in his vineyard. He commenced in the morning and at noon he hired more men. As the day advanced others were called. When the evening came, all received equal wages, no matter how long they had been working. Hence some think they can commence late just as well as early, and receive the same reward. This is also the argument used by some of our Christian friends. But when we think of this matter carefully, we notice that those laborers came into the vineyard just when they were invited to come. And it was their faithfulness after they had received the message that entitled them to the wages.

It is said that God is a jealous God who visits the sins of the parents on the children to the fourth generation, on those who hate Him, but showeth mercy unto thousands who love Him and keep His commandments. Mercy is the Gospel of Jesus Christ, redeeming the sons and daughters of the fathers. The sin of unbelief is taken from the fathers because of the faith and diligence of the children, who can lift the curse not only from their own shoulders but from those of their ancestors as well. This is mercy.

Then, when the unbeliever says, you worship an unjust God, his argument is futile, because of the saving clause which shows God's mercy which makes the Gospel of universal application. It will finally reach most of Adam's sons and daughters.

Our parents before accepting the Gospel were in a school, as it were. They had learnt some principles of truth, but desired to know more of it. When they were told that God had again revealed Himself and taught men His will they rejoiced and felt as if liberated from a prison. They were willing to go forth and receive of the fulness of the Gospel. All who have received the truth, all Saints, have this feeling of joy and universal love for the human family. None is satisfied to have received the Gospel himself, but all want their neighbors to hear it also. So the Gospel is preached with its various principles, including repentance, forgiveness of sins, good works, etc.

From time to time the Lord revealed to those who have accepted the Gospel such things as are necessary for their advancement. Among the first commandments given were to keep the Word of Wisdom, to observe the Sabbath day to keep it holy; not to profane the name of the Deity, but speak of it with a feeling of reverence in our hearts, and in no wise to be disrespectful to the Lord. When we were taught these things we were expected to profit by them and be prepared to advance a step further. Let us go on to perfection and not have to be constantly reminded of what was God's word to His people when they first believed in Him.

Every blessing we can think of belongs to the Gospel. The sick shall be healed by the power of the Priesthood, which has been given with the Gospel. If any be hungry or naked and full of sorrow, they shall be made happy by the administrations of those who bear the Priesthood. Thus the Gospel is all in all, bringing happiness with it for time and all eternity.

The choir sang the anthem, "Let the Mountain Shout for Joy," and the congregation joined in the Doxology. Elder Willard Done pronounced the benediction.

THE PAVING AWARD.

About the only topic that seems absorbing in business circles today, especially among those who have to pay for it, is the paving question, and speculation as to whether the City Council this evening will be as manifestly unfair and show such a decided disposition in favor of alien interests as the board of public works has done. I have not met a person who regards the award to the Barber people as just and proper, while the opinion to the contrary is universal and sometimes expressed in language more forcible than polite. Nor do many people hesitate to reflect on the integrity of some of the officers who favor this award, the injustice being so glaringly apparent. But it is with another phase of the situation that I desire to call your readers' attention, as it is something every citizen should know.

A careful perusal of the specifications shows me that the board and the council have the undoubted right of not only rejecting any or all bids, but of so dividing the contract as to give the curbing to one party bidding, the blocking to another, and the asphaltum to still a third, and it is difficult to understand why this was not done. The Culmer-Jennings bid on the curbing was the lowest. All things being equal, they should have the job. The Ryan-Griffin bid on the blocking was the lowest by considerable, and I believe they are fully competent and responsible and should have that part awarded them. Then the Culmer-Jennings people were much the lowest bidders on the asphaltum work, and, besides, were the only bidders who agreed to use Utah material. Most positively these are the two best reasons that could be offered to entitle them to get the contract. Why were they thus discriminated against?

Again, a little figuring shows that if the board had the money interests of the city at heart, this segregation of the bids would result in a saving of $9420 to the abutters who have to pay for it.

Another very interesting phase of the story is this, as can be verified at the office of the city and county assessors: The Barber Asphalt Co. contribute not one blessed cent either for property, income, school, special or poll tax, nor have they ever done so in this city.

The Culmer-Jennings company, who propose to use wholly Utah material, money and labor; have the following record: The firm itself, through its individual members, pays city, county, territorial, school, special and poll taxes, amounting to about $3,250 per year. Besides this they are principal stockholders in the Mountain Stone company and Wasatch Asphaltum company, whose products it is proposed to use if the contract is awarded to them. Other stockholders in these companies are such well known heavy taxpayers as Eliza Morris, J. H. Rumsel, S. J. Lynn, John Beck and others. To be brief, I have estimated that these people have, in the past twenty years, paid more money in taxes alone than this whole award amounts to. This is a remarkable showing, and if taken into consideration by the "powers that be" ought surely to influence in favor of the Culmer-Jennings company, as against any of the other bidders.

H. C. JAMES.

CITY COUNCIL.

Certain members of the City Council are fast acquiring a reputation for tardiness. When the appointed time for the commencement of the transaction of business arrives, their seats in the council chamber are invariably unoccupied. Tuesday night was no exception to the rule. Three-quarters of an hour was lost for the lack of a quorum.

On motion of Rich, Beardsley was chosen chairman in the absence of President Loofbourrow. The members present were: Rich, Folland, Hardy, Horn, Evans, Heise, Lawson. Later on Simondi, Moran, Wantland and Loofbourrow entered. Mr. Beardsley vacated the chair in favor of President Loofbourrow.

The minutes of the last regular session were read, amended and approved.

PETITIONS.

The West Side Hotel Company asked to be allowed to construct its own sidewalk. Committee on streets.

John A. Monk and other Green Street residents complained that they had paid taxes for the extension of water mains but the work was not done. Committee on waterworks.

Ephraim J. Bench asked for the removal of a water ditch running through his property. Committee on Jordan canal and irrigation.

ELECTRIC WIRE DISPUTE.

The Bell Telephone Company sent in a communication saying that the street railway company had put in a misleading statement in regard to the interference of their wires with the telephone wires. They claimed that when the street railway company extended its lines out State street the interference with the telephone wires was so great that they asked and obtained permission to string their wires to Murray, the Penitentiary, etc., on Second East street, and after that time the street-car company had moved upon that street without legal authority. They also said that all their wires were operated upon ordinary return wires, and that the remedy suggested by the street railway company was therefore impracticable. The disturbance of their wires could only be remedied by the removal of the street-car wires from that street. Laid on the table.

THEY WANT PROTECTION.

The following communication was then read:

To the Honorable City Council:

Gentlemen—The undersigned respectfully represent that in February, 1880, they received certificates of election setting forth that they had been duly elected members of the Salt Lake City Council, and on those certificates they took their seats in the Council and served the city for about seventeen months, and received the regular salary for that service.

The legality of our election was contested in the courts, and the Supreme Court of the Territory decided in favor of our contestants. We at once vacated our offices, and the contestants took their seats on the Council. These contestants have now brought suit against us to recover the salary that the city paid to us while we served in the City Council. We claim that inasmuch as the certificates of election were regularly issued to us by the duly constituted authorities we did our duty in entering upon the duties of the office, and the city having accepted of our services and justly paid us the salary we should now be protected against loss or annoyance in regard to the same.

If a mistake was made, it was not our mistake, and we should not be made to suffer on account of doing what we believed every good citizen will admit was our duty (what other course could we have taken? We could not presume to act as judges of the election). Our action has resulted in clearing away the doubt which hung over the integrity of the law governing elections in this city, and it seems proper to us that the city should save us harmless in this matter. We therefore respectfully ask that you assume the defense of the suits mentioned above which have been instituted against us.

L. E. HALL.

DANIEL WOLSTENHOLME.

T. C. ARMSTRONG.

Referred to the committee on claims, with the Mayor and city attorney associated.

A LIVELY AWAKENER.

To the Hon. City Council, Greeting:

A long year ago the citizens of West Salt Lake handed you petition after petition asking to have the water nuisance between Sixth and Seventh West streets abated, and since the present administration has been in power we have renewed your attention time and again to the shameful sanitary condition of the block bounded by Fourth and Third South streets and Sixth and Seventh West streets.

W. H. Rowe and others also submitted a similar petition, in which they urged that home material be given the preference. The Culmer-Jennings Paving Company was purely local firm of contractors, and they thought that the people who will have to pay for the improvement should have some voice in the selection of the material to be used. The Culmer-Jennings Paving Company also protested against the use of Barber asphalt. The home company showed that it had done good work in various parts of the city; that the Barber people brought their asphalt from South America; that it had never spent a cent on the development of the city or county. On the other hand if the contract was awarded to the home company the money would be spent here. The home company had spent $50,000 in putting in a plant, and it thought the citizens would all prefer that the work be given to Salt Lake people.

FOR ATTENDING EXTRA MEETINGS.

The city marshal sent in a communication in which he asked the council to appropriate $75 for his deputy who attended the meetings of the board of equalization. Committee on police.

A NEW PRISON.

The committee on prisons recommended the erection of a new city jail and asked that the council invite architects to submit plans for such a building. Adopted.

APPOINTMENT CONFIRMED.

On recommendation of the police committee the appointment of F. A. Schultze as policeman was confirmed. The same committee reported adversely on the petition to appoint Thomas Darney as Pioneer Square policeman. Adopted.

MORAN WANTS RECOGNITION.

President Loofbourough as chairman of the committee on municipal laws asked for more time to consider the eight hour labor ordinance and the measure granting a franchise to the Indiana Natural Gas company.

Moran—I am willing to give the committee all the time it needs, but, as a matter of common courtesy, I want it understood that I wish to appear before that committee when it meets. As the introducer of the original ordinance I think that is my right.

Rich—I understand that a secret meeting was held this forenoon, at which some labor union men were present. I wish to know if they were invited.

The chair—Well, I will say this: Some of the members of the Federal Trades' Council asked me when they could appear at my office. I appointed the time and they came. That is all there is to it.

WANTS HELP.

Hardy said as Mr. Ewing had resigned and Mr. Karrick never attended a meeting of the sprinkling committee he was left single handed and alone, and he thought the chair should appoint some one to consult and work with him as he had a number of important matters before him.

The chair promised to make the appointment.

THAT JAIL MATTER AGAIN.

Moran offered the following: Resolved, That the committee on prisons be authorized to advertise for competitive plans for a new city jail.

Folland—I think that the recorder is the proper person to advertise for such plans.

The motion to adopt was lost.

Wentland moved that the recorder be instructed to advertise for plans in accordance with the committee's report. Carried.

Moran sprang the point of order that the motion would involve the expenditure of money and would have to go to the Mayor.

Simondl declared that it did not.

Lawson took issue with Simondl and said that he knew positively that it would involve the expenditure of money.

Further discussion was cut off by the chair announcing that the motion would go to the Mayor without reference.

FAILURE TO PAY.

Moran introduced a resolution providing that the failure of a city employee to pay his just debts should be sufficient cause for his discharge.

Simondl—Is it the intention to make a collective bureau of this city?

Moran—No, sir; but it is the intention to prevent them using this city to protect them in their dishonesty.

Simondl—Well, we'll all have to go then.

Moran—There are entirely too many dishonest characters in the employ of this city today.

Simondl—Don't be personal, Mr. Moran.

Wentland—I agree with the spirit of the resolution but not with the letter. I think the theory all right.

Rich—it is plain and inequival. The same rule is now adopted by railroad companies and other large corporations. The railroad companies compel their employees to sign a contract that they will pay their bills. He did not think that Mr. Wentland understood the proposition.

Lawson and Evans both spoke in support of the resolution. They said there were men employed by the city today who were professional "dead beats," and it was a disgrace.

Hardy said he was opposed to the employment of any man who would not pay his just debts.

Folland moved that the resolution be so amended that an employee could not be discharged except for failure to pay a second time.

Rich opposed the amendment. Folland said he did not believe in being too severe. He did not think every man was a thief. He presumed that even the city had some honest employees. (Laughter.)

Wentland moved an amendment by inserting when "he wilfully refuses to pay."

Lawson said that such a man did not live.

Evans moved that it lay on the table. Lost.

AFTER THE RAILROAD COMPANY.

Folland moved that the Mayor enforce the resolution passed by the City Council asking the Rio Grand Western to gravel and improve Sixth West street. Adopted.

DISGRACEFUL PARK KEEPING.

Lawson offered the following:

Whereas, The present park keeper has demonstrated his unfitness for the position as evidenced by the dead and dying trees in every park in the city, by the large expenditure of money and no visible improvement, by the unsafe condition of the driveway, rendering the driving of horses therein dangerous, by the industrious cultivation of flowers for private use; therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the City Council that the park keeper be removed and that the mayor be requested to appoint a competent person to fill the position.

Moran moved that it be laid on the table indefinitely.

Wentland thought that it should go to the board of public works as a charge was made against an officer of the city.

Lawson said that if some of the members would visit the park they would not sit by and smile. It had become a disgrace among all citizens. The city was paying $600 a month.

For what? For allowing its trees and shrubbery to die from lack of proper attention.

Rich said he had investigated the matter thoroughly and knew that Lawson was correct in his conclusion. Hundreds of trees worth thousands of dollars had been allowed to die.

The resolution was referred to the Mayor.

THE GARBAGE ORDINANCE AGAIN.

The long delayed and much muddled garbage ordinance again came up for consideration last night. Before proceeding to read it the recorder announced that the original was not on file in his office. It had been read twice and amended and turned over to Dr. Beatty of the health department. The paper from which he was reading was a copy.

Some of the members expressed their doubts as to whether the ordinance would be legal if passed by reading from the copy instead of the original.

Finally the matter was taken up. The third reading was finished at midnight, after which further action was postponed until the next meeting.

APPROPRIATIONS.

William Barkins	$ 75 00
Pacific Paving Company of Utah	13 50
Mountain Stone Company	17 00

There was a special meeting of the City Council last night for the purpose of considering the advisability of ratifying the contract entered into by the board of public works with the Barber Asphalt company of New York for grading, curbing and paving with stone blocks and asphaltum Main street, between South Temple and Third South Streets, and First and second South streets, between State and West Temple streets, in all eight blocks.

The Councilmen present were: Rich, Hardy, Folland, Karrick, Moran, Bell, Evans, Wentland, Heles, Beardsley, Simondl, Lawson.

In the absence of President Loofbourough Horn was chosen chairman, and in the absence of Recorder Stanton, his deputy, Mr. Ellsworth, performed the clerical labors.

The auditorium of the Council chamber was filled with the representatives of the contracting paving companies and their friends.

THE RULES SUSPENDED.

Under a suspension of the rules the following communications from the Mayor and marshal were read:

THAT PARK KEEPER.

The following from the Mayor was read:

To the President of the City Council:

In regard to the resolution introduced by Councilman Lawson relating to the park keeper, and referred to me, I beg to say that the statements of the resolution are reckless and untrue. It is asserted therein that the park keeper's unfitness for the position, among other things, is demonstrated by "the industrious cultivation of flowers for private use." Upon such a vague and uncertain charge as this it would be against all precedent to call upon the accused to answer.

These insinuations ought not to have been made unless the author is in possession of the facts. Common fairness to the park keeper, who bears a good reputation in the community, demanded that the facts should have been stated with such particularity as to advise these used of what he was required to meet. When such a charge shall have been made I will call upon the park keeper to confront his accusers, but not until then.

In regard to the other matters of the resolution I ask that a committee, composed of one councilman from each precinct, be appointed to make an investigation and report the results to the Council.

Moran moved that the communication be received and filed.

Lawson said he did not understand why Moran had made such a motion. The charges in the communication were all true. Besides that he knew that there were a great many other charges against the present park-keeper which could be substantiated by a visit to the park. He would take pleasure in taking the Mayor down there and show him that his statements were not reckless.

Watland moved that a special committee of five, one member from each precinct, be appointed to investigate the charges. Carried.

MORE POLICEMEN.

The following from the Mayor was also read:

To the President and City Council:

Gentlemen:—I hereby appoint M. Canton as policeman on the police force in place of C. L. Ford; also B. F. Walker in place of Dan Carson; also W. F. Hill and Al Estes as policemen on the regular police and respectfully submit these appointments for confirmation.

In this connection I call your attention to the third section of an act amended incorporated cities, page 55 of revised ordinances; which provides that the Mayor shall have power to appoint by and with consent of the council, the regular police, the number of which may from time to time be presented to the City Council.

After diligent search I have been unable to find any ordinance, resolution or motion, fixing the number of the regular police. The requirements of the police service demands at least five more regular policemen in addition to the number which will compose the force after the confirmation of the persons above appointed. The confirmation by the Council will cause the omission by the Council to fix the number, yet I think it would be better for the Council, by ordinance or resolution, to fix some limit. Respectfully submitted.

Committee on police.

JANNEY'S RESIGNATION.

The resignation of Edgar M. Janney as city marshal and jailer was read.

Lawson moved to refer the matter to the committee on police.

Moran moved to amend by accepting the resignation. He took it for granted that when a man tendered his resignation he meant business.

Rich said he didn't comprehend why some of the gentlemen were so ready to snap at the bait offered. It should go to a committee for investigation. He didn't believe in kicking a man when he was down.

The resignation was accepted on a vote of eight to five.

PLEAS FOR HOME PAVING MATERIALS.

Inasmuch as the Wasatch Asphaltum company by the success of its asphaltum paving on Richards avenue and elsewhere has proven that its Utah material is well fitted for this kind of work, and as the success of this enterprise will afford employment to home labor exclusively and cause the development by bona fide citizens of an important mineral resource of the Territory, the undersigned absters on the property about to be paved respectfully urge that this material be used exclusively in the asphaltum pavement of Salt Lake City in future, provided it is satisfactory to the city engineer and the board of public works. Having to pay for these improvements ourselves, we believe we are right to influence the choice of materials used.

DON'T COME FROM SOUTH AMERICA.

W. H. Rowe and others also submitted a similar petition, in which they urged that home material be given the preference.

The Culmer-Jennings Paving company was a purely local firm of contractors, and they thought that the people who will have to pay for the improvement should have some voice in the selection of the material to be used. The Culmer-Jennings Paving Company also protested against the use of Barber asphalt. The home company showed that it had done good work in various parts of the city; that the Barber people brought their asphalt from South America; that it has never spent one dollar in the development of the city or county. On the other hand if the contract was awarded to the home company the money would be spent here. The home company had spent $50,000 in putting in a plant, and it thought the citizens would all prefer that the work be given to Salt Lake people.

MORE REASONS WHY.

The Culmer-Jennings Company's protest and the offer of the business men to make the difference between the Culmer-Jennings Company and the lowest bidders were also read.

Then came another lengthy communication, asking that home material be used; signed by F. Conner, Charles R. Snelgrove, Utah Block and Stationery Company, D. M. McAllister, I. M. Waddell, B. W. Darke, P. T. Nyström, S. B. Newman, George Openshaw, George D. Alder, George D. Alder & Son, Robert Clegg, George Arbogast, A. W. Taylor, Heber Young, Fuller & Young, David Evans, E. J. RYAN AND GRIFFIN'S OBJECTION.

Gentlemen,—We beg leave to lay before you a few facts and suggestions in regard to the discrimination against us and in favor of the Barber Asphalt company of New York, by the board of public works, in the matter of the contract for paving of Main, First and Second South streets in this city, and to ask that you will reject the proposed contract with the Barber Asphalt company and award the same to us for many good and substantial reasons, among them the following:

First—The bid of the Barber company was and is informal; did not conform to articles 2 and 12 of instructions to bidders, and under the rules established by the board should not have received any consideration.

Second—The board made an unfair and misleading calculation to show the difference in the total price under our respective bids. Instead of our bid being $175 the lowest, as erroneously reported by the board, it is actually $4525 the lowest, as will fully appear from the following statement. The estimates of the city engineer of the amount of work and material involved in the contract is 11,600 linear feet of block paving.

15,000 square yards of block paving.
29,000 square yards of asphalt paving.

The Barber Company's bid is:
10,000 feet curbing at $1.01..... $11,110
15,000 square yards block paving at $2.75..... 41,250
29,000 square yards asphalt paving at $3.18..... 92,365
Total..... $145,325

Ryan & Griffin's bid is:
11,600 feet curbing at $1.15..... $13,340
15,000 square yards block paving at $2.55..... 38,250
29,000 square yards asphalt paving at $3.10..... 90,900

Total..... $142,500
Difference in favor of Ryan & Griffin, $2,825.
This certainly is a sum worth saving to the city.

Third—The board is mistaken when they assert that the standing reputation and record of the Barber company is such as entitles it to special consideration. Its record in Omaha, Denver, St. Joseph, New York and Buffalo and other cities where it has operated and laid pavements is such as to cause any person or corporation dealing with it to use great caution and to resolve all doubt against it.

Fourth—We have grading and paving outfits, machinery and materials in hand and at our command that will enable us to commence and vigorously prosecute the work within forty-eight hours after the contract is awarded us.

Fifth—We are citizens and taxpayers of Salt Lake, and will employ Salt Lake workmen and also Utah material, unless the council or board of public works desire other material, when we are willing, ready and able to comply with their wishes.

Sixth—We offer as bondsmen the well known capitalists and citizens of Salt Lake City, Matthew Cullen and Allen G. Campbell. Instead of demanding a return of $3,500 as required by the board for the faithful performance of the contract we stand ready and offer to give bonds for the full amount of the contract price, or $140,800.

In conclusion let us say we offer to take and fulfill the contract with first-class work and material, under a perfect bond and guarantee to the city, and at a price absolutely $1,525 lower than any other bidder.

Gentlemen, will you not award us this contract? Respectfully submitted, RYAN & GRIFFIN, Contractors.

Accompanying the above communication was the following affidavit:

D. S. Griffin and P. L. Reece, being duly sworn, say that on or about Monday, Aug. 6, 1892, in behalf of Ryan & Griffin, bidders for paving, we took and deposited in the rooms of the board of public works all the samples of the articles and materials called for by the advertisement and instructions to bidders on the contract to pave Main streets, First and Second South streets. These specimens were properly marked and labeled, and consisted of samples of granite and sandstone to be used in paving and curbing, Utah asphalt, California asphalt, bituminous rock, cement, sand and gravel. That if the same were lost, removed or stolen it was not with the knowledge, consent, or procurement of said Ryan & Griffin; that on the 30th day of August we learned for the first time that some of said samples had been mislaid or lost; that this was in no manner the fault of the said Ryan & Griffin, and said Ryan & Griffin never withdrew from the board of public works and the Council samples of said articles and materials.
D. S. GRIFFIN,
P. L. REECE.

THE PAVING CONTRACT.

The board of public works submitted the contract for the Main and First and Second South street paving, stating that the committee had executed a bond in the sum of $35,000 with John Sharp and C. W. Lyman. The board then says that the bid of the Barber company is $175 higher than the lowest bid, and gave the following reasons for accepting the higher bid: First, the Barber company is an old established company, having long experience and a national reputation as contractors for asphalt pavements. Second, they have every facility necessary to execute the work, and are able, in our opinion, to do it more promptly and efficiently than any other bidder. Third, it is the unanimous opinion of this board that the interests of the property owners will be best served by awarding the work to the Barber company, and we therefore act and recommend accordingly.

The bids were as follows:

Culmer-Jennings Paving company of Salt Lake City—

Curbing.....90 c per linear foot
Paving with granite blocks $3.54 per square yard
Paving with sandstone..... $3.44 " "
Paving with asphalt..... $2.90 " "
Paving with bituminous or asphalt rock..... $2.90 per square yard
(Bondsmen—S. W. Morrison and E. C. Coffin.)

Houlahan, Griffith and Morris of Salt Lake City—

Five-inch curbing..... $1.90 per linear foot
Paving with granite block $3.27 per square yard
Paving with sandstone..... $3.32 per square yard
Paving with bituminous or asphalt rock..... $3.31 per square yard
(Bondsmen—R. C. Chambers and George Y. Walker.)

Ryan and Griffin of Salt Lake City—

Five-inch curbing, sandstone..... $1.15 per linear foot
Five-inch curbing, granite $1.40 per linear foot
Paving with granite block $2.75 per square yard
Paving with sandstone..... $2.55 per square yard
Paving with bituminous or asphalt rock..... $2.55 per square yard
Paving with asphalt..... $2.55 per square yard
Paving with bituminous or asphalt rock..... $2.55 per square yard
(Bondsmen—Matthew Cullen and Allen G. Campbell.)

Hobson and Wikerson of Ogden—

Five-inch curbing..... $1.16 per linear foot
Paving with granite block $1.45 per square yard
Paving with bituminous or asphalt rock..... $1.45 per square yard
(Bondsmen—E. C. Coffin and Seth W. Morrison.)

Barber Asphalt Company of New York, by E. C. Squires, attorney in fact—

Five-inch curbing, sandstone..... $1.01 per linear foot
Paving with sandstone..... $2.75 per square foot
Paving with asphalt..... $3.18 per square foot

Paving with asphalt..... $3.18 per square foot
(Bondsmen—S. W. Lyman and George Y. Walker.)

Folland moved that the bid of the Barber Asphalt company be rejected. Hardly seconded the motion.

Rich moved that all the representatives of the competing bidders be allowed to present the claims of their respective companies.

Evans seconded the motion.

Beardsley moved to limit each speaker to fifteen minutes.

Simond moved to amend by limiting them to ten minutes.

Moran said he was not opposed to hearing from each of the firms but he was certainly opposed to them speaking from any other standpoint than that set forth in the specifications. He moved as a substitute that each representative be allowed to speak as long as he wished—all night if necessary.

THE BARBER CO'S STATEMENT.

Mr. Squires of the Barber Asphalt Company that the "large experience" of his company comprised the laying of 7,000,000 square yards. As to the point that his company wished to erect here would be permanent. Its cost would be at least $20,000 exclusive of the ground on which it would be erected. It was true that their material was brought from the West Indies; it was mined by cooler. It was used because it had no equal so far as discovered. If Utah asphalt should prove a success, the Barber company would become layers of the same, it had several thousand acres of asphalt ground in this Territory but it had not been sufficiently tested. As to the labor to be employed they would only bring five men here; the remainder would be Utah workmen. The five men referred to were experts and could not be found in Utah. One would be superintendent; two foremen and a taker.

Rich—Mr. Squires, What proportion of your material is imported?

Mr. Squires—Three per cent.

Moran—The specifications call for ten per cent. of asphaltum.

Mr. Squires—I mean simply three per cent. of the base and covering. Your specifications only refer to the top covering.

Wanlaud—Is it not your intention to use Utah material if it will stand the test?

Mr. Squires—Yes, sir, and employ Utah laborers to lay it.

THE CULMER-JENNINGS COMPANY.

H. L. A. Culmer of the above named company said all the members of his firm were bona fide residents of the Territory; they had been identified with its interests from their childhood. Again, ours is the lowest bid properly offered. He did not know, but he understood there were interrelations in the bid of the Barber company; this was a violation of the specifications. He had demanded of the chairman of the board of public works to be allowed to examine the Barber bid after it had been opened and become a public document but for some unaccountable reason he refused absolutely to show them. In numerous ways the bid of the Barber company was informal and he said it should be rejected.

If the home company was to be thrown out to one side for the benefit of foreigners, it would mean the death of the Wasatch Asphalt company, and then what other asphalt company would follow in its train. It would mean that the big asphalt deposits of Utah would forever remain untouched. "Can you," he asked, "as representatives of the public, afford to take such a course? We confidently expect you to do what you ought to do, and you ought to give it to us."

As to the cement and grading, they were all practical workmen. Our cement street paving on Richards street cannot be surpassed. Our side walks on West Temple street, have no superior. We have made attempts many times to introduce our material into several cities of the United States, but we are always met with the question, have you done any great amount of paving to your own city? Of course, we have to answer in the negative much to our own chagrin and the city's shame. We don't have to send out for three per cent of material. We have it all here, workmen, picks, shovels and all.

We would like to have you go out to North Salt Lake and examine our plant and see that our facilities are adequate.

Can you perform the work in the time specified in the contract?

Mr. Culmer—Our certified check of $10,000 is a guarantee of that.

Evans—How much does the contract call for this fall?

Mr. Culmer—Two blocks by the 1st of December.

Evans—You say that you can do that.

Mr. Culmer—Nothing would be easier.

RYAN AND GRIFFIN'S CLAIM.

Mr. Griffin of Ryan & Griffin spoke for a few moments in favor of the contract being awarded to his firm. He reiterated the arguments made in his letter above. They believed in the use of home material and would use it if it was as good as any other. Their plant was the equal of any. They had never made a failure of any job they had undertaken. It was because of their knowledge of the business that they were enabled to underbid all competitors. The Barber company's bid was informal and should not be recognized—in fact the bid of Ryan & Griffin was the only complete one before the board of public works. They were the lowest bidder by $175. The plant they expected to put in would cost $18,000. If the contract were awarded to them the paving would be pushed to completion at the earliest opportunity. The firm was entirely responsible. It had done but very little asphaltum work, but it was able and capable of employing skilled labor.

Ribb—Do you live here, Mr. Griffin?

"I do."

"Do you own property?"

"Yes, sir."

"And pay taxes?"

"Yes, sir."

These replies were not expected by the close questioning councilman from the Third precinct as he had been furnished with a statement from the assessor's books during the day to the effect that Mr. Griffin's company paid no taxes here whatever. From the same source it was ascertained that the Culmer-Jennings people paid taxes on $371,600.

Wantland wanted to know whether it would be necessary to readvertise for bids in case the Barber company's proposition was rejected. He wanted an opinion from the city attorney on the matter.

The Chair—If that official has an opinion on the question he can give it. Judge Hoge made no attempt to reply.

Lawson believed it would not be necessary. The contract could be let at once.

Folland stated that he had been looking up the law in the matter, and was of the opinion that readvertising was necessary.

Beardsley said he understood that it was a free for all race. Men bid as men, and expected to be treated as such. There was one firm—Ryan & Griffin which had seemed to be a responsible one.

Horn said he was in favor of rejecting all the bids.

After considerable more discussion the council adjourned until Tuesday next at 7:30 p.m.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The city school board met in regular session last night, Vice-president Nelson in the chair. The members in attendance were: Alf, Young, Raybould, Pratt, Newman Duke, Dooy and Baldwin.

The following from Sears & Liddle, glaziers, was read: "We agree to furnish glass and glaze the same in all the district schools of the city at 50 per cent. off the list."

Referred to the committee on sites and buildings.

LAND LEASING PROPOSITION.

The Mountain Ice and Cold Storage company submitted an offer for a lot adjoining the reservation on Third South street, which they would be pleased to lease. The lot is 330x192, and they offer to lease same for three years at $37.50 per month, with permission to remove buildings at end of time. Referred to committee on sites and buildings.

SITES AND BUILDINGS.

The committee on sites and buildings submitted an extended report, in substance as follows:

First—That contract has been entered into with Hendley & Meyer of Denver for heating and ventilating in Lincoln school, in the Sixth ward, with such changes as have been suggested, and the same will be signed within ten days.

Second—We ask that contracts be signed for the Lincoln school in duplicate and the remaining one held in abeyance.

Third—We recommend that the bill of R. Kietling for $1000 for the Washington school be allowed and 80 per cent. be appropriated of that amount.

Fourth—We recommend the purchase of rubber tread for the Twenty-first and the Bryant schools.

Fifth—We report that the two rooms in the Westminster church be leased at $40 per month.

Sixth—Your committee have received two bids for removing soil from the rear of Bryant school. One for $128.50 and the other for $95, and recommend the approval of the latter.

Seventh—We recommend that the bid of John Green as scavenger for $75 per month be accepted.

Eighth—Your committee recommends that the increase in depth and width of the foundation to the Jackson school be made as asked, as we are satisfied that no other location every way as suitable as the present can be found, and also recommends that the contract for $5000 be signed.

Ninth—We recommend that two months' additional time be granted Mr. Harrigan on this building.

Tenth—The following bids were opened on the 31st for the Third school building: White & Shay, $32,600; Salt Lake Building company, $32,850; W. H. Joy, $32,800; Reiben & Co., $31,850; Croxford Bros., $31,780; William Lister, $31,400; S. C. Sherrill, $31,800; and the committee will report at the next meeting on the same.

Eleventh—The committee can procure a room 20x30 on Fourth South, between Tenth and Eleventh East, for $12, to be used in lieu of Exposition building, and recommend that it be secured.

Twelfth—The committee have a bid of $168 for painting the old building at Bryant school and recommend its acceptance.

Thirteenth—We herewith present an abstract and opinion of attorneys as to lot 2, block 19, and recommend the payment of $4800 for the same.

Fourteenth—The committee also recommend that suitable rooms be secured for the use of the high school, centrally located, etc., provided that at least three members of said committee approve of the same.

COMMITTEE ON SCHOOL WORK.

Baldwin submitted the following from the committee on school work:

First—We request authority to print rules, blanks and labels to be prepared by the superintendent to keep track of books, etc.

Second—We recommend that one week's holiday be allowed for the Christmas season.

Third—We recommend that during the second and third terms (December to March) schools open at 9:30 in place of 9 a.m.

Four—That notice be given of the opening of school, time of examination for high school and the furnishing of books and supplies free to be given in the daily papers. Report adopted.

JANITOR APPOINTMENTS.

To the Honorable Board of Education:

FAITH IN THE OPERATIONS OF GOD

MANY intelligent people throughout the world regard the present disturbed condition of human affairs as a manifestation of divine displeasure because of the wickedness of this generation. The cholera has been spoken of in this connection by persons who have faith in God. We have shown that such views are not inconsistent and that current events are in exact harmony with the prophecies of Joseph Smith, the theme of whose predictions deals largely with events of the times. There is also a class of cynics in the world who are always ready to answer at people who express any belief in divine interference with human concerns. They treat with ridicule any evidence of faith in Omnipotence with respect to the present phenomenal situation of earthly matters.

Those people who exclude God from exhibiting his hand in connection with the family of man have recourse to the worn out argument, if such it can be properly called, that diseases like cholera have swept the earth at different periods of the world's history, and it is therefore absurd to regard the present visitation as a judgment of God because of wickedness, and that it is especially ridiculous to claim it to be a latter-day divine scourge. It is not claimed by any intelligent Christian that the Almighty creates a new force or condition by which to accomplish his purposes. It is only held that the existing elements are used for the object, and that they are merely shaped and operated by divine intelligence so as to attain the end in view. Because those conditions have existed in different ages does not support the theory of the non-interference of Deity.

It is asserted by those who combat the views of people who are enabled, by faith, to see the hand of God upon the nations, that the cholera scourge is merely caused by ignorance and neglect of proper sanitation, and by peculiar atmospheric conditions. Is it true, however, that the world is retrograding in an understanding of sanitary science and its application, while advancing in every other department of learning and its use for the benefit of man? Such an assumption is not creditable to the age we live in. And with regard to atmospheric conditions, are they or are they not directed by divine intelligence? Who is prepared to assert and maintain the negative of this question? Such a position might be assumed, but its intelligent maintenance would be attended with herculean difficulty.

Who, for instance, has discovered the primary cause of cholera? It is easy to answer flippantly that the causes consist of imperfect sanitation and peculiar atmospheric conditions, but these would only operate as dependent causes, producible by others. Then, it is easy to say that the primal cause is bacteria of a specific and peculiar kind, known as cholera germs. These again are not the primary cause of the disease. To discover it one must go behind the germ. So far as known no person has been able to do this. If it were possible to do this then, the scientific production of these bacteria would be possible. If this manufacture were within reach, then the eradication of the germs would be practicable by the extinguishment of the causes of production. And even if these discoveries should be made, that would not prove that divine intelligence did not make use of such means in order to accomplish providential purposes.

There are some peculiarities about cholera which do not appear to have been explained in harmony with the theory of unbelievers in divine interference with human concerns. If, for instance, the visitations of this disease are merely due to the absence of proper sanitation and certain conditions of the atmosphere, how is it that the malady is not always present when sanitation and the atmospheric situation are precisely similar as at times when it puts its appearance and does its deadly work?

In reasoning thus we do not wish to be understood as supporting the idea that the scourge is not encouraged and fed by uncleanness and conditions of the air. But that is merely a matter of modification or aggravation and does not belong to the present argument. Then again, it is a peculiarity of the scourge that, whenever it has swept the globe, it has, after having worked havoc upon the people, disappeared with phenomenal suddenness, without any apparent change having occurred in relation to material conditions. What has destroyed the germs and caused the malady to take its flight? It is not an unpleasant belief nor an illogical inference to attribute the disappearance to a manifestation of divine mercy.

History furnishes many proofs of the wickedness of nations being paralleled by calamitous conditions. The record of ancient Israel furnishes an object lesson in that respect. When the Romans were simple and comparatively moral, they were mighty and prosperous. When they became voluptuous, malicious and corrupt they were visited with every a series of affliction. In fact it would be difficult to find a clear instance in history of a nation or generation which was comparatively righteous being visited with scourges and disruptive conditions entailing untold suffering.

A belief in the manifestation of the divine hand in human afflictions does not imply that those who possess it attribute vindictiveness to Omnipotence. It is a recognition of the operation of the laws of nature and of God. When the statutes of God's universe are trampled upon, the consequences must follow, not only that justice may be upheld, but it ensues also as a corrective process provided in the divine economy. The believer in the dispensations of divine providence recognizes the hand of God as much in the showering upon the nations of blessings, as in the infliction of chastisement consequent upon broken laws.

DISCOURSE

Delivered by President Geo. Q. Cannon, on Sunday, September 4th, 1892, at the Conference of the Salt Lake Stake, held in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City.

[REPORTED BY ARTHUR WINTER.]

The proceedings of this conference have thus far been exceedingly interesting, and I am sure that everyone who has attended its sessions will feel amply repaid for the time they have spent in the meetings. I trust that during the remainder of this conference we shall be blessed with the presence of the Spirit of God, that the very things which should be said in the way of instruction and counsel may be said, and that we may look back to these days with pleasure in recalling our feelings and that which we have listened to.

It is very gratifying to hear the reports which have been made concerning the condition of this Stake. Although I reside in the Stake, I am absent so much that I did not have a clear conception as to its actual condition. I was, therefore, greatly pleased to hear the reports which were made as to the standing of the people who profess to be members of the Church, and also as to their deportment, as well as the manner in which the Elders labor and their labors are received by the people. It certainly is gratifying to learn that there is a disposition to avoid everything like contention or litigation. The position that I assume is this: When Latter-day Saints are living as they should live there ought to be no trials before the Bishops or High Council. There should be no difficulties of this character; but every man should be willing to concede, even if he feels that he is in the right and that the person who contends with him is in the wrong. The Savior taught the doctrine that when men sue you at the law for your coat, give to them your cloak also. I believe in that doctrine, although it is difficult, doubtless, to carry out under present circumstances. But when Jesus taught that doctrine He expected those who believed in Him to teach it and carry it out. The spirit of the Gospel is embodied in those teachings. "Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also." Some may say that this is impracticable, and unnatural; but we have proved in our experience that it is perfectly practicable. And the God we worship will bless those who carry out the teachings of His Son Jesus. If we are animated by His Spirit, we will seek to do as He did. We shall love one another. We shall seek to do each other good. We shall prefer another to ourselves. We shall be unselfish in our associations and our dealings; and no man is so exacting, and determined to have trouble, concede to him that which he demands, if it be in our power, and let the wrong be upon him. Suffer wrong rather than do wrong, and leave the result with the Lord. This is the ideal society of a Christian; and it is the mode of life that our Lord and Master enjoined upon His followers. It should be the aim of the Latter-day Saints to so live as to have this Spirit constantly with them.

Therefore, I was greatly pleased this morning to hear that there was a decrease of trials before the High Council and the Bishops' courts. I trust this decrease will continue until quarrels and difficulties will entirely cease among us. We expect to make this earth a heaven, with the help of our God, and let us begin now and carry out these principles that will make it heaven. I know that in doing this we are blessed. God has blessed those who have submitted to wrong and have not sought to retaliate or wreak vengeance. He has blessed us in manifesting in our lives the spirit that the Lord did. He said, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do," and this, too, in the hour of His agony, when hung upon the cross. When we think of Him, the Lord of life and glory, the Creator of the earth, coming down and submitting Himself as He did to ungodly men, to be spat upon, to be reviled, to be mocked, to be crowned with thorns, and then to be crucified, and all this with the utmost patience, carrying out in His life the teachings that He left on record for humanity, it ought to be a never-to-be-forgotten lesson to us to seek for the same spirit and to make it practical by carrying it out in our lives. The beautiful part of the Savior's life is that He never taught a principle that He did not practice. This should be so with His followers. They should seek to practice that which they profess, and to do everything in their power to benefit their fellow men; not those alone who are their friends, for Jesus said the publicans did that; not to benefit those only who benefit us, to return good to those who do good to us, but to do good to all men—to those even who may be unfriendly to us or who may do us injury. The doctrine that Jesus taught was to do good to them, that His followers might show that they were the children of God, who let His sun shine upon the good and the evil, and causes His rain to descend upon the just and the unjust, and who bestows benefits upon all mankind, whether they be good or evil.

We were told this morning that God has chosen this people. It seems almost like arrogance, no doubt, to those who do not know the people, to make such a statement; but it is nevertheless a true. We are not the only ones, however, whom He has chosen or called. He has called upon all men. But we have been so favored that our hearts were touched by the message when it was brought to us and we were prepared to receive the glad tidings. The rest of mankind are equally entitled to these favors with ourselves. God has not selected a few out of His family to receive special blessings to the exclusion of the rest. But He has placed these favors within the reach of all. He has manifested His willingness to bestow every blessing connected with the Gospel of salvation upon all mankind. But it is a remarkable fact that there are very few comparatively who are prepared to receive His word and the testimony of His servants whom He sends forth. Now it might be thought, looking at it in the abstract, that every human being, if he were told that God had spoken again from the heavens, would be anxious to know whether that statement was true or not, especially in this day, when there is so much confusion among men concerning God and His plan of salvation. But, as I have said, it is a remarkable fact that there are very few who seem to care anything about it. I suppose this is due to the fact that there is a general and an all-pervading unbelief concerning God's willingness or power to speak again to mankind. The teachings of the religious world for generations past have been to the effect that God had ceased to communicate His mind and will to man; that He had withdrawn Himself from any active interposition in the affairs of the children of earth; and this has been so long taught and so widely believed that when men hear it said that God had spoken again from the heavens, they distrust the statement; they believe it to be a delusion, and content themselves with the idea that such a thing is impossible. I speak now of men who believe that there is a God. Of course there is a large number of the human family who have persuaded themselves that there is no God; but where there is a belief in God, this unbelief concerning His willingness to speak to the children of men has taken possession of their minds.

One of the features that has distinguished those who are now Latter-day Saints from their fellows in the lands where this Gospel has been preached is this: they did believe that there might be revelation from God. If they did not believe it entirely, they hoped, at least, that the statement might be true; and those who have traveled to preach this Gospel have found a class of individuals scattered throughout the nations that had a desire in their hearts to know concerning the will of God. They were dissatisfied with existing forms of religion. There was something that did not satisfy their desires and the yearnings of their hearts. They wanted something more tangible than they were able to obtain around them. These souls have been found in every land where the Elders of this Church have traveled, and when they heard the testimony that God had spoken from the heavens once more, and that they could know this for themselves, they were possessed with a desire to take the course pointed out and obtain a knowledge as to whether this statement was a true one or not. The Latter-day Saints who were gathered to these mountains, and who joined this Church after they were told, sought to comprehend the doctrine, are all of this class. I do not suppose that an exception can be found throughout the entire people. They had a great and overpowering anxiety to know concerning the things of God; and when they heard the message of the Elders testifying that God had again spoken, that He had sent heavenly messengers to the earth, and had restored the authority that was once upon earth—the authority to administer the ordinances of life and salvation—and had also restored the Holy Ghost and the gifts that were possessed by the Church in the days of the Savior, they felt as though they would give all they had in the world if it were true, and taking the advice of the Elders who bore this testimony, they went out in secret and humbled themselves before the Lord and called upon Him in the name of Jesus to give them a testimony concerning its truth. From Canada in the north to Mexico in the south, thousands and thousands of people who live throughout these valleys can arise and bear solemn testimony, before high heaven and before their fellow men, that God did reveal to them in an indisputable manner that He had done all that the Elders testified He had. It is a marvelous thing to see men and women of so many nationalities congregated together throughout these mountain valleys and all of one heart and mind, and of one belief, bearing similar testimony; some speaking in one language and some in another, but all united in bearing this testimony to which I have referred, that they have actually received from the Lord a testimony concerning the divinity of the religion that they have espoused.

It is one of the strangest things in the world that men and women will see such a great movement as this, so peculiar in all its phases, so phenomenal, it may be said, and yet not bestow attention upon the movement sufficient to investigate it or to learn whether it be true or false. But this is the condition. I have often thought, and expressed myself to others to this effect, that with my cast of mind and with my mode of thought I could not witness that which I see in these valleys without being impelled to investigate it. Everything connected with it is so different from that which is elsewhere to be seen that I could not rest content until I had examined it. But it is a strange fact that thousands pass through this Territory, listen to the testimony of the Elders concerning the divinity of this work, and go away without any apparent impression being made upon them.

Now, this is true or it is false. God has spoken from the heavens or He has not spoken. God has restored the everlasting priesthood that was upon the earth in former days, or He has not. God has restored the authority to administer the ordinances of life and salvation, or He has not done so. God has built up His Church according to the ancient pattern, and placed within it all the officers that were in the original Church, or He has not done it. God has restored the everlasting Gospel, with the gifts and ordinances in their plenitude, or He has not done it. There is no middle ground upon which anyone can stand in regard to these questions. That which we state is true, or it is absolutely false. Part of it cannot be true; it must be true in its entirety, or it is false in its entirety. Under these circumstances, what will mankind do about it? Will they pronounce it false without investigation? If they do, then it speaks very poorly for their love of truth and for their desire to know God and to comprehend the principles of salvation; and certainly in the day of the Lord Jesus they will be held accountable. No man can witness that which is being done in these mountains and escape condemnation, if he does not examine these things. As sure as he lives, and as sure as there is a day of judgment, when we shall all have to answer to God for our obedience or disobedience to the truth, no sure will every human being that has heard about this Gospel and that has witnessed that which has taken place in these mountains be held to a strict accountability for it—that is, he will either be justified or condemned for embracing or for rejecting this work. I know that a great many entertain the idea that condemnation cannot follow until everyone has been borne testimony to. This is true, to a certain extent. But condemnation will follow those who witness so stupendous a work as this going on and do not examine it. It is a witness that should leave them without excuse. It is not as though men said this was the work of men. No man has taken the credit to himself for building up this Church. The followers of John Wesley called themselves Wesleyans. He was the founder of that sect. John Calvin was the founder of the Calvinists, or Presbyterians. Luther was the founder of his sect. So it has been with the founders of all the Protestant denominations. Each has borne the name of its founder. But in this case this has not been done. Joseph Smith claimed no credit, and no member of the Church which he was the instrument in the hands of God of founding, has given him any credit for this work. Somebody had to be chosen. God does not send angels to do the work of man. He gives man the authority. God does not send resurrected beings to do that which man can do, and you need never expect that He will do so. But He ordains men, giving unto them the power and the authority that they need in the flesh; and in this way this Church was established. The Elders that have gone forth to carry this Gospel to the ends of the earth have made no pretensions to do this in and of themselves. They have universally declared that what they did was through the power and blessing of God, and the outpouring of His Holy Spirit upon these who have received their testimony. Therefore, this organization is not in any sense a man-made organization, according to the testimony of those who are connected with it; but it is an organization that God has founded. If there be union among this people, it is not Joseph Smith, nor Brigham Young, nor any other man that has brought it about. If there is love among the people, and if they are bound together by ties, such as are not known among other men, the credit is not due to any individual or body of individuals; it has not been the cunning, or the craftiness, or the shrewdness of any man's body of men. But it is the remotest part of the earth where the Elders have gone they have gone accompanied by the Spirit of God. They have not gone because they were educated in theological seminaries, or colleges, or universities. They have been taken from the shoemaker's bench, from the blacksmith's forge, from the plow, from the merchant's desk, and from every avocation of life, as God has called them, just as it was in ancient days, when they left their fishermen's nets, at the call of the Savior, to preach the Gospel. This work that we now witness has been accomplished by men of this character, to whom there is no glory to be ascribed. It is all due to God, to the outpouring of His Spirit in answer to prayer, and in conformity with the promises that He has made. We send out yearly scores, and perhaps hundreds, of missionaries; boys in many instances, who have never had any experience in public life or in public speaking; but where they have gone filled with the spirit of their missions, they have found honest souls willing to listen to their testimony. They have said to them, if you do that which God says, you shall know for yourselves that this is true. They have told the people to believe in Jesus, to repent of their sins, to be baptized, and they should receive the Holy Ghost. When people have believed this, they have gone and been baptized, and they have received the Spirit; and when they have received it, it has made them one. The inhabitants of Southern Africa, of Asia, of the Polynesian Islands, of Great Britain and the continent of Europe, of Australia and New Zealand, have heard this Gospel preached in this way, and some have believed

It, and have received a testimony from God that it was true. The Holy Ghost has descended upon them, and they have had the gifts of the Spirit of God. As we were told this morning, the sick have been healed in answer to prayer, according to the words of the Apostle, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick." The blessings that God promised should follow the believer have answered the preaching of this Gospel, wherever the Elders have carried it.

Any man who visits through these valleys will say the people here are different to any elsewhere. If his eyes are not blinded by prejudice, he will be forced to acknowledge this. He will see a people living together in love, and helping one another. We were told this morning in the report that there are 1700 people in this State being supported by the offerings of the Latter-day Saints here. We have record of that, and there is a great deal done that no record is made of. At our last meeting every Thursday in the month the people contribute to the support of the poor. They impart of the substance for one another's benefit. There was a time, not many years ago, before the railroad was completed, that 500 teams, four yoke of cattle to a team, were sent annually to the frontiers to bring up poor people. Where on the earth can you find people doing such things, and without pay—carrying flour and other provisions, and cooking that on the way, to that they would have a supply as they returned? Five hundred teams, with four yoke of cattle each, means two thousand yoke of cattle; five hundred drivers, with guards, amounting to nearly six hundred men; five hundred wagons, and provisions to supply all these and the immigrants. What was this for? Was it to make money out of these poor people? No; it was because they believed it was their duty to assist the poor, and they spent their time and means freely for that purpose. This was done year after year before the railroad was completed. Who ever heard of such things being done among men in these days? Why was it done? Was it to build up a few individuals? No; it was to save the children of men, bodily and spiritually; to bring to them salvation in every way; to save them from poverty and sin. If we had our way, there would not be a liquor saloon throughout these mountains. There would be no gambling den. There would be no houses of ill fame. There would be no places where the young could be seduced and led astray. The most delicate woman might travel unattended from the extreme north of our settlements to the extreme south without ever hearing an improper word, or witnessing an improper gesture, or having anything done to her that would cause a blush to mantle her cheek. This was the way we did live. I do not talk about this as though it was a theory. We have lived this way in these mountains. Drunkenness was unknown, profanity was unknown, gambling was unknown, whoredoms were unknown, violence was unknown. I speak now in general terms. If we had our way, we would make these mountains as safe as the streets of the New Jerusalem, so far as violence is concerned. But we do not have our way. In the providence of God, this is denied to us at present. But it will come, because truth is in the earth, and God has spoken concerning it, and it will spread until it weeps the earth as with a flood. The time has come for righteousness to be introduced; and though it seems so hopeless a thing to establish it, nevertheless, it will be done, because God has said it shall be done, and His word cannot fail. Wickedness will be abolished. I thank God for this promise. I thank God that I live in a day concerning which He has made such promises. I thank God for my posterity, and for the hopes that can be indulged in concerning them; that if I should pass away, the generation to come will witness the fulfillment of these things. The heavens have lent themselves to this. God has promised it, and in order that it might be established, He has revealed Himself from the heavens, and has sent angelic being to give man the power and the authority to build up His Church in His ancient purity and power. And there is no power on earth that can stop it. They may kill men. This is in the power of man to do. They have done it. They can rob and destroy, burn and drive out, as they have done. Nevertheless the chariot of the Almighty will roll on and nothing can stop its advance. There is no power can prevent the accomplishment of the purposes of God concerning these last days. We shall have scourges, wars and pestilences, and perhaps famine, and various visitations, to cleanse the earth; for God has said it shall be cleansed, and His word will be fulfilled. The Scriptures are full of predictions concerning this, and these things will come to pass.

It is to escape these dreadful calamities that God has given to those who give heed to His message the spirit of gathering; and no man ever embraced this Gospel, no matter where he lived or to what race he belonged, without having immediately a desire in his heart to gather with the people of God; and men and women have left their homes and everything that they valued on earth for the sake of gathering with their brethren and sisters in this distant land. Now, this is a strange thing. But you are witnesses to the truth of it. These facts which I recite are well known to you. Among the hundreds of Elders that are here, not one of them, I am sure, ever knew a man or a woman to join this Church, in sincerity, without being seized with a desire to leave their home and to join the people of God. In every land and among every people this has been the case. It is the universal effect that accompanies the preaching of this message. Why is this? Because God has blessed them in the last days. Scourges and calamities will be poured out upon the wicked, and you know how it was in the days of Lot—the angel of God had to hurry him out before the city could be destroyed; it could not be done until he got out. The Lord does not want the righteous mingled with the wicked if he is going to pour out calamity and destruction. Therefore, He has given this spirit unto the people who have received His Gospel in the last days; and if all the inhabitants of the earth would receive it, then the earth would be converted into just such a place as Zion ought to be; in fact, it would be Zion. But while there is a large element of those who will not receive the Gospel, and who will persist in their wicked ways, it is necessary that those who receive the Gospel should gather out to the place which God has designated. And it will be the same with the Jews, as is moving upon the Jews. His ancient covenant people, and their minds are directed toward Jerusalem, and they will leave the nations after a while and go to their own land—the land of Palestine—and fulfill the predictions of the holy Prophets concerning that land. This is a gathering dispensation—a dispensation when God will gather all things together, and when there will be a separation, at least to some extent, between the righteous and the wicked. This is the reason why the Latter-day Saints have gathered together as they have done. This is the reason why they did not break up and scatter when they were driven from their possessions in Missouri and in Illinois. They could not do it; it would be doing violence to every feeling of their nature. They could have made money by scattering through the different cities when they were peeled and stripped of everything; but they could no more do that than they could deny their religion. The spirit of their religion was to gather together, and they clung together. Those who stayed behind lost the spirit of their religion; while those who came out here retained it, and have retained it in the great majority of instances ever since. A man that belongs to this people can no more scatter from this people than he can do anything else that is wrong. It is a strange fact, but nevertheless true.

This is one of the evidences that God has given that it is our duty to gather together and to remain together. We feel best when we are together, and we feel very badly when we are separated from each other. How shall this be accounted for? If we do not give the glory to God, to whom shall we attribute this? What is it that has sprung up in the minds of these two hundred thousand Latter-day Saints in this Territory that makes this a peculiar characteristic of theirs? Was it Joseph Smith's power? Was it Brigham Young's shrewdness? Was it, or is it, the power of any other man? Certainly not; it is preposterous for anyone to imagine such a thing. It is implanted in every heart, and it cannot be eradicated. It is the power of God, and nothing short of that. It descends upon those who receive the Holy Ghost, and remains with them as long as they nourish and cherish it.

Brethren and sisters, we ought to be thankful that God in His infinite mercy has condescended to pour out upon us His Spirit. It has been the joy of my entire existence. The sense of loneliness that, it seems to me, I would have if I did not have this Gospel would be overpowering. But here I am connected with my brethren and sisters, the children of God, in this life, and if I am faithful I shall be connected with them by indissoluble ties in eternity, and we shall go on doing the works of righteousness in eternity. We will make this earth a heaven sooner or later; for the time has come for Satan's power to be broken. And those who will not repent will be destroyed. Riches will not save men. Wealth will not procure deliverance from this fate. Riches may accomplish its ends in certain places, as it does too frequently. The use of wealth is exceedingly potent just now. Man can do almost anything with wealth, a demon with it are practicing great wrongs. This is one of the evil signs of the times. The meek among men do not have much voice in the affairs of the world, and the honest and the humble have to take low seats; but the proud, the wealthy and the arrogant lord it over their fellow men, and rejoice in that which they accomplish by the nefarious means that they sometimes use. But God has not forgotten this earth, nor His children upon it. The cries of the humble ascend in His ears. The cries of the poor and the destitute are heard by Him, and He will have regard to them and will come to their deliverance. There will be a great overturning one of these days. We can see already the premonitory symptoms, and it will go on until wickedness is abolished and righteousness established. Then we will have what the Scriptures call the Millennium. Satan would not have much power now if he did not have men to listen to him; but as long as he has a large contingent of men and women who will listen to him and do that which he wants them to do, he has power. But his power will be broken, and he will be bound, because he will have no place in the hearts of the children of men. God will pour out His Holy Spirit in such power that they will strive to do right and keep His commandments; and Satan's power will cease. I look forward to this just as much as I look forward to this sun setting tonight and rising tomorrow morning. I know all these things of which the prophets have spoken will come to pass. I see the growth of this work. I see thousands of these Latter-day Saints, with all the temptations that surround them, faithful. They do not become drunken because liquor is abundant and easily procured. They do not become gamblers because there are facilities for gambling. They do not cheat because they have an opportunity to do so. They do not oppress their neighbors because money is desirable. There are some, of course, who are still victims to the temptations, that are around us, and Satan's power. I can bear testimony that they have not lost their heads by the reduction of wealth; but they do have a regard for principle. We are going to be tried in this direction. We have been tried before by mobs. We have been tried with legal prosecutions. Our integrity has been tested to some extent. Now we shall be tried in other directions, and it will be seen whether we will yield to the seductions of sin, or whether we shall be steadfast and maintain principle. God has set us as a light upon a hill, and all men's attention will be drawn to us. It is becoming more and more so, and I hope to see the contrast between our methods and our way of doing things and the ways of the world so striking that most attention will be drawn to these, and they will be led to do better themselves and to have respect for that which God is doing in the earth.

I have a few words that I want to say before this meeting closes in relation to the testimony that God gives concerning this work. I have heard it said: "If this be the work of God, why don't He come and tell people that it is His work? Why don't He send angels. If He wants to save all the children of men, and give such evidences that they cannot dispute?" Now, this is a very plausible way of speaking. But do you know that God never did this. Why does He not do it? That is His business. When Jesus, His Only Begotten Son, came, He gave testimonies to those who were seeking for them; and no honest heart ever sought to know concerning the mission of Jesus and His divinity without receiving a testimony of it. But they did not receive it by God Himself visiting them. They did not receive it by angels coming and ministering unto them. They received it in the way that God pointed out. So in these days, God has given abundant testimony to those who will receive it. Now, it may be said, as it has been said, that there are thousands and millions of honest people in the earth, and why should the Latter-day Saints be selected and these others be left in ignorance? For the reasons that I have stated, that the Latter-day Saints have received the testimony. They have sought to know whether it was true or not; the others have not. Therefore, whatever their sincerity, and whatever may be their moral worth, they have not done that which they should do in order to know for themselves whether this is the Gospel of the Son of God or not. We have the case of the Savior. When He was upon the earth He ministered to those who were of Israel. He did not go among the Gentiles. Could not the Gentiles have said that He was not treating them fairly? You remember what the Savior said on one occasion, that "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs." Rather a harsh expression from the Son of God; it might be thought. But He did not visit the Gentiles while he was in the flesh. After His resurrection He came and showed Himself on this continent, according to the record that we believe in, to the house of Israel. He went also, we are informed, to the ten lost tribes. He visited only the house of Israel, for reasons which He understood, and which were sufficiently cogent to Him to justify Him in the course He took. What has He said concerning the Gentiles? The Holy Ghost should be poured out upon the Gentiles. Peter and Paul and all who labored among the Gentiles testified of this. Their labors were attended by the outpouring of the Holy Ghost upon the people. Some people think, "If I had only the ministrations of an angel, it would satisfy me." Do you know that when you receive the Holy Ghost you receive something that is greater than an angel? The Holy Ghost is one of the Godhead. When we are baptized we are baptized in the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Jesus, therefore, instead of visiting the Gentiles Himself, sent the Holy Ghost to them, His companion, so to speak, in the Godhead, the ministering spirit of the Father and the Son; and when He gives it unto you, you receive God; and it is a much more powerful testimony, and ought to be a more convincing one, than the ministrations of an angel. The ministrations of an angel appeals to our outer senses. We see with our eyes. But we may be deceived; for Satan, it is said, is able to transform himself almost like an angel of light. But not so with the Holy Ghost. When that descends upon a man, he knows it, and the testimony which it gives cannot be taken away. A great many people look for outer signs and think they would convince them. Our experience in preaching this Gospel is that men have seen the sick healed and mighty miracles performed, and they have joined the Church on the strength of this, but in very many instances they have lost the faith afterwards, because their outer senses were appealed to and not their souls. But when the Holy Ghost descends upon a man, God is with him as long as he retains that spirit, and it is a spirit that will always bear testimony to him. Men talk about the gift of prophecy. There are numbers of people who are prophets and are not members of our Church. They do not know that they have the spirit of prophecy, but how often is it the case, in our experience among mankind, that people have manifestations concerning things that will happen? They call them presentiments. But they are the manifestations of the spirit of God. The difference between the Latter-day Saints and others in this respect is that we have taken the course which God has required, and through which this spirit will be given, and it will grow and increase until it becomes perfect knowledge within us. God bless you and help us all to be faithful to the truth all the days of our lives, in my prayer in the name of Jesus. Amen.

PRESIDENT HARRISON'S LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3, 1852.

Hon. W. McKinley, Jr., and Others, Committee, Etc.

Gentlemen—I now avail myself of the first period of relief from public duties to respond to the notification, which you brought me June 30, of my nomination for the office of President of the United States by the Republican national convention. I accept the nomination, and am grateful for the approval expressed by the convention of the wisdom of the administration. I have endeavored, without wavering or weariness, as far as the direction of public affairs was committed to me to carry out pledges made the people in 1858, if the policies of the administration have not been distinctly and progressively American and Republican the fault has not been in purpose, but in execution. I shall speak frankly of the legislation by Congress and of the work of the executive departments, for the credit of any successes that may have been attained is in such measure due to others, Senators and representatives, and to efficient heads of the several departments, that I may do so without impropriety. A vote of want of confidence is asked by our adversaries, and this calls for a review of what has been done, we promptly and gladly accept.

The great work of the Fifty-first Congress has been subjected to a revision of the Democratic House of Representatives, and the acts of the executive department to its scrutiny and investigation. A Democratic national administration was succeeded by a Republican administration and the freshness of events has given unusual facilities for fair comparison and judgment. There has seldom been a time, I think, when a change from the declared policies of the Republican to the declared policies of the Democratic party involved such serious results to the business interests of the country. A brief review of what has been done and of what the Democratic party proposes to do will justify this opinion.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY, during the great civil war, devised a national currency consisting of United States notes issued and redeemable by the government and of national bank notes based upon the security of United States bonds. A tax was levied upon issues of State banks, and the intended result that all such issues should be withdrawn, was realized. There are men among us now who never saw a State bank note. Notes furnished directly or indirectly by the United States have been the only safe and acceptable paper currency of the people. Bank failures have brought no fright, delay or loss to bill holders; notes of an insolvent bank are good as current as treasury notes, for the credit of the United States is behind it. Our money is all national money, I might almost say international, for our bills are not only equally and indiscriminately accepted at par in all the states, but in some foreign countries.

The Democratic party, if entrusted with control of the government, is now pledged to repeal the tax of State bank issues with a view to putting into circulation again, under such legislation as the states may adopt, a flood of local bank issues. Only those who in the years before the war experienced the inconvenience and loss attendant upon the use of such money, can appreciate what a return to that system involves. The denomination of the bill was no indication of its value. A bank detector of yesterday was not a safe guide today as to credit or values. Merchants deposited several times during the day, lest the hour of bank closing should show a depreciation of the money taken in in the morning. The traveler could not use in a journey to the East issues of the most solvent banks of the West, and in consequence a money changer's office was a familiar neighbor of the ticket office and lunch counter.

The farmer and laborer found the money received for their products and labor depreciated when they came to make their purchases, and the whole business of the country was hindered and burdened.

CHANGES MAY BECOME NECESSARY but the material system of our currency is safe and acceptable throughout the whole country. It is fruit of bitter experience, and I am sure our people will not consent to the reactionary proposal made by the Democratic party. Few subjects elicited more discussion or attracted more general interest than that of the recovery by the United States of its appropriate sphere of the ocean carrying trade. This subject touches not only our pockets but our national pride. Practically all the freight transportation to Europe, the enormous annual supplies of provisions furnished by this country, and the large manufacturing products has for many years been sold to foreign shipowners.

Ten thousand immigrants annually seeking homes under our flag, have been denied the sight of it until they entered Sandy Hook, while increasing thousands of American citizens bent on European travel had each year stepped into foreign jurisdiction at the New York docks. Merchandise, the real balance of trade, the treasury books, how is largely reduced by the annual tribute which we pay for freight and passage money. Glance at the ships, the fastest upon the sea, which are now in peace profiting by our trade. They are in a secondary sense war ships of their respective governments, and in time of war would, under existing contracts with those governments, speedily take on guns for which their decks are already prepared, and enter with terrible efficiency upon the destruction of our commerce. The undisputed fact is, the steamship lines of Europe were built upon and are now in part sustained by direct or indirect government aid, the latter taking the form of liberal pay for carrying mails or of an annual bounty given in consideration of agreements to construct the ships so as to adapt them for carrying armament and turn them over to the government on demand upon specified terms. It was plain to every intelligent American that if the United States would have such lines, a similar policy must be entered upon. The Fifty-first Congress enacted such a law, and under its beneficent influences sixteen American steamships, of an aggregate tonnage of 5400 tons, and costing $7,400,000, have been built or contracted for in American shipyards. In addition to this it is now practically certain we shall soon have under the American flag one of the finest steamship lines sailing out of New York for any European port. This contract will result in the construction by American yards of

OUR NEW PASSENGER STEAMSHIPS of 10,000 tons each, costing about $8,700,000, and will add to our national resources six steamships, the fastest upon the seas.

Special interest has been taken by me in the establishment of lines from our South Atlantic and Gulf ports, and, though my expectations have not as yet been realized, attention has been called to the advantages possessed by those ports, and when those people more fully awake to their interests I do not doubt they will secure the capital needed to enable them to profit by their great natural advantages. The Democratic party found no place in their platform for any reference to this subject and has shown its hostility to the general policy by refusing to extend the appropriation made during the last administration for ocean mail contracts with the American lines. Patriotic people, workmen in our shops, capitalists seeking new enterprises, must decide whether great ships owned by Americans which have sought American registry, shall again humbly ask a place in the English naval register. Great ships now on the designer's table go to foreign shops for construction. The United States has a brightening opportunity of recovering a place commensurate with its wealth, the skill of its constructors, and the courage of its sailors in the carrying trade of all the seas. Another related measure, as furnishing increased foreign traffic for our ships and of great and permanent benefit to farmers and manufacturers as well, is the reciprocity policy declared by section 3 of the tariff act of 1878, now in practical operation with five nations of Central and South America, San Domingo, the Spanish and British West India Islands, and with Germany and Austria, with several trade arrangements with each. The removal of the duty on sugar, and the continuance of coffee and tea on the free list, while giving great relief to our own people by cheapening articles used increasingly in every household, was of such enormous advantage to countries exporting these articles as to suggest the continuation thereof if reciprocal favors should be shown in their tariffs to articles exported by us to their markets. Great credit is due Mr. Blaine for the vigor with which he pressed this new upon the country. We have only begun to realize the benefit of these trade arrangements, work of creating new events and adapting our goods to new markets. It has necessarily taken time, but the results already shown are such, I am sure, as to re-establish a rule in favor of the policy of RECIPROCAL TRADE upon free importation of such articles as do not compete with the products of our own farms, mines and factories, in exchange for free or favored introduction of our products into their countries. The obvious efficacy of this policy in increasing the foreign trade of the United States at once attracted the alarmed attention of European trade journals and boards of trade. A British board of trade presented to government a memorial asking for the appointment of a commission to consider the best means of counteracting what is called the commercial trade of the United States.

At a meeting in March last of the associated chambers of commerce of Great Britain the president reported that exports from Great Britain to the Latin-American countries during last year decreased $23,750,000, and this is due not to temporary causes, but directly to the reciprocity policy of the United States. Germany and France also have shown a startled appreciation of the fact that a new and vigorous contestant has appeared in the cattle markets and already secured important advantages. The most important work of the commercial strength of our position is found in the fact that Great Britain and Spain found it necessary to make special trade agreements with the rest of her West India colonies and that Germany and Austria have given us important concessions in exchange for the continued free importation of their best sugar product.

A few details as to the increase in our trade can be given here. Taking all the countries with which arrangements have been made, our trade to June 20, 1892, had increased 23.78 per cent. With Brazil the increase was nearly 11 per cent. With Cuba during the first ten months our exports increased $3,902,193, or 54.8 per cent. The liberal participation of our farmers in the benefits of this policy is shown by the following report from our consul-general at Havana under date of July 26th last. During the first half year of 1891, Havana received 140,650 bags of flour from Spain, and other parts of the island about an equal amount, or approximately 208,112 bags. During the same period Havana received 18,976 bags of American flour, and other parts approximately an equal amount, making about 20,000 bags. But for the first half of this year Spain has sent less than 1000 bags to the whole island and the United States has sent Havana 168,780 bags and about an equal amount to other parts of the island, making approximately 337,000 for the first half of 1892. Partly by reason of the reciprocal trade, but more largely by reason of the removal of the sanitary restrictions, the American export of pork products to Guines increased during the ten months ending June last $202,570, or about 32 per cent.

THE "BRITISH TRADE JOURNAL" of London, in a recent issue, speaking of the increase of American coal exports to Cuba, says: "It is another case of American competition. The United States now supply Cuba with about 150,000 tons of coal annually, and there is every prospect of this trade increasing as the forests of the island become exhausted and the use of steam machinery on the estates is developed. Alabama coal especially is securing a reputation in the Spanish West Indies and the manufacturers and improvements of the Southern States will undoubtedly create an important gulf trade. The new reciprocity treaty by which the United States are enabled to import Cuban sugar, will of course boost the American coal exporters even more effectually than the new lines of railway."

promises a repeal of the tariff law containing this provision, and especially denounces as a sham reciprocity that section of the law under which these trade arrangements have been made. If no other issue were involved in the campaign, this alone would give it momentous importance. Are the farmers of the great grain-growing States willing to surrender these new, large and increasing markets for their surplus? Are we to have nothing in exchange for the free importation of sugar and coffee, and at the same time to destroy the sugar planters of the South and the beet sugar industry of the Northwest and of the Pacific coast, or are we to have the taxed sugar and coffee which a tariff for revenue only necessarily involves, with the added loss of the new markets which have been opened, as I have shown? Our commercial rivals in Europe do not regard this reciprocity policy as a "sham," but as a serious threat to a trade supremacy they have long enjoyed. They would rejoice, and if prudence did not restrain, would illuminate their depressed manufacturing cities over the news that the United States had abandoned its system of protection and reciprocity. They see very clearly that restriction of American products and trade and a corresponding increase of European production and trade would follow, and I will not believe that what is so plain to them can be hidden from our own people. The declaration of the platform in favor of the American doctrine of protection meets my most hearty approval. The convention did not adopt a schedule, but one principle is to control all the tariff schedules. There may be differences of opinion among protectionists as to the rate upon particular articles necessary to effect an equalization between wages abroad and at home. In some not remote national campaigns the issue has been, or more correctly has been made to appear between a high and low protective tariff, both parties professing a solicitude regard for the wages of our working people and for the prosperity of our domestic industries. But under a more courageous leadership the Democratic party has now practically declared that if given power it will enact a tariff law without any regard to its effect on wages or upon the capital invested in our great industries. The majority report of the committee on platform to the Democratic National convention at Chicago contained this clause, that "when custom house taxation is levied upon articles of any kind produced in this country, the difference between the cost of labor here and abroad when such a difference exists, fully measures any possible benefit to labor and the enormous additional importation of the existing tariff fall with crushing force upon our farmers and workmen." Here we have a distinct admission on the Republican contention that American workmen are advantaged by a tariff equal to the difference between him and foreign wages, and a declaration only against the alleged "additional impositions of the existing tariff."

Again this majority report further declared: "But in making a reduction in taxes it is not proposed to injure any domestic industry, but rather to promote their healthy growth. Moreover, many industries have come to rely upon legislation for successful continuance, so that every change of law must at every step be regarded of labor and capital and business interest." Here we have an admission that many of our industries depend upon protective duties for successful continuance, and the declaration that tariff changes shall be regarded of the workmen in such industries and of invested capital. Nothing is more indicative of new and more courageous leadership, to which the party now committed itself, than the substitute which was adopted. This substitute declares

PROTECTIVE DUTIES UNCONSTITUTIONAL

—high protection or low protection—all unconstitutional. A Democratic Congress holding this view cannot enact, nor a Democratic President approve any tariff schedule, the purpose or effect of which is to limit appropriations or give any advantage to the American workmen or producer. Bounty might, I judge, be paid to the importer under this view of the Constitution in order to increase important importations.

This destructive un-American doctrine is not held or taught by history, by Democratic statesmen whose fame as American patriots reached this generation; certainly not by Jefferson or Jackson. This crusade against American ships, bitter epithets applied to American manufacturers, persistent disbelief of the opening of a tinplate mill or the increase of our foreign trade by reciprocity, are as surprising as they are discreditable. There is not a thoughtful statesman in the country who does not know the enactment of a law in harmony with the Chicago convention on the subject of the tariff would at once plunge the country into a business convulsion such as it never has seen, and there is not a thoughtful workman who does not know that it would at once formally reduce the amount of work to be done in this country by the increase of importations which would be followed by an immediate reduction of wages to the European standard.

If any one suggests that the radical policy will not be executed if the Democratic party attains power, what shall be thought of the party thus trifling with great interests, a threat of legislation would be only less harmful than the fact that a distinguished Democrat rightly described this movement as a challenge to protected industries to fight to extermination, and, another such rightly expressed logic of the situation when he interpreted the Chicago platform to be an invitation to all Democrats, even those holding the most moderate protection views to go into the Republican party.

And now a few words in regard to the existing tariff law.

We fortunately are about to judge of its influence upon productions and prices by market reports. The day of prophesies of calamity has been succeeded by that of the trade reporter. Examination into the effect of the law upon prices of protection products and the cost of such articles as enter into the living of the people of small means has been made by the senate committee composed of leading senators of both parties, with the aid of the best statisticians, and the report signed by all the members of the committee given to the public. No such wide and careful inquiry has ever been made before. These facts appear from the report:

First—The cost of articles entering into use by those earning less than $1,000 per annum, a decrease of 3 per cent., while in farm products there has been an increase in prices, owing, in part to an increased foreign demand and opening of new markets. In England during the same period the cost of living increased 1.9 per cent. Tested by the power of the purchase of articles of necessity, the earnings of our working people never have been as great as they are now.

Second—There has been an average advance in the rate of wages of .75 of 1 per cent.

Third—There has been an advance in the price of all farm products of 18.67 per cent. and all cereals 33.99 per cent. The ninth annual report of the chief of the Bureau of Labor of the State of New York, a Democratic officer, very recently issued, strongly corroborates as to that State the facts found by the Senate committee. His extended inquiry shows in the year immediately following the passage of the tariff act of 1890 the aggregate sum paid in wages in that State was $6,577,976 in excess and an aggregate production of $31,315,810 in excess of the previous year. In view of this showing of the increase in wages and of the reduction in cost of articles of common necessity and of the marked advance in prices of agricultural products, it is plain the tariff law has not imposed burdens but has conferred benefits upon the farmer and working-man.

SOME SPECIAL EFFECTS of the acts should be noticed. It was courageous to attempt to rid our people of the long maintained foreign monopoly of the production of tin plate, pearl buttons, silk, plush, lace, etc., once or twice given to the importer under this view of the constitution in order to increase important importations and revenue "for revenue only" is the limitation. Reciprocity, of course, falls under denunciation for its object and effect is not revenue, but promotion of commercial exchanges, the profits of which go wholly to our producers.

Once or twice in our history the production of tin plate was attempted and the prices obtained by the Welsh makers would enable our makers to produce at profit. But the Welsh makers at once cut prices to a point that drove America out of the business and when this was accomplished, again made their own prices. A correspondent of the Industrial World, the official organ of tin plate workers, published at Swansea, in its issue of June 10, 1892, advises a new trial of these methods. He says Do not be deceived. The victory of the Republicans at the polls means the retention of the McKinley bill and means a rapidly accruing loss of 50 per cent. of the export American trade. Had there been no Democratic victory in 1890, the spread of tin plate manufacture in the United States would have been both rapid and bona fide. It is not yet too late to do something to reduce the price of plates. Put them down to 11 shillings per box of 100, 14 by 20, full weight basis. Let workmen take half pay for a few months and turn out more, then let the masters forego profits for some time."

And again that paper says it is clearly to the interest of both employer and workman tariff or no tariff, at a price that will drive all competition from the field, but in spite of doubts raised by elections of 1890 and of the machinations of foreign producers to maintain their monopoly the tinplate industry has been established in the United States, and the alliance between the Welsh producers and the Democratic party for its destruction will not succeed. Official returns to the treasury department of the production of tin and tin plates in the United States during the last fiscal year, show a total production of 12,240,880 pounds, and a comparison of the first quarter of 825,022 pounds, with last 8,000,000 pounds, shows a rapid development of the industry. Over 5,000,000 pounds during last quarter were made from American block plates and the remainder from foreign plates. Mr. Ayer, treasury agent in charge, estimates as the result of careful enquiry, that the production of the current year will be 100,000,000 pounds, and by the end of the year our production will be at the rate of 2,000,000 pounds per annum.

TO PRODUCE TIN PLATES,

Another industry that has been practically created by the McKinley bill is making pearl buttons. Few articles coming to the United States from abroad are so distinctly the product of starvation wages, but without unduly extending this letter I cannot follow in detail the influences of the tariff law of 1890. It transplanted several important industries and established them here and revived or enlarged all others. The act gives to miners protection against foreign silver-bearing lead ores, the free introduction of which threatened the great mining industries of the Rocky mountain States, and to wool-growers the protection for their fleeces and flocks which saved them from a further and disastrous decline. The house of representatives at its last session passed bills placing these ores and wool upon the free list. The people of the west will know how destructive to prosperity these measures would be.

This tariff law has given employment to many thousands of American men and women, and will each year give employment to increasing thousands. Its repeal would throw thousands out of employment and give work to others only at reduced rates. The appeals of free traders to working men are largely addressed to prejudices or to passions and are not unfrequently pronounced communistic. The new Democratic leader rages at the employer and seeks to communicate his rage to the employee. I greatly regret that all employers of labor are not just and considerate, and that capital sometimes takes too large a share of the profits. But I do not see that these evils would be ameliorated by a tariff policy, the first necessary effect of which is a severe wage cut, and second, a large diminution of the aggregate amount of work to be done in this country.

OUR WORKMEN.

If the injustice of his employer tempts a workman to turn back, he should be very sure his blow does not fall upon his own head or upon his wife and children. Workmen in our great industries are, as a body, remarkably intelligent and are lovers of home and country. They may be roused by injustice or what seems to them to be such, or be led for a moment by others, into acts of passion, but they will settle the tariff contest in a calm light next November, and with sole reference to the prosperity of the country of which they are citizens, and of the homes they have founded for their wives and children.

No intelligent advocate of the protective tariff claims it is able of itself to maintain a uniform rate of wages without regard to fluctuations in supply of and demand for products of labor. But it is confidently claimed that protective duties strongly tend to hold up wages, and are the only barrier against a reduction to the European scale.

The South American States have had liberal participation in the benefits of the tariff law, and though their representatives have generally opposed the protection policy, I rejoice that their sugar, rice, coal, ore, iron, cotton cloths and other products have not been left to the fate which the votes of their representatives would have brought upon them. In the construction of the Nicaragua canal; in the new trade with South and Central America; in the establishment of American steamship lines—these States also have special interests, and all these interests will not always consent to be without representation at Washington.

Our adversaries speak only of increased duties imposed upon tin, pearl buttons and other articles by the McKinley bill, and omit altogether any reference to the great and beneficial enlargement of the free list. During the last fiscal year $468,000,772 worth of merchandise, or 56.55 per cent. of our total importation came in free (largest percentage in our history), while in 1889 the per cent. of free importations was only 34.43 per cent. The placing of sugar upon the free list has saved to the consumers in duties in fifteen months after paying bounties provided for, $37,000,000. This relief has been substantially felt in every household, upon every Saturday's purchase of the workman.

ONE OF THE FAVORITE ARGUMENTS against a protective tariff is that it shuts us out from participation in what is called with swelling emphasis "the market of the world." If this view is not a false one how does it happen that our commercial competitors are not able to bear with more serenity our supposed surrender to them of "the market of the world," and how does it happen the partial loss of our market closes foreign tin plate mills and plush factories? Our national advantages are protective tariff and reciprocity. This policy makes it possible for us to have a large participation in "the market of the world" without opening our own to competition. That would destroy the comfort and independence of our people.

THE SILVER QUESTION.

The resolution of the convention in favor of bi-metalism has my cordial adherence and support. I am thoroughly convinced that the free coinage of silver at such rate as will maintain equality in the commercial uses of the two coined dollars would conduce to the prosperity of all great nations of the world. One essential condition is that these dollars shall have an equal value in all commercial transactions, not only as a medium of exchange but as a measure of value; and when unequal measures are called in law by the same name, commerce is unsettled and confused, and the unwary and ignorant are cheated. Dollars of unequal commercial value will not circulate together. The better dollar is withdrawn and become merchandise. The true interest of all our people, especially farmers and working people, who cannot closely observe the money market, is that every dollar, paper or coin, issued or authorized by the government shall at all times and in all its uses be an exact equivalent, not only in debt paying, but in purchasing power of any other dollar. I am quite sure if we should now act upon this subject independently of other nations we would greatly promote their interests and injure our own. The monetary conditions in Europe within the last two years have, I think, tended very much to develop a sentiment in favor of the larger use of silver, and I was much pleased and encouraged by the cordiality, promptness and unanimity with which the invitation by this government for an international conference upon this subject was accepted by all the powers. We may not only hope for, but expect highly beneficial results from this conference, which will now soon assemble.

When the result of the conference is known, we shall then be able, intelligently to readjust our financial legislation to any new conditions.

In my last message to Congress I said: "I must yet entertain hope that it is possible to secure calm, patriotic consideration of such constitutional statutory changes as may be necessary to insure a choice of officers of the government to the people by fair apportionments and full elections. I believe it would be possible to constitute a commission non-partisan in membership and composed of patriotic, wise and impartial men to whom the consideration of questions of government need with our electric systems and methods might be committed with a good prospect of securing unanimity in some plan for removing and mitigate those evils. The constitution would permit the selection of a committee to be vested in the supreme court, if that method would give the best guarantee of impartiality. This commission should be charged with the duty of inquiring into the whole subject of the law of elections as related to choice of officers of the national government with views requiring for every elector free and unobscured suffrage and as near an approach to equality on each ballot cast as is attainable. The demand that limitations of suffrage should be placed in the ballot and only there is a just demand and no just man should resent or resist it. Every man should be made secure in the right to cast a free ballot and to have that ballot honestly counted.

Our old Republican battle cry, "A free ballot and a fair count," comes back to us not only from Alabama, but from other States, and from men who, differing with us widely in opinions, have come to see that parties and political debate are but a mockery. When the debate ended the judgment of honest majorities is to be reversed by ballot box frauds and tally sheet manipulations in the interest of the party faction in power. These new political movements in the States, and the recent decisions of some of the State courts against unfair apportionment encourage the hope that the arbitrary and partisan election laws and practices which have prevailed may be corrected by the States, the law made equal and non-partisan, and the election free and honest. The Republican party would rejoice at such a solution, as a healthy and patriotic local sentiment is the best assurance of free and honest elections.

I shall again urge upon Congress that provision be made for the appointment of a non-partisan committee to consider the subject of apportionment and elections in their relation to the choice of Federal officers.

THE CIVIL SERVICE SYSTEM has been extended and the law enforced with vigor and impartiality, there has been no dealing with the law in any of the departments or bureaus, as has before happened, but appointments to classified service have been made impartially from the eligible lists. The system now in force in all departments has for the first time placed promotions strictly upon the merit basis, as ascertained by the daily record, and the efficiency of the force is thereby greatly increased.

The approval so heartily given by the convention to all those agencies which contribute to

of the land was worthy and meets my hearty approval, as does also the declaration as to thought and conscience and the separation of church and state. The increased interest manifest in the States in education, the cheerfulness with which the necessary taxes are paid by all classes, and the renewed interest manifested by the children in the national national flag, are hopeful indications that the coming generation will direct public affairs with increased prudence and patriotism. Our interest in free public schools open to all children of suitable age, is supreme, and our care for them will be zealous and constant. The public school system, however, was not intended to restrain the natural regard of the parent, after contributions to public school fund to choose other educational agencies for his children. I favored aid by the general government to the public schools. It is gratifying to notice that many States are with commendable liberality developing their school system and increasing their school revenues to the great advantage of the children of both races.

The tariff bill of 1890 gives a better protection to farm products subject to foreign competition than they ever had before, and home market for such products have been enlarged by the establishment of new industries and development of others. We may confidently submit to the intelligent and candid judgment of the American farmer how much has been done to promote his interest. And whether in continuance and extension there is not a better prospect offered to him than the invitation of the Democratic party to give our home market to foreign manufacturers and abandon the reciprocity policy and better also than the radical and untried methods of relief proposed by other parties which solicit his support.

I often expressed my strong conviction of the value of the Nicaragua ship canal to our commerce and our navy. The project is not one of commerce, but one of necessity. It is possible, I believe, if the United States will support the enterprise, a speedy completion of the canal without taxing the treasury for any direct contribution and at the same time secure to the United States an influence in its management which is imperative.

It has been the purpose of the administration to make it not a matter of partisan politics, but patriotism and national honor, and I have very great gratification in being able to state that the Democratic members of the committee on foreign affairs have responded in true American spirit. I have not hesitated to consult freely with them about the most confidential and delicate affairs, and I frankly confer my obligation for needed cooperation. They did not regard patient but firm insistence upon American rights and upon immunity from insult injury for our citizens and sailors in foreign ports as a policy of "irritation and bluster." They did not believe, as some others seem to believe, that to be a Democrat one must take the foreign side of every international question if a Republican administration is conducting the American side. I do not believe that tame submission to insult by any nation at the hands of any other, can ever form the basis of a lasting friendship. The necessary element of mutual respect will be wanting.

The Chilean incident, now so happily and honorably adjusted, will, I do not doubt, place our relations with that brave people upon a more friendly basis than ever before. This already appears in an agreement since negotiated by Mr. Egan for the settlement by a commission of long unsettled claims between the two governments, which Mr. Egan settled advantageously to the United States. The confidence which I refused to withdraw from him has been abundantly justified.

In our relations with the great European powers, the rights of the United States and our citizens have been insisted upon with firmness. The Samoan and Behring Sea questions, which came over from the preceding administration have been, the one settled and the other submitted to arbitration upon a fair basis. Never before, I think, in a like period have so many important treaties and commercial agreements been concluded, and never before, I am sure, have the influence, national and commercial, of the United States been held in higher estimation on both hemispheres.

THERE ARE MANY UNION SOLDIERS and sailors in this country yet, veterans of an honorable struggle not remote. Increasing infirmity and years give minor tones of sadness and pathos to the mighty appeal of service and suffering, who does not listen with sympathy, and the heart that does not respond with generosity are ear and heart of alien and not of American. Now soon again surviving veterans are to parade upon the great avenue of national capital and every tribute of honor and love should attend their march. Comrade in column of victors in the parade of 1895 I am not less comrade now.

I used every suitable occasion to urge upon the people of all sections the consideration that no good cause can be promoted upon lines of lawlessness. Mob do not discriminate and punishment inflicted by them have no repressive or salutary influence. On the contrary, they beget revenge and perpetuate feuds. It is especially the duty of the educated and influential to see that the weak and ignorant when accused of crime are fairly tried before a lawful tribunal. The moral sentiment of the country should be aroused and brought to bear for the suppression of these offenses against law and social order.

The necessity for care!

DISCRIMINATION AMONG EMIGRANTS seeking our shores becomes every day more apparent. We don't want and should not receive those who by reason of bad character or habit are not wanted at home. Industrious and self-reliant lovers of law and liberty should be discriminated from pauper labor.

It seemed to me an appeal to our people to consider the question of re-adjusting our legislation upon absolutely fair non-partisan lines might find some effective response. Many partisans have had occasion to say that laws and election methods designed to give unfair advantages to the party making them would sometime be used to perpetuate in power a faction or party against the will of the people.

Of this we seem to have an illustration in the recent state election in Alabama. There was no Republican ticket in the field. The contest was between white Democrats. The Kolb party say they were refused the representation guaranteed by law upon the election boards and when the courts by mandamus attempted to right this wrong an appeal that could not be heard until after the election made it ineffectual. Ballot-boxes were thrown out or alleged irregularities or destroyed and it is asserted on behalf of the white voters of Alabama, that the officers to whom certificates have been given were not honestly elected. There is no security for personal or political rights. The power of States over the question of qualification of electors is simply to protect them against the dangers of an ignorant or depraved suffrage. We demand that every man found to be qualified under law shall be protected.

The considerate attention of the farmers of the whole country is invited to the work done through the State and agricultural departments in THE INTEREST OF AGRICULTURE.

Our pork products were for ten years not only excluded by the great continental nations of Europe but their value discredited by the reasons given for this exclusion. All previous efforts to secure the removal of these restrictions failed, but the wise legislation of the Fifty-first Congress, providing for the inspection and official certification of our meats and giving the President power to forbid the introduction into this country of selected products of such countries as shall continue to refuse our inspected meat, enabled us to open all the markets of Europe to our products. The result has been not only to sustain prices by providing a new market for our supplies, but to add fifty cents per 100 pounds to the market value of inspected meats. Under the reciprocity agreement special favors were secured for agricultural products and our exports of such products have been greatly increased with sure prospect of further and rapid increase. The agricultural department has maintained in Europe an agent whose special duty is to introduce the various preparations of corn as articles of food, and the work has been very successful. The department also sent skilled veterinarians to Liverpool to examine in connection with British veterinarians, live cattle from the United States landed at that port; and the result in connection with sanitary methods adopted at home, has been that we hear no more about cattle being infected with pneumonia. A judicious system of quarantine lines prevented infection of northern cattle with Texas fever.

THE GENERAL CONDITION of our country is one of great prosperity. The Blessing of God has rested upon our fields and upon our people. The annual average of our foreign commerce has increased more than $4,000,000 over the average of the preceding ten years and more than $40,000,000 over 1890. Last year, unaffected by the new tariff, our exports in 1892 exceeded those of 1890 by more than $170,000,000 and the annual average for ten years by $285,000,000. Our exports of breadstuffs increased over those of 1890 more than $144,000,000; of provisions, $4,000,000 and of manufactures over $8,000,000. Of merchandise the balance of trade in our favor in 1892 is $201,944,842. No other nation can match the commercial progress which those figures disclose. Our compassion may well go out to those whose party necessities and habits compel them to declare our people oppressed and our trade restricted by protective tariff.

It is not possible for me to allude in the briefest way to many of the topics presented. The resolutions adopted by the convention upon those that have not been discussed before publicly, they have expressed my views. A change in the personnel of the national administration is comparatively of little moment, if those exercising public functions are able, honest, diligent and faithful. Others possessing all these qualities may be found to take their places, but changes in laws, in administrative policies, are of great moment. When public affairs have been given direction and business adjusted itself to those lines, any sudden change involves stoppage and new business adjustments. The Democratic party offers a programme of demolition of the protective policy, to which all business, even that of importer, is now adjusted. Reciprocity policy, new merchant marine, all demolished—not gradually taken down, but blown up. To this programme of destruction it has added one constructive feature—the re-establishment of State banks. The policy of the Republican party on the other hand desired a policy, safe, progressive, and development of new facilities, new markets and new ships. It will subject business to no perilous change, but offers attractive opportunities for expansion upon party lines. Very respectfully yours,

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

ONE by one drop off; the famed American sons of song—Hawthorne and Bryant, Emerson and Longfellow, Lowell and Whittman are gone, and the latest to follow in the wake of the illustrious departed is John Greenleaf Whittier, at the ripe old age of 85. Peacefully he passed away at 4:30 o'clock yesterday morning at the home of Dr. Cartland in Hampton Falls, N. H., a place about six miles from Amesbury.

Mr. Whittier was born in 1807 at the little hamlet of Haverhill in Massachusetts. He came of an honest Quaker family. During the years of his boyhood he worked on his father's farm. He was frail and delicate, so much so that a good Quaker doctor said to him one day, "Greenleaf, thou must take care of thy health." And his companions and kinsfolk predicted confidently that he would never pass the forties. But he agreeably disappointed them and entered well into the eighties. At an early age he manifested a disposition to write verses. While hoeing in the fields he strung together a little poem, and afterwards placed it on a vagrant scrap of paper. His sister found it, took it to Mr. Garrison's paper, and it was published. That gentleman soon discovered the author, and that the little poem had some merit in it, and encouraged him to study.

Whittier while a boy learned the trade of shoemaking, and by this earned money sufficient to maintain him for six months at Haverhill academy. He then taught school for a season or two. He was an industrious student and writer, but his labors brought him no rich rewards for a long time. He was closely identified with the abolition movement of the antebellum period, both as a writer and an editor. But it appears that he did not wholly endorse the war at first, and at its close was in favor of making the most liberal terms possible with the South.

Among his best known fugitive pieces is "Floyd Tresson." He wrote quite a number of poems of local interest in New England, and it was from these in connection with the simplicity, honesty, integrity and innocence of his life that he gained his popularity. Of course his earlier efforts were sneered at by a great many, and while some heavy critics pronounced them doggerel, others equally prominent sustained them as gems of innuendo.

The work which first brought him fair remuneration was his "Snow-bound." For this the publishers paid him 25 cents royalty on every copy sold. From it several thousand dollars were realized. Worth in our day is measured mainly by money, and when it became known that Whittier made a small fortune by his verses he became the fashion. After this he received high prices for his poems, and often refused to accept the sums offered on the ground that his efforts were not worth the money. He received $1000 for one poem of ninety-six lines from the New York Ledger. This is entitled "The Captain's Well." It was the last of any length which he wrote, and has a local interest. It is founded on a historic fact of a rather romantically tragic character.

Mr. Whittier can hardly be classed as a great poet. But his simple ballads and graceful lyrics will hold a place for a long time in the literature of the American people. In his age of wealth-hunting and profit seeking his simple life affords an instructive and edifying lesson for those who would place materialism before spirituality and intellect.

THE Springfield (Mass.) Republican will soon have a Hoe press that will print, cut, paste, fold and deliver as one sheet 12,000, ten, twelve, fourteen or sixteen page papers per hour. It will be fed by two rolls of paper unwinding automatically, side by side. The Republican was sixty-eight years old on the 8th inst. It is one of the oldest and best conducted papers of New England.

THE SANITARY QUESTION.

The Herald calls attention to the generally recognized failure of the sewer system, which was adopted a few years ago in response to a demand from the real estate and other boomers, and against the protest of more thoughtful and more permanent citizens. The Herald says:

"A few of the conservative citizens did not protest against sewerage, but they asked that the matter be delayed until such time as a thorough investigation could be made, and the best plan ascertained. These conservatives thought of the future, and wanted to build with that thought in view. They knew that sewerage meant the expenditure of vast sums of money, and they also knew there was danger of making sewerage a great evil. They wanted the proper system adopted when it could be elaborated and perfected as the years came and the people were able to meet the cost of the improvement. However, their counsels were not heeded. The conservatives were called 'muck-back' and 'back numbers.' They were forced into the background by the 'progressive' element, sewerage was ordered, a portion of the city has enjoyed the improvement two or three years, and now everybody begins to understand something of the mistake that was made."

This was the position taken at the time by the DESERET NEWS and for which it was so fiercely and falsely denounced by the "Liberal" organ. We were represented as opposed to sewers and in favor of filth, when we simply objected to the folly of establishing an expensive system which had not been duly considered, as to its applicability to our peculiar situation as a city. We particularly opposed the emptying of sewage into the Jordan river, and also the adoption of a scheme which could not possibly be made general.

We think now that the evil existing should not be increased. More sewers mean more foul matter brought to a point where it must be disposed of. This certainly ought to be done without detriment to property owners adjacent and to the health of the people. This city is situated on the slope of a basin. If there was a rapidly flowing stream to carry sewage out to sea there would be no trouble on that account. But we must find some harmless means of disposition for the sewage of the city, or the concentration of floods of filth will prove a monstrous evil beyond control. Whether this can be found in a system of deodorization and the manufacture of fertilizers we do not pretend to say. But such a system is found practicable and profitable elsewhere. All we ask for now is due consideration and the adoption of a plan that will be effective and permanent.

Connected with this subject is the question of the disposition of offensive refuse in the unwearied portions of the city. We have urged for years the adoption of a dry earth system of de-fecation. All the fuss that is made about the depositing of fecal matter in the gardens and lots in the outer districts of the city is the extreme of folly. If the deposits in outhouses are kept sprinkled with dry earth, the matter can be removed without scent or harm and used to fertilize the soil. The nonsense about danger from night soil placed in gardens and covered with earth is provoking to common sense. The ground is nature's deodorizer. Liquids may percolate through the soil and get into wells, but solids treated to dry earth can do no damage whatever.

If decaying fruit and vegetable matter is cleared away and destroyed; if the dry earth system for closets and outhouses is adopted; if residents are required to keep their premises free from offensive matter and offensive odors; if expensive means are not imposed upon the people but they are permitted to dispose of or remove waste matter themselves if they choose; if proper legislation be established by ordinance, and the real, not the imaginary, causes of danger to health be systematically taken away, with competent disposition of the sewage from the business part of town, the sanitary condition of the city can be vastly improved and, indeed, be made much better than it has ever been or has been likely to be under the old conditions or those of the present.

THE REAL QUESTION AT ISSUE.

If it will not be considered impertinent, we would like to call the attention of our morning contemporaries in this city to the fact, that the test oath now to be tested in Idaho is not the original bit of intolerance and bigotry which was judicially declared to be inside the limit of the National Constitution, but a comparatively new creation, which no just judge can fairly sustain and no commonly decent citizen of any party can reasonably approve. No matter who fathered it or fostered it, the measure is outside of the matters submitted to the courts, and of the provisions made part of the State Constitution.

The sweeping condemnation passed upon the test oath imposed upon the South, applies with equal force to the oath that blots the statutes of Idaho, and it ought to meet with the same fate as it will, no doubt, when fully tested. Journals of all parties ought to unite in calling for its destruction. It matters not whether there were more Republicans than Democrats who favored it or vice versa, the thing to do now is to blot it out forever, and let fair freedom and calm justice have their way.

The Mormon citizens of Idaho are watching to see who really favors the movement for their liberty, and who, while professing fairness with their lips, will try to hinder it by their acts. The decision of the court before whom the test case is to be tried, is of more importance that any question as to the party which is to be held responsible for the wrong that must be righted.

CHRISTIAN CONVERSION AND DOCTRINE.

DR. MILLS, who is conducting the revival meetings held in this city, appears to be devoted to the work he has undertaken. He gives evidence of being sincere, and if he can accomplish any good by inducing people of questionable conduct to reform, we shall be among those who will be gratified at such a result. The fact that we respectfully differ with him in regard to what constitutes Christianity does not detract from our desire to see him successful in reformatory labor.

It appears from the nature of the proceedings that Dr. Mills, his aids and the "revival" meetings are simply recruiting auxiliaries operating in behalf of the various Protestant denominations. This is evinced by the face of the cards which are signed by those persons who announce that they are converted. The convert attaches his name and address to a species of resolution to the effect that the signer has made a determination to lead a Christian life. He also designates upon the card which of the numerous ministers he prefers. By this means the number of accessions to the fold of each of the respective clergymen will be readily ascertained, and in case any of the persons signing the pledge become Christians do not conform to their resolutions and put in an appearance at the churches of their selection, the ministers will be in a position to communicate and labor with them.

It does not appear to us that these methods are in keeping with the kind of Christianity taught and practiced by Christ Himself, nor by his authorized Apostles and servants who co-operated with Him and carried on the work of evangelization after His departure to the "right hand of the Father." This view is supported even by the 8th chapter of Acts, from which Mr. Mills, last evening, took his text. Philip had preached to the Samaritans, a number of whom received his message and were "baptized, both men and women." It appears, however, that Philip was not empowered to confer the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. The apostles at Jerusalem were communicated with on the subject. The result was that Peter and John responded by going to Samaria, and administering to the new converts. "They laid their hands on them and they received the Holy Ghost." This was the course that was undergone by people converted to Christianity in those apostolic times, and we know of no human authority that has a right to alter it.

There ought to be no dispute in relation to the fact that the Christianity of Christ and the Apostles required of the convert, faith in the atoning blood of the Savior and in His divine mission and doctrine, as exhibited in His own life and teachings and the preaching and practice of those He called and authorized to speak and act in His name.

Then followed, in consecutive order, repentance of sin, which is a natural principle as well as a divine requisition. It is a reformation of conduct, exhibited by conforming in word and deed to the commandments of God.

The next step was baptism, by immersion, for the remission of sins, administered by an authorized agent or servant of Jesus Christ. By compliance with this simple and indispensable ordinance the convert typified the death, burial and resurrection of the Savior, and as the Master came forth from the tomb with His body free from the taint of mortality the repentant sinner comes out of the watery grave free from the contamination of sin, to enter upon a Christian spiritual career. He has not signed a card embodying a resolution to lead a Christian life, but he has submitted to an act that is in beautiful harmony with the basic principle of the plan of salvation. He has, by this performance, entered into a contract with the Redeemer. In the compact each party to the act is present, the recipient convert in his own proper person and the Redeemer by the administrator or agent whom He has duly authorized to act for Him. Without the authority of the Master the ordinance could not be properly administered, except as a dead form without power and ineffectual in securing divine recognition.

The scriptures plainly show that the next step of the candidate for salvation who has exhibited faith in Christ, repented of his sins and been properly "buried with Christ by baptism" for the remission of sins, is to receive the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands of genuine agents of the Redeemer. This is an ordinance that no mere pretender or unauthorized person can claim to be a servant of God can perform without great danger of being detected in his fraudulent practice, for this reason: He might go through the form of laying on of hands for imparting the Holy Ghost, but the divine Spirit would not descend upon the person administered to. If the Holy Spirit did descend it would be proof of divine recognition. This is probably the reason why the Protestant churches have almost totally discarded this ordinance. The possession of the Holy Ghost causes true Christians to be different from and detached by the generality of the world. They belong to the spiritual kingdom of God, which is not worldly.

The doctrines and principles set forth herein are so clearly stated in the New Testament that it is difficult to understand how an intelligent person can read the record and not be able to see that this is the case. The same principles and ordinances are also comprehended in the faith and practice of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, commonly, but erroneously, designated as the "Mormon" Church.

THE LABOR PROBLEM.

FOLLOWING is extracted from a correspondence of M. G. C. Edholm, an officer of the World's W. C. T. U.:

"The Carnegie troubles with the laboring men have brought the labor problem to the front. The only solution lies in the divinely given golden rule, 'As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also unto them.' This has been strikingly illustrated by the millionaire merchant prince and evangelist, Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, who has taken into partnership five of the heads of departments in his great wholesale house in New York, pronounced by the New York Times at $800,000, the largest in the world. The New York press is full of praise for this notable deed. The New York Herald says: 'On its face the transaction was simply the re-organization of the house of Charles N. Crittenton as an incorporated company.'

It is a matter of fact it was a voluntary surrender by Mr. Crittenton of a considerable interest in his very prosperous business to five of his old employees. Many employers have adopted one means or another of making their employees sharers in the profits of their business and thereby securing their loyalty; but the voluntary transfer by a man of large means of a large interest in his business to his employees without the payment of a penny is unique.

"Edward G. Wells, third vice-president of the company, says: 'It is capitalized at $800,000. Mr. Crittenton having turned into it every dollar's worth of assets of the house of Charles H. Crittenton, of which he was the sole owner. The stock is all taken, being held by Mr. Crittenton. Messrs. Alfred B. Kennedy, William A. Demarest, Franklin B. Waterman, Thomas E. Delano and myself. Mr. Crittenton is president of the company. Twenty men who have been taken into the company are old employees, the youngest of the five in point of service being myself, with a record of thirteen years in Mr. Crittenton's employ. Mr. Kennedy, who is the buyer for the house, has served twenty years; Mr. Demarest, the head of the retail department, twenty years; Mr. Delano, the general manager, twenty-eight years; and Mr. Waterman, who runs our advertising department, sixteen years. Others may be taken in. I presume that we were selected on account of our long service and thorough familiarity with every detail of the business of the house, but I should not be surprised if some other old employees were taken into the company later.'"

THE CHINESE AND THE EXCLUSION LAW.

THE San Francisco Chronicle says that the Chinese on the Pacific Coast are paying no heed whatever to the requirements of the new exclusion law. General John M. Comb has been appointed to superintend the details of registration in the office of the California Revenue Collector. Registration, according to the provisions of the law, should have commenced on September 1st, but not one Chinese presented himself for enrollment on that day. The Chinese are awaiting instructions from their minister at Washington as to what they ought to do in the premises.

A disused cigar factory is being fitted up in San Francisco as a registration bureau. It will be equipped with ample photographing apparatus, and some twenty clerks on hand to attend to all the work of registering, labeling and picture-taking. It is stated that after May 6th next, when Chin-men found without certificates can be reported, trouble will commence. A test case cannot be made until after that date, as the law provides for a period of registration extending from Sept. 1st to May 6th.

MARS.

E. M. CONVERSE has an instructive and interesting astronomical article in the Boston Herald of September 1st, from which is clipped the following in relation to Mars:

"When in 1909 Mars makes us a near visit, one-half of those who saw the marvellous spectacle presented by the ruddy planet at his recent opposition will have passed on. The question of the habitability of Mars may be decided before that time. If so, it will be in a way as little expected as the discovery of the constituents of the sun by means of the spectroscope. The two greatest discoveries by far of the nineteenth century are the discovery of Neptune in 1846 and the discovery of the existence of Mars in 1877. Who can tell what the twentieth century has in store, or what flight into futurity may be rewarded with a tangible prize? The question that most interests the human race is whether the worlds that, like the earth, revolve about the sun are like our world the seat of conscious life. The answer may be hidden in some huge meteor, that, falling to the earth, holds within its confines the key to the grand mystery, as tiny diamonds were found in a meteor that fell in Russia.

It is not impossible that telescopes may be made powerful enough to reveal the movement of some immense structure on Mars.

Langley says that if terrestrial astronomers were removed to the moon, taking their telescopes with them, they might possibly see a great steamship moving as a little red dot across the earth, or an army like that of Napoleon marching over the Russian snow in the form of a black dot."

BRITISH FOREIGN TRADE DECLINING

BRITISH trade journals are not pleased with the statistics pertaining to imports and exports. For the seven months commencing January and ending July, 1891, the imports of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland were estimated at £245,000,000 sterling, or about $1,225,000,000. For the same period in 1892 the figures were £248,000,000, or about $1,250,000,000. Exports for the same period in 1891 aggregated £148,000,000, in 1892 £181,000,000, a decrease of £15,000,000, or $75,000,000. Comparing the decrease in exports from the United Kingdom for the seven months mentioned in 1892 with the same period in 1891 a decrease of 10 per cent. is shown. Comparing the decrease for the same time between 1891 and 1890 a decrease of one per cent. is shown; coal exports show a falling off of nearly $10,000,000 from 1891 to 1892, mainly to Germany and France. Textile material shows a decrease of 8 per cent.; in metals and manufactures a decline of 20 per cent. is shown. Other industries also show decreases in exports.

The total of British exports to the colonies and foreign countries aggregated for six months, ending June 30th, 1890, 127½ million pounds, for the same period in 1891 124 million pounds, and for the same period of 1892 111 million pounds. These figures show a decrease which begins to alarm British capitalists. In food imports there is no decrease. Live animals, meat, butter, cheese and eggs show approximately the same figures for the periods mentioned above in relation to exports.

THE PAVING QUESTION.

This evening the City Council will have to take some action in regard to the paving question. It has been very freely discussed by the public. The overwhelming sentiment is no doubt in favor of home materials, home workmen and home contractors. This ought to be respected by the body elected by the public to manage public affairs.

We understand that no contract can be let without the action of the City Council. The Board of Public Works is subordinate to that body. Its recommendations are not law. The Council can refuse to adopt the report of the Board, and can return it with suggestions for a change. There is no need for any conflict between the auxiliary and inferior body and the chief and superior body. Both ought to take into consideration the views of the public and, in this case, particularly of the property owners who are principally interested because they will have to pay a large proportion of the paving tax.

It will not be a good thing to postpone this paving work to so late a date that frost will interfere with the work. That is now said to be an argument in favor of accepting the Barber bid. But it is founded on the idea that if that bid is rejected, new bids must be advertised for.

We do not believe that is essential. If the Board of Public Works is disposed to work in harmony with the City Council, and the Council is disposed to concede to the popular demand, the report can be returned and modified as to conform to the public wishes, and there will be no danger of any serious obstacle to the carrying out of the desired change.

It is all right to be technical, within reasonable bounds. But technicalities can be carried too far and common sense and public necessity be sacrificed thereby. We hope the Council will be guided by what is best for the general interest, and take a fair stand on its rights and duties, and not be swayed by small and catchy objections, or the influence of large and grasping corporations.

We are now having Utah fall weather, which is equal to that of Italy, or any other part of the globe—warm and genial during the day and cool and pleasant at night.

ADVICE TO UTAH WOMEN.

We notice in a country contemporary, advice to the ladies of Utah to "enter politics," by which is meant, as we learn from the context, contention for the interests of a political party. We do not think this is good counsel. In our opinion, the ladies will do well to hold themselves aloof from party discussions and even from party affiliations. We are sure that they will hinder instead of hasten the attainment of the elective franchise by alignment with the political parties of the day.

There are prejudices enough against woman's participation in the affairs of government, without adding to them the obstacle of offensive partisanship. It is proper for women, young and old, to become familiar with political principles; that is, the science of civil government. But this does not necessarily imply the adoption of party tactics, the imbibing of party spirit, or the training in party ranks. The contention which takes the place of argument among our people to so large an extent just now, is disgusting to an independent onlooker, and it would become doubly so if engaged in by our mothers and daughters and sisters.

Woman suffrage is not at present a party question. Either party is about as much opposed to it, practically, as the other. If women commenced to array themselves on either side, it would but intensify the opposition. We advise the ladies who are working for political liberty to their sex, to keep to that issue with an eye single to its consummation. Do not drift off to other points. Leave out the question of office holding. Keep aloof from party controversies. Do not be drawn into partisan discussions. Get the ballot first, choose your party afterwards. Be united in the common cause and do not be so unwise as to divide your forces for any purpose.

A SINGULAR SORT OF "CHRISTIANITY."

We notice a great many allusions in papers published in the Southern States, to the removal of some "Mormon" missionaries, by force, from Beaver Dam, Virginia, to another part of the State. It appears that in the latter part of August a meeting was held for the purpose of stopping the work of proselyting said to have been successful in that region. After a chairman and secretary had been appointed, the following resolutions were presented and adopted:

"Resolved, That with God's help this shall remain a Christian community."

"Resolved, That we will tolerate no Mormonism in our midst."

The report says: "A motion was carried that the body act as an escort to accompany the Mormons to the borders of the county. Major Page was elected to take charge of the expedition, and after riding ten or twelve miles they found the Elders in a tobacco house near Jones' Cross Roads. They were promptly escorted to the county's border, and having promised that they would not again enter the county, were permitted to leave.

There were about seventy-five men in line, who included the best men of the neighborhood."

What a singular sort of "Christian community" that must be that will not tolerate an unorthodox Christian society in its midst! Imagine Jesus of Nazareth, at the head of an unlawful mob of his disciples, driving out from their midst, by force of numbers, two or three preachers of a different faith to his own! Fancy Peter and James and John, with seventy-five Saints at Jerusalem, hunting out a couple of ministers of some other denomination than theirs, and escorting them out of Judea, warning them to return no more!

It is evident that these good "Christians" of Beaver Dam have little real faith in the power and virtue of their own religion. They are afraid to pit it against the alleged heresies of the Mormon Elders. The only efficient argument they can offer is the power of violence. It is as open a confession of the inferiority of their own creeds as if made in so many words. It is also an act of direct hostility against the spirit and teachings of Christ, whom they pretend to follow. Their Christianity is bogus. Their proceedings were not even civilized, but an act of barbarism. And the public journals that endorse or countenance it are scarcely fit for publication among savages, because they would only confirm the degraded beings in their brutal practices.

The kind of Christians that cannot "tolerate" even a heathen creed or heathen teachers "in their midst," are the very antipodes of the Christians who learned their creed from the lips of the Savior and His Apostles. The consequences of their rejection of truths which would be of infinite value to them and the people allowed to remain "in their midst," will certainly follow their barbaric and anti-Christian course. The Elders can quietly remove to a more civilized community, and bear with patience and with pity the contumely that has come to them from deplorable ignorance and prejudice.

INSULT TO THE BRITISH FLAG.

FURTHER particulars in relation to the seizures made in Bering sea by Russia are at hand. The Russian man-of-war "Zabraka" effected the capture. The captains of the schooners had to sign a confession that they were fishing in Russian waters when captured. The schooners and cargoes were confiscated and sent to a Russian port to be sold. Before signing the confession the captains were told that in the event of refusal they should go to Vladivostok for trial, and after that perhaps have some exercise in the mine, or in building the great trans-Siberian railroad now in course of construction.

The captain of the Russian warship, when he learned that three of the four masters of the captured schooners were British, took down the English flag and danced a jig on it, in order to show his affection for Great Britain. The names of the three Britishers were O'Keefe, Ryan and McLeod. They, too, must have felt greatly outraged at this treatment of the Union Jack. The Russian captain did not perhaps understand "what's in a name." But at all events he meant to show that for Canada and John Bull he had a sublime contempt. The American captain got away all right. No insult was offered to his flag, and he was simply cautioned not to repeat the exercise of seal fishing in Russian waters.

A SPECK OF TROUBLE.

REFERENCE was made in these columns a few days ago to a possible misunderstanding between the United States and Venezuela, over the forcible abduction of six refugees from an American passenger boat, named the "Carracosa." Our government has not let this matter drop. The ship at "Concord" is now on the way to La Guayra, the port town of Venezuela. Immediately on her arrival in that port she will learn the true state of affairs from the American Minister. The "Carracosa" is now in New York taking a cargo for La Guayra, and is expected to reach that port about the same time as the "Concord." The man-of-war "Kearsage" is in South American waters, and it is said that she is under orders to proceed also to La Guayra.

When these two American vessels arrive, the United States minister will make a formal demand for the six refugees taken from the "Carracosa." In the event of refusal it is not yet known what course will be pursued. The Venezuelan navy consists of two vessels, which mount in all eight guns. The country is absolutely in a state of anarchy. There is no settled government. Even the Venezuelan consul at New York did not know, at latest account, who was President of his country. It is thought that England is taking advantage of this confusion to push her own interest on the British Guiana frontier. The commander of the "Concord" has instructions to ascertain the correct situation in regard to John Bull, with a view of reminding him of the Monroe doctrine.

HISTORICAL TIMES.

It may not occur to a great many people, but it is nevertheless a fact, that an unusual number of events of potential interest to this nation, and incidentally to the rest of the world, are catalogued for the near future.

A partial enumeration would include the dedication of the World's Fair grounds, on the 21st of next month, the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus. The numerous State elections throughout the Union in November will be a matter of unusual moment. The Presidential election in the same month promises to be of a character to cause much more than ordinary national interest. The political fight will be to some extent at least a triangular one, with a possibility of throwing the selection of President into the House of Representatives. This result is deemed remote, yet no person can safely say that it is not within possible range. In the following March will come the presidential inauguration day. In a little over a month subsequent it is anticipated that the grand and beautiful Temple erected by the Latter-day Saints in this city will be dedicated for the sacred purposes for which it is intended. This may not be deemed by the people at large as an occurrence of wide significance. That, however, is a question viewed from two different standpoints. Those who have reared the structure regard it as a circumstance of far-reaching importance, relating to the well-being of the whole of our globe, and extending into the spirit world, being an agency for extending the benefits of the Gospel of peace and salvation to the spirits of the dead as well as to those who are still living in the body. In the month following (May, 1893) it is intended to open, in the city of Chicago, the greatest world's exposition of all history—one of the wonders of all time.

The fruitful, reflective mind can, with more or less accuracy, fix in the space between the occurrences enumerated, including the probable and possible, and it will thus at once be observed that history is about to be manufactured in this country with a rapidity that perhaps has never been excelled in the career of any other nation. At present, by way of addition, the grim prospect of a visitation from one of the worst plagues that ever afflicted the family of man hangs over the national horizon.

THAT CHICAGO TRAGEDY.

The tragedy enacted at Chicago yesterday was a thrilling affair. Popular sympathy will justly go out toward the two brave officers who were murdered while performing their sworn duty. There will be small regret regarding the fate of Brown, the Texas millionaire, who precipitated the bloody drama. He only received a dose of the same deadly medicine he had many times, according to his published record, administered to others.

There is a strong dramatic thread running through the entire story which led up to the scene enacted yesterday. We are reliably informed that Carrigan, now one of the chief proprietors of the Hawthorne race track, formerly occupied the same position in connection with the Gardard track, but severed his connection with the latter about two years ago. Lately he has been working to have the opposition track with all its gambling appurtenances and concomitants broken up; and now there are statements to the effect that he has sought to attain his object by bribing officials. An idea of the situation in this connection can be obtained from the contention on the subject between the mayor and chief of police, one or the other of whom has made false statements on the subject.

Twenty years ago this Chicago tragedy would have been a national sensation. We are now, however, entering upon an epoch of violence, and comparatively speaking it is, in these times, only an insignificant affair, being obscured by the numerous bloody deeds that are operated on the wholesale principle.

The Peace Unions in Sweden claim now a total membership of 2000.

ANCIENT PRIZE FIGHTS.

The origin of prize fights must be sought far back in barbarous antiquity. It was a custom among ancient nations to sacrifice prisoners of war in honor of fallen heroes. It was part of the funeral ceremonies of a time when the torture of human beings was looked upon as legitimate amusement.

As time went on, the prisoners were made to fight for their lives, and the sacrifices took the form of mortal combats in the presence of thousands of spectators. In ancient Rome the combatants were known as gladiators. They were either prisoners of war or slaves, and were especially trained for the purpose. To the conquered slave the end was generally death, unless the spectators extended mercy to him and allowed him to live for another fight. The conqueror was rewarded and sometimes given his liberty.

This kind of amusement became common. The people flocked to the forum to enjoy the spectacle of gladiatorial exhibitions, and soon public officers and particularly candidates for the suffrage of the citizens, sought to capture the votes of the people by giving them, free of charge, admission to these sanguinary encounters. The emperors spent vast sums of money for this purpose. It is recorded that Julius Cæsar gave a show of 320 fighting couples. Thus arranged an exhibition of gladiatorial wild beasts and naval battles took place for thousands of years. Trajan gave a show in which two thousand men fought with each other or with wild beasts. This was witnessed by 70,000 spectators of all classes, including many aristocratic ladies of Rome. So numerous were the slaves kept and trained for this barbarous purpose that they were finally considered a menacing danger to the commonwealth.

When the persecutions of the Christians were commenced, many of them were sentenced to fight in the arena, but they persistently refused either to fight or defend themselves, preferring to die without blood stains on their hands. The spectators were not entirely satisfied with his kind of exhibition. The Christians were, therefore, usually thrown before the wild beasts, which, as a general rule, ended their sufferings in a short time.

Constantine was the first emperor who prohibited prize fights in his empire. He saw clearly that this kind of amusement was antagonistic to the principles of the Christians, who formed a majority of his subjects. This emperor, although not much of a Christian himself, was anxious to gain the affections of the Christian portion of the people and did all he could to sustain them. He legalized their custom of celebrating the Lord's day, extended their privileges as citizens and even tried to act as arbitrator in some of their doctrinal disputes. Out of regard for their sentiments, the barbarous gladiatorial fights were prohibited. It took a long time though, before the nation as a whole had been educated to detest this kind of amusement. But this feeling came gradually. In the reign of Honorius history states that one Telemachus boldly entered the arena to stop a fight, but the spectators stoned him. The emperor Theodoros in the sixth century of our era finally abolished the barbarous exhibitions.

A question which confronts this country now is, When will the American people be sufficiently Christianized to abolish the brutal prize fights that are a blot upon our civilization? They constitute one of the lowest relics of barbarism. The fact that they are intensely popular and made occasions of absorbing public interest indicates that in some respects we are not far removed from the condition of the people of the third and fourth centuries of the Christian era. Instead of throwing off the barbarism exhibited by them, we simply manifest the same instincts in a modified degree.

MILITIA MEN DISCHARGED.

In the State of New York a new trouble has arisen out of the recent railroad strike in Buffalo. Several regiments of militia were called to perform duty at the scene of the trouble. The men composing those regiments were taken from their duties as clerks, merchants, warehousemen, etc. After the strike was settled, and the regiments disbanded, several members were denied their former situations. Two of the soldiers were employees of the Union Phonograph Company of New York. On presenting themselves for employment after their return from Buffalo, they were told that their places were filled. In the case of these two men the railroad officials gave them employment, but there are a dozen others who have forfeited their positions. One employer said that he would not take any man back who went from his work to protect property for the State. "Let the State find its own protectors, or procure employment for its soldiers."

A development of this kind forebodes a new obstruction to the effectiveness of a militia corps.

NEWSPAPERS IN PERSIA.

According to a Swedish paper published in Chicago, newspapers and magazines in Persia date their origin from the visit of the Shah to Europe. In the journal, which this "king of kings"—as the Shah is called in his own kingdom—recently has published, he relates that he noticed a Parisian cabman with great interest perusing a daily paper. This made him reflect on the power of the press, and he forthwith ordered the grand vizier, who accompanied him, to direct his attention to this matter, as soon as they should again reach Teheran. The result was, that a press department was added to the cabinet, under the direction of a Mohammedan, Dovlet, who is celebrated in his native country for a work on history and geography of which he is the author. He has been supported by Europeans, particularly French, and educated Persians, and now the country has about a dozen newspapers and magazines.

The principal of these is the organ of the government Iran, which is entirely devoted to the internal affairs of the country. The correspondents of the papers are officials of the mail and telegraph service. All their contributions commence with the following stereotyped phrase: "Thanks to the governor (here follow his name and the name of his province), we are loyal to him. The people and all the world are at peace and pray for your majesty."

Next to this paper in influence are the three political and literary journals Itala, Terhenk and Teheran. Two of these are published in Teheran and the third in Isfahan. Their political columns are confined to brief accounts of European news, and their literary departments consist chiefly of translations of philosophical and historical works of western literature.

An illustrated paper called Sheref is published in Teheran, but its illustrations are only photographic pictures of Persian governors and prominent European statesmen.

A religious paper, Zoot-Shams is published in the modern Syrian tongue, by Protestant missionaries in Ormia.

The most widely circulated papers are Athar and Kamase. The editor of the first of these is greatly esteemed among the Mohammedans because he has received western education and is thoroughly acquainted with oriental customs. He represents what is known as Pan-Islamism.

The second of these journals advocates the religious and political regeneration of Persia by return to the original Islam.

THE INTERNATIONAL SILVER CONFERENCE.

The extreme silver men will be likely to find little comfort this year. Neither of the Presidential candidates with any chance of election favors their views and the country is not ready to aopt them. The International Conference from which so much is expected does not promise to put out to the extent desired, although reports show that silver has obtained a large number of aggressive advocates in Europe and many financiers in England are anxious for a bi-metallic adjustment.

President Harrison seems to entertain sanguine hopes that the conference will greatly advance the cause of silver. The hope is based on the supposition that European countries are ready for the change. Transatlantic developments afford no such assurance. Austria is now entering on a gold standard currency. The banks of England, France and Germany are strengthening their gold reserves. Even in British India public opinion there is directed towards the closing of the mints to the free coinage of silver. In Holland's East India possessions the government has already closed its mints to free silver coinage, and it is said with satisfactory results.

The Indian Currency Association, a body representing the mercantile interests of British India, proposes that the government shall not only stop free silver coinage, but sell rupees only in exchange for gold at a fixed ratio of value. The course it is hoped would discourage the influx of silver to India and encourage that of gold. In summing up the situation, Bradstreet, no mean authority, says: "If the tone of the foreign press, and particularly the financial part of it, be accepted as correctly representing the opinion of those who will decide the action of the International Monetary Conference, nothing of a tangible nature need be expected from that gathering."

Europeans are always ready to enter into conferences of this kind provided they are held in European capitals. The 1878 conference in Paris resulted in no change in favor of silver. On the contrary, the prevailing sentiment seemed to emphasize the superiority of the gold standard. There is some probability that the pending conference will be postponed until after the election, owing to the cholera alarm. Berlin was fixed on as the place of holding it, and it was expected that it would come off during the current month or early in October. Berlin is now scourged with the epidemic, so are Paris and Antwerp. London is not considered absolutely safe, and the supposition is that in consequence of this and other hindrances nothing definite will be done with silver this fall.

ELECTION OF SCHOOL TRUSTEES.

THE following communication has been received from a town in northern Utah:

Editor Semi-Weekly News:

Dear Sir—In notice in your issue of September 2nd an opinion is given as to when the country school superintendent will be elected. There appears to be a conflict in the law as to the election of school trustees. Please give us your opinion on the subject. A SUBSCRIBER.

The general election of March 10, 1892, provides for an election of city, town, village and school district officers who are by law made elective, on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1892, who are to enter upon their duties on the first day of January, 1893, and continue in office until January 1, 1894. Also for an election of similar officers in 1893, who are to enter upon their offices on January 1st, 1894 and continue in office for two years.

The school law of the same date, in section 80 provides specially for the election of three school trustees in each school district of the Territory, on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1892, to serve for one year, and for another election in 1893, the trustees then elected to serve for two years.

So far there is no appearance of conflict in the law. In section 147 of the school law it is provided that the terms of the school trustees now in office, (except in cities of the first and second class) which would expire under the old law in 1891 or 1892, shall continue until the full terms of office for which they were elected have expired. In such case it is provided, of course, that incumbents shall hold until their successors are elected and qualified. If there is any apparent conflict between this and the other sections cited it is, in our opinion, not real.

If there are school trustees now in office whose terms should expire during any time in 1892, they will con-time to hold until Jan. 1st, 1893, and until their successors are elected and qualified, but no longer. And should there be any incumbents whose terms do not expire under the old law until July, 1893, they will vacate on the 1st of January, 1893, or when their successors, elected in November, 1892, are qualified.)

Thus three school trustees, are to be elected in each school district, in the next coming November, who are to serve for one year, but will not qualify and take their offices until January 1st next. Three school trustees are to be elected in each district in November, 1893, who will hold their offices for two years, but will not qualify and take their offices until January 1st, 1894. The school elections will be biennial from the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, 1893.

This appears to us to be plain sailing. The only snag in the way is the doubt in some minds as to the trustees whose terms did not expire in July, 1892. The law says they shall hold until January 1st, 1893, and until their successors (elected in 1892) are qualified "and no longer." The law intends to make a new start in school trusteeships this year, so the terms of all present incumbents, whenever elected, will expire on the 1st of January, 1893. These are our views on this question and we believe they are correct.

A GREAT COKE REGION.

A SPECIAL bulletin is devoted by the Census Bureau to the production of coke in the Pohopatans Flat Top region which comprises Tazewell county in Southwest Virginia, and Mercer and McDowell counties in Southeastern West Virginia. In 1883 only 200 ovens were employed. In 1889 there were 1833 in operation and 681 in course of construction. The value of coke at the ovens increased from $44,000 in 1883 to over half a million in 1889. This region furnishes over 2,000,000 tons of coal for the Atlantic seaboard. It also supplies the blast furnaces and foundries of Virginia and Northern Alabama. The coal fields of the region are owned by a trust. They comprise 175,000 acres of actual coal lands. The immense development going on shows that the South is entering extensively into the iron and steel industry. Pennsylvania is being left behind, and the strike of the future may be looked for in Virginia or Alabama.

WHERE LIES THE CONSISTENCY?

THE Rev. B. Fay Mills, who is conducting the religious "revival" meetings in this city, has been taken to task, in a published open letter, by Mr. David Uter. The strictures of the latter are directed toward a solitary exposition used by the revivalist in one of his sermons. The statement to which exception was taken can be best defined by a quotation from Mr. Uter's letter, and we here present an excerpt:

"I write to protest against the second point of your sermon, which, as I understood it, was that those who do not believe that Jesus Christ is God cannot be pure in heart. If you had argued that a man's heart could not be right without in some sense accepting Christ as a Savior I should not say a word, for in some sense every right-hearted man of today is a follower of Jesus, and perhaps every good man owes something to Christ's teachings.

"I believe there are righteous men of every name. There are Jews right in this city whose righteousness and purity of life ought to shame you in this condemnation. I may be a partial judge, but I believe that the Unitarians of our country are in the main a righteous people."

It appears to us that the meaning of Mr. Mills was perfectly clear, and that it is stretching far beyond his intention to take it that he intended to convey the impression that it is impossible for men to be "in some sense" righteous and yet not believe Christ to be God. It cannot be that the gentleman intended to say that men who do not believe in the divine character of Christ are necessarily bad—that they are immoral, dishonest and fraudulent. The speaker was speaking from a Bible standpoint, including the claims and teachings of Christ Himself. From this platform he must view an acceptance of Jesus of Nazareth as God as a part of righteousness and pure heartedness; as a consequence, that those who reject Him in that character are to the extent of that repudiation, not right or pure in heart.

The scriptures are clear on the question of Christ's own claim to divinity, and the efficacy of His blood as a sacrificial atonement for mankind. These claims are either true or false. Those who hold them to be untrue seek to place Him in the light of the most gigantic fraud that ever appeared on the earth. We are unable to understand how any person can accept Him as being "in some sense a Savior," and at the same time maintain that He was a pretender and that He therefore belonged to the class to whom He administered His terrible rebukes—the hypocrites. Accepting Him merely in the same light as Socrates, or any other mere moral philosopher, does not alter the situation. No other moral teacher made such claims as He did, and if it be held that He represented Himself in a false light, those who assume such a position regarding Him place Him below the level of moral teachers who have never asserted that they were more than ordinary men.

Mr. Mills, in stating that the acceptance of Christ, in the capacity in which He presented Himself, was a part of righteousness, only reasserted what Jesus Himself insisted upon. It seems to be strained in essence to presume that the gentleman meant it to be understood that in his estimation there are no Jews who are righteous in a worldly sense. He doubtless does claim that in their non-acceptance of the Savior in His divine character they failed in that respect, in not conforming to what every sincere Christian must believe to be a part of righteousness, and therefore necessary to absolute purity of heart. The Redeemer was personally rejected by the forefathers of the Hebrew race. Had they, on the contrary, received Him, they would not have been under the condemnation which, according to the Scriptures, He pronounced against them.

It seems to us that, from the standpoint of Christianity, as defined by the Bible, the position of Mr. Mills has the quality of consistency, while that can hardly be said of the attitude of people who repudiate the claims made by Jesus Himself to being of divine character and yet profess to accept of Him as in some sense a Savior.

MR. GLADSTONE ON SILVER.

SEVERAL years ago Mr. Gladstone's view of monetary standards was published in the Manchester (England) Guardian. This was reproduced in a recent issue of the American Banker, from which the following is taken:

"The standard of value, which is the great instrument of exchange, is itself a commodity, and, being such, is itself subject to fluctuation. Such fluctuation is economically an evil, and every wisely-governed state should seek to have for its standard of value a commodity which is the least subject to fluctuation. That commodity, as I conceive, is gold, and to adopt any other standard or to add to gold any other metal more subject to fluctuation than gold would be to increase that fluctuation, and therewith the consequent inconvenience or distress. If a change were made which should of itself lower the value of sterling money in which debts are payable, this would be an additional and most formidable mischief. Thirty or forty years ago it was very commonly thought that gold had undergone a very heavy depreciation. There is now an opinion that it has been artificially and very largely forced up in value. My belief has been all along that any increase or any decrease in value which has taken place has been within very narrow limits. I cannot deny that the action of certain great Continental States may have had limited effect in raising the exchangeable value of gold. Such action has arisen, I must suppose, from a desire to attain or approach to the best possible standard; and while I regret the inconvenience which may be due even to a minor change of value, there will be a future compensation in the result. I personally am aware of no sufficient reason why we ourselves should not effect a moderate addition to it by the gradual introduction of a carefully limited system of issuing notes smaller in value than five pounds. But I am convinced that any search for industrial relief of whatever kind from a policy of alteration in the basis of our exchanges, great and small, which is gold, would be a barren and hopeless quest, diverting men for the time from efforts after practical thrift and improvement, and ending in substantial, perhaps in bitter, disappointment."

Unless Mr. Gladstone has changed in his opinions, free silver coinage will not receive much support from his government. But then, like all men of progressive mind, the "Grand Old Man" modifies his views with the increase of light, the effect of experience and the change in surrounding conditions.

The name of the first Odd Fellows' lodge organized at Stockholm is John Ericsson.

THE HEALTH OF SALT LAKE.

The report of the Salt Lake City Health Department for August has just been received. In an estimated population of 80,000 there were 64 deaths for that month, making an annual death rate per 1000 of 12. Cholera infantum seems to have done its work during August, 1892. There are 27 out of the total 64 deaths charged to it. Scuffle Jeblillia comes next with five, and diphtheria with three deaths. Accident, Bright's disease, consumption, dysentery, inflammation, and meningitis carried off two each. Alcoholism, anemia—pernicious, apnoea, apoplexy, asphyxia, cancer of stomach, convulsions, epilepsy, erysipelas, heart disease, marasmus, cerebral-apical meningitis, operation, peritonitis, pericarditis, malignant tumor, and uraemia, one each.

Not included in death rate are one accident at birth and four stillborn. Of the 64 deceased persons, 53 were residents of the city one year and over, and six under one year. At forty-nine deaths physicians were in attendance, while there were none in attendance at fifteen. From points outside the city limits twelve bodies were received for interment. According to sex there were forty-one male and twenty-three female deaths. Sixty-two were white and two colored. Thirty-nine were natives of Utah, seven from other parts of the United States, five from England, five from Scotland, two each from Ireland and Denmark, one from Finland, and three unknown.

Contagious diseases are reported from four wards; diphtheria in the Eighth and Twentieth, and scarlet fever in the Thirteenth and Twenty-first.

The number of births reported for August, 1892, was ninety-nine, and marriages, as taken from the county records, numbered fifty-two. A summary for August shows fifty-two marriages, sixty-four deaths and ninety-nine births for the city of Salt Lake.

MAKE A WISE CHOICE.

THERE will be probably three candidates in the field for the office of Delegate to Congress this fall. The Republicans will make the first nomination, the Democrats the second, the "Liberals" the third. It is impossible that each body will do its best to elect its candidate. The man who is considered likely to gain the largest number of votes is, we should judge, the object in view by each of the respective parties. We therefore wish to suggest that great care should be taken in making a choice. Enthusiasm and personal proclivities are all very well, but wisdom is what is most necessary in this case.

Utah should have a Delegate in Congress who will work for the interests of the whole people. He should be an active man; one well acquainted with the Territory and its needs; one who will be devoted and painstaking; one who can make his way among men and create favorably impressions; one who will be truly representative of Utah and all its varied claims and prospects. That is the kind of man to capture the votes of the people.

It does not matter so much as to his oratorical powers, although they are not by any means to be despised. But a Delegate in Congress has very little opportunity for speech-making. It is different with a Representative or a Senator. A Delegate must be a worker, a diligent, watchful and persistent laborer for the Territory he represents. We have no axe to grind for anybody. We have no person to propose. We only want the welfare of the Territory. And therefore we advise each party to put forward a man who will be suitable for the post, so that which ever party wins, Utah will be fitly represented at the seat of government.

THE FIRE ISLAND DRAMA.

THE scene enacted on Fire Island yesterday was highly dramatic. The conduct of the mob which gathered at the dock, numbers of those composing it armed with shotguns, to resist the landing of the unfortunate passengers from the "Normania," was not merely unmanly; it was brutal and barbarous. Those people exhibited the perfection of selfish cowardice. The appeals made by and in behalf of the passengers were so pathetic that they awakened the emotions of the reader of the report of them. The obstructors would not even allow the old women and the children to come ashore to obtain one night's rest. They even persistently refused to permit bedding and food to be taken aboard the "Cepheus" to the hungry, exposed and exhausted passengers, unless the Captain should come ashore to receive service of a temporary injunction order, forbidding him to land passengers.

We should think that the infamous Reid, the lawyer who acted for and prompted the mob, would be remembered in all time to come as an infamous, unfeeling trickster.

It is to the credit of the representatives of the press that they interceded on behalf of the unfortunate people and plead with the mob not to perpetrate such a crime.

This incident is a disgrace to the country, and presents the nation in an unenviable light, before the world. It is a verification of the commentary of the poet about "man's inhumanity to man." The "Normania" people were mostly Americans returning home, who were denied the privilege of planting their feet upon the soil of their own land by the inhumanity and cowardice of a mob of their own countrymen. It is passing strange that such a scene should occur among so brave a people as the Americans.

AMERICANS IN EUROPE.

AN article in the European edition of the New York Herald contains some calculations that ought to be of interest to American political economists. It is asserted that there was in Europe, a short time ago, 150,000 Americans. The great hotels of Paris, London, Berlin, Brussels and Vienna were crowded with tourists from this country. In the shops of Regent street, London, business is conducted by a standard of dollars and cents in order to accommodate the American customer.

It is estimated that there were about 75,000 resident Americans in Europe on April 1st last. From investigations made of the passenger lists of the various large transatlantic steamship companies it has been found that 60,000 tourists have visited Europe from the United States from April 1st to August 1st. Then there is an estimate of 15,000 made for small ships, well-to-do persons who sometimes travel in the way of hotel expense, railway fares and ordinary purchases is put at $7.50 per day for each person. For 75,000 tourists this would net nearly $4,000,000 per week. For seventeen weeks that would make $68,000,000. This only applies to the 75,000 tourists, but of the 75,000 who are more or less permanent, no figures are given as to their expenditures. The article concludes as follows:

"And here lies the reason for the continued shipments of gold from America. Nine-tenths of the people who visit Europe are armed with letters of credit, and it is to meet the demands made by these credits that the increased shipments of the metal are due. When the tide of travel goes out the flow of gold will cease."

THE FUTURE LIGHT.

THE Cincinnati Commercial Gazette says:

"It seems hard to believe that in a very few years the incandescent lamp which we now regard as, in many respects, an almost perfect light, will be regarded as a crude makeshift, which mankind avail itself of while science stood on the threshold of the discovery of the perfect luminant. Mr. Tesla has shown in his experiments an ideal form of electric lighting which would transcend in luxury and convenience our present system of electric lighting by incandescent lamps as far as the latter transcends the oil lamps and tallow dips used by our near ancestors.

"Every drawing-room would become an electric field in a continual state of rapidly alternating areas in which the occupants would live experiencing no unpleasant effect whatever, while vacuous tubes or phosphorescent globes and tubes, without care or attention, would shed a soft, diffuse light of color and intensity arranged to suit the most luxurious fancy.

"Mr. Tesla's watchword is that the phosphorescent glow is the light of the future; he hints at artificial auroras spreading from the summits of towers of shining to undreamed of height, and he has, at all events, got as far as producing in the air at atmospheric pressure a glowing plane bounded by two rings, one a foot and thirty inches in diameter respectively. Whether all his visions will be realized remains to be proved; there is no doubt that they are guiding him aright."

REPORTS from South America state that there is a Messianic expectation among the Indians of the Andes in Peru, similar to that which existed among the Indians of this country about two years ago.

A FRIEND asks how many times Gladstone has been Premier of England. The answer to the question is that the recent advent to power of the "Grand Old Man" makes the fourth time he has assumed the leadership of the government.

THE CHOLERA.

New York, Sept. 3.—Nothing can now save the great metropolis from the great plague, but absolute compliance on the part of every member of the community with the instructions of the Board of Health and the quarantine authorities. The danger is real and it cannot be over estimated. Newly inflicted steamships arrived in the harbor today with awful stories of death and suffering. They were the "Rugia" and "Normania," both of Hamburg.

The "Rugia" buried five steerage passengers at sea and had five living cholera patients still on board when she cast anchor. The "Normania" buried four steerage passengers and one cabin passenger. She had four patients still alive, one being a member of the crew.

It is claimed that the cabin passenger who died on the "Normania" was suffering from diabetes only.

The quarantine officers are in a state of nervous excitement. It must not be understood that they are frightened, but they are hoping for the best, and the "Normania" is expected to get by safely. When the saloon passengers of the vessel will get off is a question Dr. Jenkins has not yet decided.

Dr. Jenkins early this morning telegraphed for Professor Hermann Briggs, consulting pathologist of the Health Department, and Professor Wm. Wells, professor of bacteriology at John Hopkins University. They arrived shortly after noon, and without waiting for lunch Dr. Jenkins took them down to the steamboat wharf.

"What will you do with those stricken with the disease on the 'Rugia,' 'Normania,' and 'Moravia,' doctor?" a reporter asked.

"We will," he replied, "remove them to Swinburne Island just as fast as we possibly can." Dr. Jenkins proceeded to Swinburne Island and then to the infected vessels in lower quarantine and preparations were begun for the transfer of the patients.

At 8 p. m. the "Normania's" mail having been

it was placed on board the steamboat "John E. Moore" and taken to New York. The steamer "Umbria" left quarantine for the pier at 6:30 this afternoon. All the first and second class passengers were transferred from the "City of Rome" about 5 o'clock and the steamer left for the pier at 6:30 p. m. Tomorrow Dr. Jenkins proposes to establish a quarantine patrol in the lower bay and keep passing vessels and newspaper tugs 1000 feet from the "Rugia" and "Normania." A fisherman attempted to land on the south beach this morning, but the police would not let him.

He came to Dr. Jenkins for permission to land his boat. Dr. Jenkins told him that he and all the craft around would have to stop working and fishing in the bay hereafter and will issue an order to that effect.

QUARANTINE, Sept. 3.—Dr. Jenkins went to lower quarantine and upon his return it was learned that three more deaths occurred on the infected steamers, two on the "Moravia" and one on the "Rugia." The child which was taken sick on board of the "Moravia" is still alive but in a critical condition. Official contradiction is given to the rumor that there is sickness on board the "Stubbenhuk." The bodies of the passengers who died from the disease will be removed to Swinburne Island tomorrow morning. The other passengers will also be taken off the steamers and put on the Swinburne Island. The bodies of the three persons who died today will be cremated on Swinburne Island tomorrow afternoon.

"La Bourgogne" of the French line arrived tonight. Being on the suspect list it was sent to join the "Normania" and others at lower quarantine anchorage. The captain had not heard of any cholera in Havre and reported all well.

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—Three large steamers, with immigrants on board, arrived here today from Europe, but there was no evidence of cholera among the passengers. They were the North German Lloyd steamship "Fulda," from Genoa, August 24th, with five hundred and eight passengers, the North German Lloyd steamship "Darmstadt," from Bremen, August 24th, with three hundred and eight passengers, and the French steamer "La Bourgogne," from Havre, August 24th, with eight hundred and forty immigrants.

The cabin passengers of the steamer "Normania" have been transferred to Hoffman Island. The panic among them today is described by an eye witness as something frightful.

They cried out against being confined in the pest ships and ladies on board the vessel are in a state of the greatest terror. Their fears were relieved to a certain extent, however, by removal to Hoffman Island. The commissioners describe the terror prevailing among the passengers as of a heart-rending character.

There were some doubts among the cabin passengers as to the presence of the dread disease on board the steamer, but the deaths and new cases which occurred today brought TERROR TO THE BRAVEST HEARTS on board the vessel and now all fully recognize that the grim specter of cholera is really in their midst.

The Italian man-of-war "Garigliana," which brought here the statue of Christopher Columbus, presented by the Italian nation to the people of the United States, arrived at Quarantine this afternoon. The sculptor of the statue, Signor Getano Rusco, was among the passengers on board of the steamer "Fulda."

There was a great panic on board the "Normania" among the steerage passengers when the new cases and deaths occurred. They begged the health commissioners on a tug which came alongside to take them off and said they could get $3000 together in a minute if it could get them ashore. They were quieted down and relieved from terror on being landed on Hoffman Island. There cannot be any doubt of the virulent nature of the disease. Heinrich Lammer, who died today, was only taken ill this morning. Antonia Herl, on board the "Rugia," was also only sick for about twenty hours. The last remaining child of the Horn family, an infant a few months old, is not expected to live through the night. Of the whole family of children, five in number ten days ago, the little one, who is sure to die, is all that the parents have left.

All steamers from Hamburg and Havre will be stopped at Lower Quarantine and retained as long as necessary. The "Brilliant," an oil tank steamer from Hamburg, will be disinfectant here. She has no sickness and has a clean bill of health. Now that the "Normania" steerage passengers are ashore their portion of the steamer will be thoroughly fumigated and disinfected. Dr. Jenkins thinks the cabin passengers are perfectly safe.

The following is the official list of

NEW CASES AND NEW DEATHS on board the "Normania": Emma Horn, steerage, aged eight, died today, five days.

Heinrich Lammer, aged forty-seven, steerage steward; died while in transit to the hospital. He had been

NURSING CHOLERA PATIENTS.

There are no new cases on board the "Normania." On board the "Rugia" Antonio Ferla, aged seventeen, steerage, died today; taken ill yesterday. New cases on "Rugia": Christine Hansen, aged ten, and Peter Hansen, aged eight; on board the "Moravia" Abraham Schneider, aged eight, died in transit. No new cases.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 6.—General Superintendent Kimball of the Life Saving Service this afternoon sent a telegram to all keepers stating that information had been received of efforts to evade the quarantine regulations by persons attempting to land from foreign vessels on beaches and places outside the established ports of entry. The keepers are directed to prevent this. This will result in the establishment of an effective cordon along the entire coast of the United States.

LANSING, Mich., Sept. 6.—The State Board of Health today declared twenty days' quarantine against all immigrants from European points arriving by way of Canada who have not undergone quarantine at the sea coast or had their baggage inspected and disinfected.

QUARANTINE, S. I., Sept. 7.—Dr. Jenkins this evening wrote the secretary of the treasury calling attention to the hardships of detaining cabin passengers of incoming steamers upon over-crowded vessels which sailed from infected ports and stating that it was extremely important that prompt provision be made to remove these passengers to a suitable locality. He decided that the most suitable locality was Fire Island where there are accommodations for at least 1000 persons. A letter was published this evening from one of the lady passengers on the "Normania" complaining that they are shut up and she complains of the way the steamship company neglects them. All would be patient, she says, could they feel that any wise care was being exercised and could they be removed from the crew and stokers, the only people inclined to any kind of illness. The captain, says the lady in her letter, has no control over the crew and stokers and wages had to be guaranteed by passengers as they would not work since their engagements with the company were over on their arrival at this side.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 7.—The Secretary of State has received a telegram from the United States Consul at Brussels saying: "Brussels officials report one case of cholera and the newspapers report several."

HAMBURG, Sept. 7.—The cholera epidemic has increased in violence in the suburbs and adjacent cities.

BERLIN, Sept. 8.—Prof Virchow, as the result of his investigations of the cholera in Russia, declares that the measures for treating cholera patients there and preventing the spread of the disease excellent, are better in this respect than in Germany. The professor does not think the infection of Germany from the western part of Russia probable. He further says that owing to the inadequate knowledge of the bacillus it is impossible to tell whether the cholera will reach here in the spring. He holds that the disease germ is not killed by cold.

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—The "Normania" and "Rugla" have again hoisted the yellow flag, and the same signal is flying on Hoffman island, indicating the discovery of additional cholera cases this morning. Up to yesterday evening there has been thirty-one cases of sickness and disease and eight deaths in this port.

The sickers on "Normania" this morning seem to be the greatest sufferers. Eight of the crew of that vessel were transferred yesterday afternoon to Swinburne island. These men had only a day before been taken back to the ship after twelve hours' stay on Hoffman island, where they had been disinfected with all possible thoroughness. Along with five hundred others they were taken back to the ship apparently in excellent health. The doctors will not admit positively that these eight patients have cholera, nor will they deny it.

Secretary Foster says Dr. Hamilton and Dr. Jenkins will inspect Sandy Hook tomorrow with a view to selecting a site for a camp of refuge for the cooped-up cabin passengers of the steamships now detained at Quarantine.

Dr. Cyrus Edison, sanitary superintendent, received the following dispatch from Dr. Seibert, who is in Berlin: "Berlin steams all articles from Hamburg for one hour. The highest opinion is that all the rivers in northern Europe are infected and that new outbreaks can be expected. The new law will stop all Russian immigration passing quarantine. Months will be insufficient to stamp out the disease. The only efficient method for you in America is to steam the immigrant baggage or other articles for at least an hour. They must be steamed singly or else immigration must be stopped. Germs are everywhere; no port is safe."

The borough board of health has sent from the Atlantic Highlands a protest to Governor Abbott against landing passengers of infected ships at Sandy Hook. The borough has provided a day and night watch and a land patrol service to that end.

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—The cholera situation at Quarantine is grave. Not only are new cases breaking out every day among the steerage passengers on the ill-fated "Normania" and "Rugla," the former of whom are on Hoffman island, but it is now settled among the crew of the "Normania" who are on board. The cabin passengers who have been free from any sign of the disease are still kept like rats in a trap, enclosed within the sides of the steamer, and cholera is raging alongside of them. "There is no ship to put them on or any place where I can land them," says the health officer, while the agent whose place is to see the passengers cared for, says nothing. Dr. Jenkins has made strenuous exertions to obtain a place to put the well passengers, but up to the present has been unsuccessful. Today he thought he had everything arranged but a gentleman showed a correspondent of the Associated Press a telegram from Austin Corbin stating that the War Department had refused Sandy Hook for the cabin passengers and this blocked their plan to erect barracks there. Dr. Jenkins said he had asked Governor Flower to annex Fire Island, which was private property, and let him put cabin passengers ashore at once, and he thought it might be possible to do so and have the appropriation of its value made later. The Governor has advised him to rent or purchase a vessel to put the cabin passengers in if necessary and he thought things would be straightened out.

As regards the situation at Lower Quarantine things are no better than on the previous day, in fact they are very much worse in regard to mortality, eleven fresh cases and four deaths being the day's record. On the "Normania" six new cases were found, and on the "Rugla" three new cases, all members of the crew and the steerage. They were removed to Swinburne island.

The "Moravia" was fouled for the fourth time to be absolutely free from cases, and the doctors are now confidently stamped out on board that ship. At Hogman's island one of the "Normania's" steerage passengers had developed cholera, and he was removed on a tug to Swinburne island. There it was found that four deaths had occurred since last night.

It is reported at the Maritime Exchange that cholera has appeared in Mexico. A cablegram from Vera Cruz was received stating that four officers and two sailors of the British steamship "May" at that port were sick about the vessel.

The following letter, written on the "Normania" September 7th, was received in the city today at the office of the Evangelist from Rev. Daniel Fisher, D. D., LL. D., president Hanover College, Indiana:

"On behalf of the cabin passengers of this ill-fated ship I appeal to you for help. We are perfectly willing to be quarantined, but in the name of humanity and of civilization, not to speak of Christianity, let the quarantine be at least rational, and not barbarous. We have not been sick in the cabin except in one case, which seems to have almost no choleric symptoms, and that occurred two days ago. We have succeeded in getting the steerage away, but the crew cannot be moved. The ship must have them aboard. One after another they are sorely diseased these circumstances we sorely dare hope that ultimately we shall escape. At any rate when will such quarantine end? Think of children, women, feeble persons, any set of men, even criminals, left to wear out in danger of cholera in this fashion. If any set of people in any other situation were enduring such peril as ours, millions of voices would be raised to rescue us without a day's delay. Why are we unworthy of help, situated as we are? Surely not because help is impossible. Put us on another vessel, land us at a safe point on the shore and seclude us to any extent, but for God's sake do not perpetuate this barbarism on us here for a day longer. Try to help us at once.

Yours very truly,
D. W. FISHER.

P. S.—Why are we on this ship? Because the agent of the company in London assured almost every passenger who embarked at Southampton that there was no steerage this trip. Some of us have his written statement. The ship sailed from Hamburg without steerage.

LONDON, Sept. 8.—The Antwerp correspondent of the Daily News, says, "The cholera returns at least favorable. Dr. Smith, who was commissioned by the Lancet to report on the outbreak, condemns the water supplied to the poorer quarters of the city as contaminated with sewerage and generally bad."

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—The Hamburg-American steamship "Wieland" reached the lower bay this morning and anchored and hoisted the yellow flag, indicating that she had sickness, probably cholera, aboard. "Wieland," like "Rugla," carries both cabin and steerage passengers, and, no doubt, has her full complement of the latter.

The yellow flag has also been hoisted on board the "Normania," where so many saloon passengers are detained in spite of the fact that the scourge seems to be attacking the steamship's crew and steerage passengers alone.

Though the news or another cholera ship in port increases the gravity of the situation at quarantine, there is no alarm felt in official circles and the health authorities are still confident of being able to keep the dread invader from landing.

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—An appeal is today addressed to Governor Flower, signed by a committee of passengers of the first and second class, on the steamer "Normania," protesting against being kept prisoners abroad that cholera infected ship. The petition is signed by a committee consisting entirely of physicians and among other charges against Dr. Jenkins, is the allegation that the health officers only visited the vessel every two or three days, and made no systematic and regular inspection, and that the dead bodies remain on the vessel a dangerously long time before removal by the health authorities.

In conclusion these physicians say: "It seems inconceivable that 500 heretofore healthy people should be quarantined on board an infected ship, and that it is impossible to isolate them at a place thus far not infected. They emphasize this point so much more as from all appearances the measures taken to disinfect 'Normania' have been incomplete and void of any speedy, energetic and systematic mode of proceeding, which is necessary to efficiently counteract the damaging influences to which all are exposed.

In reference to these points they submit the following facts: First, at no time have there been facilities to remove the sick immediately after the onset of the cholera symptoms. Even dead bodies have been kept on board for twenty-four hours or more.

Second, at no time has any official, thorough inspection of the ship been made; nor have any measures been taken with regard to disinfection, except such as were possible with the insufficient supply of disinfecting material carried on board.

Third—Disinfecting material has not been furnished promptly, in spite of the request of the ship's authorities. Their demand made on Saturday, September 3, to place on board the ship an official expert to supervise and execute thorough disinfection has not been complied with.

Fourth—The water supply of the ship has not been taken care of in a proper way. Although by Monday morning the tanks were clean and ready to receive fresh water, such is not on board at the present hour. The supply of fresh water immediately after the arrival of the ship, should have been made the main point of sanitary importance. Since therefore, in spite of such a condition of things the passengers should be obliged to remain in quarantine on board the "Normania," the undersigned deem it their duty to demand the execution of such sanitary measures, under the supervision of official experts as are apt to remove efficiently the danger to which, under the given circumstances, the occupants of the ship are constantly exposed.

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—The Ham. The steamer "Scandia," at Lower Quarantine, is full of cholera. There were thirty-two deaths on board during the voyage, twenty-nine steerage, two second cabin and one first cabin.

The "Scandia" has it from her bow to stern, from main deck to keelson. Cabin passengers, crew and emigrants all have it in their midst. She will, in all probability, be the hardest cholera importer to fight of the lot.

As though the "Scandia" was not enough for one night, another horror adds to the situation. Yesterday the Wyoming was only on the suspect list. Now, at two in the morning, she can be classed as a cholera ship. Mrs. Person, mother of two little children, Elias and Adelaide, who died yesterday of a suspicious disease, herself succumbed to the dread disease. She with three more were removed from the "Wyoming" during the late forenoon yesterday. They were placed in the hospital and Mrs. Person died during the night.

The "Scandia" left the plague-stricken port of Hamburg August 27, loaded with 1088 souls. She had an enormous number of steerage. Before she had been many days out cholera broke out, and before she arrived the pest was fairly raging on board of her. Thirty-nine cases occurred in half a week, of these thirty-two succumbed before she arrived at Lower Quarantine anchorage.

One by one, by couples and by threes the bodies of the unfortunate victims were dropped overboard.

LOON LAKE, Sept. 9.—Before leaving this morning for Saranac the President sent a dispatch to the Secretary of War saying that while he was not fully advised as to the particulars of the request for a portion of Sandy Hook for the quarantine of passengers, he was anxious to do all in his power for the comfort and safety of the people, an inter, upon receipt of telegrams from the secretaries of the treasury and navy, who are in New York, he sent a message to the acting secretary of war as follows:

"In view of the representation made by Secretaries Foster and Tracy, I direct that a sufficient portion of the reservation at Sandy Hook be set apart for use for the quarantined steamship passengers."

The president advised the secretary of the treasury of the order, at the same time cautioning him as to the difficulty of maintaining a proper quarantine of such a camp if established, and also of the possible embarrassment that might arise from the removal of the passengers out of the jurisdiction of the New York officers. Both of these questions must be left to the judgment of the officers on the ground and who know the situation. He also directed that notice be given all steamship companies that if they persisted in bringing emigrants from infected ports, it might result in their being denied entrance to our harbors.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—The attention of the treasury department was today called to the report that a pillow marked "Moravia," and presumed to be a portion of the infected bedding cast away by the vessel on its recent tragic voyage to New York, had been picked up on the Jersey coast. Other articles of similar character were found at other points on the same coast. The matter was first reported to the State health authorities and they took prompt action. All the articles were destroyed by fire and orders given for the immediate establishment of an efficient patrol along the entire coast for the destruction by fire of any articles found on the sea coast that might possibly contain cholera germs.

Acting Secretary Spaulding said today that the crews of the life saving stations will co-operate in these precautionary measures.

CHICAGO, Sept. 10.—Shortly before 10 o'clock this morning four car loads of Swedish emigrants arrived at the Union depot by way of New York and Pittsburgh. The train came here with clean bills of health, but the authorities believe that one member who died at 1:30 o'clock was afflicted with cholera. Albertina Larson, 18 years of age, was in a semi-conscious condition when the train pulled into the depot and the physicians at once ordered her sent to 1106, Thirty-fifth street, where she was to have stopped. On her way home she reaped into upon a lousiness and Dr. Garrett, of the health department, sent her to the county hospital. She died on the way.

The woman, it is claimed, showed unmistakable symptoms of the dread disease. She complained of pains in her stomach, was continually gasping and the skin under her eyes showed a mottled blue discoloration. She was first taken ill at Pittsburgh, where she purchased medicine. Officer Jones of Harrison street station administered stimulants during the ride to the hospital, but the woman gradually sank. The physicians ordered the armory ambulance fumigated as soon as it returned to the station, which was thoroughly done. The party to which the dead woman belonged left Guttenburg, Sweden, August 19, and sailed from Liverpool August 27, in the "Lord Gough."

The body of the dead woman was admitted to the county morgue and placed in a separate room. The clothing was fumigated. Dr. Garrett said after he had left the hospital that he would not express a definite opinion that the woman had cholera, although he stated that such was the indication, as there were strong symptoms of that disease. He wished to be convinced, he said, before expressing an official opinion. Dr. Jones was equally conservative in his opinion, conceding however that the cholera symptoms were strongly marked.

CHICAGO, Sept. 10.—The cholera scare in this city suddenly collapsed this morning on the official announcement that Albertina Larson, the Swedish immigrant, who died here last night, died of heart disease instead of cholera. This is the official report of the health authorities. There were no indications of cholera.

QUARANTINE, N. Y., Sept. 10.—A message from Swinburne Island this morning says two more dead bodies and eleven cases were removed from the "Scandia" this morning. Since the hour of the above message, 6:30, no further definite information has been received, but report has it that still more deaths have occurred and that further cholera cases have been discovered. This is a sad tale which

The crew of the quarantine tug boat "Fletcher," which was ordered this morning to transfer the passengers of the "Normania" and "Rugia" to the relief vessels "Stonington" and "New Hampshire," have refused to do duty with the tug boat on this service. The health officers now are endeavoring to secure another crew.

Dr. Jenkins has a telegram from Dr. Byron in which the latter states that he is just back from "Scandia" with two dead bodies and eleven cases. This is four additional cases and two more deaths over last night's report.

NEW YORK, Sept. 10.—After a thorough course of fumigation and disinfection, and after every person on board had been put in such condition that it was practically impossible for them to convey contagion to the city, three steamers were released from quarantine this afternoon. They were the "Britannia" from Liverpool, "Joseph John" from Hamburg and "Vandam" from Antwerp. The immigration agents of this city whose business it is to forward new arrivals of this port to various destinations, were much disturbed over the announcement made by the Illinois State Board of Health refusing admission to all immigrants to the State unless they bear certificates from the health and immigration officials of the port of New York that they are free from disease and their baggage and belongings thoroughly disinfected. The board of health issued the following bulletin this afternoon:

"There are no cases of cholera in the city today. The number of deaths for the week ending at noon today is 731, against 747 in the corresponding week of last year.

Deaths from diarrhoeal diseases numbered 92, which is less than in any corresponding week since 1870, although the population of the city has nearly doubled since then. There were no deaths during the week from typhus or smallpox.

The health of the city is unusually good in every particular."

BERLIN, Sept. 10.—(Copyrighted by the New York Associated Press.)—The authorities consider that the foreign press has exaggerated the condition of affairs in Hamburg. Cholera is bad enough in the poorer and older parts of the city, but in the middle and upper classes the residents would not know the existence of the epidemic but for the information gleaned through the newspapers. Hamburg is not polluted through its bourses. The Imperial board of health would have assented to the suggestion of the alarmists to isolate the city and suburbs and interdict all communication with them. The ministers, however, took the special advice of Professor Virchow, Professor Koch and other authorities, and arrived at the conclusion that the rigorous system of surveillance would be sufficient protection.

QUARANTINE, N. Y., Sept. 11.—Sunday morning at Upper Quarantine was quiet, and to the surprise of the health officer and his assistants they enjoyed their first night's undisturbed rest since cholera invaded the shores of New York bay. The first arrival in port this morning was the Wilson line steamer "Curacao" from Hull. She carried no passengers and no sickness being found or reported on board she was at once released and proceeded to dock. "La Champagne" dropped anchor opposite the Quarantine pier at 6:30 a.m. She carried 316 saloon passengers and 82 second class passengers. The fact that she had no immigrants on board added to the hope of the passengers and crew that the vessel would not be detained, but the hope was not of long duration as on the health officer boarding her, he ordered the ship's detention, although all passengers' baggage had been shipped at Cberbough at the government wharf and inspected and fumigated there, affidavits to that effect being presented to the quarantine officers made by the United States consul at the port of sailing. Dr. Jenkins ordered her detained for an indefinite period as a precautionary measure. Later in the day the mail was fumigated and landed.

DETROIT, Mich., Sept. 11.—Fifty or sixty immigrants who arrived at Windsor, Ont., today over the Canadian Pacific from Quebec, were held there to await the decision of Detroit health officials as to whether they can enter. The government inspector has declined to have them held at Windsor pending a conference with the health officers tomorrow. Sixty immigrants who were stopped at the border Friday night were released from quarantine by the decision of Dr. Frank Wells of the State board of health. He says the quarantine restrictions apply only to those immigrants entering America by Canadian ports. These immigrants came through New York harbor. The release brings the State and local boards into conflict. Health Officer Duffield says under no consideration can these immigrants pass the river except by permission of the local board of health. The situation of the immigrants in the meantime was pitiful. Two cars were sidetracked on the river bank at Walkerville on Saturday night and this morning they awoke fairly famished. But a few of them were possessed of money and they bid fair to starve. There was not a morsel of food on the cars and not one had had a warm meal since Thursday. A 4 o'clock hunger drove them out of the cars and they flocked to neighboring houses for food, begging from door to door for what they could get. As soon as their condition was made known a number of kind ladies went to their relief.

NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—There are now 3500 people in quarantine and before the flood of immigrants ceases there will be about 10,000 people to be cared for at the gates of New York. The example set by two Kings daughters, Miss Helen E. Hill and Miss Alice P. Lyon, both nurses from the Presbyterian hospital here, who on Saturday went to Swinburne Island as volunteers to nurse cholera patients, has been followed by the Jesuit fathers and the Salvation Army.

The Cunard steamer "Auranla" has been released and gone to the dock. The steamer "La Champagne" from Havre which arrived yesterday has a suspicious case of sickness and was not released this morning.

Despatches from Fire Island say the inhabitants of the surrounding country are preparing to prevent by force the landing of the quarantined passengers at Fire Island. In Bay shore the feeling is at fever heat and there are threats of treating landlord Sammie, who sold the Surf hotel to the State authorities for refuge, to a coat of tar and feathers. Justice of the Peace James H. Cooper says the hotel and all its surroundings will be burned if landing is attempted. Judge Barnard of the Supreme court of Brooklyn today issued an injunction restraining the Governor, Dr. Jenkins and others from landing the quarantined passengers on Fire Island. This applies to the town of Islip in particular.

QUARANTINE, N. Y., Sept. 12.—This day will probably be looked on in future years as one of the most horrible reproaches on American civilization that ever occurred in American history.

On Sunday the unfortunate cabin passengers of the "Normania" who for eight days had been confined on the cholera stricken ship, were greeted with the information that they were to go to Fire Island. The iron steambot "Cepheus" was hired, and the first and second-class passengers started for the promised land. The weather was rough and many were seasick. After the voyage about sixty miles, the captain weakened and said he was afraid to take the "Cepheus" over the bar with a pilot. In consequence the "Cepheus" started back and the first-class passengers were once more put on board a rickety old Stoullinger liner. The second cabin passengers were kept on board the "Cepheus" without a bed or even a pillow to lie on. They were strewn about the settees and carpeted decks of the steamer.

Early on Monday morning the captain of the "Cepheus" discovered that he required coal and water and could not get to Fire Island without them. He calmly steamed up to the quarantine jetty and made fast alongside, and sent word shortly after to wake the health officer. Dr. Jenkins decided to water and coal her at his own dock. This was done, and about 10 o'clock the "Cepheus" once more started down the bay to embark the first saloon passengers and take them to Fire Island. The trip was again a rough one, but there were more than the elements to be met. There had been a storm brewing around Babylon and Fire, since the first rumor that Fire Island was being turned into a quarantine station was heard. The Babylonians and their neighbors cared nothing for the sufferings of their fellow-countrymen and women. They did not care if they died of cholera, starved or were drowned; all they thought of was the totally improbable proposition of their being attacked by the pestilence owing to the proximity of a number of ladies, gentlemen and children who never had cholera in their midst, who had lived for a fortnight on board of a plague-stricken ship without being touched, and who were returning to their own homes.

THE CRAVEN-HEARTED CREATURES trembling from their own imaginary fears rather than from any real danger, not only invoked the arm of the law by means of the anomalous legal suit entitled an injunction, but assembled as a mob, a hundred strong, to drive these helpless women and children back to the cholera ship and to possible death. The governor begged and implored, Dr. Jenkins prayed the men to allow the passengers to land, telegram after telegram flashed over the wire assuring the men at Islip and those of Babylon they ran no risk. They were obdurate. They would not give in and the passengers of the "Normania," now on Monday night, are lying in the inlet by Fire Island. The passengers appointed a committee with Senator McPherson as chairman, to confer with the mob. The latter refused to withdraw the injunction, and so far tonight at least they claim a victory, a victory gained over 471 helpless women and children, and equally unoffending husbands.

There were at Fire Island exciting scenes this afternoon, owing to the demonstration of three or four hundred Bay men, and others led by Supervisor W. H. Young and Ex-supervisor John M. Vail of Islip town, who took possession of the dock armed with shotguns, cars and other weapons and twice resisted all attempts made to land passengers from the "Cepheus." As the "Cepheus" ran alongside the dock the first time a hundred voices shouted, "You cannot land here, so back to New York." Others shouted threats of throwing men overboard if they stepped from the vessel onto the dock. A hawser was thrown to a post and was immediately thrown back. Five policemen of "Cepheus" climbed to the gunwale and motioned as if to draw revolvers, but went no further. C. L. Wall, whom Governor Flower authorized to take charge of the hotel here, who was also aboard the "Cepheus," asked the mob to listen to him and then said:

"I represent the State of New York and am authorized to land here and assume charge." The crowd shouted, "Show us your authority." He thereupon produced a paper, which he began to read, but could not make himself heard.

Many passengers, mostly women, appealed to the crowd to allow them to land, but the answer that came was

A DRASTIC SHOUT.

Lawyer Reid and Supervisor Young informed those aboard the steamboat that Justice Barnard had granted an injunction restraining them from landing. Mr. Wall asked to see the injunction, but as the document had not yet arrived it could not be produced. They stated, however, that it was on the way. The "Cepheus" then backed out and turned. While turning Dr. Voight secured a boat to take him to the steamer and had gone half way when the men rowing refused to go further and turned back. He made two other unsuccessful attempts to reach the steamer. The "Cepheus" again ran alongside the docks, and a solid line of determined Bay men repelled the attempt to land. Mr. Wall again asserted authority but when he stated that his authority was from Dr. Jenkins, the health officer, the crowd jeered and Supervisor Young shouted, "We don't recognize Dr. Jenkins' or Governor Flower's authority here." Lottie Collins, who stood in the first row of passengers who lined the decks of the "Cepheus," put out her hands and cried "Shame, shame, you call yourselves Americans; shame." and as the steamer again backed from the dock the English actress kissed her hand and smiled.

After the "Cepheus" anchored, a boat was lowered and P. T. Wall and Captain Frippe rowed in to the dock but were not allowed to step ashore. Mr. Wall said he desired to confer with a committee, whereupon several persons shouted, "Supervisor Young represents us."

"Then let me ashore and Supervisor Young and I will talk the matter over," said Mr. Wall. A score of voices answered, "No, no, you cannot come ashore here. Go back to New York." Mr. Wall replied, "I represent the State of New York." "Show us your authority, then," responded the crowd. Mr. Wall thereupon took a paper out of his pocket and read from it as follows:

"To whom it may Concern:

P. T. Wall is authorized to take charge of the Surf Hotel and the passengers.

"WILLIAM E. JENKINS,
"Health Officer, Port of New York."

Supervisor Young replied: "I do not recognize Dr. Jenkins. This is not the port of New York, and I do not allow any passengers from infected ships to land in the town of Islip."

"But there is not a sick person on board. Everybody is well, and I appeal to you in behalf of American women and children to allow the people to land," said Mr. Wall.

"We think of our own women and children first, and intend to protect them at all hazards," replied the supervisor.

While this conversation was going on, Dr. Voight appeared on the dock, and began telling Dr. Wall he had charge there, when several laymen crowded around him shouting,

"THROW HIM IN THE WATER,

and would probably have carried out these threats but for the reporters. The boat returned to the "Cepheus," the dejected passengers' spirits being kept up by band music, the band playing the "Star Spangled Banner," "God Save the Queen" and "Yankee Doodle," the boat came off again, however, and Mr. Wall asked to have provisions sent aboard to the "Cepheus." Some in the crowd shouted, "All right, let them have all the provisions they want!" but a greater number answered, "No, no, give them nothing. Let them go back to New York." Dr. Voight states that he has wired Governor Flower to telegraph Sheriff A. B. Darling of Suffolk county to come here with deputies and keep the State property clear of intruders, and protect the "Cepheus" passengers in landing. Many threats were made of burning or cutting down the dock if the passengers began to land, and a number of men procured axes with which to cut away sufficient of the dock near the hotel to prevent persons from reaching the latter.

The people here have been made insane by the exercise of power. They have been appealed to in the name of God to permit the women and the youngest children to be taken to the hotel for the night; that if the request was granted their lives might be saved but refused. Events since nightfall displayed a degree of cruelty almost inconceivable. After the "Cepheus" came to anchor two police officers rowed to the landing and asked that a letter be taken to Dr. Voight. The mob refused to allow the letter to be brought ashore and DROVE THE POLICE OFF WITH THREATS.

As it was growing dark a small boat came from the steamer, and in the stern stood a gray-haired man, Robert M. Thompson. As the boat approached the landing, the mob gathered threateningly. Mr. Thompson asked to be heard on behalf of 200 women and children on board the steamer who were suffering from hunger, exposure and exhaustion. After some insulting retorts by the mob he was allowed to speak. He said the men on the steamer did not ask to land. The young women would remain if necessary, but the old women, some of them grandmothers, and children suffering not for comforts, but for decent care, should be allowed to land. They would be returned to the steamer after a night's rest and one meal. Attorney Willard B. Reid answered that if the captain of the steamer would come ashore the people to whom he spoke would consider the request. After saying he would attempt to bring the captain back with him Mr. Thompson returned to the steamer.

It was dark except for the light of the stars, when the boat was seen coming back to the landing place. When the boat almost touched the landing, a tall spare figure was seen standing in the bow. "It is Senator McPherson of New Jersey," called out Mr. Thompson, who was still in the stern. Senator McPherson stood silent for some moments looking at the mob he could dimly see crowding to the edge of the wharf.

"Citizens," said the Senator at last, "the captain declines to come ashore. If you will give me your injunction papers, I give you my word of honor I will give them to him, and he will accept them as legally served."

"Bring your captain ashore as you promised," said Attorney Reid.

"That would accomplish no more than my offer to you," continued the Senator. "You want him for some other purpose than you have stated."

Attorney Reid replied that the captain must come ashore.

"I do not understand you," said the Senator. "You appear to hesitate over some legal quibble and your hesitation means unspeakable sufferings, probably death to women and children."

The crowd remained silent.

"If we can bring him ashore, will you agree to let the suffering, innocent, helpless people land?"

"They cannot land!" yelled the mob.

The Senator turned his face up to the mob and in an impressive voice said: "I appeal to you men not to be longer led into heartless cruelty by this attorney, but to give your consent that these women and children be taken from the boat where they have nothing to eat, no place to sleep, where the common decencies of life cannot longer be observed and the surroundings foul from sickness. Before you answer what will be done, remember your own wives and children. Be manly. Do not bring everlasting disgrace on your names. Be men."

IN THE NAME OF GOD,

It did not seem as if human beings capable of undertaking the language in which they were being addressed could withstand the appeal, but the crowd stood there sullen and silent while the lawyer said: "They cannot land. If we permit them we will give away our case." "They cannot land. They cannot land," echoed the mob.

Senator McPherson sank down in the boat overcome. Mr. Thompson cried out: "You poor people, you are being duped by a tricky lawyer." "We are no more tricky than you," answered the lawyer, Mr. Reid.

"You will at least allow us to be sent food and blankets?" asked Mr. Thompson.

"Not unless the captain comes ashore," answered Reid.

When the boat rowed back to the steamer the newspaper men who had listened to this at once went to every one of the health board who were present and begged that this horrible crime be not committed.

At 8:30 a meeting of the board was held in the hotel office, where a resolution was passed that if Dr. Voight would go with Lawyer Reid to the steamer and see that the injunction papers were served, the board would allow food and blankets to be taken aboard. Dr. Voight was made to promise that if this were allowed no attempt would be made to land the passengers.

On one of the trips of the ship's yawl to the landing for bedding, Mr. Thompson came in the boat and asked if the reporters would take a petition from the passengers to be telegraphed to Governor Flower. The crowd on the landing said nothing could be taken from the ship. Mr. Thompson stated that the sheets of note paper had been fumigated according to the requirements of the United States postoffice. A member of the Isip board of health was appealed to, but he refused to receive the dispatch. The reporters offered to copy it from dictation and by the aid of a couple of lanterns this was accomplished.

The committee endeavored to obtain permission from the panic stricken mob to get blankets and bed linen from the hotel and allow the Cepheus to land for that purpose. For a long time they refused. Finally the passengers asked Dr. Voight if he could get clothing from the hotel and bring it to them. The reply was sent to the unfortunate passengers and Dr. Voight said they could only get bed clothing if he promised to leave with the Cepheus tomorrow morning. He telegraphed this to Dr. Jenkins, who replied to accept any conditions. They have now blankets to cover them, food and a place to cook it in. They will remain overnight in the channel, as the steamer could not be brought out against the heavy sea.

VIRGINIA CITY, Nev., Sept. 12.—A man named Gland died at Empire today. The doctors report his disease to have been genuine cholera.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 12.—Evidently President Harrison contemplates administering a salutary lesson to the officers of the steamship companies who, for temporary gain, continue to subject the people of the United States to cholera infection. Secretary Foster today made the following statement: "I received from the President last Saturday the following telegram:

"It is an outrage that steamship companies continue to bribe emigrants from infected ports. Say to them that it should stop, or it is certain every ship will bring disease, and we may be compelled to turn back such pest-laden vessels."

The proceedings of the baymen in resisting the landing of the passengers on Fire Island is condemned on all sides. It is believed that though Barnard's injunction may hold good, it carries with it no warrant to forcibly resist the landing. A clash between the baymen and the State militia is expected today, unless the baymen give way.

CITY OF MEXICO, Sept. 13.—Sporadic cholera has appeared in the State of San Luis Potosi. The press is calling attention to the danger of the introduction of cholera into Mexico by the way of Panama and other Pacific ports.

PARIS, Sept. 13.—There were twenty deaths from cholera here yesterday. No new cases are reported. The epidemic has broken out at Brionneux.

THE UINTAH STAKE.

The Uintah Stake of Zion comprises all of Uintah County, Utah, but the only part of it which up to the present time has been redeemed from the desert and brought under cultivation is the Ashley Valley and its extension along Dry Fork. The Ashley valley proper extends in a southeasterly direction for nearly eighteen miles and has an average width of about seven miles. It is bordered on the north and east by lofty mountains; on the south and west by low ridges which separate it from the surrounding bad lands or deserts. The Ashley Fork of Green River rises in the Uintah range of mountains around the Marsh Peak, or Baldy Peak, as it is locally called; it takes a southeasterly course through canyons and the valley which bears its name, and finally empties into Green River at Jensen's Ferry, about fourteen miles southeast of the Ashley Centre. Nearly all of Uintah county outside of the Ashley country which does not consist of mountains, is embraced in the Umpagagre and Ute Indian reservations, and consequently uninhabited, except by the Indians. But there are the Indian agencies at White Rock and Ouray and also the post, Fort Du Chene.

Uintah county was created by act of the Utah legislature in 1880, and consists of about 6000 square miles of country. It is bounded on the east by the State of Colorado, south by Grand county, west by Emery, Wasatch and Summit counties, and north by Wyoming. There are immense coal beds in the county, some of them very near the settlements, but they are very imperfectly developed as yet, there being no opportunity for shipping, and the local consumption being very small, owing to the fact that there is plenty of good cedar wood to be used for fuel in the surrounding mountains.

Different kinds of mineral also exist, but up to the present none have been brought into commercial use. Ozocerite has been discovered, while crude petroleum forces its way out of the ground at points adjacent to the settlements.

For several years Ashley valley was almost exclusively a stock-raising country, but since 1877, when the Saints began their farming operations there, agriculture has by far been the chief and most profitable branch of industry. The climate is good, though naturally hot and sultry in the summer, but the nights are always cool and invigorating. The altitude is nearly the same as Utah valley. The water is good and pure in the upper end but somewhat brackish in the lower end of the valley. Good health prevails as a rule among the people, and prosperity has attended their labors to an imminent degree. Ashley valley is truly an oasis in the desert, there being no other farming settlement nearer than Price, in Emery county, which is more than one hundred miles distant; and the intervening country is all desert, and most of it absolutely unfit for cultivation. There are, however, good tracts of land along the Uintah, the Du Chene and Lake's Fork that could be cultivated and irrigated from the streams mentioned; but all this is within the limits of the Indian reservation.

The Uintah Stake of Zion consists of six wards, namely, the Ashley, Mill, Glimes and Merrill wards, which comprise one beautiful farming district occupying the upper end of the valley; Mountain Dell, on Dry Fork, and Riverdale extending down towards and along Green River. Samuel R. Bennion, the President of the Stake, is a man of influence and integrity; his first Counselor, Brother Reuben S. Collett, is the same Elder who in connection with Apostle John Henry Smith defied the Jarman mob in Sheffield, England, in 1855, and the Second Counselor is Brother James Hacking, whose good reputation reached my ears before I reached the valley. Of the Church veterans, who dwell in this part of the country, may be mentioned Jeremiah Hatch, who formerly presided as Bishop here, Israel J. Clark, Indian missionary, Geo. Wardle, one of the Pioneers of 1847, and several members of the Mormon Battalion, including James H. Glimes, Matthew Caldwell, Dennis W. Winn, and three or four others. The whole Stake has a total membership of 1881 souls, or 325 families. There are 2 Patriarchs, 54 Seventies, 53 High Priests, 118 Elders, 13 Priests, 19 Teachers, 78 Deacons, 849 lay members, and 651 children under eight years of age. Besides the Mormon population there are quite a number of non-Mormons in the valley, but a good understanding seems to prevail among the different classes, and some have joined the Church.

Ashley ward is the principal ward in the Stake; it consists of 413 souls, or 85 families, presided over by Bishop George Freestone. The village, locally known as Vernal, that being the post office name—is the centre of Ashley ward, but only a small portion of the people live in the village, the rest reside on their farms in the surrounding region of country. Vernal is beautifully situated on a level bench on the west side of Ashley's Fork. It is about 25 miles northwest of Fort Duchesne, 120 miles from Price, 160 miles from Heber City, and about 75 miles south of Carter, the nearest railway station on the Union Pacific Railway; but as the road leading to this point is very rough and mountainous, nearly all the freighting to and from the valley is done by way of Price. There is a respectable ward house in Ashley, several school houses, a number of stores, etc. There is also a small weekly newspaper published, called Vernal Express, edited by W. M. Schlok, and owned by J. M. Barker. A woman started the first paper in Ashley valley, the Uintah Popocate, edited and published by Kate Jean Boon. The initial number bears date of January 2, 1891, and the paper was continued till February, 1892, when it changed name to the Vernal Express, the first number of which is dated February 11th, 1892.

The Merrill ward, thus named in honor of Carter W. Merrill, the first presiding Elder in that part of the valley, comprises that portion of Ashley valley which joins the Ashley ward on the southeast. The membership of this ward is 405, divided into seventy-two families, who all live in a scattered condition on their homesteads and farms. Bishop James M. Shaffer, a young man, presides over this ward, with Joseph H. Gardiner and George A. Slaughter as Counselors.

The Glines ward embraces that part of Ashley valley lying northwest of and joining the Ashley ward; forty-seven families or 307 souls constitute the numerical strength of the ward, over which Peter Abplanalp presides as Bishop. This is the first ward which the traveler reaches in visiting Ashley Valley. The Glines ward meeting house is situated two miles northwest of Vernal; the Merrill ward school house, where the meetings are held, is three miles southeast of Vernal.

The Mill ward, thus named because the only two mills in the valley are located within its borders, comprises the upper end of Ashley Valley proper and joins the Ashley ward on the northwest. The meeting house is situated in the midst of a fine farming district three miles northwest of Vernal. There are 52 families, or 444 souls (Latter-day Saints) in this ward, presided over by Bishop Wm. Shaffer. The Mill ward contains some of the very best farming land in the valley, and the people are fully as prosperous and well to do as those of any of the adjoining towns.

Mountain Dell is situated on Dry Fork, a tributary of Ashley's Fork. It is called Dry Fork because the water in the creek disappears entirely in the latter part of the summer, leaving the people to depend upon some springs, which gush forth at the point where the little cluster of houses called Mountain Dell nestles in a beautiful little valley, and this valley extends above Dry Fork for a distance of six miles, and has an average width of less than a mile. To reach this dell in the mountains the traveler has to pass over a sandy road and through a long canyon, at the mouth of which stands a romantic rocky formation consisting of high and perpendicular cliffs, which form what is locally known as the Silver Gate, immediately above where Old Fort Thornburg once stood. The distance from Ashley Centre, or Vernal, to Mountain Dell is fifteen miles in a northwesterly direction. This ward consists of 26 families, or 163 souls, some of whom reside in Deep Creek, a tributary of the Uintah, across the mountains southwest. The present Bishop of Mountain Dell is Calvin P. Bingham.

The Riverdale ward consists of 43 families or 199 souls, who live in a scattered condition along Ashley's Fork and Green River. The farms extend about eight miles up the former and about six miles up the latter stream. There are three school houses in this ward, the upper one situated on Ashley's Fork, being about seven miles, and the lower one, located near Jensen's ferry, on Green River, about thirteen miles southeast of Vernal. Elder Nathan Huntington presides as Bishop over the ward, and George P. Billings has special charge of the lower end of the same, where separate meetings and Sunday schools are held. Throughout the entire State I found a good people, who treated me with hospitality and kindness, and rendered me all possible aid in my labors. Besides attending the quarterly Stake conference on the 7th and 8th of August, I held special meetings in five of the six wards, and had a good time, and when I finally left last night, the families of President Bennion, C. C. Bartlett and Sterling Colton provided me with ample provisions for the journey across the desert, and showed other acts of kindness.

I would say, by way of conclusion, that there is ample room and facility for hundreds more families yet in the Ashley valley, and the good Latter-day Saints and the "Gentiles" who are there extend a hearty invitation to others of their faith to come out and cast their lot with them. By and by a railway will undoubtedly be built through the valley and the people then be placed in closer communication with the outside world, which will give new impetus to develop both the agricultural and mineral resources of the country. All the resources necessary to make a prosperous commonwealth are found in the Ashley valley. All that is wanted is time, better means of transportation, a better market for the products raised, and more people to cultivate the soil.

ANDREW JENSON,
FORT DUCHESNE, Uintah county,
Utah, August 18, 1892.

RETURNED ELDERS.

Elder Thomas H. Gardner of Pine View, Washington County, Utah, who left for a mission to the Southern States on March 3rd, 1891, returned today at 11 a.m. He has been laboring in the State of Mississippi, and is now released on account of sickness. He has enjoyed his labors and met with some success. He leaves for his home in a few days.

Elder W. A. Walker of Louisville, Idaho, called at our office this afternoon, having just returned from a mission to the Eastern States. He left on July 31, 1891, and has been laboring in the Iowa conference, of which he was the president, for the last three months. Elder Walker returns on account of failing health. He has nevertheless, he says, enjoyed his labor and had many opportunities of bearing his testimony to the truth of the Gospel.

Elder John S. Groesbeck has just returned from a two year's mission in New Zealand. He left his home at Springfield, August 18, 1890. He labored first in the Manawatu conference. After six months there he was transferred to the Bay of Islands in the north. He reports the mission in the southern part of the island in a flourishing condition, while in the north the natives do not manifest so much interest in the Gospel.

He enjoyed his labors very much, and was blessed with good health all the time. He left Auckland on August 13th, and arrived in San Francisco on the 3d inst.

EXCITEMENT IN CANADA.

CONSERVATIVES in Canada begin to feel the loss of Sir John McDonald's master mind. Ever since his death the party is having rather untoward experiences. He was succeeded as Premier by Sir John Abbott, a capable man, but an invalid. He has not been able to attend to affairs of state, and he is now on the point of retiring, to be succeeded, it is said, by Sir John Thompson. The latter is reputed a very able statesman from the conservative standpoint. But in religion he is a Roman Catholic. Religion in the Dominion is quite a factor in politics. The extreme Protestants and extreme Catholics in that country are conservatives. Extreme Protestants are, and have always been, at the side of a strong monarchy. The master hand of Sir John McDonald manipulated both these extremists and kept them in one fold. Sir John Abbott has endeavored to do it, and succeeded indifferently. Now that it is a certainty that Sir John Thompson, a Roman Catholic, will take the helm, what will the Orangemen do in the matter. Already they are raising a furious howl, and, like their brethren in Ireland, say they will fight.

Canada is not in a prosperous condition, a betwixt that country and the United States for last year the balance of trade in favor of the latter was nearly $20,000,000. The balance of trade with British countries was $2,000,000 in favor of Canada. The last census gives the Catholic population as nearly 2,000,000. The Methodists, Presbyterians and Church of England communicants aggregate over 2,600,000. Canada has 26,000 pagans and 34,000 agnostics.

Sir John Thompson was born in Halifax, Nova Scotia, forty-eight years ago. He is by profession a lawyer. He has had legislative, judicial and executive experience, and acquitted himself successfully in all. He was Sir John McDonald's friend and counselor, and was always been a politician. He assisted Joseph Chamberlain and Sir Charles Tupper in drafting the Fisheries Treaty of 1888, which the United States Senate subsequently refused to ratify.

MEXICAN MISSION CONFERENCE.

This conference was held in the Juarez school house and called to order at 10 a. m. on Saturday, Aug. 27th, by President George Teasdale, who delivered a very interesting discourse.

The speakers during the two days' meetings were Elders James A. Little, Counselor Henry Eyring, Elders Isaac W. Pearce, P. J. Christopherson, Y. Yorgensen, Counselor A. F. Macdonald, Elder D. E. Harris, Patriarch Henry Lat, Elders J. H. James, H. Pratt, Bishops W. Farr, J. N. Smith, Elders Frank Spencer and M. P. Romney.

The subjects treated upon were the payment of tithing, the proper training of children, faith in God, signs of the times, schools and general instructions.

The attendance was the largest at any conference ever held in Mexico, especially as to the attendance from Colony Diaz. The singing by the choir was excellent and would be creditable to much larger settlements.

The various societies held their usual conferences. All of these were attended by President Teasdale.

Juarez has had a fair fruit crop this year, consisting chiefly of grapes, apples, pears, plums, besides some smaller varieties of fruits.

The health of the people is good.

RELIGIOUS.

Sunday Services.

Religious services were held at the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, Sunday, September 11th, 1892, commencing at 2 o'clock p.m., President Joseph E. Taylor presiding.

The choir sang the hymn commencing:

Behold, the mountain of the Lord
In latter days shall rise.

Prayer was offered by Bishop L. G. Hardy.

The choir sang the hymn:

Softly beams the sacred dawning
Of the great Millennial morn.

The Priesthood of the Sixth ward officiated in the administration of the Sacrament.

ELDER WALTER J. BEATTIE was first called upon to speak. He said he recognized in that large assemblage of Latter-day Saints a class of men and women who had a better understanding of our Heavenly Father, His attributes, will, and desires than any other body of religious worshippers on the earth. An Elder standing before a congregation such as that, to bear his testimony to the truths of the Gospel which they had espoused, occupied a responsible position. It was a pleasure indeed to him to contemplate the principles of this Gospel, for they were plain, comprehensive and applicable to the humblest man and woman dwelling on the earth. The Latter-day Saints were possessed of one common spirit, which emanated from our Heavenly Father and directed all alike. This latter-day work had a great destiny before it, and this people a great future; and though the world might scoff, revile and persecute, as in the past, still he knew that nothing of this could retard the progress of this work, whose motto was onward and upward. The Lord might, at times, see fit to chastise the Latter-day Saints and bring down trials upon them, but this was simply to test their faith, and as they remained faithful so would His blessings be showered upon them. We should seek by every means in our power to bring our brethren into the fold of Christ, and in every way to fulfil the duties and obligations cast upon us.

ELDER E. H. PEIRCE.

next addressed the congregation. He said the substance of the last speaker's remarks was that the Gospel as restored to our day had come to stay. It might sound peculiar to strangers who were present that afternoon to hear words of that kind from the Latter-day Saints' pulpit—that the Gospel had again been restored to the earth; nevertheless, it was true, and when we said that it had been restored through the fulfillment of prophecy, through the visitation and ministrations of angels, it signified that the Gospel had been removed from the earth for a very long period of time. Having been restored to us through the Prophet Joseph Smith, we had the promise that it would now remain until the final coming of the Redeemer. In the promise given unto the Latter-day Saints through the founder of their faith the prophecy of Daniel was referred to, wherein he predicted that at a future time the kingdom should be established upon the earth, "nevermore to be thrown down nor given to another people." The speaker referred to what he termed certain factions which had broken off from the Church of Christ in our day. Since it was established in the year 1830, no fewer than sixteen distinct organizations or churches had sprung out of it. As hundreds had arisen out of the Church which prevailed while the Savior was upon the earth, so also counterfeitals had been organized in the latter-day dispensation; but only one true Church remained after all. That Church had been firmly established in the fastnesses of the Rocky Mountains and there would remain until the Word had gone forth to all nations.

The Latter-day Saints had declared, and their missionaries for the last fifty years or more had also proclaimed, that God had again spoken from the heavens, that He had again set His Church upon the earth, "nevermore to be thrown down nor given to another people," but that He would reveal His mind and will unto them. In order that the people might be prepared to receive the Lord Jesus Christ at His second coming, in power and glory, to take vengeance upon the ungodly and those who would not give heed unto His word and the counsels of His servants. As the Church of Christ existed formerly, with Prophets, Apostles, Pastors, Teachers and Evangelists, so also was the organization made complete in our day and generation. It would increase in power and glory, and its influence spread abroad until it filled the whole earth. That was what the Latter-day Saints now sought to accomplish. The keynote was uttered by the Prophet Joseph Smith. He knew that persecution would follow the Saints of God in our day, just as it followed the former-day Saints, though not to the extent that it would drive this Church from the earth as it did then, not to the extent that all the Apostles would be sacrificed. But the Lord would have a tried people, and if we lived in Him we must be ready to endure persecution at the hands of our enemies. The Latter-day Saints expected this; it had been their lot from the day when the Prophet Joseph received his first visitation from the angel; from the first time that he heard the voice of God until now persecution had followed the Latter-day Saints continually. No greater love hath any man, we were told, than this, that he would lay down his life for his brethren. That was the word given unto the former day Saints, and that was the example that had been set before us. Joseph and Hyrum Smith and others had yielded up their lives for the Gospel's sake, and others would be ready to do the same if it were required of them. Persecution was something that the Latter-day Saints had inherited. It was the portion of every son and daughter of God who embraced the true Gospel. The speaker mentioned how one after another the former day Saints were willing to yield up their lives for the truth's sake, having been compelled either to renounce their faith or suffer martyrdom. This did not stop with Prophets and Apostles, but extended through all Christian believers. And so it went on until there was not a vestige of the Gospel left. Then new forms and ceremonies began to be introduced into the Church, divisions arose and multiplied and filled the earth; Protestantism broke out from Catholicism, and scores of factions were the result. For the word of God the doctrines of men were taught. So great had this diversity in religion grown, so many were the denominations which had sprung up, each claiming to be the representative of the true Church as established by the Savior, that the Lord had found it necessary in our day to again speak to man from the heavens. It was because of the confusion which prevailed among the various churches that the Prophet Joseph went to the woods to commune with the Lord; He prayed unto Him in all humility, and the Lord answered his prayer. He was given to understand that it would be necessary to restore the true Gospel to the earth, that the people had gone astray, and that the Churches were teaching doctrine the commandments of men. He was enjoined not to unite himself with any of these, but was told the work which he had to perform as a servant of God; and it was for this that he was willing, as he afterwards did, to lay down his life. How thankful the Latter-day Saints should feel for the promise—the positive assurance—which had been given unto them, that this great work in which they were engaged should grow and increase in the earth. They were commanded to build temples unto the Lord's name, where work might be done both for the living and the dead.

The Latter-day Saints should prize highly the privileges which they possessed. They, however, made no boast of the blessings which they enjoyed; their great desire was to send a warning message to all nations, and it was for this object that their missionaries went forth without purse or scrip. It was for this that they had unceasingly labored for more than half a century, and were still laboring. The result of this was evident in the gathering of the thousands of Latter-day Saints to Zion.

May the Lord help us to continue in this good work for the salvation of our fellow-men—for those who have died without a knowledge of the faith as well as the living.

The choir sang the anthem, "O give Thanks Unto the Lord."

The benediction was pronounced by Counselor Charles W. Peabody.

SWEENEY daily says: "This being a labor leader I guess don't pay." Yet as a profession it has paid some people quite snugly. Mr. Sweeney had better compare notes with certain walking delegates.

THE sugar industry is to receive a further impetus. A party of capitalists from Cincinnati, Philadelphia and New York has secured a possession of a tract of land along the St. Johns and Indian rivers, eighty-three miles long and from three to six miles wide. The land is to be drained at an expense of $4,000,000, and devoted to the cultivation of sugar, "enough of which can be grown on the strip to supply all the United States."

THROUGH SONORA, MEXICO.

I have just returned home from a visit to the northeastern part of the State of Sonora, Mexico, where I visited many places of interest and met many persons who are now or have been prominent in the affairs of that State.

Arriving at Benson on the Southern Pacific railroad, I there boarded a train on the Nogales & Sonora railroad, passing our brethren located on the stream San Pedro, where can be seen comfortable dwellings surrounded with alfalfa, corn and other products. St. David could scarcely be seen, so completely covered is it with a foliage of trees.

We soon reached the junction of the railroad, the left branch turning eastward to a mining town named Bieby. Thence we continued our journey southwest, passing contiguous claims of ranchmen, where thousands of cattle are seen from the car window. We arrived at Nogales at 2 p.m. Here are the best built and most comfortable houses (after the Mexican style) that I have yet seen. Nogales has a population of 5,000 inhabitants, of whom I presume about two thirds are Mexicans. Here the custom houses of each republic join, or rather the offices of the railroads. The bridge that crosses the main wash through the center of the town is also joined, one-half belonging to each government. Here Mexico is never accepted at par—the only place I have ever been in the United States that they did not discount Mexican money.

I visited a Mexican lady from Sonora State who claims divine power to heal the sick. A Mr. Boothe, whose acquaintance I had formed while on the cars, introduced Brother Isaac Robinson, of Hele River (lately released from a mission among the Papagoes), and myself. We entered by the first door. On our left sat the lady's secretary. We were registered as visitors, while around the entire circle of the wall sat people elbow to elbow, apparently in deep conversation. We stood in the center of the room awaiting the lady's arrival. Within a few moments there entered a tall, rather slender, light-complexioned young lady. Mr. Boothe presented us as visitors. She in a cordial way requested us to follow her into an adjoining room. This offer we accepted. The next room was also surrounded with people with their backs to the wall. Here were men and women sick from various causes. We passed through to the third room, where to our surprise we found the place filled. The next room opened into an open space, and I confess I felt relieved, and hoped that we would have the privilege of a private conversation. About twenty steps further we entered another room, and you can better imagine my feelings than I can describe them when I tell you that here the lady was compelled to request the half-lame and blind to give us passage. She conducted us into a fifth room, where she evidently performed upon those who had come from all parts of Mexico, and the United States also; for on the same train with us came a gentleman, about fifty years of age, from Minneapolis, who had received a stroke of nervous prostration. I conversed with him and he told me the object of his long and tedious journey. He had already visited this noted lady and had returned to the hotel claiming that he could realize a marked difference in his feelings, and that she had instructed him to remain in the town a few days, thus giving her other opportunities to relieve him.

But let us return to the room last mentioned. Near the centre was a bed upon a hand-made bedstead. On it sat five ladies of a higher type than I had hitherto observed. By the side of the bed was a good-looking gentleman, to whom we were introduced as the father of the young lady. Here, as before, sat men and women around the room, some with bandaged heads, others apparently blind, while others were pointed out to us as being weak-minded.

After we were seated and Mr. Booth had explained that Brother Robinson and myself were "Mormons," I inquired if I could ask the lady a few questions. Yes, was the reply, and the following short conversation ensued: "How old are you?" "Twenty-three years next birthday." "How old were you when you discovered this divine power, as you call it?" "Eighteen years old." "How did you receive it, or what were your impressions, or by what authority do you heal the sick?" "I don't know; it just came upon me." I had up to this answered Mr. Booth as an interpreter, but it was quite plain that he could not do justice to the interpretation and I told him that I could speak Spanish, and that he could mention this to the father. He did so, and commenced the conversation. I asked again the lady to explain her commission. "For surely this is no supernatural power, it has come from some supernatural source." "Yes, sir, I now understand what you desire, and will tell you that my first impressions were that there was a something for me to do, but I could not understand what." "When this feeling was upon you, did you know what was going on around or were you unconscious?" "Most of the time I was unconscious; the remainder of the time I could discern everything around me, but I had no control of my body or tongue." "How did you feel coming out of this stupor." "I realized no difference except that there remained a constant prompting that I was to do something, and one day it so happened that a sick person stopped with us." Here the lady gave me a long account, too tedious to trouble you with. Suffice it to say that she cured the person; then her impressions were appeased and she became convinced that her mission was to heal the sick, which she has followed from that hour, having healed by the hour; but she informed me that her gift seemed to run among the nervous and paralytic, though she has cured cases of every description. There seem to be an exercise of confidence necessary on the part of those afflicted to insure a cure. The lady also informed me that there had been a few cases over which she had no power, affirming that such persons were pronounced upon by the Creator Himself, and to suffer the judgment upon them. "Under what condition or influence are you when you put your hands upon an afflicted person?" "When I place my hands and begin to rub the part afflicted I become unconscious, or at least I have no control of myself except to perform my duty, but this is only in cases that I can cure." "Do you imagine that you see anything when unconscious, or do you hear anything?" "I do not hear anything; but there are persons apparently floating in the air, traveling to and fro, and they are trying to instruct me, but I cannot understand them."

Here I ceased my questioning. I have only given you the main points or outline of one of the interesting visits of my life. We shook hands, thanking the lady for her courtesy and retired.

At 3 p.m. I left Brother Robinson and passed into Mexico. After a few moments' delay (during which the custom officers examined our baggage) we hurried along down grade, passing many stations till within about twenty miles of the City of Matamoros, where on either side except in some few cases, could be seen pretty tall farms, orchards extending for many miles along the side of the railroad. At the stations it was amusing to see the swarm of vendors of fruit—almost given away.

Matamoros is said to contain from seven to eight thousand inhabitants. The heat only reaches 86.

At 12 midnight we halted at Pasa station, my railroad destination, and as I was waiting the platform a gentleman (Egencia Salazar) hailed me in broken English. I of course knew that he was a Mexican and responded in his own language. He seemed a little surprised and offered me his hand, seeking my pardon for saluting me in English. This he invited me to his house. The house was after I had explained the object of my journey, and that Captain L. W. Mix was to send a plon, as it is called here, to carry me to Las Delicias, a distance of sixty-five miles. I was on quietly reclining upon my blanket, and early next morning, to my joy, the young Mexican came up, leading a saddled horse. We spent the time until 3 p.m. conversing upon the Gospel as revealed by the Prophet Joseph Smith, the introduction of the history of the inhabitants of this continent, together with a most rigid comparison between this sacred record and the Holy Bible. This gentleman had been the State secretary, had served as private secretary under Gen. Pesceira at the time when this Sonora State was in a series of revolutions among themselves, and the bloodthirsty Apaches made havoc of everything before them. Many incidents mentioned by this gentleman were of memory to me, having occurred at the time that D. W. Jones, his son Wiley, Halman Pratt, Antonio W. Ivins, J. Z. Stewart, R. H. Smith and myself were passing through the country seventeen years ago, having been sent by President Brigham Young to open the Gospel door to those frontier States and explore the country.

Leaving at 3 p.m. we camped at a ranch for a time. We were on our way long before daylight. Our journey lay across high mountain ranges and deep canyons made by a thousand floods. At last, having reached the summit, the guide pointed to the River Sonora lying east and running from north to south, which I could barely be located, as the rugged mountains with their towering cliffs and deep gorges filled the entire space as far as the eye could reach. We pressed on, lest the shades of the coming night should overtake us. At 6 p. m. we were served with a meal by the mother of my guide. After a few moments' rest we continued our journey to the St. Eleusa Mine the point I had started for and where we were met by the captain and his secretary, Mr. Buffett, who received me with a cordially characteristic of western people. After supper and a general look around the place, visiting the stupendous works of a sixty-stamp mill, with all its appurtenances, then I lay down upon a cot, tired indeed. Next day being the Sabbath I rested and talked with the captain relative to the purchase of the Delicia, the old resort and home of the late Governor Pascuala, who had sold this St. Eleusa mine and Las Delicias to a Boston company. The property has, however, passed through various hands, and is now owned by a New York company. The price originally paid was $350,000 to the governor. The captain was compelled to go off on business, carrying with him some $15,000 in bullion, while Mr. Buffett was detailed to show me around the land claims, which we commenced the next day. This property is all that its name indicates, once the mansion where General Pascuala made his home and where he presided in taking his visitors; where he quartered his soldier and where he worked his servants to help to beautify and to keep all things pleasant.

The sixteen-acre garden adjoins the houses on the south, and is filled with all the variety of fruits and flowers that go to satisfy the taste and please the eye. There are orange trees towering sixty feet in the air, the olive, lemon, apple, the pomegranate in all their varieties interspersed with berries of various kinds and surrounded on every side with double-headed roses, sending forth a delightful perfume.

But to return; we found that the property did not embrace nearly as many acres as had been supposed, and after three days' visit I was furnished with an excellent horse and a guide to return by the different places to learn more of the country.

My course from the railroad to the Delicia was easterly. I now turn directly north, following the Sonora river most of the time. This runs south and a bit west. That night we were favored with a visit from Eguacio Pascuala. I think he is the eldest son of the General. Next day we left the river and kept nearly north, passing small farms all day until about 4 p. m. We then opened out on to a higher plateau. Thus far the country outside of the cultivated fields was all utterly worthless, though the entire surface, hillsides and all was covered with an underbrush, which is not the case here where our people dwell, as our mountains around us in Diaz are entirely bare. At the foot of this higher plateau was an excellent farm and well tended, beautiful corn, very large and tasty melons, with plenty of grass and timber along the narrow valley, which extends six miles to the Hacienda headquarters, as it is called here. Along this valley grows timber of an immense height. Cottonwood trees are grown here 100 feet high, the trunk measuring sixty feet without a limb; ash in abundance, 100 feet. The mulberry and peach can also be found along this stream. Oaks are plentiful, and other timbers I am not acquainted with.

We now reach the Hacienda, where the widow of the late Governor Pascuala resides. She owns 180,000 acres and 10,000 head of cattle and 1000 head of horses, with houses along the stream for miles; but these are not inhabitable, owing to their age.

Here five thousand acres of land could be cultivated up and down the stream, which affords ample water. On this Hacienda are natural reservoirs, which could be improved so as to increase the water privileges and thus bring under cultivation hundreds of acres not already included in the adjacent hills. Utah cedars are in abundance, while there are live oaks in every direction. I had a pleasant visit here and was treated kindly.

Our next point is back on to the river, where we find the country much more open. Here we have the hills and mountains not only covered with an excellent growth of oak and mesquite, but also grass. Here dwells a people ready for the Gospel, and I assure you that I feel no opportunity in bearing my humble testimony of the truth.

We continued our journey eastward, while the river turns a little to the west. We passed the divide and down to an American's ranch (Jerry Dillon's). We are now and have been since leaving the river in one of the finest countries for timber and grass that my eyes ever beheld or my feet ever trod. But water is scarce. Oaks can be found in abundance.

We at last reach the Fronteras. All along the route my friendly old guide pointed out the places of note where battles were fought and where the Apaches stained the ground for miles with the blood of the people. No one could believe the heartrending tales that are told by the aged among this people about the wars and revolutions that have been their lot for so many generations, and the hunger and suffering they have endured in their retreat. Judging from their own accounts, consternation seemed the lot of the people who inhabited the land, while the very opposites seemed to inspire their foes; for in many cases the Apaches would whip and put to flight ten to one, carrying off women for torture and children for slaves, and to sell and barter them with other tribes.

Fronteras is a small town. The stream, which is likewise called by that name, rises in the south and runs north, bearing east until it makes a complete turn to the south, emptying into the Bavispy river, fifteen or twenty miles north of the purchase of Brother Williams, John C. Nalle and others who bargained and colonized the place last spring. This frontier stream is not sufficient to irrigate nearly all the land along its banks; but the country is susceptible of reservoirs, where water can be hoarded while the stream is flushed and then drawn in the more dry season. This stream is at least seventy-five miles long and could, under more practical and judicious management, be made to sustain fifty thousand inhabitants. Timber is fairly plentiful. Pine for lumber can be obtained, which as a rule is scarce in Mexico. It is an excellent climate with plenty of grass; in short, all things considered, the land, the water, the timber, the climate, coupled with the distance from our other settlements seems to be sufficient to warrant me in saying that Fronteras affords the best opening for colonizing that I have seen on my journey. It is no farther from here to Fronteras than to our settlements on the mountain. It is only thirty-five miles from Bavispy railroad station (which is located in the United States) to Fronteras, and the greater portion of the land can be obtained at a very low figure, while steep in that direction would tend to strengthen our brethren on the Bavispy.

Starting in another direction we went across the hills with a view to strike the Fronteras, where it empties into the Bavispy river, this we did early next morning, when my guide left me as per agreement, while I trudged along lonely indeed. Continuing my journey I reached Ojitas just before daylight. Here I was kindly treated and arrived home last night dark. I found my family all well but a little anxious over my long delay.

COLONY DIAZ, Chihuahua, Mexico,

MIRACLES AND THEIR USES.

THE Interior, a Presbyterian paper, endeavors to give a reason why miracles were performed in olden times, but are not now manifested in connection with the Christian religion. It says that in dealing with a polytheistic race, "it was necessary that divine manifestations adapted to their comprehension should be employed to arrest their attention, and convince them of the existence of God and of His fatherly interest in them."

After this was effected, it assumes that miracles were of no further use, and that they ceased because "a miracle after the close of the written revelation would have been unnecessary, and an anachronism in the divine guidance of men."

It is strange how blind intelligent people become when attempting to justify their own deficiencies. Christ promised that certain gifts should be given to "them that believe." Not as a proof of the existence of God or as a means to create belief, but as the consequence and effect of faith, for the benefit and comfort of believers, and as signs of their true faith in God. The absence of these "signs" in the modern orthodox churches is a standing argument of skeptics against the truth of Christianity, and an awkward thing for theologians to explain. They usually fall into fully equal to that of the Interior in their endeavors.

If miracles were only necessary to turn polytheists to monotheism, how was it that they were continued among the Israelites for many generations after they embraced the Mosaic creed and worshipped the "one living and true God"? And further, is it not a fact that the miracles of Jesus of Nazareth were performed among a people who were monotheists? Were the people of the early Christian Church polytheists? Were not miracles common also among them? These manifestations were certainly not given to convince the Saints, either of the existence of God or of the fact that He was One.

As to the "close of the written revelation," we fear the Interior is equally in error. Which was the "close of the vision revelation," and when it was closed? Who can tell when the last was given and be justified in saying there was to be no more? And if revelation really ceased for ever, would it not be more logical to infer that as revelation had stopped, miracles were more necessary than before, if they were designed to prove "the existence of God and His fatherly interest" in mankind?

The commonly accepted theory of modern sectaries, that revelation, miracles, healings and other manifestations from God to man ceased with the apostolic age, is both illogical and out of harmony with the books which are taken as the sole guide of Christendom.

If the Almighty posed in other times as a sort of conjurer to astonish the polytheists and make them monotheists, or to demonstrate to anybody the fact of His existence, why did he quit the business two thousand years ago, seeing that down to the present day there have been millions upon millions of polytheists, and numbers of individuals who either deny or doubt His existence?

The New Testament shews that miracles were part of the system established by Christ and His Apostles. It is written that God placed them in the Church. Nothing is clearer than the doctrine, enunciated by Jesus of Nazareth, that they were the result of faith. "Go thy way, thy faith hath made thee whole." "All things are possible to them that believe." They were "signs" to follow "them that believe," and proofs that they were believers. They were given by the Spirit to the members of the Church for their benefit and edification. And they were as much the heritage of the Saints and a consequence of the reception of the Holy Spirit, as was the testimony of Jesus and the knowledge of the truth.

The truth is that the manifestations of the power of God and His revelations to man began to be discontinued soon after the death of the Apostles of Jesus, because the people who professed His name "departed from the faith." They gave heed to "seducing spirits and doctrines of devils." They "turned away their ears from the truth and were turned unto fables." False teachers brought in "damnable heresies" and "through covetousness made merchandise" of the souls of men. Darkness came in like a flood and covered the world. The light of succeeding "reformation" only in part dispersed the gloom, and in the nineteenth century the trained ministers of the contending sects are still under the cloud.

God does not change. He is ever the same. His ways are one eternal round. He is approached through faith the same today as of old. All the blessings enjoyed by the early Christians may be received by latter-day Christians. Miracles, healings, signs and divine communications can be as extensively manifested now as at any former time, but they are not displayed as by the magician's art to create wonder, or make men believe, but are given as the fruits of faith and as "signs" to "follow them that believe."

"Miracles," so called, are not marvels to awe the ignorant, nor are they wrought in opposition to the laws of nature. They are as natural as the effects of any known force, though the laws by which they are effected may be commonly unknown. They are not to be relied upon alone as evidences of the truth. True religion must spring from a love of right, and the faith which is saving must come from evidence and testimony by hearing the word of God. The inferior reasons from false premises and therefore reaches false conclusions. But it is strictly orthodox in each, and modern Christendom will have to reverse its position both in regard to revelation and to miracles.

CITY COUNCIL.

The City Council met in regular session last night, President Loofbourrow in the chair. The members present were: Rich, Folland, Karriek, Hardy, Horn, Wantland, Heils, Lawson, Simond, Beardsley, Bell, Evans and Moran.

The minutes of the previous session were read and approved.

PETITIONS.

George S. Smith and others asked for an extension of watermain. Committee on waterworks.

WANT TO COME IN.

James Moffett and sixty-two others asked that the municipal boundaries be extended. The petition was accompanied by the following resolution:

Whereas, A petition has been presented to this Council, signed by not less than two-fifths of the property owners residing in the territory hereinafter described, asking that the boundaries of Salt Lake city be altered and the territory be included therein; be it

Resolved, That the question be submitted to the electors residing in the following described territory proposed to be annexed to this corporation at an election to be held in such territory on Thursday, the 13th day of October, 1892, whether such territory shall be annexed to the corporation and become a part thereof, to wit:

Commencing at the intersection of Fifth East and Roper a road, thence south on said Fifth East street to the intersection of Eleventh South street, thence east on said Eleventh South street to the intersection of Ninth East street, thence south on said Ninth East street to the north line of lot 7, block 1, Five-acre plat A, thence east to the intersection of Fifteenth East street, thence north on said Fifteenth East street to the present corporate limits of Salt Lake City, thence west to place of beginning, and that notice be given thereof by publication in a newspaper published in this corporation for a period for four weeks prior to such election in the manner provided by law; be it further

Resolved, That the store on the side of Eleventh East street, between Emerson and Washington avenues—a store in which no liquor is sold—and upon the premises now occupied by Thos. Langran, in the territory proposed to be annexed be designated by the Council as the place in which the polls will be opened for the said election, and that C. H. Weeks, Thomas Yarriley and E. F. Crandall be chosen by this Council to act as judges of election at such election; and be it further Resolved, That the city recorder be instructed to proceed with the publication of the notice referred to, the same to begin with issue of September 8th, 1892.

Referred to the city attorney.

BRANCH FIRE DEPARTMENTS.

The recorder announced that five petitions from different parts of the city had been sent into his office, accompanied by a resolution passed by the local board of underwriters recommending that branch fire departments be established in the municipal precincts where none now exist. Committee on public works.

PAUL APPOINTED MARSHAL.

The Mayor sent in a communication announcing the appointment of Chief of Police Paul as city marshal, to succeed Edgar M. Janney, resigned. Committee on police.

PAVING PROPOSITION.

The Culmer-Jennings Paving Company sent in this:

We, the undersigned, your petitioners, respectfully represent that we believe ourselves the lowest responsible bidders who have fully complied with the specifications and instructions to bidders for the contract about to be awarded, and believing that the best interests of the taxed district and of the city will be promoted thereby, hereby waive our rights and petition your honorable body to award to us the contract for curbing and asphaltum work on which bids were not a question but that we were lowest. The blocking contract to be awarded to the parties who offer to do it for a less price than we do. This will effect a saving to the city on the whole job of $9195.

Laid on the table temporarily.

The city engineer sent in a lengthy communication on the Main and First and Second South street paving, in which he called attention to the fact that the paving was a matter of men and materials, and not a question of location. He doubted the value of any tests of materials except that of long use. Authorities agreed, he said, that a fair test of asphaltum pavement was its continued use for a period of five years. The claim that shorter tests were conclusive, he said, only showed the claimants' lack of knowledge on the subject or else a willingness to mislead. He says that men, like materials, are not equally competent. In ordinary business, he says, men purchase the articles of tried and standard value in preference to articles of doubtful worth, although the latter may be less costly. He also suggests that men do not often employ a blacksmith to do their carpenter work. Unless all other things are equal, the lowest bid is not necessarily the most acceptable. Another question to which he calls attention is the ability of the contractor to execute the work in the shortest time, and winds up by saying: "It is not material which one of the several bidders the city shall serve, but which of them will be most able to serve the city."

The report was filed.

WALKER SUCCEEDS EWING.

Evans moved that the question of appointing a successor to Mr. Ewing be considered, and nominated S. F. Walker for that position.

J. S. Durgin was nominated by Councilman Heils.

Tellers were appointed by the chair and the vote was found to be:

Durgin.....	5
Walker.....	5

Moran moved that Mr. Walker be declared elected.

Beardsley said that he believed that the election was irregular and consequently illegal. He was of the opinion that the mayor should appoint Mr. Ewing's successor and the Council should confirm.

Wantland inquired if it did not require a two-thirds majority to make the election legal.

Horn (telling quickly)—No, it does not.

Mr. Horn was rapped to his seat by the clerk, whereupon Horn said sotto voce, "A man has no more right in this Council than a dog."

A MONEYMAKING DOG MAN.

Galleazzi sent in the following:

I herewith submit my report for the month of August as follows:

No. of dogs registered..... 236
Amount collected..... $675.00
No. of dogs killed..... 144
Collected and deposited with treasurer..... $2.00
There should be appropriated to me the sum of $83, being 50 cts for each dog killed or released.

On motion the sum of $422 was appropriated to Mr. Galleazzi.

DISPOSAL OF THE CITY SEWAGE.

The recorder read the following:

"Your committee appointed to report recommendations concerning the disposal of the city sewage, after careful inspection of the subject are prepared to report as follows: Our present system of pipes (which are well laid and efficient, collects the sewage and conducts it by gravitation into a pump on the banks of the Jordan at the foot of Fifth South street, from where it is pumped through a 12-inch main to a higher elevation about two miles west of the river, and there discharged into an open canal and left to take care of itself. Although no serious consequences have resulted so far through this indifferent method, your committee consider it a question of but a short time when this open canal will have become foul to such a degree that its abandonment for this purpose will be necessary, when suitable and permanent means of disposal will have to be substituted. The city owns no land at or near the point of discharge into the canal and objection on the part of those who own the ground may at any time be the cause of great trouble and expense. The pump is so situated that it cannot be drained by gravitation and hence the necessity for pumps. Already the volume of sewage that flows into the pump is greater than the present pump can handle, and the excess flows into the river. This cannot be long permitted without evil results. Additional pumps would prevent this overflow into the river, but would at the same time increase to an equal extent the discharge into the canal, which is a little less desirable and would also hasten the time when the canal would have to be abandoned. The addition of more pumps from time to time would require more pipe capacity for discharging beyond the river, and each of such additions would increase correspondingly the cost of operation and maintenance until the ultimate expense would become a great burden.

For these reasons your committee conclude that the present means of disposal is insufficient to meet existing requirements and that the scheme of disposal is poorly adapted to serve the future needs. Practically all of the area now covered and perhaps that of nine-tenths of the entire city is so situated that the sewerage can be carried off by gravitation and a failure to recognize this fact is, we think, when the mistake was made in planning the present system which contemplated the collection of all the sewage of the city at the present pump and its subsequent elevation and removal from there by means of pumps to the canal beyond, and involves what seems to us an unreasonable and unnecessary expense. It is our opinion that instead of allowing this great volume of sewage to flow down into a hole only to be pumped out again it should be arrested by the construction of a main intercepting sewer of suitable size and proper location to insure its disposal by gravitation. The sewage from a comparatively small portion of the city which lies so low as to be impossible of disposal by gravitation should be collected into one or more sumps and from them or otherwise elevated into the main intercepting sewer from where it would flow off with that from the higher lands. This would reduce the cost of pumps and of their operation to the minimum, by avoiding the expense of pumping any of the sewage which it is possible to dispose of by granulation and which the present pump is now almost exclusively engaged in handling. A third plan, if the city should own sufficient land upon which to utilize the entire ultimate sewage of the city for purposes of irrigation. A system on the plan suggested would combine the greatest possible economy in transporting and the most efficient means of utilizing our sewage and in view of that something has been done to relieve the present condition, and notwithstanding the great original cost that must attend the undertaking, your committee are of opinion that a proper regard for the health and growth of our city and of economy in the end will justify the starting of work on this plan. We therefore recommend that the city engineer be instructed to proceed at once with such surveys and other matters as may be necessary to determine the extent and cost of the work, and submit a report of the same to this Council at the earliest possible time.

Having pursued the subject further since the date of the above, we are enabled to add the following: After having gone over the general route and satisfied ourselves of its practicability we secured an option on a piece of land that will serve the present requirements, and which is most favorably situated and well adapted for a sewage farm, and we recommend that the same be purchased at once.

We also recommend, most earnestly, the necessity for executing immediately the work contemplated in this report, in order to effectually dispose of the constantly increasing sewage of the city.

HARDY,
EVANS,
HEISE, DORMUS.

Bearseley made a strong argument in favor of the adoption of the report. Something must be done at once. He wanted the work to be pushed.

Lawson objected to giving the committee power to act. The question involved the expenditure of at least $250,000 or $300,000, and for this reason he objected to the power being given to the committee.

Bearseley—Make it $500,000.

Lawson—We do not want to do this time as we did in the crematory business, and make a serious mistake. It is a matter that should be discussed thoroughly before any action was taken. The jump that had already been asked for would cost now not less than $5000 or $9000, and this expense would guarantee the removal of 2,500,000 gallons of sewage daily. I move that the report be accepted also filed.

Folland seconded the motion. Hardy said the report merely asked the city engineer to make the necessary estimates as to the cost of this complete plan. Something must be done at once. The expending of money on the present plan simply meant ducts being thrown away. The present method was all wrong and should be remedied. The city is a growing one and it would not be long ere the sewage would amount to at least 7,000,000 gallons a day.

Bearseley thought it was the duty of the City Council to adopt the report of the special committee. "You," he said to Lawson, "will have the ache worse in two years than you have got it now—when the cholera gets here." [Laughter.]

Moran wanted the report laid over for one week.

Wantland did not think that the rule applied to a special committee.

Horn—Oh, I suppose the gentlemen would prefer to have the matter referred to the city attorney, but I want it to go over for one week. [Laughter.]

Lawson said that Bearseley had either misunderstood him or else misquoted him. He was heartily in favor of something being done, but he did not believe in giving the committee power to act.

The motion to go over for one week carried.

NATIVE CEMENT.

Mr. Simondl offered the following, which was referred to the Board of Public Works, with the city engineer added:

Whereas, The City Council has expressed a desire to use native materials in public construction as far as practicable; and

Whereas, The standard of tests on natural cement has been fixed at twenty pounds tensile strength per square inch for two parts sand and one part cement, and

Whereas, Two tests have been made as follows: Neat standing per square inch, eighty-one pounds and four briquets sand and cement as follows: Fifteen pounds, twenty-five pounds, seventeen pounds, thirteen pounds, an average of seventeen and one-half pounds. Second test—Neat seventy-three pounds, seven briquets sand and cement, fifteen, fourteen, ten, twenty-two, twenty-three and nineteen pounds each, averaging eighteen pounds. Showing good results excepting in very few instances where perhaps the briquets were defective. Therefore be it

Resolved, That the city engineer be permitted to use natural cement if the test does not fall more than 15 per cent. below the standard, provided the proportions of cement be increased to bring the tensile strength up to the required standard.

A BAD SEWER.

The superintendent of sewers reported that he had uncovered a block of the sewer on Fifth South street between Second and Third East streets. The sewer was paid for by the Troy Laundry Company and is used exclusively by them, while the work was performed by the city. The sewer for the block, he says, is in a very bad condition, it having been laid without regard to grade or line and that the joints are imperfectly made and he suggests the construction of a sewer with regular connections for one block between Second East and Third East streets. Referred to the committee on sewerage and superintendent of sewers with power to act.

LAID ON THE TABLE.

Hesse offered the following, which was laid on the table:

Whereas, The committee on water works has so far taken no action to secure pipe to complete water main extensions on which the assessments have been paid. Therefore,

Resolved, That the mayor be authorized to proceed at once to purchase pipe for said extensions.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Wantland a recess of fifteen minutes' duration was taken. The Council went into executive session to consider the paving bids. On reconvening Simondl moved that a committee of five, one from each precinct, be appointed to wait upon the board of public works and investigate the bids and report back their findings to the Council.

Beardsley moved to amend by referring it to the board of public works. Lost.

The vote then recurred on the original motion, which carried.

WATER PIPE DISCUSSION.

The report of the committee on waterworks regarding the purchase of 850 tons of 16 inch water pipe from Rhodes Brothers, $38.50 per ton, that from being the lowest bidder, then came up.

Hesse submitted his resolution au thorizing the purchase of the pipe, owing to the function of the committee.

A personal tilt occurred here between Hesse and Rich, whereupon Rich was called to order by the Chair. Hesse continued to speak, whereupon Loofbourrow struck the table a terrific blow with his gavel and said warmly:

I called Mr. Rich to order, sir, and a all have to do the same with you. This personal matter has got to be stopped."

Hesse—Well, it ought to be.

Moran wanted the report referred to the Mayor with authority to make the purchase.

Wantland wanted it merely referred, but Moran's motion was carried.

ANOTHER TILT.

Then came up the amendment to the franchise of the Great Salt Lake & Hot Springs Railway company, when Rich moved to adjourn. This failed and the amendment allowing the company to convert its road into a regular railway was read.

THE CITY PRISON.

Folland then moved to reconsider the vote by which the city recorder was authorized to advertise for bids for plans for a city jail. This was carried, when the whole matter was referred to the committee on prisons.

An adjourned session of the City Council was held last night. President Loofbourrow was in the chair. The members present were: Hesse, Wantland, Rich, Folland, Harly, Karrik, Beardsley, Bell, Simondl, Evans, Moran, Lawson and Horn.

In the absence of Recorder Stanton, Deputy Ellsworth acted as clerk.

After some discussion the committee on streets was authorized to raise the cross walks on East South Temple street. There are eight of these walks and the cost of doing the work will amount to about $150.

CURB LINE PROTEST.

George M. Scott, F. Auerbach & Bro. and fourteen others submitted the following, which was referred to the board of public works and city engineer:

"We, the undersigned, property owners on the west side of Main street, between First and Second South streets, respectfully protest against the curb line as lately established, as it reduces the width of the sidewalk to 18 1/2 feet, instead of 20 feet as heretofore, and which is the rule throughout the city. The traffic and travel on this block is greater than on any other block in the city, and the assessed valuation and taxes paid are higher also. In view of these facts we consider it a wrong to the public and ourselves to reduce the sidewalk in width as is done by the newly established line, and we respectfully ask that you restore the 20 feet curb line.

HIS HONOR OBJECTS.

The following communication from the Mayor was received and filed without discussion:

In regard to the matter of the purchase of 850 tons of six-inch cast-iron pipe, referred to me on motion of Councilman Moran, I beg to report that the facts in the premises are as follows:

In the latter part of July last the waterworks committee, contrary to the methods heretofore pursued in the purchase of pipe, without authority invited bids from several of the large pipe manufacturing institutions of the country, and upon receiving such bids made a report recommending the acceptance of the bid of Rhodes Bros. This report was made August 9th. No action was taken upon this resolution (because, as I presume, the methods pursued were unusual and unauthorized) until the 6th day of the present month, at which date the Council adopted the report of the waterworks committee, and passed a motion referring the matter to the "Mayor for purchase."

The adoption of the report recommending the acceptance of the bid of Rhodes Bros. in connection with the motion referring the matter to me to make the purchase is susceptible of no other construction than that I am to make the purchase on the Rhodes Bros.' bid, and am not authorized to act in the premises beyond this. To any such requirement I decline with emphasis to yield. The bids were made a month since, without any consultation with me, nor has it been charged with me with inquiring into their validity or reasonableness. The Council by its action in the premises simply calls upon me to do a clerical act, giving validity to a transaction which in the regular course of business I should have participated in, and in regard to the validity of which I am not required to investigate.

In the former purchase of pipe, which was made by myself in conjunction with the waterworks committee, the prices paid to Rhodes Bros. was much lower than the bid upon which I am required now to purchase. For the 850 tons of six-inch pipe purchased May 30th, from Rhodes Bros., their bid per ton was $33.66 2/3.

The bid in the present case is $38.50 per ton, a difference of $2.83, or on the 850 tons directed to be purchased, $2,422.50. Even if the transaction was in the best of course, this difference would of itself be sufficient to arrest further action until explained.

SEWER TAX LEVIES.

The ordinances levying the taxes for the four sewer extensions were read and under suspension of the rules finally passed. These provide assessments as follows:

On the south side of First South street from Second East to Fifth East; $3 per front foot.

On the north side of Fifth South street from East Temple street to West Temple street; $4 per front foot.

On both sides of Fifth East street from South Temple to First South streets; $3 per front foot.

On the north side of First South street from Second East to Fifth East streets; $3 per front foot.

STILL HANGING FIRE.

Beardsley reported that the special committee on paving contracts had so far been unable to come to an understanding, but would probably be able to submit the results to the council on Tuesday next.

THE GARBAGE ORDINANCE.

Beardsley presented the new garbage ordinance, "revised and improved." It was read the first time and a motion to suspend the rules was made, when Moran said he was opposed to rushing the ordinance through in one night.

"We had the other ordinance," he said, "before us for a month, and then we found there was some mistake about it."

Beardsley—I'd like to correct the gentleman. We had it before us six months.

Moran—Well, it is a very important ordinance and should not be rushed through in a hurry.

The rules were suspended and the bill read the second time, and then laid over until the next regular meeting of the Council.

THE AMENDED FRANCHISE.

The bill for an ordinance amending the franchise of the Great Salt Lake & Hot Springs Railway Company was called up by Simond, Rich voting no.

The resolution allows the company to convert its line into a regular steam railway, providing it commences the construction of a railway to the west within four months.

The bill was read the second time, when Simond moved a suspension of the rules that it might be read the third time.

Rich wanted all the protests against the mending of the franchise read. There was no reason, he said, why the bill should be rushed through over the heads of two hundred or three hundred citizens, without fully hearing and considering their wants and desires in the matter.

Moran also demanded that the protests be read.

The rules were, however, suspended and the bill read the third time.

Hardy moved to amend by making the time for actual construction of a railway to the west within sixty days instead of four months.

Evans wanted to know at which point the railway to the west was to be started. There might be a pin in it somewhere.

No one answered the gentleman, however, when Rich made an attack upon the railway company. He did not believe there was any man in the Council who knew what the bill meant. Such action was not right or proper. The bill was giving away a franchise worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, for which the city did not get one cent.

Wantland could not answer Evans' question, he said, but there was no doubt but the railway company would have to start from some point, of course. The road might be started west from several points.

Evans said the company should state to the council just what point it proposed to start from. The council was left in the dark on the question. If the city council could not let them go in the direction the railway men wanted to, why they could refuse to build at the end of sixty days, or at all. They would then have all they wanted, and the road to the west would never be built.

Folland supported Evans' idea. "The west" was a very indefinite term. A half dozen franchisees had been granted for roads "to the west," and none of them had ever materialized. Besides sixty days would not give the company time enough to do anything.

Loofbourough thought the whole bill should be drafted anew. He was in favor of allowing the company to have a steam franchise, but the franchise now held by it allowed the building of a road to the Templeton corner, and certainly no steam railway should be allowed to come there.

Hardy moved to lay the matter over until the next meeting in order that some further light should be had on it. The road as now run and operated was a nuisance. The men who were anxious for the passage of the amendment did not live in the railway districts, or they would not be so anxious to have it passed. There was not a railroad in the city that lived up to their franchise, not one. It was high time that the railways were brought upstanding. The motion carried.

INDIANA GAS FRANCHISE.

Beardsley called up the bill for an ordinance granting a franchise to the Indiana Natural Gas and Pipe Line company. The matter had been referred to the committee on municipal laws, and from it came a report in favor of the franchise signed by Loofbourough and Horn, and a report against the granting of the franchise signed by Simond and Hardy. The latter did not believe a franchise should be granted.

The City Council met last night as a board of equalization and review to dispose of some unfinished business. The following members were in attendance: Chairman Loofbourough, Wantland, Evans, Horn, Hardy, Hulse, Simond, Lawson, Folland, Rich, Beardsley, Bell and Moran.

THE TIME HAS PAST.

Charles Sanborn, 318 Second South, sent in a protest against the assessment on his property as being too high. He was taxed, he stated, for a mortgage of $2,000. A discussion then arose as to whether the protest was in time, the Council having finished its regular session as a board of equalization.

Rich favored considering the application.

Lawson said it was as proper for consideration as any of the cases they had met specially to consider.

Simond said that the time had gone by for taking it up.

The chairman held that the application was out of order and could not be considered.

NOT ALLOWED.

The complaints of over-assessment of Laron Pratt, 239 West North Temple street, and Ann Sproat, 85 Apple street, which had been referred to a special committee, were reported on unfavorably and no abatement recommended. Adopted.

THE RAPID TRANSIT COMPANY.

complained that the time allowed was short for them to appear and show cause why their assessment should not be raised to $124,250 from $102,040, and stated briefly that they had lived their cars and other property at their full value. Horn wanted to know on what grounds the assessment was proposed to be raised.

Lawson said the assessment was made on a basis of half the assessment of the Salt Lake City Railroad company. Thought the property of the Rapid Transit company was worth about that. The Salt Lake City Railroad company had returned their forty cars at $2500 each, while the Rapid Transit company returned their twenty-four at $1950, and the cars of the one company were as good as those of the other.

Rich said the Salt Lake City Railroad company had thirty-five miles of road and the other company had a little over half that mileage. Thought it was only right that they should pay the same rate as the city railroad.

Rich moved that the assessment be raised as recommended by the committee.

Horn thought as the company was unrepresented at this meeting that the assessment should not be raised without giving them a hearing. Motion carried, Horn voting no.

THE TELEPHONE COMPANY.

In the case of the Rocky Mountain Bell Telephone company, the committee recommended raising the assessment from $3,000 to $100,000. The report states that the company had returned the value of their plant at the price of the raw material. Parley L. Williams appeared on behalf of the company and stated that the committee must have gained their information in some incomprehensible manner as it was far from correct. Only one third of the companies property was in the Territory of Utah, the balance being in Idaho and Montana; said wires had to be charged so often that it was a fair and proper proceeding to value the wires when in position at less than their original cost. The great cost of running a telephone system was in its maintenance. The company could not be assessed on its capital stock but on the value of its property taken at a fair valuation; held that the company had made a generous return. It might be that the city needed more taxes and the committee had therefore raised valuations, but if more taxes were required it was necessary for the city to have more property. Rich said the committee had great difficulty in getting any definite statement on which to base the valuation of the Salt Lake plant—could get no information of a reliable character from the manager. The value of a business block was not estimated on the basis of the value of the unburnt stone in the quarry and he did not see why a telephone pole should be valued at its cost in the forests of Oregon. The telephone company had made large net profits for years and a great deal of money had been expended on the plant. The shares of the company should be 50 per cent above par.

Mr. Williams (interrupting): "Take the actual value of the shares if the truth is what you want to arrive at."

Rich did not propose being interrupted in his statement. He had not interrupted Mr. Williams.

Lawson called for order. Chairman ruled that Rich be allowed to proceed.

Rich continuing said the earnings of the company was 12 1/2 per cent on their capital of $400,000. Mr. Williams had said that it took a great deal of money to maintain the plant and on that head the company had returned the values at the cost in the rough, but said never a word about the vast sums expended on it and the $48,000 net earnings for the last year. Wantland said he thought $100,000 too high and $50,000 too low. The golden mean was the thing. Mr. Williams said the price of the stock had nothing to do with the case, but as a matter of fact the stock was worth $40 a share and not $150 as Mr. Rich said it ought to be.

Mr. Murray, of the company, said the net earnings of the company for 1891 was $16,890 and not $48,000. Owing to some peculiarity in their bookkeeping the $48,000 appeared as net earnings when in reality it was not so, but was gross earnings.

Simondi asked Mr. Williams if telephone stock could not be bought at $40 a share in large blocks.

Williams—I don't know.

Assessor Leonard said the company was a hard one to get a fair statement from. Their net earnings were nearly $48,000, the gross being about $150,000.

Folland thought it was quite clear the company had undervalued their property. It was also possible that the committee had gone too far on the other way and valued it too high. He had a telephone which lasted twelve years and not six only, as the company had stated was the life of an instrument. On a previous year's assessment the company had returned $8,000 and afterwards stood a raise of $30,000. Thought it should be raised this year to $65,000.

Lawson said the company could not be induced to give an honest statement of the value of their Salt Lake plant. They always dodged the issue when questioned by the committee. Held that money spent in extending the plant was not earnings. All that was wanted was an honest return and that the company would not make. Had been told, by a party whose name he had promised not to divulge, that the shares were purposely kept at a low figure to freeze some people out.

Hardy moved that the assessment be fixed at $80,000.

Farley Williams said they would just as soon be assessed at $100,000 as $80,000.

The motion carried; assessment raised to $60,000.

THE COMMITTEE ON BANKERS REPORTED

as follows:

The committee appointed to consider the objections of various banks of this city in regard to assessments beg leave to report that we recommend that all real estate be deducted from the capital stock and be assessed at a fair cash valuation or on the same basis that real estate has been valued at generally.

Second, that we recommend that the assessment on the capital stock and surplus be reduced twenty per cent.

F. O. HORN,
H. F. EVANS,
ELI A. FOLLAND,
A. L. SIMONDI,
C. E. WANTLAND.

Rich asked if it was the intention of the committee to reduce the value of a gold dollar to 80c.

Horn, as chairman of the committee, said he had no statement to make beyond the report. It was made on the advice of the attorney and after careful consideration by the committee.

Hardy moved to lay the report on the table. Motion lost.

Report adopted.

The railroad cases were then taken up, the committee's report read as follows on the Oregon Shore Line & Utah Northern Railway company: "That we raise the assessment on buildings and machinery $34,770 and on appurtenment of rolling stock we raise to territorial assessment, viz., to $1,100 per mile on seven miles, making a raise of $4,920, making a total raise of $30,000."

J. L. LAWSON,
E. E. RICH,
J. A. HEISS.

Mr. Patterson appeared for the railroad.

Rich moved that the assessment on the coal chute be reduced from $5000 to $4000.

Lawson said lots of things were not assessed at all, and he thought it small business for a railroad to come and ask for such petty reductions.

Motion to reduce lost.

Moran asked Rich if the committee had guessed at the valuations.

Rich—No; we used our best judgment in making the valuations.

Lawson moved the adoption of the report.

Moran favored the railroad; thought their return was about right. The company knew nothing of the value of tools and machinery. Moved that $35,000 be changed to $11,350. Bell amended to $15,000.

Lawson thought the assessment by the committee was just. A poor widow's property was assessed at its full value, and a railroad company should be treated in the same way.

Moran rose to a point of order. Said

WIDOWS HAD NOTHING TO DO with the valuation of machinery.

Chairman held the objection not well taken.

Folland said the valuation returned by the company was a low one. His machinery and tools were valued higher than the railroad's.

A motion to adjourn was lost.

The motion to substitute $15,000 for $35,000 prevailed.

Rich moved that the amount returned by the assessor be adopted on all the terms. Motion lost.

The report of the council as amended was carried.

Report of the committee on the RIO GRANDE WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY recommended a raise on building and machinery of $57,700. In the matter of rolling stock apportionment raised the assessment of the territorial standard of $1100 per mile of seven miles, making a total raise of $59,870.

Rich moved that the report be laid on the table indefinitely. Motion lost.

Lawson moved the adoption of the report.

Mr. Harkness appeared for the railroad and presented affidavits from Architect Fred A. Hale and others as to the value of the property.

Rich moved that the assessment be made in accordance with the demand of the company. Motion lost.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The city School Board met in regular session last night, Vice-President Nelson in the chair. The trustees present were Duke, Young, Pratt, Pike, Newman, Dooly, Raybould and Baldwin.

NO LONGER FREE OF CHARGE.

The ladies of the Fourth Ward Relief Society sent in a communication stating that the board had been using a building belonging to the association for school purposes in the Fourth ward free of charge and if the board desired to continue its use it would have to pay a rental of $4 a month for it. Committee on sites and buildings.

STEAM HEATING.

The committee on sites and buildings reported on the resolution of the board adopting the plans of George C. Spohr, architect, for the Hamilton school, and on the recommendation of the committee the board had decided to heat and ventilate the said building with furnace heat and natural ventilation. The same system was adopted on the Franklin school. On August 31st the committee opened bids for said heating and ventilation, one from the Smead Warming and Ventilating company for $2,750 for each building, and the other from Bennett & Peck of $2,735, both bids exclusive of changes in the flues. The cost of the changes in the Hamilton school being so great and the flues already in being better arranged for steam, induced the committee to solicit bids for heating by indirect steam. The bid of James, Spencer, Bateman & Co., for the sum of $2,650, is the result. Other necessary repairs would add $1,200 to $1,500 to this bid. The committee, therefore, recommended that the contract be entered into with James, Spencer, Bateman & Co. for the heating and ventilating of this building.

Duke wanted to know if the committee had power to advertise for said bids and thus practically reverse the previous action of the board.

Raybould said this was an exceptional case and the committee saw by adopting the change as recommended it would effect a great saving to the board and also expedite the business.

Pike favored the change and thought the work of putting in the apparatus should be expedited as much as possible. The report of the committee was adopted.

THE HAMILTON SCHOOL.

The same committee also reported recommending that the Smead Warming and Ventilating company's system be placed in the Hamilton school, providing that the cost of installing the same shall not exceed $2750, and that any necessary changes in the pipes be made before the contract is entered into. Adopted.

THE FRANKLIN SCHOOL.

The same committee further reported that the bid of the Bennett & Peck Heating and Ventilating Company for heating and ventilating the Franklin school building is $2,735, to which should be added about $650 for cost of changing the flues, etc., necessary to install the system, making a total of $3,400 for heating, ventilating and dry crematory closets. The committee recommended that the bid of the Bennett & Peck Company be accepted and the clerk and president authorized to execute the contract. Adopted.

THE LOWELL AND WASHINGTON SCHOOLS.

The committee also recommended that the contract for heating and ventilating the Lowell school in the Twentieth ward, and the Washington school in the Nineteenth ward, be awarded to Midgley & Sons Company for the sum of $5,500 each. The company have filed an agreement that they will furnish everything necessary to properly heat and ventilate said buildings even to direct radiation if found to be necessary, also any changes that there may be required in the brick flues to properly and successfully install their system. Further, that the attorney of the board be instructed to prepare the contract, and that the president and clerk be authorized to sign same.

A MINORITY REPORT.

Mr. Dooley offers a minority report recommending that the contract be not awarded to Midgley & Sons for the sum of $5500 for each school, for the reason that a former report of the committee recommended that the contract be awarded to the Hendy & Meyers company for $3500. The said company guaranteed the successful operation of the plant and agreed in it to ask any consideration for their labor until the plant was completed and accepted by the board. The report stated there was no reason for expending $4000 for the purpose of making an experiment. The additional cost to the board is unnecessary and should not be incurred, and for this reason recommended that the contract be awarded to the Hendy & Meyer company at $3300 for each building.

Mr. Duke moved as an amendment to the minority report that the name of P. J. Moran be substituted for that of Hendy & Meyer for the Nineteenth Ward, and that the name of Midgley be substituted for Hendy & Meyer for the Twentieth Ward building. Amendment carried, and the minority report as amended was adopted, thus awarding the contract for heating the Nineteenth Ward school to P. J. Moran, and the Twentieth Ward school to Midgley & Son.

Mr. Pike moved to reconsider the report of the committee. Motion lost, and the minority report as amended sustained.

TEACHERS APPOINTED.

The committee on teachers reported that there are vacancies in the corps of teachers in the following situations: Primary departments of Sixth school and of Eighteenth school, and intermediate department of the Sixteenth school, and recommended the appointment of the following persons to fill the vacancies, Miss Chadwick, Eighteenth school, at $60 per month; Miss Batt, Sixth school, at $75 per month, until the completion of the new building, after which new arrangements will be made; Miss McFall, Sixteenth school, at $66 per month. Adopted.

The committee asked power to appoint a teacher for North Salt Lake. Granted.

Baldwin moved that the superintendent of schools be authorized to alter the course of study in the high school to conform to changes in text books. Adopted.

Baldwin moved that the committee on school work be empowered to employ terms and the necessary help to distribute the new books. Carried.

Mr. Young moved that the committee on sites and buildings be authorized to enter into a contract for the removal of the surplus dirt from the Lowell school. Carried.

Newman moved that the committee be authorized to rent a school building from the Church authorities of the Eleventh ward. Carried.

Board adjourned for one week.

THE PLAGUE PROSPECT.

The situation in relation to cholera is becoming more and more serious owing to the arrival of infected ships at New York. If this source of danger continues, President Harrison intends to take steps that will lead to the prohibition of the landing of emigrants from infected ports.

Professor Virchow, an eminent Frenchman, insists that cholera in action can only be communicated by actual contact, and that it cannot be carried in the air. We do not believe this is correct. This and other epidemic diseases are liable to break out where actual contact with persons or articles exposed to surroundings where cases of the particular malady have occurred has been apparently impossible. This can be said of instances of outbreaks of diphtheria in isolated places in the mountains of this region.

During the last visitation of cholera to Great Britain the idea was general that the infection was carried about at that time in the air. In those days when travel even between towns, was exceedingly limited for want of facilities, the circumstances connected with the spread of the plague, apart from scientific investigation, seemed to warrant the inference that the infection was conveyed by aerial transit. Numbers of simple experiments were made to test this theory. One of them, applied in a village which was badly infected, is remembered by the writer. A fresh leg of mutton was hoisted on a high pole in one of the sections where the disease was raging. The mutton was only exposed for a few hours, yet when taken down it was so positively putrid. This test may not be considered actual proof, but it showed the presence of disease germs of some kind in the atmosphere, and if they could be held there they could certainly be carried about by every current.

The cholera germ is so small that its diminutiveness can hardly be described by comparison. Each of these germs, when it culminates, breaks and two complete cells are the result, and so the production goes on by this rapid process of multiplication. The indescribable smallness of the germs adapts them for conveyance by atmospheric motion. We believe Dr. Cyrus Edson to be right when he says, in his article in the current number of the North American "Review," that "each person infected becomes in turn a centre of infection for others, and the disease would therefore move from country to country like the wandering circles in water, were there no travel whatever." If this theory be correct—it seems indisputable—then New York is in imminent danger, aside from any and all precautions that may be taken. A gale from seaward might easily nullify all measures to prevent the introduction of the dreaded disease.

Dr. Edson gives some advice in advance of an outbreak in this country. He says:

"Should the cholera come here we must then see to it that all germs are destroyed by heat before taking them into our bodies. It is necessary, too, that the most absolute cleanliness, especially of the hands, be observed and particularly for those who handle food. The germs may easily be found on such things as straps in cars, balusters on public stairways, door knobs, money and the like. I cannot too strongly state the fact that the chances of infection, were the cholera to break out to any extent, would be almost intumescible and that no amount of precaution, therefore, can be too great."

"Fortunately for us, when we are in health we can strongly state the fact that if they are taken into the system. The care for ourselves during a cholera outbreak is, therefore, merely that care we should properly take at all times. We must take plenty of sleep, a fair amount of exercise, eat very plain food thoroughly cooked, drink water that has been boiled and allowed to cool in bottles on ice, let raw fruit alone, wear light flannels, and in general lead as rational a life as we may."

The dispatches bring information of a suspected case of cholera in Chicago, the victim being a Swedish immigrant. Two doctors who examined her condition before death state that the cholera symptoms were very strong, while another says that it was a case of heat disease.

THE BRITISH MISSION.

I am now in South Wales, having come to Cardiff to attend the Welsh Conference, which will be held here tomorrow. There are but few Saints in this part, but through the energetic labors of the missionaries there are a number of investigators who seem anxious to test our witness of the restoration of the Gospel, and I have no doubt that some fruit will be borne in the way of a slight increase in the membership of the Church here; but as you are aware from your recent observation in the mission field, there are few people who care to treat us with other than contempt or indifference. The overwhelming majority of the inhabitants of this land have made up their minds to abide by a "gospel" that does not occupy too much of their time. They are content with a "faith that worketh" not, and are satisfied to believe that the Lord has performed all the labor necessary for their salvation—possibly so they can have more time to devote to worldly matters, as these lie nearest their hearts. The class of people—limited in number—whose desire is to work righteousness are so hedged about by the traditions of men that it is next to impossible to obtain a hearing from them.

The great sorrow, from which I took my departure yesterday for a few days, is not exactly "the same old Liverpool" that those whose business frequently calls them there usually find it, in one respect at least, for there is an unusual amount of excitement over the cholera, of which there are four cases in the Parkhill hospital, at the South End. The affected persons are Russian Jews, and two of the four are pronounced by the medical officers as beyond recovery. The papers first announced them as "mild cases of bowel complaint," but the hurrying them off to the hospital, and the hasty removal of a dozen patients of the institution, suffering from other diseases, to give the whole place up to the few new comers was a contradiction of the "mild" feature. There were no local cases in Liverpool.

The activity of the health officers is commensurate with the uneasiness of the public, and immigrants, both for Great Britain and those en route to the United States and Canada, are subjected to rigorous sanitary regulations. German and Russian Jews and Dutch and Italians are given a thorough soaking and scrubbing that is doubtless a great surprise to them, judging by their usually untidy appearance. All their old and badly worn underclothing is burned, and in necessary cases new articles of apparel are furnished.

The baggage that is embarked on vessels leaving here for American ports is thoroughly disinfected by various chemicals, and is subjected to the "steaming process." For this purpose one of the Cunard company's large freight ships has been enclosed in the river, and there the steaming is going on day and night. By the method used, all baggage goes through an operation of turning and shaking, and heating to a temperature of 230 degrees Fahrenheit, by means of steam boilers especially provided for the work, and is then packed in boxes and sent aboard the outgoing vessel without again going to shore. Each trunk or box for a United States port must have the "disinfected" label of the American consul before the officers of the transatlantic boats will receive it. By this means it is hoped that an extension of the epidemic will not be caused by the Liverpool steamship companies.

The town of Bridgend, through which I passed on my journey today, is a few miles west of here. It is the scene of the Park Ship colliery disaster which occurred this week, and of which the dispatches have probably given you the awful details. Out of the 145 men in the mine, 110 were killed. The cause of the catastrophe is now admitted to be a neglect to properly ventilate some old workings. The dead bodies are still being brought to the surface, but they are so blackened and distorted that identification is almost impossible except by some particular article of clothing they might have worn. One feature connected with the frequent recurrence of disasters of various kinds is the increased callousness of the people not immediately affected. What formerly would have shocked the whole community for weeks is now looked upon as an event to be expected in the natural course of things, and excites but passing comment. The mass of the people seem blinded to the signs of the times, among which calamities are enumerated, and familiarity with them, if it does not breed contempt, at least leads to indifference.

As a body the people of Wales are probably more averse to the distribution of the printed word and the preaching of the Gospel by the Latter-day Saints than are the inhabitants of either England or Scotland. In Wales the Elders are being almost constantly molested in one way or another, and instances of violence, though fortunately without serious effect, have been quite numerous the past eighteen months. No particular section more than another is given to this, but here in South Wales, in Mid-Wales, and in North Wales the bitterness and hostility to the Latter-day Saints and their teachings are about the same.

An outbreak from this cause, in which the treatment of the missionaries was rather more severe than usual, owing to the mob having better opportunities to engage in their lawlessness, occurred in Denbighshire on the evening of August 24th, and two days later the same brethren were ordered out of their lodgings. Elders Thomas D. Roberts, of Logan, Levi John, of Portage, Box Elder County, and Tallies Evans, of Scofield, Emery County, have been laboring in the Denbighshire district. The following is an extract from a letter written by them to the President of the Conference here, Elder Thomas B. Evans, of Ogden, describing what took place:

"We have been trying to do our duty, but find it is getting warm. We have had opposition in every meeting but one, and very bitter at that, but last night is the worst we have witnessed in Wales. We went up to Cefn, an most of those in attendance listened very good while we spoke; but after the meeting they brought forward an old copy of the Star, and also some of the words of our leading men, teaching that God has a body. The man who read this thought that God had no body. He then called out and asked the crowd if He had. They all shouted, 'No!' They would not be reasoned with, so we tried to withdraw from them; but that would not do, and we held our own for half an hour. About this time the crowd began shouting, 'A way with them!'

"Then the mob started on us, and roughly pushed and kicked us about. Brother Roberts was thrown down several times, as was also Brother John. It was only after a very painful experience that they succeeded in getting away from the crowd and reaching their place of lodging. Brother Evans managed to slip through an alley and escaped unharmed. We have tracted all this district once, and had partially gone over it a second time, intending to complete the work next week. They warned us not to come back again. This morning it is all Brother Roberts can do to use one hand, and both he and Brother John are quite sore from the bruising they received."

Notwithstanding experiences that are sometimes decidedly unpleasant, the Elders laboring in Wales, and those in other parts of the mission as well, are filled with an earnest determination to do their duty. They are diligently calling on the people to repent, and are seeking to thoroughly warn them. The inhabitants of this part of the country will not be able to find an excuse for not receiving the Gospel in any neglect of the few missionaries now in the field to disseminate the truth wherever they have opportunity. The offer is marked with unflinching diligence, and is being as persistently rejected.

The weather is fair today. This subject may be a topic of common conversation, but it is not a common thing to have many successive days of fine weather along the west coast of Britain. However, we hope for sunshine tomorrow, so that none may be unwillingly detained from hearing the word of the Lord preached.

JAMES H. ANDERSON.
CARDIFF, Wales, Sept. 3, 1892.

THE SCANDINAVIAN MISSION.

Perhaps a few words from this part of the Lord's vineyard may be of interest to your readers. Many of our people in Utah are somewhat acquainted with the geographical location of this valley, or canyon, as we would call it at home—among the Norwegians at least. Its greatest width at any place does not exceed probably an American mile. Its entire length we have not yet learned.

From Christiania to Lillehammer, a distance of about 100 American miles, the journey is by rail over Osbanen to Hamer, where we visited the ruins of the old Catholic cathedral, said to have been built in 1665 and afterwards destroyed by the Swedes. The remainder of the distance to Lillehammer was covered by boat over a long, narrow lake called Moser. While at Lillehammer we lodged at Johnsen's Hotel, so fitted as to suit almost any one's pocket. At this place and on its east side is a large stream of slough-stained water, making perhaps a dozen or more very pretty falls over its cliffy bed. In its descent down the mountain side. In the city there are a couple of small pleasure gardens containing seats and walks—one of the latter affording a fine view of the city and lake.

From here to our present headquarters (a distance of about seventy-five miles) we traveled on foot. The people along the way were exceedingly hospitable, a condition undoubtedly due to the constant stream of tourists from other countries as well as the wealthy from various parts of Norway through this valley every summer. The roads are excellent, being built on a light but uniform base with medium curves and deep cuts much like that of an American railroad.

At Lillehammer is the beginning of Gudbrandsdalen proper, and all along the mountain on either side is dotted with farms or forest—neither elevation nor incline being any consideration—where some earth yet remains, even in small spots on the outcropping rocks.

About four days' travel up the valley (canyon) we passed the tombstone of the renowned Scotch general, George Slinklar, who was killed August 26th, 1812, by the old farmer-men of Gudbrandsdalen. The slab, nine feet square, has the following inscription on it:

"Her bleo Skott-arnes Anforer Georg Slinklar, begravet efter at han var falden ved Kringen den 26 August, 1812."

According to history, Sweden and Norway were at war over a matter perhaps not yet settled, and while the young men of the latter country, composing its army, were holding the former at bay on their dividing line at Konges Vinger, Sweden hired Slinklar to enter Norway from the west and thus hoping to enter unnoticed and take the country by storm; but they were defeated by the staunch "old men."

A walk of a few steps above the "tomb stone" and we reached the spot where stands an old log stable, still used for storing hay, in which it is said five of Slinklar's men who escaped the massacre were caught and imprisoned for some time and afterwards taken out one by one and shot. Next day we reached the spot known as Kringel, where "the deed was done." It is a narrow place with simply the road between the mountain and the river where it has been cut through the cliff. Here, it is said, huge stones and timbers were thundered down upon the army at the signal from an old woman at the top of a prominent peak on the opposite side of the canyon, where a monument to her memory now stands and marks the spot and is also known by the name of "Pilegruik."

Hundreds of tourists visit this valley yearly and admire its rugged mountain, a fresh water stream filled with the finny tribe including the speckled trout and other varieties; yet we understand that the number of tourists is decreasing. Such sights are of but little interest to a Utah boy, as his own "dear country" presents them in a more picturesque form.

The old churches and mode of farming are of more curiosity to us. One church, that we visited, said to have been built in 1114, (in Catholic times) contains many curious objects of carving, including Adam and Eve, the Savior on the cross, and twelve Apostles, etc., very nicely wrought in wood, also pictures of a number of Danish kings. Another old church whose spire is so built as to exhibit a head in it, it mattereth not from which direction the spectator gazes—is also a curiosity.

As the canyon is so extremely narrow, and its bottom covered with the slow-moving waters of the river, the mountain sides are resorted to for farming. According to the extent of the farm, houses are built in size and number.

It would appear, from a local paper, that a few days ago one of these guards some distance north of here, slid from the mountain side, and house, soil, grain land, grass land, everything went down into the river below. All of the mass that could be recognized was simply one log sticking up from the heap. Fortunately the family was away from home when the mishap occurred. On Monday a huge rock slipped from the mountain side within sight of our lodgings here, but did no damage. These slides are caused by the recent heavy rains.

Delaying on the mountain tops is resorted to in the summer time, but rarely here compared with those in Denmark or at home are only playthings. Nearly all the horses are of a yellow color and a characteristic of this valley.

Hay making is now finished and the farmer is through. Harvest is in full blast. This work is nearly all done by women, with the common sickle. On one farm there were thirty-five women and four men. The men shock the grain. In this country the women as well as the men are glad to get work; it matters little what kind it is; and it makes us feel bad to see the situation. We wonder how these facts sound by the side of the "fabric" that appeared in the Philadelphia Ledger of July 26th, as was furnished by a Salt Lake lady!

Just on the mount here hardly is a large slate-roofing quarry, having either black or brown stone, the stone is of superior quality, said to contain some iron, and is broken with difficulty.

The day before yesterday, on the invitation of the foreman, we were shown through the quarry, where they had just raised a beautiful slab about three-eighths of an inch thick, measuring twenty-four and a half feet long by ten and one-fourth feet wide, and aggregating two hundred and fifty-one and one-eighth shaft.

A railroad is in course of construction to this place, which is its purposed terminus. It is expected to be finished in 1896.

Politics are laid on the shelf until next February, when the question, "Shall Norway paddle her own canoe?" will undoubtedly be settled.

Yesterday the Lutheran or State church held forth; today the "Salvation army" holds its first meeting here, on Sunday both Lutherans and Baptists will hold services, and we have our turn also. Many are studying our doctrine, and it is not an uncommon thing for families to offer us their small homes for holding meeting. We have loaned out a large number of tracts, for the people are too poor to buy, and the loaning process works better results. We hope the Lord will bless us with means to keep up the work. We have borne our testimonies to upwards of six hundred persons who had not heard the Gospel before. Two "Mormon" missionaries held a meeting here about 30 years ago, and that is all that we can learn our missionaries have done here before; therefore our field is comparatively a new one and will furnish room for all our missionaries now in Norway to labor. At the close of some of our meetings the people seem to feel that they could hardly leave us; likewise when we visited some families they regretted to part with us.

In conclusion, permit us to say that Silvert Olson, whom Brother J. M. Sjodahl baptized into the Baptist faith at Trondheim, is the Baptist president here, and desires to be remembered to Brother Sjodahl. The gentleman carries Brother S. in high esteem and promised to write him asking "why he became a Mormon." The Baptists are now studying how to practice the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

We are well and feel good and extend our regards to friends at home. Your brethren in the Gospel,

JOHN L. JOHNSON.

BREDEBYODEN, Gudbrandsdalen, Sel, Norge, August 26, 1892.

MORGAN CITY AND COUNTY.

A gentleman of the medical profession from Salt Lake city, at a public meeting recently held in Farmington, made the following statement respecting Morgan, its people and their surroundings. He told the people of Davis county assembled there "that Morgan was a dirty little town; that some of them, although a good and kind people, did not know enough to keep clean, and round their dwellings free from filth; that the accumulation of field matter was the cause of the cases of diphtheria that they had every year; the mud around their dwellings was impregnated with the seepage of their corals, and that a white man going once into some of their outbuildings, would not want to go in again."

Now, there may be a few instances of that character, and while I do not claim that Morgan city is a paragon of cleanliness, yet I maintain that it is (and the whole of the county) as clean and healthy as any farming district in the country, or as any that the gentleman has visited, with all due deference to him, his opinion to the contrary notwithstanding. The feeling of the people that I have spoken of about this is that Morgan has been unjustly singled out and made to appear worse, from a sanitary point of view, than it really is. I am not a resident of Morgan City, but I reside in the county of Morgan and often visit the county seat, being well posted as regards its sanitary condition, and can say advisedly that it is not behind other rural districts in cleanliness. The gentleman's statements in regard to diphtheria are not correct. The few cases they have had were contracted by some of the people visiting in localities infected with the disease and by strangers and friends coming amongst them, bringing the disease in its incipient stage, but fully developed after being there a few days. In the little town where I reside, there has never been a case of diphtheria. Some of the people feel indignant, and wonder why Morgan should have been spoken of so disparagingly in a public meeting, not with any intent to injure the people, they suppose, but the effect produced, has a tendency that way. The people have long struggled under very adverse circumstances, perhaps more so than those of any other county in Utah, and are still laboring to build up and beautify this little valley. They have long raised the stock which produced the milk, and are now in earnest as regards the honey, and they only need encouragement instead of unwise statements respecting them to make the valley a veritable "Land of milk and honey." God has blessed them in their labors.

The land now yields more abundantly; the climate has become more temperate; the mountain streams have increased; and they acknowledge His hand in all these things, and by His help, they will yet raise this lovely little valley, in the estimation of those, whose lot has apparently been cast in more pleasant places, and who in times past have spoken of it very indifferently as only one of the "back valleys." But a change has come over it; valence cars run through and the Union Pacific Railroad company bring thousands from Salt Lake and Ogden, on pleasure bent, to enjoy themselves in the groves and resorts, and on the banks of the Weber river that so beautifully threads its winding way by fields, rich with golden grain, the reward of the husbandman's toil. The valley looks lovely at this time, showing signs of the autumn season, and the near approach of winter, when it will again put on its mantle of snow and be lovely even in its sternest aspect.

I remember visiting a friend in Davis County about fifteen years ago and amongst the good things with which I was regaled were strawberries. The lady of the house said to me, "They will be quite a treat to you, I have no doubt, for you cannot raise fruit of that kind in your valley." But the good people of Morgan now raise strawberries, and fine ones, too; also apples, plums, tomatoes, raspberries, currants, and other products of that character. This at one time was thought impossible. Instead of mud, some have nice, green lawns around their homes, and the rattle of the lawn mower can be heard as you pass along some portions of the town. I do not think the municipal authorities will neglect to enforce sanitary measures necessary for the welfare of the inhabitants, and cleanse the town from impurities as much as in their power lies.

I hope this letter will be considered a temperate and respectful reply to the statement about Morgan and its people, as I "nothing extenuate, nor ought set down in malice." CRENDENA.

STAKE CONFERENCES.

ST. GEORGE.

Our quarterly conference has just closed. The preliminary meetings were held on Saturday, 10th inst. The regular conference, which convened Sunday and Monday, the 11th and 12th, was well attended. Among those present were Apostles Francis M. Lyman and Anton H. Lund, President Jesse W. Crosby, Jun., of Panguitch Stake, and Counselor Daniel Segmiller of Kanab Stake, all of whom ministered the word of the Lord to our edification.

The customary business of presenting reports and presenting the authorities of the Church was transacted. There was not a dissenting voice.

The reports of the condition of the Stake were very gratifying. The speakers were listened to with the closest attention.

JAMES G. BLEAK, Clerk.

KANAB.

This quarterly conference was held in the basement of the Academy of Kanab, on Saturday and Sunday, September 3rd and 4th, 1892. Present on the stand, Apostles F. M. Lyman and Anton H. Lund, President Jesse W. Crosby of Panguitch Stake, and other visiting brethren, the Kanab Stake Presidency, several of the High Council and the Bishops of the several wards.

President Edwin D. Woolley reported the Kanab Stake as improving spiritually. Our financial condition was very gratifying. On account of the drought a great many cattle, etc., would perish this coming winter. We lacked accommodations for the education of our young. He reported favorably the Indians in this Stake.

Reports were read from the Bishops of the respective wards, after which Apostle Lyman spoke on the subject of education, and the course we should pursue in every avocation of life.

Remarks were also made by President Jesse W. Crosby of Panguitch Stake and Counselor Thomas Chamberlain of Kanab Stake.

Apostle Anton H. Lund dwelt on the subjects of education, sacrifice, obedience to the commandments of God and the requirements made of us.

Counselor Daniel Segmiller touched upon the subject of emigration, and this concluded the services for the first day.

The Y. M. M. I. A. conference was held Saturday evening. Apostles Lyman and Lund urged the young men to be faithful and seek earnestly to improve in all good works.

On Sunday, at 10 a.m., after the usual exercises, Elder Joseph Jolley of Sanpete Stake, addressed the Saints on the subject of tithes and offerings and the principle of sacrifice.

Apostle Lyman presented the general and local authorities, all of whom were unanimously sustained.

Bishop Henry B. M. Jolley of Mount Carmel ward, having resigned on account of old age and ill health, Elder Haskell S. Jolley was sustained as Bishop of the Mount Carmel ward, with Robert Moncur as first and Wm. J. Jolly, Jr. as second counselors.

Henry B. M. Jolley was sustained as Patriarch in the Stake, and Henry E. Bowman as a member of the High Council.

Apostle Anton H. Lund addressed the Saints on the subject of faith, sacrifice, etc., and the evil effects of infidelity.

In the afternoon, after the sacrament, Apostle Lyman occupied the remainder of the time; advised the Saints to improve their public buildings and surroundings by setting out shade trees, etc.

The Y. L. M. I. A. Conference was held directly after the Quarterly Conference adjourned, and the Sunday School Conference took place in the evening. The Apostles and visiting brethren, etc., were present on these occasions.

Apostles Lyman and Lund, with the Kanab Stake Presidency, held meetings with the Saints in Graham, Glendale, Orderville and Mt. Carmel wards on their way to our Quarterly Conference.

CONFERENCE NOTICE

The Sixty-third Semi-annual Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints will convene in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, at 10 o'clock on Thursday morning, October 6th, 1892.

The officers and members of the Church generally are cordially invited to attend the meetings of the Conference.

JOSEPH F. SMITH,
First Presidency.

THE "REVIVAL" MEETINGS.

So far we have heard of no unseemly excitement, no religious gymnastics, no spiritual inebrity attending the "revival" meetings now in progress in this city. The gentlemen conducting it appear very much in earnest and sincerely desirous of drawing public attention to the necessity of a religious life. We mention this because the common "revival" is or has been simply a holocaust and often crazy effort to create an enthusiasm which has no more religion in it than the feelings aroused at a horse race.

Anything that will draw the minds of men and women from that which will perb with the using, and arouse in them a desire for a higher life, which will make them think of God, their duty to Him and the responsibility which rests upon them as eternal entities, who must give an account to their Creator of their deeds and words in mortality, is an agency for good and therefore commendable.

The services in the tent, so far as we can learn, have been of this character and tendency. Therefore, while we may differ from those who conduct them on important questions of theology, we can yet wish success and God-speed to all such endeavors to turn the wicked from sin, to uphold morality and to induce humanity to seek after truth and righteousness.

A VILE BUT COMMON HABIT.

If some influence could be brought to bear upon men who move in business circles and congregate in the business portions of the city to drop the use of profane language, we think it would be a vast improvement upon our beautiful city. There is more or less of profanity in other localities, of course, but where the saloons and other places of resort abound there may be heard language that is distasteful to persons of ordinary Christian culture, and positively shocking and repulsive to people of a religious character.

If the revival meetings now being held could be used in this direction, so as to wake up men and boys who use vile expressions, to the vice and evil effects of this habit and its indication of a vulgar mind, we would think the great efforts put forth in the big tent would not be in vain.

We are aware that a great many persons who swear do not desire to cure or say anything particularly disagreeable, but they have contracted a bad habit. They are like the sailors on board a certain ship commanded by Admiral Goldsborough. The chaplain of the vessel was asked on his return voyage about his success. He answered, "the result has been in the main most satisfactory. The only serious impediment to progress with the sailors has been that it is impossible to prevent their swearing when they hear the officers guilty of the very fault for which I correct them." "Tut, tut, man, that is not to be helped; the officers also swear," replied the Admiral; "I do it myself, sometimes, but I don't mean anything—not a bit more than you do by your praying."

Men use bad language from habit. But it is a vile habit which they ought to overcome. Gentlemen avoid it in presence of ladies. They might just as well drop it for good and all, everywhere. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." This being true, what kind of hearts must some men have whose language almost makes the air around them smell of sulphur! "Swear not at all!" is a Christian law, and the civil law here at one time supported it. Let it be made a rule in civil life and this city as well as others would be much the better for it.

A LIVING SOUL.

ONE of our contemporaries, speaking of an explosion of twenty tons of gunpowder on a vessel, expressed surprise that "not a soul on board was killed." The astonishment was very natural, the expression of it correct. But another contemporary, noted for its lack of logic and persistent misrepresentation of its opponents, says: "The question is, how much gunpowder does it take to kill a soul? But may be our contemporary does not believe that men have immortal souls."

The dishonesty which runs through nearly all the alleged arguments of the paper that manufactures this query, is seen in the addition of the word "immortal" to the language of its adversary. That is its common method. It either adds to or takes from the position of its antagonist, and then proceeds to demolish it with more or less exultation.

Nobody pretends that any amount of gunpowder would kill "an immortal soul." But it does take much gunpowder to kill a man. And the dictionary informs us that the word soul means "a man; a human being." It was certainly marvellous that so vast a quantity of explosive matter was fired, on a vessel containing many human beings, and yet not a soul on board was killed.

The spirit of man is sometimes called the soul of man. In that sense the terms are synonymous. The spirit, however, is the more proper term, because it is not confounded with the soul, used to designate the whole person. We are told in the good Book that in the beginning God made man of the dust of the earth, that He breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became "a living soul." It was the whole man, body, breath and spirit that was "a living soul."

In latter-day revelations it is stated that the spirit and the body form the soul of man, and the resurrection from the dead is the redemption of the soul. This is in harmony with the teachings of the Old and the New Testaments, and yet not discordant with the use of the word soul as equivalent to spirit when used to designate the personal spirit of man.

When we read accounts of the loss, or preservation, or danger of so many "souls," every person of common sense and common understanding of language knows that the word means individuals, and not merely their immortal spirits. When there came out of Egypt under Moses so many hundred thousand souls, the sacred record that gives the number does not mean that their spirits came out, but their entire personalities.

Perhaps, however, the carrying critic who added the word "immortal" so as to raise a dispute, intended the whole thing for a joke. If so he ought to have labelled it. For like others of his similar efforts it contains not the faintest spark of humor and is only noticeable because of its dishonesty; and if it is meant to be funny, it ought to have either a head or a tail to it to let the reader know he is expected to laugh instead of feel disgusted.

AN HISTORICAL HOMESTEAD.

We find in several Eastern papers allusion to the sale of the old homestead where it is said the Prophet Joseph Smith was born. As it will be of interest to some of our readers at least, we clip the following from the Boston Globe:

"SOUTH ROYALTON, Vt., Sept. 1.—The old farm upon which Joseph Smith, the founder of the so-called Mormon Church, was born has been sold to J. H. Kent, a wealthy New Yorker, who is to move from his city home to the farm at once.

"There are many historical reminiscences clinging to the old farm, which is very pleasantly located among some of the prettiest of New England scenery. Old Uncle Solomon Mack, grandfather of the Mormon Prophet, was the earliest settler upon that part of the farm where stood the house in which Joseph Smith was born. He was liked by all his neighbors, but was a man who had odd ways.

"There were only bridle paths through the forest in the early days, and Mr. Mack used to make his journeys about the town upon an old joggins man, using an outside saddle instead of sitting astride the mare. This was a necessity, his legs having been injured by a tree falling across them. Reaching a neighbor's house he would sing out, 'Who keeps the house?' It he accepted an invitation to alight and enter the house he was always given a hearty welcome by the inmates.

"In the early days the line separating this town from Sharon was not marked, and for some time Solomon Mack was supposed to live in and paid tax to the town of Sharon, and hence the statement that Joseph Smith was born in Sharon. The line, when established, was found to be several rods south of the Mack homestead, which bordered upon a road running north from Sharon to the hills of Royall to Tunbridge and the towns beyond. This was the principal thoroughfare of this vicinity in the early days, but a large part of the road has been abandoned for many years."

MOB RULE AND LAW RULE.

WE have already referred to the forcible expulsion of "Mormon" Elders from Hanover County, Virginia, by seventy-five alleged "Christians," who declared by public resolution that they would not tolerate "Mormonism," because they were determined that they would only have a "Christian community." A number of papers endorsed this action and we took occasion to express our opinion of their Christianity and their tolerance. Now we find the following in the Richmond, Virginia, Times, and we take pleasure in noting that one influential paper, at least, takes a rational American and civilized position in regard to "Christian" mobocracy. The Times gives a brief account of the expulsion, expresses its disapprobation of "Mormonism" and especially of polygamy, and presumes that the objection to the Elders was their preaching of polygamous doctrines. It goes on to say:

"But even though they were engaged in preaching Mormonism in its most polygamous and odious form, the Times intends to record its most solemn protest against the method by which the preachers were silenced. If there is no law of this State forbidding persons to preach Mormonism, even in its most offensive form, then every person has a natural right to preach it and those who undertake to prevent that right by physical force are performing an act in no respect different in its nature from any other unlawful combination intended to enforce an individual opinion or execute the decree of a mob. If there is no law against the preaching of such doctrines and the good people of Hanover want one they should come to the legislature and ask that one be enacted.

"If there is a law against it, then the way to have that law enforced is to have the parties indicted, tried and punished for violating the law. But no man or set of men has the right to take the law into his or their own hands and administer it according to his or their will, and the people of Hanover citizens who drove the Mormon preachers away were themselves as much violators of the law as those preachers could have been.

"The distinction between the rule of the mob and the rule of the law lies exactly at this point.

"These gentlemen had a perfect right to tell the Mormon preachers that their doctrines were offensive to the good people of Hanover and that those good people would be glad never to hear or see them again, and so peacefully urge them to depart. That is one thing, but a threat of violence and force is quite another. Our Hanover friends, however, may claim that their demonstration was no more in effect than this. But when seventy-five men go in a body on horseback to two persons, and in that array tell their views in a matter of this kind, the logic of the occasion is very much what operated on the mind of Goliath in a certain event.

"That voracious and immortal chronicler tells us that as he was one day riding along the road he came upon a man who looked like 'a kind of soldier.' He was sitting on the side of the road with a long gun resting upon two crossed sticks, 'a hitch,' says Gil, 'he seemed to be pointing at me.' This 'kind of a soldier,' in pious tones, prayed Gil. 'For the love of God give a poor soldier a penny,' and Gil immediately produced and left with him his entire purse.

"A request from seventy-five gentlemen under such circumstances is as near to a command as the 'kind of a soldier's' will, and it is to be regretted that in a country governed by law they did not pursue a different course."

THE VENEZUELAN QUESTION.

DISPATCHES from New York and Washington contain significant particulars in relation to Venezuela. Admiral Walker, on board the man-of-war "Chicago," is on the way to that country, armed with plenipotentiary power to represent the United States. It is said that he will make a formal demand for the return of the six political refugees taken from the steamer "Caracas," a vessel flying the American flag, about two weeks ago. These were Venezuelans, and members of Congress under Palacios. Their forces were vanquished by Crespo and they sought this vessel then in the harbor, and engaged passage to New York. Shortly after their embarkation Crespo's soldiers boarded the "Caracas" and took the Venezuelans away by force and against the protest of the American captain.

Venezuela has been the scene of civil war since March last. It is difficult to trace the real origin of political troubles in these South American countries, but as near as can be ascertained the present disorder originated somewhat as follows: Anduraz Palacios was President of the republic. Last March his term of office expired, but he refused to vacate his office. He was a man of large wealth and personal influence. He succeeded in preventing the assembling of a legal quorum in Congress, and thereby brought on a deadlock. Finally a majority of the Congress was brought together. It denounced Palacios, and ordered a dissolution. Crespo was then a member of the Senate chamber. He opposed Palacios's methods from the first. He became head of a party calling themselves Legalists, and organized an army. He succeeded in driving Palacios and many of his leading adherents from the country. The six refugees mentioned were Palacios men. It looks as if Crespo had the law and the Constitution on his side. And the fact that he called himself a Legalist shows that he believes himself right.

Though Admiral Walker is said to be under instructions to demand the return of the refugees, yet it is thought that the matter will be settled amicably. There is another little trouble on the tapis in that country. Ever since 1887 a misunderstanding has existed as to the boundary lines of British Guiana. England claims that its possession comprehends what is now regarded by Venezuelans as a large tract of their country. Shortly before Mr. Blaine retired he was asked to help Venezuela in its controversy with England. Owing to the disturbed state of the country for the past six months England has been preparing to absorb what she claims is here, and it is thought she is behind Palacios in some of his schemes. Admiral Walker will acquaint himself of the real situation, and act accordingly.

In 1884 Guiana produced 250 ounces of gold, that is the Venezuelan frontier of it. This year over 125,000 ounces have been taken out, and the indications are that very rich mines exist further in on the Venezuelan territory.

THE TAX RAISE.

THE County Court has instructed the County Attorney to take legal proceedings for the purpose of preventing the ten per cent addition to the county assessment, proposed by the Territorial Board of Equalization. That is quite proper. Everything that is legal and necessary should be done to prevent the contemplated injustice. But we do not think the additional assessment can be lawfully made. Not only have a great many taxpayers obtained receipts in full for their territorial, county and school taxes and could therefore resist payment of the extra levy, but, as we have pointed out in these columns, the Board of Equalization have left their action until it is too late. The law of 1892 provides:

"Sec. 11. That the county court of any county in which it is proposed to increase the assessed valuation as a whole, or of any class of property, shall have ten days' notice to appear by representative and resist such increase.

"Sec. 12. That said Board shall file a full and complete report of all the changes made by it with the Territorial Auditor of Public Accounts, on or before the first day of September, of each year, and immediately after any change is ordered, the secretary of the Board shall notify the county court of the county affected by said change, of the same."

There is, however, what the Board may consider a saving clause in another section of the same law, which says:

"Sec. 17. No act of the Board shall be invalid for any irregularity not affecting the merits or justice of the act, or for a failure to do some act which may be required, if it can be and is done later without injuriously affecting substantial rights."

The question is, taking all these sections and the facts we have named into consideration, whether at this late date the additional tax can be collected without unjustly affecting substantial rights. Can the tax be collected of those who have evidence that they have paid in full for the year 1892? If not, can it be collected of those who have not yet paid their county taxes, thus making the tax unequal?

We think the County has good grounds for resisting the proposed change, and we hope the Board of Equalization will not be blind to the disadvantages that will arise if they insist upon this addition.

"MORMONS" AND "NON-MORMON."

We have received the following letter of inquiry:

"Editor Deseret News:

"Can you explain the object in having the words 'Mormon' and 'non-Mormon' applied to the school children in this Territory?"

"Granting the object is a proper one, is it right to use the slang term 'Mormon' when Latter-day Saint should be used, and require paren's or guardians to endorse the term on the scholar's certificate?"

"Supposing the party who originated the printed forms, were a member of the Roman Catholic Church, how do you think he would relish the question, 'Is your child a Papist or a non-Papist?'"

"We do not know what object was in view in the insertion of the words 'Mormon' and 'non-Mormon' in the forms which have to be filled up for school statistics in this Territory, other than the desire of certain government officials to learn the relative numbers of each class in the school population."

We are of the opinion that the term "Mormon" should not have been used, and that the term Latter-day Saint would have been far better, if the design had been to show the religious attachments of the school children and the parents. But this was not contemplated. Only two classes of people were recognized, namely, "Mormons" and "Gentiles," and these not particularly in a sectarian sense but rather as distinct orders of citizens.

The party who originated the printed forms was not acting in a religious capacity and therefore the query in relation to the "Papist" or "non-Papist" will not apply.

No individual is responsible for this unpleasant discrimination. It is a provision of the Edmunds-Tucker Act. The Territorial Commissioner of Schools, who furnishes the blanks, has to conform to the act of Congress which created the office. Section 25 of the act provides that "Said superintendent shall collect and classify statistics and other information respecting the district and other schools in said Territory, showing their progress, the whole number of children of school age, the number who attend school in each year in the respective counties, the average length of time of their attendance, the number of teachers and the compensation paid to the same, the number of teachers who are Mormons, the number who are so-called Gentiles, the number of children of Mormon parents, and the number of children of so-called Gentile parents, and their respective average attendance at school; all of which statistics and information shall be annually reported to Congress, through the Governor of said Territory and the Department of the Interior."

It will be observed that the word Gentiles is used in the statute, but "non-Mormons" is substituted in the forms prepared. This, we suppose, is considered a softer term, but it does not comply with the letter of law. It accomplishes the intent, however, and is perhaps less objectionable to many people.

There are quite a number of our citizens of both classes who regard this provision with disfavor. The fault must not be laid upon the Commissioner nor upon any other school officer in the Territory. And while we object to the offensive discrimination in the law, we can afford to put up with it for the present, with the sure and certain hope that statehood will, before many years, relegate it to the oblivion which ought to cover a great many disagreeable things connected with the treatment of the so called "Mormon problem."

MRS. HARRISON'S ILLNESS.

THE people of the country, without regard to party, will be pained to learn of the serious illness of Mrs. Harrison, wife of the President, who has the reputation of being a most estimable lady. It is evident from the nature of the latest information as to her condition, that her situation is critical. The sympathy of the nation will also be directed to Gen. Harrison. The illness of his wife will be doubly distressing to him under existing circumstances, the country being on the verge of a heated campaign in which he is one of the two principals. The political conflict requires all the nerve and mental concentration that a man in his position can give to it. And in such a struggle, happy is he who can turn from the turmoil of political tumult to the sweet repose of the domestic circle. If a man does not find peace there he has it not at all. In the case of President Harrison, the chief figure in his domestic abode is prostrated with a dangerous illness, and when his mind reverts from his onerous and important duties to the affairs of his home, it is necessarily with deep concern. Indeed, in such a condition it is difficult, if not impossible, for a man to centre his mental powers to their fullest extent upon matters of the greatest moment outside his domestic hearth when there is serious trouble within that charmed circle. We hope to hear of the early recovery of Mrs. Harrison, although the reports of her situation give that sentiment but slight encouragement.

AN EXTRAORDINARY MOVEMENT.

WE had no desire to throw even the shadow of a straw in the way of the partial holiday, given by the bankers and business houses to their employees today, that they might have an opportunity of going to the big tent to hear the revivalist and the singer, who have appeared before large audiences during several days and evenings past. The holiday will be over before what we have to say appears in print.

But we are of the opinion that the whole proceeding is extraordinary and at the same time somewhat inconsistent. And the proclamation of the Mayor is still more so. It looks to us entirely out of place. The civic authority which he represents should be kept entirely separate from ecclesiastical affairs. If it had been a "Mormon" Mayor who had issued such a proclamation, cries of "Church and State" would have stirred the country from the Rocky Mountains, east and west to the shores of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

In about three weeks there will be in this city a great conference of the Latter-day Saints from all parts of the country. Will the stores and banks and trading houses be closed on a week day on that occasion? Not very likely. And yet there would be more probabilities of a larger attendance in the Tabernacle of persons thus released from ordinary duty than there has been of similar persons in the big tent.

Before the "revival" was commenced here, one of the statements made to boom the revivalist was, that so great was the attraction, "magnetism" and what not of the preacher, that merchants and bankers in a certain California city closed their business places to flock to hear the great revivalist. The impression conveyed was that it was a spontaneous rush of people aroused to religious impulses.

We hope this will not be said of the closing movement in Salt Lake City. It was worked up by the resident preachers and the whole thing, proclamation included, was done at their earnest solicitation.

As to the results of the tent services we do not pretend to give any estimate. From what we have seen and heard we are of the opinion that they will not be of any great profit, either in numbers added to the churches or in a financial sense. We believe the preacher to be very much in earnest, and we hope some permanent good to the cause of morality will accrue from his energetic efforts. But the closing movement we look upon as very much of a farce, and the Mayor's proclamation as exceedingly absurd.

HOME AND THE BALLOT.

A GREAT deal is said by the opponents of equal suffrage about "the protection of the home." It is made to appear as though the home would be deserted if women took part in public affairs sufficiently to cast a ballot at the polls. How this desecration is to be the inevitable result of such a change in the laws that govern elections is not made very clear. The Rev. Anna Shaw, a lady preacher of note and of great forensic and intellectual ability, takes up this phase of the woman suffrage question in the American Journal of Politics for the present month. After eloquently expressing her opinion of the holiness of home, the primal duties of wifehood and motherhood, and the absolute necessity to woman of not merely a home but a home, she shows that as there is nothing that should come between a woman and her husband and children, so there is nothing that should come between a father and his duties to his children and his home. Also that a woman as well as a man may be able to do a great deal outside of the house as well as inside for the home. And she goes on to say, with good reason, we think:

"Believe in the ballot for women if for nothing but the protection of the home itself. If anyone ought to have the right to vote it surely is the mothers of our country. I believe that peace and responsibility go together. Woman has the responsibility of rearing her children. Why take from her the power by which she may rear her children? In order to bring up her children as they ought to be, she must have some way of controlling them after they get out on the street, and the only way for her to do this is to have some control over the street, and the only way she can do this is through the ballot. The men have not done it. What good are her prayers? Do you tell me of the power of a mother's prayer. I believe in a mother's prayer. Believe in the silent influence of the mother. I believe in the hand that rocks the cradle. But I would have a great deal more faith in the full cure of the immoral conditions of this country, if while the mother prayed that her boy be saved, the legalized gambling traffic might be overthrown and gambling dens and dens of vice might be destroyed; if while she prayed she held in her hand the ballot, which Henry Ward Beecher says is the symbol of all civil rights, and, therefore, of all human rights."

ALL WELL ON FIRE ISLAND.

The people of the country at large, being greatly interested in the recent mobocratic doings on Fire Island, are doubtless gratified at the fact that the "Normania" passengers are safely landed and comfortably housed in the hotel. This result was inevitable from the beginning. The gang who opposed the landing of the passengers and treated them with unmitigated inhumanity showed themselves to be arrant cowards; consequently, when they were confronted with anything like formidable opposition they must act in accord with their nature and succumb at once.

The prompt and uncompromising action of the Governor throughout will be sustained by the country, and there will be no great show of dissent from his assertion to the effect that the conduct of the mob was a disgrace to the commonwealth.

A gush of sympathy went out from the nation at large toward the "Normania" passengers who were so cruelly treated. The turning of the tables in their favor causes the sympathetic feeling to be supplanted by one of pleasure and relief. The joy of these people occasioned by their release from their distress and imprisonment was almost as dramatic as their grief at the treatment they received at the hands of the unfeeling mob. The opponents of the selection of Fire Island are now proceeding in the courts against the action of the authorities in using that piece of land as a quarantine station. That is all right. There is order and civilization in a recoulation of that character, but the application of mob violence and brute force against unoffending, unfortunate and suffering people is anarchy, and unworthy of American people.

It has lately been an occasion for deep regret with every patriot that the necessity has existed for the calling out of troops in various parts of the country on account of labor troubles. No one imagined that such a step would be necessary, however, under such circumstances as those which have occurred in connection with the Fire Island affair. Such an incident would be deemed a matter of course in a country like Russia, but is foreign to the genius of this nation. But, as usual here, law and order secured a speedy triumph so soon as the authoritative machinery was set in motion.

WHAT IRRIGATION HAS DONE.

THE Reading Pa., Times has taken up the subject of irrigation and shows how it has transformed the region west of the 100th meridian, where at least nineteen millions of acres of land has been redeemed through its agency. As to the relative value of artesian wells and ditch irrigation it sagely concludes that the former method is best for some regions and the latter for others. How any lands can be watered without ditches is not made to appear. But the Times gives eastern farmers ought to adopt western methods, and gives the following credit to the people who first brought practical irrigation to the notice of the American agriculturist:

"It is to the Mormons we owe the idea of reclaiming arid land through irrigation. Their success in Utah showed the American mind what might be done elsewhere. Salt Lake City itself is at the geographical center of the arid region of the United States. Here the Mormons began their irrigating operations in 1847. In a few years they had transformed a desert into a teeming garden. The same operation is being repeated today over millions of acres. The farmers of the East will in time take up the irrigation idea and put themselves beyond risk of crop failure through drought."

CHOLERA INOCULATION.

A CONTEMPORARY publishes a lengthy special, alleged to have been sent from Paris, describing the Pasteur process of inoculation with cholera germs for the prevention of that disease. The correspondent claims to have undergone the ordeal, having had his body filled with the microbes which cause the malady. In selecting the germs the operator must be careful that there are no other microbes in the dose, which is injected into the flesh of the victim by means of a syringe. If this is not well guarded the treatment is dangerous. We presume that this bad result would accrue from the genuine specks of life getting into a dispute with interloping bacteria and having an all-round rough and tumble, causing the patient to feel as if he were a South American republic during a political revolution. This intelligent correspondent claims that the virus is genuine, having been procured from cholera corpses in Sarcos, Asia.

The dispatch goes on to state that the inoculation in the case of science and humanity took his temperature at intervals after the microbes began to caper about in his corpus, and describes, in detail, the gripes, lassitude and general all-overness from which he suffered. While his sensations were on the verge of a restaurant to ascertain if he could eat something.

We presume that people can be found who will actually believe the statements in the dispatch to be true. The mass of rubbish it embodies may lead some to consider the fellow who made up the journalistic hotch-pot to be enterprising, while he is nothing but an unmitigated falsifier, who deals in a species of journalism that requires but little brains and no conscience. He is only fit to manufacture such impossible stories as are used in connection with some of the prominent patent medicinal specifics.

COLORADO POLITICS.

COLORADO may be still counted as a Republican State. We gave this as our opinion after the Weaver movement first started there, and we are more than ever convinced of this, now that the latest Democratic mistake has been made. There was some slight chance of turning the tide of politics in Colorado when the silver czar seized the Republicans of that State and affected their heads so remarkably. But now that the Democrats have divided on the same issue they have lost their chances of success, and neither the People's party nor the Democratic party can rationally hope for victory there. In all probability Colorado will vote the Republican ticket, national and local, and may be considered as moved out of the list of the doubtful States back into its original column.

A LABOR STRIKE.

In the lumber region of Wisconsin there is in progress a formidable strike. On the 9th inst every saw mill in Marinette was closed down. The strikers marched from one mill to another, until the whole circle was embraced, and 3,000 men marched in line, hurrahing for the rights of labor. The demand of the workmen is to the effect that all employees of lumber mills and yards receiving less than $1.50 a day should have their wages increased to that figure. All men receiving $1.50 to $2 a day demand an increase of 15 per cent. So far nothing of a riotous character has occurred. The Mayor of the town ordered the closing of all saloons in the place and around the works.

THE EPIDEMIC IN 1848.

In giving a number of suggestions he deems necessary for the benefit of the country in cholera time, Dr. Alsdorf insists that the safety of Gotham and the whole nation is jeopardized by the presence of the plague in New York harbor. In proof of his statement he reproduces the following by Prof. Alsdorf Clark relating to the introduction of cholera in 1848:

"Two ships left Havre, one on October 31, the other on November 9, 1848. The latter ship, the 'New York,' was bound for the city of New York; the former, the 'Swanton,' was bound for New Orleans. The passengers of these two ships were of the same character, mostly German immigrants; they had been taken up in both instances at Havre, which port was at that time said to be free from cholera. They had come to Havre for the purpose of finding a ship for this country. One report states that a portion of them had left infected places in Germany. The ships came out with a clean bill of health. The 'New York' had been at sea sixteen days when the cholera appeared—that is, on November 25; the 'Swanton' had been at sea twenty-seven days when the first case occurred, it being on November 26. They were 1000 miles apart. They were both off the coast of the United States, one in latitude 25 deg. 47 min., and the other in the parallel of 42 degrees. The outbreak on the 'New York' is, by the captain of the vessel, ascribed to the following fact:

A very cold, chilly wind came up on the 24th, and the passengers found themselves in want of warm garments; in his own phrase, "there was a general overhauling of baggage for warm clothing." Then the next day became exceedingly hot, and on that day the first case of cholera appeared. It has been found that on board the ship "New York" there was an immigrant who had clothing belonging to an individual who had died in Germany of cholera. During the day of intense cold some articles of clothing were taken from the chest and were worn by several of the passengers, and these passengers were the first taken on the ship. The two ships go on their voyage. One arrives in the harbor of New York on December 1st, six days after the outbreak, having lost seven of her passengers; the other goes into the Mississippi River and up to New Orleans, having lost several passengers, reaching the city December 11th. On the arrival of the vessel at New York, on December 2nd, eleven cholera patients were sent to the quarantine hospital. The "Swanton" reached the city of New Orleans on December 11th, and the day of her arrival one cholera case was sent to the hospital. Two days after her arrival the first case in the city was announced. This was also an emigrant from the "Swanton." This was followed by a rapid increase of the disease until the following June, in which month it culminated in more than 2,000 deaths."

NURSERIES OF CRIMES.

THE Denver papers are quite exercised over a statement by a local clergyman named Denn Hart. This gentleman asserts that the public schools are responsible for the large increase of crime during the past decade or two, and also for the multiplication of saloons. His theory is that in the absence of moral and religious teaching in the schools the children grow up virtually criminal, inasmuch as no training has been given them in the practice of restraining appetites, passions and evil tendencies.

In reply to the clergymen the Denver News contends that the increase in crime is due to unrestricted immigration. The census statistics show to some extent the ratio of crime between alien and native born persons. The figures when handled in a certain way make a showing unfavorable to the foreign element, but when handled in another way the contrary is exhibited. For instance, North Dakota has a rate of foreign population of 80,449 to 100,000 natives. In 1890 it had a rate of 192 paupers and 366 convicts to each million, but its assessed value increased during the decade 797 per cent. This shows that where the foreign element most abounds, wealth increases more rapidly. The wealth of South Dakota increased 1,040 per cent. in ten years, of Montana, 671 per cent., and so on in other States where aliens most abound.

The question as to what causes and is causing the large increase of crime in this country is a timely and appropriate one. Foreign immigration may be a source of crime, but it must be acknowledged that this does not meet the issue. It was shown in a recent magazine article that of 25,000 legal voters in Connecticut fully 67 per cent. were of the pure American stock. The writer, an American himself, admitted the accuracy of his figures with a sigh for the degeneracy of the Puritan. Corrupt voting is as much a crime as sheep stealing, and the situation in Connecticut is instructive in a discussion of this kind. Of course other statistics prove conclusively that a very large proportion of the worst criminals in this country are educated so far as book learning may be considered education. That the lack of moral and religious training in our public school system is one cause of the increase of crime is coming to be acknowledged by the most thoughtful people of the age.

BREWERY DEVELOPMENTS.

CHICAGO is once more to the front in a scheme which will surprise the opponents of the liquor traffic in this country. The big breweries of that city have instituted a fund of $8,000,000 to be used exclusively in the purchase of real estate for saloon purposes. In European cities the plan projected here is nothing new. It simply means the ownership and control of saloons, or at least enough of them to give the breweries the power to dictate terms. Under present arrangements competition enters largely into the trade. The saloonkeeper buys of the brewer who gives the most favorable terms. This begets competition, and beer wars are often the result. At one time a war of this kind became so fierce that beer was sold to the saloons at $2 per barrel.

Under the new scheme the breweries organize themselves into a sort of trust. Property available for saloon purposes will be purchased, and saloons established thereon. They will then be rented to tenants who must accept the conditions of the brewery combine. Saloons already established will be bought and placed on the same basis as those owned by the brewers. In this manner, it is contemplated to obtain control of the retail liquor trade in a few years.

From a political point of view the operation of this scheme will place municipal governments virtually in the hands of the brewery syndicate. Chicago has 7,000 saloons; with one-half of these wielded as one, their influence as a factor in city politics can well be estimated. The poorest place in any city can always command from three to five votes, hence the power of 7,000 resorts of this kind must be powerful.

TRANSCONTINENTAL ASSOCIATION.

SPEAKING of the probable dissolution of the Transcontinental Association, the St. Paul Pioneer Press says that the Great Northern and Canadian Pacific have given notice of withdrawal, and that the end of the association can not be delayed much longer.

The dissolution means the abandonment of the subsidy paid to Pacific Mail steamers to maintain rates between the Atlantic and Pacific ports. It means the entrance of the Canadian Pacific into competition with American transcontinental lines. It also means a scramble for the Asiatic trade between San Francisco, Portland, Tacoma and Vancouver. It means a general reorganization, in all probability, of the rate-making for transcontinental business, and the overthrow of the control which the Southern Pacific company has for so long maintained for its own advantage."

The fight for the Asiatic trade will be between the northern systems, comprising the Northern Pacific, the Great Northern and the Canadian Pacific, and the southern systems, comprising the Southern Pacific and the Santa Fe. The battle will be fiercely contested, but the Press thinks the northern systems will triumph, because they traverse a fertile belt of country, and can draw a more local business, whereas the southern systems traverse deserts or arid lands, and depend almost entirely on through traffic.

A NATION'S SYMPATHY.

THE whole nation will sympathize with President Benjamin Harrison in the affliction which has overtaken him, in the serious illness of his beloved wife. Just at this juncture, when he needs all the physical and mental strength of his nature to meet the political contest that is at hand, he is weakened by the sufferings of his other self and the dread of her passing away from his presence and his life.

Mrs. Harrison is known to the people of the United States as a loving wife and mother, a lady of culture, a shining light in the home circle. Not as a dashing, brilliant leader in "society," but an exemplary matron and housewife whose influence is peaceful and maternal. Every indication points to her departure from this world's trials and joys, and the cloud of the coming bereavement hovers over and weighs down the soul of the nation's Chief, calling for the deep commiseration of the multitude. Party and class and personal differences all fade in the approach of his impending sorrow, and the country waits with apprehension for the sad tidings expected. We sympathize with the President in his hour of trial.

THE EPIDEMIC SPREADING.

THE plague is spreading. Late information is to the effect that more cases have occurred in New York. The malady has appeared in Brooklyn, while two cases having strong symptoms of cholera have developed in New Haven, Conn. It is almost certain that, providing shipping companies continue to bring emigrants from infected ports, President Harrison will issue a proclamation that will put a stop to the business. Attorney-General Miller advises him that he has the necessary power, under the law, to take this step.

Chicago is expecting a visit from the plague, and the authorities are preparing for it. Had it not been for the prospect of the interruption and spread of the cholera epidemic many of the large cities would have continued in their filthy condition. In some parts of New York and Chicago the air has been, for years, disgustingly noxious; now the authorities are bestirring themselves to improve the condition by removing the causes of offensive disease-breeding vapors.

CHOLERA IN THE COUNTRY.

CHOLERA has been in New York City for over a week. Five deaths from the plague occurred there nine days ago, but were only officially reported yesterday. There have been other cases upon which reports have not been made. The failure to make this information known until now shows how great is the anxiety to put the best side of the subject out to the public.

This official reticence will cause thinking people to receive authoritative statements about the cholera with a good deal of allowance. The distrust will necessarily be heightened by the fact that alleged medical experts are constantly making statements that are directly opposed to each other.

For instance, Dr. Jenkins says he is certain that the cases which have appeared in New York have not been caused by a break in the quarantine. Dr. Edison, on the other hand, insists to the contrary. It does not appear that either has any proof for the respective positions taken. Either may or may not be correct. The fact that the cases broke out in localities widely separated from each other is rather against Dr. Edison's assertion and in favor of the theory that the germs can be carried about in the atmosphere, and that an attack is not dependent upon actual contact with infected persons or articles.

It is asserted that the physicians have great confidence in their ability to stamp out the disease. This is open to question. Obliteration of the plague after it gains an entrance to a great, densely populated and filthy city is perhaps a much more difficult task than preventing its initial inroad. In the latter labor the physicians have been unsuccessful. It now looks as if the disease had begun what is likely to be—despite human effort—a disastrous raid upon the country. The best that can be done is to take all precautions possible, both as communities and individuals, against the spread of the plague, and trust in God to do the balance. The latter recourse only refers to those who have any belief in the operations of the Almighty in human affairs. Those who do not possess this faith will have to rely solely upon what can be done by the creature without reference to any beneficent intervention on the part of the Creator. We believe that before the world is much older it will be shown that Omnipotence takes constant cognizance of the affairs and conditions of men and nations.

THE EIGHT HOUR DAY IN SCOTLAND

THE compulsory eight hour day does not find favor among Scotch workmen. At the Trades Union Congress held in Glasgow last week 400 delegates were present. A resolution in favor of an eight hour day to be enforced by statute law was lost, that is if the law applied indiscriminately to all trades. But it favored a resolution allowing such trades as objected to eight hours to be exempt from the operation of the law, by a majority of fifty. That is, they favored what might be termed in this country a local option law as applied to trade organizations. However, the action of the congress indicates that the Scotch workmen look at this issue in a conservative light, and yet are not opposed to reform where it would prove beneficial and practicable.

RECIPROCITY IN EUROPE.

EUROPEAN nations begin to realize the beauty and benefits of reciprocity. It is reported that a treaty of this kind is now in process of negotiation between Italy and Russia. Russia will make large concessions for Italian wines and productions, while Italy will make corresponding allowances for Russian grain. Italy this year has a short wheat crop, and the treaty with Russia is almost a national necessity. It is thought that this reciprocity scheme may also embrace some political developments.

Germany is also looking for reciprocal fields to conquer. That country has just informed the Bureau of American Republics that a treaty of commerce and navigation has been concluded with Uruguay. By the terms of the treaty both countries become virtually one. Citizens and subjects of each are given all the rights and privileges in the territory of the other that belong to the citizens of that country. The most favorable national privileges will be extended to German vessels in Uruguayan ports and vice versa. The same rule will apply to all articles of commerce in trading between both countries. The treaty will continue in force for three years from date of ratification, and for one year longer in case neither of the contracting parties gives notice to the other of its desire to withdraw from the agreement one year before the date of termination. It is thought this is but the entering wedge on the part of Germany to South American trade, and that similar treaties will be entered into with other republics. Next to England, Germany has the most important trade interests in South America, and she will endeavor to maintain these, in order to circumvent our reciprocity arrangements with these countries.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD, the well known English poet and journalist, is now in this country on his way home to Britain from Japan. He is best known, perhaps, as author of "The Light of Asia," a very fine poem dealing with oriental affairs. But his poem "The Light of the World" has rendered his name more familiar to English and American readers than any other of his works. An edition of it was published here by Funk and Wagnalls of New York. It was dedicated "To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty," and for the American edition a laudatory introduction was written by Richard Henry Stoddard.

By "The Light of the World" Sir Edwin means Christ. According to his own introduction a Sovereign Voice commanded him to write "a song unstained by any tear." He was then commanded to sing of "The Crucified," and to "Wash the Lips Clean."

The poem begins with a description of Bethlehem, then dwells on the birth of Christ, God the Father, the wise men from the east bearing gifts, the scene of the story, the dream of Claudia, Pilate and Mary, and so on to the end of the sacred drama. The poem is accepted as an eloquent expression of Christian ethics, morality and humanity, and commands the admiration of readers of sacred literature.

Sir Edward finds in Japan a congenial soil for the nurture of his poetic gifts. Much of his best poetry was written there, and he has now a poem ready for publication entitled "Japanesism." But if the charges preferred against him by a Congregational minister in Chicago a day or two since be true, it will detract much from the popular estimation of Sir Edwin's verse. He is charged with living a riotous, immoral and licentious life while in Japan, and by his example doing much to frustrate the efforts of Christian missionaries in that country. Sir Edwin knows the missionaries, and will say nothing in reply, except that the Japanese are too moral and philosophical to accept the dry crumbs administered by the average preacher.

The charge was made before an assemblage of Congregational ministers and is now before the public in thousands of newspapers in Europe and America. If the charge is without foundation and malicious it is something fiendish, if there be any truth in it then Sir Edwin must be a hypocrite. The charitable will not accept the charges as true.

JOSEPH A. GOSKER, an Australian artist of repute, arrived in San Francisco from Japan recently. He was interviewed by a Chronicle reporter in relation to the charges made by the Rev. Mr. Bartlett against Sir Edwin Arnold, the poet and journalist. Mr. Gosker has been a resident of Tokio for the past fourteen months. Of Sir Edwin he says:

"While in Tokio the poet resided at the Hotel Imperial, but the comforts of the hotel could not successfully compete with the charms of the Japanese dancing girls, and the consequence was that he spent his days, and nights, too, in riotous living. His prominent position, his age and the fact that he had a family, made his open violation of propriety doubly distasteful. He was speedily tabooed in the best English and American families, and he did not been for his prestige as a writer of the glories of Japan, even the natives would have ostracized him. The charges made by Rev. Mr. Bartlett are not overdrawn and he can substantiate them by the evidence of a hundred people of good repute living in Tokio."

A NOTED WOMAN REFORMER.

ONE of the noted women of the age passed away recently at Brighton, England, in the eighty-third year of her age. It was Mrs. Ernestine L. Rose. Her maiden name was Slesmund Potolski, for she was born in Poland, and she became a Jewess in religion, from choice and conviction. This subjected her to great persecution, but she stood up nobly for her religious rights and became a strong advocate of the liberties of the Polish Hebrews. This brought her into prominence and the acquaintance of eminent men and women in all the European countries, and in 1834 she was chosen to preside at the formation of a cosmopolitan association of all classes and parties and conditions, for the amelioration of mankind.

She was married in England in 1836 to William E. Rose, and afterwards lectured in the British Isles and the United States. She appeared before various legislative bodies in this country as an able advocate of equal rights to women, in person and property and politics. For thirty years Mrs. Rose worked in this country in the interest of her sex and then returned to Europe.

Once when speaking on women's rights in South Carolina she was denounced as an abolitionist, and was asked by a slave owner whether she understood what was done in that region to folks who meddled with slave labor. She confessed her ignorance and asked for information. The planter replied: "We tar and feather them." Mrs. Rose said: "I did not come here to speak against slavery, but you have shown me my duty. I shall now do so. You Southern gentlemen are too idle; you have not enough to do; I will give you some some work; get your tar and feathers ready." She then delivered an oration against slavery and followed it up with other abolition speeches but was not disturbed.

On the suffrage question she once said:

"I have sometimes been asked, even by sensible men, 'If woman had the elective franchise, would she go to the polls to mix with rude men?' Well, would I go to church to mix with rude men? And should not the ballot-box be as respectable, and as respected, and as sacred as the church? Aye, infinitely more so, because it is of greater importance. Men can pray in secret, but must vote in public. Hence the ballot-box, of the two, ought to be the most respected, and it would be if women were once there, but it never will be until they are there."

On the question of the equal rights of women with men to hold property Mrs. Rose said:

"Educate women, to enable her to promote her independence, and she will not be obliged to marry for a home and a subsistence. Give the wife an equal right with her husband in the property acquired after marriage, and it will be a bond of union between them. Diamond cement, applied on both sides of a fractured vase, re-unites the parts, and prevents them from falling asunder. A gold band is more efficacious than iron law. Until now the gold has all been on one side, and the iron law on the other. Remove it; place the golden band of justice and mutual interest around both husband and wife, and it will hide the little fractures which may have occurred, even from their own perception, and allow them effectually to re-unite. A union of interests helps to preserve a union of hearts."

This, for that early day was advanced thought, and there is no doubt that the able efforts of that gifted woman helped to bring about the reforms that have since been accomplished in this direction.

On the anniversary of American Independence in the year 1876, Mrs. Rose wrote a letter from which the following is an extract:

"The glorious day upon which human equality was first proclaimed ought to be commemorated, not only every hundred years, or every year, but it ought to be constantly held before the public mind until its grand principles are carried into practice. The declaration that 'All men (which means all human beings irrespective of sex) have an equal right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness,' is enough for woman as for man. We need no other; but we must reassert in 1876 what 1776 so gloriously proclaimed, and call upon the law-makers and the law-breakers to carry that declaration to its logical consistency by giving woman the right of representation in the government which she helps to maintain; a voice in the laws by which she is governed, and all the rights and privileges society can bestow, the same as to man, or disprove its validity. We need no other declaration. All we ask is to be based on the same foundation upon which that declaration rests, viz.: Upon equal justice, and not upon sex. Whenever the rights of the man are claimed, moral consistency points to the equal rights of woman."

These are striking words, and the excerpts we have given show the quality of mind of the able woman who has departed. She was buried in the grave of her husband, who died ten years before, and has left a record which should be prized by the reformers of her sex in both hemispheres.

ESCAPED FROM QUARANTINE.

TODAY'S dispatches contain a statement affecting the efficiency of the New York harbor quarantine that will perhaps startle a good many people. It has been discovered that two Jewish immigrants—both women—were brought over on the "Moravia" have been discovered on Long Island. The manner of their escape from the quarantined ship—one of the most plague infected vessels that have yet reached the harbor—is not given. The bare fact of the incident having occurred is, however, suggestive of a strong probability that quite a number of other people have escaped quarantine from the "Moravia" and perhaps other vessels. If those two presumed ignorant and uneducated women could get ashore and join their relatives and friends, how other people could surely accomplish the same feat. So it appears the quarantine has been very far from tight after all the blow that has been made about. The facilities for spreading the plague infection seems to have been quite ample.

A RABBI ON THE "REVIVAL."

The following letter has been sent to the Tribune of this city, and as it comes from one who has been incidentally attacked by the Presbyterian preacher who thinks Hebrews and "Mormons" have not the same rights as orthodox sectarians, we copy it verbatim.

"Editor Tribune:—The reply of a Presbyterian minister to the most lenient comments of your editorial on the matter of Wednesday's closing justifies some remarks from me, which would have appeared long before this were it not that my own promptings are very often hampered by the timidity of some of those whom I represent. But timidity would now be poltroquery in the light of the superciliousness of Mr. McNiece's article. His dragging in of the Mormons and Jews is done, I suppose, to the delicious little article in Tuesday's Times signed 'Hebrew.' It is a pity that the writer did not sign his name. I should like to pay him my acknowledgements. Would that I could write so calmly and collectedly upon this subject.

"Mr. McNiece states that the converts have decided that this is a Christian country. With all respect to Justice Story, to which I presume this most logical divine has reference, I fail to see how any judge can go beyond the powers of the charter that gives authority. Amendment I to the Constitution of the United States is done. I suppose the Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. But even if this is a Christian country, has it anywhere been decided that it is Protestant? It may be Catholic, Episcopal, Unitarian or Spiritually. I have in my pocket a list of several prominent Christians in this city, and one most highly respected, who is a Spiritualist, denouncing the entire attitude, methods and presumption of revivalism. His opinion is entitled to deference even from those who do not believe as he does. If the gratuitous intrusion of one's peculiarities of views and methods is at all times unmanly, it becomes emphatically so when churches are guilty of it, since they especially should be distinguished in the virtues of modesty, humility and good manners. As the Mayor, he is as much the Mayor of Catholic, Episcopalians, Unitarians, Spiritualists, etc., even if with humble deference to the broad-minded Presbyterian divine, we deny that he is the Mayor of the Jews and the Mormons. I should be apt for my part to exclaim if he is not: 'Thank God that he isn't!' What right has he, therefore, by official proclamation, to pronounce himself distinctively on the aide of the Evangelical Churches?

About the glory of God being revealed in this mid-week Sunday, let me tell your readers a few things. One prominent Mormon representing the largest firm in this city tells me that he signed to close because he was told the whole thing hinged upon his house, and he consented in apprehension that if the matter were so and refused, these Christian ministers would denounce him and his people as fanatically anti-Christian. Evidently God then works through intimidation, or as modern parlance would call it, "by bulldozing." I have, on reliable statement, that one gentleman, a Christian, was so incensed at the overbearing manner in which the Wednesday-closing committee addressed him that he ordered them to get more forcibly than politely. The list of closers, in order to make a good showing, was inflated with names of lawyers and offices; in one case, at least, I can say positively, even with a flimsy firm. I should be sorry were I to think that God's methods adopted such misrepresentations.

The moral good effected by these methods I must deny. They may exert a certain hypnotic influence for the time, not over the morally but the mentally weak, and must inevitably suffer reaction. If one criminal came out and confessed Christianity here in this city as the result of these meetings, I should say that there may be some good flowing from them after all. But as it is, I shall fear for my slender purse on dark nights as much as I ever did last winter, and shall even maintain that this city should support an efficient police force. My saloon friends tell me that on Wednesday their trade was exceptionally brisk. The spiritual good no man, as a mere citizen, has any concern in. We, as citizens, are trying to boom the population of Salt Lake City, and not that of the several quarters and galleries of heaven; for this latter we have churches. For the former it is business and politics to look out. And as business and politics do not intermeddle with the church, we would scarce tolerate church intermeddling with them.

"I am afraid that when it comes to church prejudice the ordinary man ought to be defined as a creature without backbone. If the protests and angry comments upon this matter of Wednesday's closing were bravely given and before the event, a most proper rebuke to such high presumption so have been given that no other city would ever again have been imposed upon in such a manner. But all owing to our lack of backbone Salt Lake has lost probably the opportunity of its days of gaining for itself the name of Independent courage, and like its frail sisters of the Coast it will become another white feather in the cap of a man who, while earnest and capable, is in no way remarkable. Respectfully,

Moses P. Jacobson.

SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 15, 1892.

PERNICIOUS EFFECTS OF CHEAP FICTION.

SOME appropriate and pungent remarks were lately made upon the pernicious effects of cheap works of fiction by Judge Depew, of the Supreme Court of New Jersey. The occasion was the conviction of a sixteen-year-old boy named Robert Fales of murder in the first degree. After referring to the nature of the literature the boy had been accustomed to read, the Judge said:

"I never saw a copy of one of these novels until I saw it during the trial of the case, when several were produced. It is apparent that it is the most pernicious literature that can possibly get into the hands of children. I am not aware of any law that would warrant the indictment of any of the books that I have seen, but at the next term, if I can find any of those books that come within the scope of the law, I shall ask the grand jury to indict. I find from information that upward of twenty persons in this city are engaged in the sale of this sort of literature. It is sold to boys and girls—schoolboys and schoolgirls. And I have also obtained an estimate from a very authoritative source of the relative ages of persons who are brought before our police courts for offenses involving attempts to rob, steal, and crimes of that character, and I will take the opportunity of mentioning the figures now. Persons charged with larceny combined with breaking and entering, or entering with intent (that is high crime), under the age of 10 years, 30 per cent.; between 18 and 23 years, 60 per cent.—making 10 per cent.; over 23, 10 per cent. For simple larceny, which involves the same grade of crime, being petty or grand larceny according to the amount, under 18, 60 per cent.; between 18 and 23, 30 per cent.; over 23, 10 per cent.—cases of a simple larceny being considerably the most numerous. It is safe to say that of the persons charged with some form of stealing, over 60 per cent. are under the age of 18 years."

Every intelligent and upright citizen in the country shares the views of Judge Depew on this important subject.

SILVER IN INDIA.

THE International Monetary Conference is still an unknown quantity. London and Dresden are now talked of as probable places for holding it. In the former city the discussion of the silver problem is earnestly carried on in the financial press. The situation in British India is also engaging attention. It is admitted that disastrous effects are being produced by the depreciation of silver and the irregularity of Indian exchange upon trade between England and the East.

In India public opinion is clamoring loudly for reform. Native merchants and traders are joining the European residents in the agitation for reform. Sir David Barbour, who is the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Indian government, says:

"I have no hesitation in saying that a common standard of value for England and India is absolutely essential to the well being of this country; and that by far the best and safest method of attaining so desirable a result is, to the best of my judgment, the adoption of the system of double legal tender by international agreement. The continuance of the present state of things is ruinous to Indian interests; the fluctuations in exchange affect our trade most injuriously; the theory that the evil effects of such fluctuations can be eliminated by the exchange banks is not supported by facts. For example, a merchant in Calcutta may simultaneously buy piece goods in Manchester, sell them in India, and fix his exchange; if exchange rises any 20 per cent. before the goods are paid for in India, the Indian purchaser finds that others can import the same goods 20 per cent. cheaper and undersell him to that extent. In such case the Indian trader either suffers a ruinous loss or he breaks his engagement and refuses to take delivery."

He goes on to say that fluctuations of exchange under the present system are causing immense injury to the country. The progress of road-building is retarded, and general distrust prevails among capitalists as to embarking on any enterprises, and all because of the fear of further depreciation of silver. He states that almost any ratio between gold and silver would be gladly accepted if it were only permanent and stable.

"Bradstreet's" remarks that this statement coming from such a source has made quite an impression in England. But the organs of the bankers and money changers still insist that the clamor in India comes from a few European merchants and opposes any reform in the present currency system of India. Public opinion there begins to take a different view, and the question is raised whether by a union of natives and Europeans on this issue a political awakening may not take place which ultimately would assume the shape of a pronouncement for autonomy.

BRITISH PREMIERS.

THE recent political change in England revives interest in similar events which have occurred in that country during a century or so. The following is a list of the changes in the responsible heads of administration of the government since 1773:

1. Dec. 23, 1783, William Pitt, Conservative.
2. March 17, 1801, Henry Addington, Conservative.
3. May 15, 1804, William Pitt, Conservative.
4. Feb. 11, 1806, Lord Greenville, Liberal.
5. March 31, 1807, Duke of Portland, Conservative.
6. Dec. 2, 1809, Spencer Perceval, Conservative.
7. June 9, 1812, Earl of Liverpool, Conservative.
8. April 24, 1827, George Canning, Liberal.
9. Sept. 5, 1827, Viscount Goderich, Liberal.
10. Jan. 25, 1828, Duke of Wellington, Conservative.
11. Nov. 22, 1830, Earl Grey, Liberal.
12. July 18, 1834, Viscount Melbourne, Liberal.
13. Dec. 24, 1834, Sir Robert Peel, Conservative.
14. April 18, 1835, Viscount Melbourne, Liberal.
15. Sept. 6, 1841, Sir Robert Peel, Conservative.
16. July 6, 1846, Lord John Russell, Liberal.
17. Feb. 27, 1852, Earl of Derby, Conservative.
18. Dec. 28, 1852, Earl of Aberdeen, Liberal.
19. Feb. 10, 1855, Lord Palmerston, Liberal.
20. Feb. 25, 1859, Earl of Derby, Conservative.
21. June 18, 1859, Lord Palmerston, Liberal.
22. Nov. 6, 1865, Earl Russell, Liberal.
23. July 9, 1866, Earl of Derby, Conservative.
24. Feb. 27, 1868, Benjamin Disraeli, Conservative.
25. Dec. 9, 1868, William E. Gladstone, Liberal.
26. Feb. 21, 1874, Benjamin Disraeli, Conservative.
27. April 28, 1880, William E. Gladstone, Liberal.
28. June 24, 1885, Marquis of Salisbury, Conservative.
29. Feb. 1, 1886, William E. Gladstone, Liberal.
30. July 24, 1886, Marquis of Salisbury, Conservative.
31. Aug. 15, 1892, William E. Gladstone, Liberal.

It will be observed by the foregoing that there have been thirty-one different administrations in a trifling over 108 years. Sixteen of them have been Conservative and fourteen Liberal. The Conservatives have held office sixty-seven years and the Liberals forty-one years. Mr. Gladstone, as we stated a few days ago, has held office three times previous to his present incumbency and Pitt, Melbourne, Peel, Russell, Derby, Palmerston, Disraeli and Salisbury twice each. William Pitt was Prime Minister nearly nine years, the Earl of Liverpool nearly fifteen years, Mr. Gladstone something over ten years and Lord Palmerston a trifle over nine years. Neither of the others reached seven years, while two of them held the office less than one year each.

We have lately received inquiries on the subject, and we believe the foregoing fully answers them.

MADISON, Wis., Sept. 20.—Arguments were begun in the supreme court in the gerrymander case today, Colonel Bird and George Green presenting the arguments against its constitutionality. Ex-Senator Spooner will be heard tomorrow.

THE SANITARY ORDINANCE.

THE garbage ordinance is passed again at last. The Mayor will do well to take time in critically examining it. Two garbage districts are organized, which may be perfectly right. From one of them—the business district, the removal of garbage and ashes is to be at the expense of the city. From the other it is to be at the expense of the owner, agent or occupant. Is this an equitable provision? Or does it not give special privileges to one class of the population? Why should not the city remove the ashes and garbage from the whole city as well as from the part that is specially designated?

"No house slops, rubbish, ashes or garbage shall be deposited," within these garbage districts "except as hereinafter provided for," says the ordinance. But while it provides for a metallic vessel with handles, for receiving ashes, etc., in the business district, it provides none whatever for the other and much larger district. Therefore, in all that extensive district ashes cannot be deposited at all. What, then, is to be done with them?

But a suitable vessel, free from leakage, is to be provided for "every building" in the larger district, as a receptacle for all garbage and liquid refuse that accumulate on the premises, to be emptied not less than once a week, except in winter, when it is to be emptied every two weeks. As no other deposit than this is lawful, slops and garbage are to be kept to stink in this "vessel," whatever it may be, till it is removed to a place designated by the Board of Health.

A person may haul away garbage and refuse with his own team, provided he gets a permit from the Board of Health, but cannot hire a neighbor or friend to do it, unless that person is engaged in the business of such removal, and has the word Scavenger and the number of his permit painted on black ground, in white letters, on each side of his wagon bed.

These are some of the notions in the ordinance that we hope will be scanned by the Mayor before he affixes to it his official signature. There has been considerable improvement over the first draft of the bill, which was an ungrammatical absurdity. A measure of so much importance ought to be made as specific and understandable as possible, and there should be in it no class legislation.

SOCIETY AS IT IS.

A SORT of apology for some of the ways of society which rigid moralists denounce, is made by a lady in the columns of the September North American Review. We will not quote at any great length from the article, but merely give the annexed extract:

"Society never pretends to be a teacher of morality. That is the office of religion and of law. Society contents itself with making scapegoats of such of its members as outrage public opinion by being found out. An obvious example is the case of any woman known to have broken the law of purity. Religion forgives her. Society never forgives her.

It forgives her partner in sin, without even requiring that he shall sin no more; but for her it has no pardon and no palliation. For socially it is not a question of relative guilt; it is one entirely of social consideration; and Society's verdict is in accordance therewith. There is a redundancy of women: they are less important than men; they are more easily hit and are not liable to strike back; therefore, through the women, society makes testimony to the fact that it wishes to recognize the moralities it has been powerless to enforce. It cannot always be virtuous, but it can occasionally sacrifice a young kid, or send some poor scapegoat into the wilderness of its oblivion. This, truly is not the code of the Holy Scriptures; but then the social code is not divine, it is human. And it is perhaps well that the two differ, else the lower might debase the higher; and it is better for humanity to have some ideally high standard, though they never reach it, than one so low that it may be reached every day."

The rank injustice that runs through this frank explanation of the moral code of "Society" must be evident to every reader. There is something foully rotten in a social order that is regulated by such a standard. Suppose it is a good thing to reject that which religion condones. Should not that rule work both ways? Is not the male libertine at least as vile as the woman who shared his guilt? If she is to be cast out as unclean, why should he be welcomed into the inner circles when known to be equally contaminated?

It is right for society to set a high value on female purity. Even though it be only in appearance, it is good as far as it goes. But the hypocrisy that winks at sin which is known but not exposed, is less contemptible than the villainy which embraces lechery that is found out, when it is blazoned on the male transgressor in as glaring lines as mark his weaker victim.

The society that "never forgives a woman," is not Christian society. It is not truly civilized. It is barbaric in this thing, and is shocking in its savage and unrelenting vindictiveness. And this is exhibited brutally in the recognition of the "redundancy of woman;" in the idea that "they are less important than men;" and that they are "not as liable to strike back." If this is not barbarism what can it be justly called?

It is better, no doubt, "for humanity to have some ideally high standard," than so low a standard that common people can reach it without effort. But is that a high standard which tramples on an erring woman and exalts the vicious man who caused her to err? Even if the coward's plea "the woman tempted me" is accepted in palliation, is not the fallen man on as low a level as the partner of his fault? And if so, what sort of a high standard is that which makes him fit for the most select society of both sexes, and casts her away never even to be forgiven?

Society governed by such a moral code is a dirty thing, to be despised by the pure and condemned by the just. No apology for it, even from a pen of a gifted woman, can clear it from the foul stains which are acknowledged blotch it, and the mockery of virtue with which it welcomes vice, provided it is personified in the male, and not the female sinner. Such society is built on a corrupt foundation and is therefore doomed to fall.

THE LIFE OF PRESIDENT JOHN TAYLOR.

THE "Life of John Taylor" has just been published by the firm of George Q. Cannon and Sons, and fills a gap in "Mormon" literature. It is a handsome volume of four hundred and sixty-eight pages, beautifully bound and lettered, and containing ten illustrations finely executed, and the portrait of President John Taylor as the frontispiece. These are all well executed, and the steel engraving of the subject of the work is a striking and pleasing likeness. The letter press is first class and the whole mechanical work deserving of praise.

The literary ability displayed in the book is also to be highly commended. The volume is from the pen of Elder B. H. Roberts and he has treated his theme in an able manner. The interest of the reader is maintained throughout. The life of President Taylor abounded with incidents of uncommon import. They are presented in forcible and pleasant style. The language is simple yet eloquent, and not overladen with rhetoric. The early connection of Brother Taylor with the Church, his ordination to the Apostleship, his missions to England and France, the tragic scenes at Carthage when he was so severely wounded while the Prophet and the Patriarch were slain, his journalistic labors, his championship of truth and liberty in various ways, his legislative work, his travels in various regions, his accession to the Presidency, his sufferings during the crusade, culminating in his death, are all related in a manner that enchains the reader's attention and fixes in the mind the character of this man of God who lived and died in His service.

There are so many remarkable events and circumstances in the life of President John Taylor that we cannot even allude to them in this brief review of the work. But we recommend it to the Latter-day Saints and all who take any interest in "Mormon" affairs or the history of Utah. A chart of the entire family of President Taylor closes the volume. It is an excellent work, and we congratulate Elder Roberts on his success as a biographer and historian.

A PECULIAR CONTROVERSY.

A PRESS dispatch announces that Charles H. Peck, commissioner of the New York State bureau of labor and statistics, has been placed under arrest. He is charged with having removed from his office and destroyed circulars and statistics supplied him by manufacturers and others from which to compile a report, the object of which was to exhibit the effect of the McKinley bill upon trade. The report showed unfavorably for the McKinley bill. An exchange says on this point:

"The period covered by the commissioner's investigation included the year immediately prior to the enactment of the McKinley law and the year immediately following its going into operation. The statistics upon which his conclusions are based were supplied by over six thousand representative and leading business firms of the State. The facts show that there was a net increase in wages of $6,377,925 in the year 1891 as compared with 1890, and a net increase of production of $31,315,190 in the same period. An analysis of his table further demonstrates that of the sixty-seven industries covered, seventy-seven per cent. show an increase either of wages or product, or both, "and there were no less than 89,717 instances of individual increase of wages during the same year" (1891). Speaking of another table the commissioner says: "Of the sixty-eight industries included, seventy-five per cent. of them show an increased average yearly earning in the year 1891, while the total average increase of yearly earnings of the 285,000 employees was $23.11." He adds: "The average increase of yearly earnings of the employees in the fifty-one trades was $43.96 in 1891 as compared with 1890."

Mr. Peck remarks, in his report, relative to New York being a State whose condition may be taken as reflecting the situation of the country at large, as follows:

"No State in the Union offers a field so varied or so extensive within which the statistician can carry on his work with greater assurance of intelligent success than is presented by the State of New York. Within its borders are to be found by far the greatest number of manufacturing establishments, the most varied industries, and the largest number of individual employers and wage-earners of any of the forty-four commonwealths embraced in the United States. So that, whatever the statistical data collected and tabulated may prove relative to the effects of 'protection' on labor and wages in New York, may justly be taken as fairly representative of the conditions throughout the whole country."

Of course, the Republicans have not been slow to make use of Mr. Peck's report for party purposes, it being especially useful for that object on account of the Commissioner being himself a Democrat. The Democracy are necessarily greatly exercised on the subject, and numerous articles have appeared which present the matter in a totally different light, and action has been taken resulting in the arrest of Mr. Peck. The latter is accused by leading Democrats of making a false report and of burning or otherwise disposing of the tables and circulars upon which his exhibit ought to have been based. This alleged crime with which the men of figures is charged is said to be a part of a conspiracy, in which he is one of the chief participants. The inciting cause of the plot is said to be rooted in Hill movements and Mugwumpism and its object the defeat of Grover Cleveland.

The Republicans state, on the other hand, that Peck's report is an honest one, made up from the materials obtained by him from manufacturers and others.

The subject is one of conspicuous interest at present, and we have therefore given a brief statement of the claim of each of the great parties in relation to it. Having done this, the reader is left to make up his own conclusion as to which of the two positions is correct.

A CORRESPONDENT from Sweden says that there are now thousands of Jews in Finland and the Russian Baltic provinces who are ready to immigrate to America. Since they cannot now pass through Germany they are endeavoring to travel via Sweden, but it is doubted that they can obtain permission to do so.

WORKINGMEN AND THE WORLD'S FAIR.

NOTWITHSTANDING the cholera alarms there seems to be no abatement in the prosecution of the World's Fair work in Chicago.

All the details have been completed for the grandest civic display that ever took place on this continent on October 21, next, when the ceremony of dedication will be performed. President Harrison and the members of his cabinet, Grover Cleveland, the members of the diplomatic corps, the governors of the States, and a host of distinguished personages, civil, military and religious, are to be present. Col. Breckenridge, of Kentucky, will deliver the dedicatory oration. This gentleman voted against the appropriation in Congress, and on this account a great deal of ill-feeling was manifested against him. But that matter has been all settled, and the gallant Colonel, who is said to be one of the great orators of our time, is now unanimously chosen as the speaker of the day.

Eastern papers are discussing ways and means whereby the working men and women of this country can see the great fair next summer. The New York Mail and Express is taking an aggressive stand on the proposition that from May 1, 1893, to November 30, 1893, railroad fares from all points in the United States should be placed at a uniform scale of $1.00 per head to bona fide working men. The laws of Congress now governing railroad fares need in no way be infringed by the contemplated scheme. These laws now recognize a dozen or more classes. They recognize first, second, third, immigrant, tourist, excursionist, family ticket passengers, drawing room, mileage passengers, sleeping car, dining room, clergyman, editorial, crews, commuter, private cars, free passes, separate cars for colored people, and several other grades. For each of these classes the national law demands a uniform rate. But among all these various grades the working men are not mentioned, and the companies may institute a class of this kind.

The plan proposed is that at certain periods special trains should be run for workingmen. In order that existing laws be not interfered with, the Union Pacific for instance could offer to run a train of ten coaches from Salt Lake City to Chicago for $500. These cars could accommodate 600 passengers, which at $1 each would defray operating expenses. And the Mail and Express suggests that Salt Lake City be made the Western terminus of the radius over which the dollar rate would extend. But roads westward of this would be expected to make excursion rates to enable the Pacific coast people to reach here cheaply, and to have one day in Salt Lake. After arrangements of this kind have been completed then let the Exposition Directors make one day weekly "workingmen's day," and the admission fee be placed at 10 cents each.

It is estimated that by this plan 40,000,000 people would visit the Fair who would not visit it under existing circumstances. And it is held to be only proper that every man, woman and child, over 10 years of age, in the United States, should see the Fair, and receive an impression of the greatness and grandeur of our country. To the railroad managers of the United States, who are accorded a first rank in the solution of transportation problems, the movement of vast masses will be no difficulty.

SHOEMAKERS OF HISTORY.

THE death of John Greenleaf Whittier, who in early life was a shoemaker, has prompted enterprising literary persons to search the volumes of universal history for other distinguished cobblers. This trade has been called ever since the days of the Romans "the gentle craft." And whatever there is about it that conduces to intellectually, the shoemaking trade has furnished more distinguished learned men than any other of the crafts. The story of St. Crispin is more or less familiar to all readers of newspapers. He lived in the time of Diocletian the Roman Emperor. He embraced Christianity, and had to fly from Rome to France. He settled in the town now called Soissons, as a shoemaker, and at the same time became an ardent preacher of Christianity. The legendary stories relating to him state that he used to steal leather from the rich to make shoes for the poor. By reason of his aggressiveness, as a Christian he suffered death on October 25, 289 A. D., and on this date falls annually, as Whittier calls it, "Gay St. Crispin's Day."

Hans Sachs, a German cobbler, is characterized as "the nightingale of the Lutheran reformation." His songs idyl as much as Luther's sermons to spread the new religion. He died at the age of eighty-two, and left a reputation as an excellent shoemaker and a great poet.

William Carey, the distinguished Oriental scholar, began life as a shoemaker. He was the first to carry the Bible into the East Indies. He translated it into Bengali and several other dialects. He even compiled grammars of those languages which are considered reliable today.

Robert Bloomfield, "the shoemaker poet," composed his "Farmer's Boy" while working with five others at the trade in a garret. This poem brought him recognition from the nobility of England. Samuel Drew was another eminent cobbler, who attained celebrity by his reply to "Paine's Age of Reason."

Perhaps the most eminent cobbler of all the craft is St. Cloudesley Shovel. This Norfolk lad began life as a shoemaker's apprentice in 1662. His monument in Westminster Abbey now bears the inscription, "Knight, Rear-Admiral of Great Britain, Admiral and Commander-in-Chief of the Fleet."

Samuel Bradburn, "a poor cobbler," was for forty years known as the Demosthenes of Methoslam. Thomas Cooper, the famous leader of the English Chartist movement, worked eight years on the cobbler's bench. He spent two years in Stafford jail. While there he wrote "The Purgatory of Souls." His works comprise a dozen bulky volumes.

James Lackington, a cobbler, became owner of "the biggest book shop in the world," in Finsbury Square, London. William Gifford, who became editor of the London Quarterly Review, began life as a cobbler.

Among the American cobblers who achieved fame as literary men are John Whittier, Noah Worcester, Roger Sherman, the friend of Thomas Jefferson, Henry Wilson, vice-president of the United States, and later, Thomas Edward, the Scotch naturalist, whose remarkable life and achievements have been made the theme of one of the most attractive works written by Mr. Samuel Smiles, the noted English author.

IN FULL BLAST AGAIN.

WHEN the Mayor made his assault on the Sunday saloon business, we added our applause to the voluminous praise of his action by the law-and-order promoting people of the city. We also warned him, when success appeared to be crowning his efforts, that after while the closing down would be only in appearance unless extraordinary vigilance was used. We have reliable information now, to the effect that a very lively trade in liquor is carried on in many places in this city every Sunday.

We do not wish to find fault with any of the officials, big or little, whose duty it is to suppress the evil. We only mention the facts as directed to us. It is said that, notwithstanding the pleasant reports made every Monday through a morning paper, the Sunday liquor traffic is in full swing and the pretended enforcement of the ordinance is very much of a farce.

We are not surprised. While there is a demand there will be found a supply. The thirsty public will have drink. The question is how much of a really strict execution of the law is going on? We accuse no one of dereliction of duty. We made no charge of political winking at certain things out of supposed political necessity. We do not want to stir up anything unpleasant to stir up the bile of any person or party. We only ask the Mayor to take measures to find out whether it is not a fact, that the Sunday liquor business is in full blast again even though saloon doors are apparently kept closed.

SOME BLUNDERS OF THE "GLOBE-DEMOCRAT."

THE Globe-Democrat, which most people know is a leading paper in St. Louis, is very stupid sometimes in relation to the "Mormon" question. It often displays ignorance concerning it that is not justified at this late date when there have been so many opportunities for years to obtain correct information. Its latest exhibition of denseness on this matter is the following, in answer to questions from a correspondent:

"It is a mistake to suppose that polygamy is taught by the Book of Mormon. This book, which was really nothing but a romance, written by one Spaulding, teaches nothing of the sort. It was printed in 1830, but after Smith discovered that his new religion was about to attract a number of adherents, he went extensively into the work of having special revelations on various subjects connected with his new faith. . . .

"The polygamy features were subsequently incorporated into the Book of Mormon, but that they were not a part of the original scope of the work is proved by the earlier editions, which do not contain the special revelations made to the grand Apostle at a later day."

That the Book of Mormon was not written by Solomon Spaulding; that it was not written from the manuscript which Solomon Spaulding wrote and which was alleged for years to have been its basis; that it is not in any way or manner connected with or similar to anything that Spaulding was ever known to write, has been established so clearly and for so long that the repetition of the musty canard by such a paper as the Globe-Democrat is humiliating to respectable journalism. "The Manuscript Found" was the title of the romance that old acquaintances of Spaulding thought somewhat similar to the Book of Mormon. They depended upon their memory, which evidently was very faulty. They thought some of the names in the Book of Mormon such as Lehi, Nephi, Laman, etc., were used in Spaulding's story. They remembered that it purported to have been written on rolls of parchment in the Latin language and hidden in a cave.

The Book of Mormon was engraved on metallic plates in reformed Egyptian hieroglyphics, and buried in a stone receptacle with instruments prepared to aid in its translation. It does not purport to give a history in any way comparable to the account said to have been given in the Spaulding manuscript.

As a matter of fact, the "Manuscript Found" has been actually a manuscript found for many years. It is in Oberlin College, Ohio, where the Globe-Democrat can have it inspected and contrasted with the Book of Mormon of which we will be happy to furnish it a copy.

It will be found totally dissimilar in bulk and contents. There is no point of resemblance between the two works. The story, the language, the theme, the purport and everything else connected with the Spaulding manuscript are utterly and entirely unlike the Book of Mormon, and no sane person who sees the two works will venture the opinion that there is or ever was anything in common between them. Both are published and are open to comparison by the general public.

The Globe-Democrat is equally mistaken as to any additions, whether on polygamy or any other subject, to the original Book of Mormon. The present edition is substantially the same as the first, except that it has been put into chapter and verse with reference notes.

We have no objection to criticism of the Book of Mormon from any of our contemporaries if they will but write from some knowledge of the subject. The writer in the Globe-Democrat has never read the book. He did not understand anything of what he was writing about. He only displayed astonishing ignorance or else a wilful intention to misrepresent. We prefer to believe the former of these two propositions.

If the Globe-Democrat will kindly correct the mistakes it has made on this matter we shall be both pleased and surprised, because like other influential journals which have been set right on just such questions, it has usually let the falsehood go and refrained from telling a truth which would place it in the light of having made a blunder. But it is nobler to acknowledge an error than to persist in a falsification, even if it be at the expense of an unpopular body like the "Mormons."

A RESERVATION TO BE OPENED.

It is likely that the Northwest will be the scene in the near future of one of those land excitement which created such a furore in Oklahoma and the Dakotas recently. According to the Hienna Journal, that part of the Crow reserve ceded to the United States two years ago will be opened for settlement this fall. A new treaty has been concluded with the tribe.

The reservation begins at the Yellowstone river, nine miles east of Billings, and runs southwest between Clark's Ford and Pryor Creek, to the foot of the Pryor mountains. Thence it runs east to the Big Horn river. The land is rich in mineral, and much of it well adapted for agriculture. Irrigation can be practiced there with little of capital.

In 1855 allotments of land in severalty were made to the Crows. The tribe numbers about 2,300 at present. They are said to be doing well. The government is constructing a system of irrigation for them. But it is thought that when government patronage is withdrawn they can not stand against the advancing white man. Disease is making serious inroads among the tribe, and it is only a matter of time when the whole reservation will be occupied by white people.

REV. B. F. CLAY.

Rev. B. F. CLAY is the name of a person who has cut a small figure in Salt Lake, sectarian circles, and who is now taking his rounds, as so many persons of similar calibre have done before him, to make as much as he can out of the business of maligning the "Mormons." At Leavenworth, Kansas, lately, he delivered a lecture in the First Presbyterian church to an audience of about two hundred persons, on the misdeeds of "Mormons." He is called in the Times of that city "The pastor of the Christian Church at Salt Lake City." This would convey the idea that he was the only Christian church in the place. How do his fellow preachers here like the insinuation? We do not propose to follow this person through all his sinuous course, but will give an extract from the Times which shows that there are people abroad who know something about the people of Utah and will not swallow down all the doses of "Christian" slander which are dealt out in this kind of Clay. The Leavenworth Times says:

"He made it appear that the persecution of the Mormons in Kirtland, O., Jackson County, Mo., and Nauvoo, Ill., was the result of their own misdeeds."

"He drew a true and ghastly picture of the evils of polygamy, but he gave his auditors the idea that polygamy was the natural and prevalent custom among the Mormons. This is a mistake. One-third at least of Mormons openly repudiate the practice and at no time in Utah where he gave the impression that polygamy was universal, has one man in ten had a plurality of wives.

"The writer of this lived among the Mormons for more than ten years and while he found much to pity and much to condemn he also found much to praise and much to admire. Laying aside their peculiar religious opinions, the wondrous changing of an arid plain to a heaven of fertility, and a treeless waste to a blooming paradise by a few thousand naked Indians, is proof positive of their zeal, their industry, courage and faith."

We are of the opinion that Clay will not make as much out of the "Mormon" question as many of his predecessors have. He is too late in the day. Where the truth is known falsehood is not likely to prevail.

REFORM IN ROMAN CATHOLICISM.

THE Roman Catholic Church in Illinois is operating aggressively with regard to education and religion. It announces itself as prepared for the evangelization of the great Northwest. It has always had an ably conducted church organ in Chicago, but it was a private enterprise. A reform has been instituted in this line, and on Saturday, the 10th inst., the first number of a new paper entitled the New World was issued. It is the organ of the church, and published directly under supervision of Archbishop Peenan and his assistants. It is owned by the church. Everything that appears in it the church will be responsible for. A pastoral has been issued to the faithful in relation to this paper. On Sunday last announcements were made from all the pulpits advertising it, and the faithful instructed to patronize it.

The first issue contains an address "to the clergy and Catholic people of the ecclesiastical province of Chicago." It is very voluminous, but the following, which pertains to education, is worthy of perusal:

"We urge you, therefore, dear brethren, to cherish the cause of Christian education as the cause of God and our country. In building, maintaining and perfecting our Catholic schools we are doing the most beneficent work American citizens can do; a work which, like tripiety, is useful both for the life that now is and for that which is to come. We call the attention of all pastors to the legislation of the last session of the Illinois council on parochial schools. A pastor without a school is like a general without a commissariat. The spiritual life of his people will perish of inanition. A pastor who neglects his school is guilty of the sin of omission in a most grave manner. Few of the priests of Illinois can be accused of lack of zeal for Catholic education, and the Catholic people of this great state are ever ready to respond to appeals made to them in behalf of religious schools. Nor are they content merely to have schools, but they are laboring with intelligence and earnestness to make them good, and we do not hesitate to assert in our parochial schools the various branches of learning are taught as effectively as in the better class of public schools. We have, indeed, far less money than these, but from an educational point of view one enlightened and devoted teacher is more than equal to buildings and rich endowments. When we consider what we have done and are doing to educate Catholic children while we also contribute to the public schools, it seems incredible to us that the Legislature of Illinois should have enacted what is known as the Edwards law—an invidious and an unjust law, which under pretext of a zeal for popular education is really a violation of our most sacred rights as men and citizens.

"Freedom of worship implies and involves freedom of education. If the State may dictate to us what kind of school we shall have, it may make it a penal offense not to frequent the church it may select. We denounce this law as a violation of our constitutional rights and hold that those who favor it are unworthy of the support of enlightened and fair minded voters. Let us use all right and honorable means to have it repealed, and let the designing and bigoted be taught that the west is not a field in which their labor will bear fruit."

FINANCIAL PANIC IMMINENT IN EUROPE.

INDUSTRIAL depression, labor troubles and financial irregularities are increasing in England. In the Preston cotton district the manufactures and their operatives are at war. The former, owing to stagnation of the cotton industry, are trying to pull down wages, while the latter are in favor of maintaining the present wage rate, but advocate curtailment in production. The workmen, knowing that depression really exists, would rather work half-time and live in ease of improvement than submit to a reduction which would be maintained should a business reaction occur.

No doubt the embarrassment in the business affairs of the Birkbeck bank is attributable to the hard times among the working classes. The building societies of England, and the financial establishments connected with them, are the outgrowth of the work of the famous Dr. Birkbeck, of Yorkshire, who took a prominent part in the advancement of the wage-earners of England.

These associations were admirably conducted, and until this recent crash were looked upon as being as safe as the Bank of England. The thrifty and economical members—working men and small traders—were almost exclusively the patrons. For the past two years the manufacturing interests of England have been going down. Curtailment in production, disemployment, strikes, and falling wages have reduced the incomes of wage-earners. This depression acted on the small storekeepers and tradesmen who were dependent on the wage-workers. Stocks in building associations could not be retained, and the result is the collapse which came a week ago and strayed the large towns and cities of the country with the ruins of once flourishing building and loan societies. Of course this disaster is preliminary to still greater calamities. Whatever affects the worker soon overtakes the capitalist.

England's exports are falling off while her imports are increasing. For seven months of this year her increase in grain alone was $20,000,000 over the corresponding period of 1891. The wheat bill for July last was $5,000,000. In live animals, meat, butter, cheese and eggs the imports for the current year in England show large increases over those of last year.

DR. ILIFF'S PREDICAMENT.

The Herald of Sunday, September 17th, exposed one of the most flagrant instances of plagiarism on record. The gentleman whose deceptive conduct was exhibited is the Rev. Dr. Iliff. He delivered, on the 21st of last March, in the Salt Lake Theatre, on the occasion of the anniversary of the Y. M. C. A. of this city, an address which was notable for its excellence. At the conclusion of its delivery the manuscript was handed to a reporter of the Salt Lake Tribune, in which journal it was published in full. Nearly the whole of the address was taken from a book containing "lectures and addresses delivered by the Rev. Thomas Guard, D. D."

The effect of the delivery of this purloined material by Dr. Iliff and its publication in a newspaper was to place him before the community as a brilliant and intellectual pulpit orator, which he really is not. A person who enjoys that distinction cannot maintain it by the use of other men's brains, a recourse of that nature indicating that he himself does not possess them.

The Tribune, while admitting that a newspaper with such facts before it as were in possession of the Herald, was justified in making the exposure, but it also attempts to make an explanation in behalf of Dr. Iliff. The substance of the apology is that the Rev. gentleman was given such brief notice that he would be expected to deliver the address that he did not have time to prepare one; that he informed the audience that he would have to draw largely from the ideas of others; that after the publication of the burrowed address in the Tribune as original, the Doctor called the clergymen together and explained the matter to them.

Unfortunately there does not appear to be anyone who listened to the address who heard Dr. Iliff explain that he had drawn largely from other people's ideas. If he had made the statement even that would not be a sufficient excuse for such wholesale plagiarisms as were perpetrated by him on the occasion. It appears also that he did not explain the matter to his fellow clergymen immediately after the publication in the Tribune. The address was delivered in March, and he made no mention of the subject to his brethren until the present month. The cause of his finally taking this step was on account of exposure being imminent, he having been informed that the article which appeared in the Herald of last Sunday, had been offered for publication. But even if he had confided in his brother clergymen, what had that to do with the deception of the people at large by the publication of Mr. Guard's lecture as the product of the brains of Dr. Iliff? The public were allowed to believe that the address was original and to submit in vain to the brilliancy of the Doctor's intellectual brilliancy. The excuse that he did not have sufficient time to prepare an address of his own seems remarkable—he was notified the day before delivery was required. He seems to have had plenty of time to copy, in writing, from Mr. Guard.

In scanning the matter which Dr. Iliff took from Mr. Guard, one notable feature connected with its use by the former bears strong evidence of plagiaristic intent. We refer to slight verbal alterations at the beginning and ending of paragraphs. This manipulation shows an evident purpose to avoid giving credit to the sources from which the quotations were made. This point applies also to the effort made by the plagiarist to make Dr. Guard's language and ideas conform to the occasion upon which they were used by Dr. Iliff.

It is clear enough that Dr. Iliff has been seeking to build up a professional and intellectual reputation on other people's brains. The exposure to which he has been subjected is not surprising. Men let things escape them that are keys by which their calibre can be understood. This gentleman, evidently for the purpose of posing as a patriot, in one of a series of anti-"Mormon" meetings, improvised to stuff the members of the G. A. R., on their way to encampment at San Francisco, stated, in a speech, that he placed the cross under the national flag. However, we probably would not have treated at all upon the subject of the terrible exposure to which he is now subjected, had it not been for the flimsy explanations made in attempting to cover up the flagrant plagiarisms which he has clearly been guilty of. If nothing of that kind had been attempted, and a frank acknowledgment been made, charity would have stepped in and suggested that the subject be allowed to slide past, so far as we were concerned.

THE sensation created by the exposure of Dr. Iliff's great plagiaristic feat causes considerable interest to be attached to any information as to who were the persons who worked it up. We have learned that this part of the subject shows that so far as relatives to the brethren of the M. E. Presbytery, the millennium is still a considerable distance away. All is not peaceful within the ranks of the local clergy of that denomination. The Smear Hill fight is still within the local memory. The plagiaristic scandal is a development of another fight among clericals.

A few days ago a Methodist minister was hunting all over town for a copy of the Salt Lake Tribune containing the address alleged to be Dr. Iliff's. He sent several men to the office of that paper, at different times during the day, to procure it, but failed. He called at this office in the hope that it could be got here. We could not accommodate him. He succeeded in borrowing it elsewhere. The gentleman who loaned it did so with the understanding that it should be returned. Another M. E. minister—not the one who was hunting for the paper—put a sum of money into the hands of a hotel manager as security for the return of the particular copy of the Tribune in question.

Although these circumstances indicate a conspiracy to overthrow Dr. Iliff, but that does not relieve him from the unenviable position in which the exposure places him. It looks as if some of the Doctor's clerical associates were imbued with an unchristian grudge against him, or that one or the other of them is actuated with a desire to possess his ecclesiastical shoes. The publication this morning, in the Herald, of the details connected with the meeting of the Methodist clergymen held to consider the subject of Dr. Iliff's wholesale draft of language and ideas from Mr. Guard's address, confirms the nature of the plot. That report must have been supplied by someone who was present. No credit is due the conspirators, as their motives were evidently ulterior and sinister.

AN INSUFFERABLE NUISANCE.

We would like to write something strong on the subject of the sewer man-hole opposite the west gate of the Tilgh office premises. We may as well speak mildly on this theme, however, as there is not sufficient strength in the whole English vocabulary to equal that of the horrible stench emitted from the opening in question. The sewer gas which escapes from it has been growing gradually more dense and noisome for over a week, until it has reached a point when the atmosphere in the immediate vicinity is insufferable. It is a standing invitation to an outbreak of cholera, and a disgrace to the municipal government. We have been compelled several times to direct official attention to this unbearable nuisance, but all the relief obtained is an irregular flushing of the sewer with hydrant water at wide intervals. It is time somebody's official head dropped into the basket.

THE SOUVENIR COINS.

THE managers of the World's Fair sought an appropriation of $5,000,000 during the last session of Congress. This was refused, but a gift of 5,000,000 souvenir half-dollars was given on condition that the Fair be closed on Sundays. These souvenir coins will be made from uncurrent subsidiary coin now in the treasury. A large number of the proposed souvenirs have been contracted for at one dollar each. And it is supposed that the whole amount can easily be sold by the World's Fair managers at that price, thus realizing the full extent of the original appropriation asked for.

The souvenir half dollars, unlike medals of the commemorative order, will be legal tender of their face value, the same as the ordinary half dollars. There are now $14,000,000 of uncurrent subsidiary coin in the Treasury. From these will be coined the souvenir half dollars, and given to the World's Fair without expense, the government paying for the coinage. Before they are turned over the Fair managers must stipulate in writing that the gates must not be opened on the Sabbath day.

PARTY GOVERNMENT ON TRIAL.

GOLDWIN SMITH, formerly professor of history at Oxford University, England, now of Canada, has an article in The Nineteenth Century entitled, "The Contest for the Presidency" in the United States. It is a philosophical disquisition of American politics, with incidental allusion to Canadian and British politics.

The professor does not indorse the frequency of elections in the United States, and the quadrennial contest for the Presidency he likens to a periodical civil war. The system of electioneering in this country he does not approve, because it awakens questions for partisan purposes which had better be left at rest. This state of affairs can not always go on without a crash. Burning issues placed before the people when frenzied by party strife are sure, sooner or later, to produce disastrous results. Party leaders can hardly be eviled for the anomalous positions they occupy. However willing they may be to serve the interests of public morality, yet they must make that desire secondary to the machine section of the party to which they belong.

The gist of Professor Smith's article is to show that pure party government is now on trial in this country and in Great Britain, and that unless some way can be found out of it the next generation will find itself confronting serious problems as to the perpetuation of free and popular institutions.

CARDINAL HOWARD DEAD.

SHOULD an election for Pope take place in the near future England would be unrepresented in the College of Cardinals. Cardinal Howard, a few days ago, followed his brethren Manning and Newman. Unlike the two latter, he was not a convert from another faith, nor was he distinguished in church affairs. However, he was a trusted and devoted servant of the Pope and of the church for some time in Rome.

Cardinal Howard was born in Nottingham, England, in 1829. He was grandson of the younger brother of Bernard Edward 15th Duke of Norfolk. In youth he was an officer of Her Majesty's Second Life Guards. At the age of twenty-six he became a priest, and consecrated himself entirely to the service of the Pope. He was made archbishop in 1872, and cardinal in 1877. In 1878 he was given charge of the English college in Rome. He excelled as an Arabic, American and Russian scholar. He was troubled during the past few years with a brain affection, but the immediate cause of his death was pneumonia, contracted in Brighton, England, where he died.

WHERE DOES THE GOLD TO?

WHAT becomes of the gold? This is a question which an exchange puts and at the same time attempts to reply to it. Since the discovery of the metal in California to the present time the United States has produced $1,900,000,000 in gold. These are the figures of the Superintendent of the Mint. According to his report the total amount in coin and bars, on December 31st, 1891, in the United States was $688,665,211. This latter amount was known to be in the country in the shape of coin and bars in the mint, in the treasury and in possession of banks. Gold exports to the amount of $57,000,000 can be accounted for, and so can $3,500,000 turned into plate, jewelry, gold leaf, dentists' foil and so on. But all this only aggregates about $740,000,000, which subtracted from $1,900,000,000 leaves over $1,100,000,000 unaccounted for. Trade returns between the United States and Europe from 1843 to 1891 inclusive, show an excess of exports from Europe to this country over exports from here to Europe of $473,000,000. This sum, it is supposed, was paid in gold, but still about $700,000,000 remain unaccounted for. How much is hidden away by thrifty persons who are their own bankers can never be accurately ascertained. Vast quantities of gold have been buried and, perhaps, lost forever. Some has been sunk in the seas with lost vessels and so on. But still the interesting problem comes up, what becomes of the gold? In round figures the United States produced up to the present nineteen hundred millions of dollars in gold. She has now in her banks, mints and treasuries, only about seven hundred millions. For plate and jewelry she used about four millions, and paid four hundred and seventy-three millions for foreign goods. That leaves about as much gold unaccounted for as there is now known to be in the form of bullion and currency in the country.

THE OGDEN BOND ELECTION.

On Monday the taxpayers of Ogden decided in favor of public improvements and by their ballots gave the board of education the legal right to issue $35,000, five per cent, twenty year bonds, the money to be derived from the sale to be devoted to the purchase of one or more sites for school buildings, the completion of the buildings now in course of construction, and funding any outstanding indebtedness of the board.

But little interest was taken in the election and the voters did not turn out in any considerable number. Throughout the city but 822 votes were cast and of those 489 were in favor of bonding and 134 against, giving a majority for bonds of 355.

The vote by precincts is as follows:

	Yes	No	Total
First Ward.....	68	56	124
Second Ward.....	82	16	98
Third Ward.....	75	12	87
Fourth Ward.....	128	32	160
Fifth Ward.....	114	31	145
Grand Total.....	467	134	603

Majority in favor.....355.

THE REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

This has been a busy day with Republicans. Delegations from outside counties commenced arriving yesterday afternoon and every train up to noon today continued to bring in representatives from all parts of the Territory. The Republican headquarters have been thronged all day, and the greatest interest and enthusiasm have prevailed. Patriotic strains of music, played by numerous bands, have filled the air, and shouts of "Long live Republicanism," "We are a growing party any will elect our Delegate to Congress in November next," were loud and frequent.

The convention met in the Theatre which had been elaborately draped in national colors for the occasion. The back of the stage was entirely covered with the stars and stripes. In front and upon these hung steel engravings of Lincoln, Grant and Harrison. Pictures of Whitelaw Reid, McKinley and other Republican leaders adorned the first circle. The main auditorium was set apart for the exclusive use of the delegates from the various counties, while the galleries were reserved for visitors.

The convention was for the purpose of nominating a delegate to Congress and for electing a Republican Territorial committee and for the transaction of such other business as shall be considered necessary. The convention consisted of 444 delegates allotted to the several counties as follows:

County.	County.	No.
Beaver.....	Box Elder.....	16
Benjamin.....	Butte.....	8
Boone.....	Garfield.....	7
Emery.....	Idaho.....	4
Grand.....	Iron.....	4
Juab.....	Kane.....	4
Millard.....	Morgan.....	7
Piute.....	Rich.....	5
Salt Lake.....	Sanpete.....	36
Summit.....	San Juan.....	1
Sevier.....	Tooele.....	13
Utah.....	Utah.....	18
Washington.....	Wasatch.....	14
Wayne.....	Weber.....	8

The Ogden band with twenty-two pieces, led R. W. Emmett played the opening selection in splendid style and was awarded with a hearty round of applause and responded with the rendition of a variety of character pieces which were well received.

The convention should have been called to order at twelve o'clock, but it was nearly an hour later when Judge Bennett advanced to the front and called the gathering to order. He was glad to call the first convention to order that was ever held in this Territory in touch with the national Republican party. He introduced Colonel Bowers who read the call heretofore referred to.

Judge Bennett said he had been instructed to nominate George Sutherland, of Utah county as temporary chairman and John M. Hanson, of Millard, temporary secretary.

Mr. Sutherland said it was always a pleasure to preside over a Republican meeting, but to preside over the first Republican convention that should nominate a delegate that should be elected and seated in the halls of Congress was more than a pleasure.

He had read in a Democratic newspaper this morning that this convention was to be torn asunder with dissection. He denied it. There was a truth that heaven did about us in our infancy and the Democrats did the same thing later on.

He then proceeded to pay an eloquent tribute to the Republican party and made the statement that when ever mills and manufactures were erected, they were the result of Republican industry.

TELEGRAM OF GREETING.

The following telegram was read by Chairman Sutherland:

BUFFALO, N. Y., Sept. 15, 1892.

The chairman of the Republican Territorial convention, care Hoyt Sherman, the Fifth annual convention of the National Republican League convention assembled at Buffalo, New York, sends you hearty greeting.

J. S. CLARKSON, Chairman.
A. B. HUMPHREY, Secretary.

RESPONSE.

The secretary was instructed to respond as follows:

S. J. Kenyon, the Republicans of Utah, in convention assembled extend to the National Republican League their best wishes and applaud your efforts for the maintenance of protection and reciprocity.

Several motions to adjourn until three o'clock were voted down.

George M. Cannon moved to adjourn until 8 o'clock to give the committees time to report. Lost.

COMMITTEES APPOINTED.

On motion the following committees were then appointed:

Committee on credentials—The following committee on credentials were appointed:

Committee on Literature—C. W. Bennett, J. H. Smith, John Lowrey, J. M. Hansen, C. C. Goodwin.

The convention then adjourned until 4 o'clock.

The afternoon session of the Republican convention was called to order at 4:30 Thursday. The Theatre was well filled with visitors.

George M. Cannon reported a list of a few more than four hundred delegates entitled to seats in the convention.

Mr. Bagley of Weber moved to adopt the report except as to such counties where proxies were given, and that such proxies only be recognized when they lived in the counties they purported to represent.

Isadore Morris moved as a substitute that the report be adopted and the committee discharged.

Bagley again took the floor and spoke in favor of his motion. He said the convention should be careful not to establish a dangerous precedent, especially at this time. He wanted to know if the proposed proxies represented Salt Lake or some other county. He did not say there was anything wrong, but it looked suspicious.

George M. Cannon, in behalf of the committee, stated that in cases where the county conventions had named the men they should be recognized here though not residents of the county they purported to represent.

Judge Boreman said he was opposed to the motion. If there was any justice in the motion made by his friend Mr. Bagley, why should they be cut off? He knew that Box Elder county had applied during the day for three or four proxies from Weber county and they were promised them, too.

"Name them! name them!" yelled a score of delegates from different parts of the building.

B. remains—cannot, but I know that it was done.

Booth—From this side of the house we hurl the insult and insinuation of jobbery. He declared there was no motion before the house and was sustained.

Devine said that this was the first formal Republican convention ever held in Utah. Precedents established now would have great weight upon conventions to come. Every part of the Territory should be represented.

Col. Allen Miller said he had been chosen as proxy for Morgan county and he wanted to be recognized.

Col. Sells said that this was not the first formal Republican convention. The party had held a convention every four of the twenty years he had lived here.

Frank R. Stevens was in favor of giving representation to every county in the Territory.

More discussion followed and finally the chair held that alternates would be recognized.

PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

The committee on permanent organization, by its chairman, Charles Herman, submitted a report which named Hon. Elias Sells for chairman, J. M. Henderson, secretary, and announced as an order of business:

1. Report of the committee on credentials. 2. Organization. 3. Installation of officers. 4. Prayer by John Henry Smith. 5. Report of committee on resolutions. 6. Nomination of delegate. 7. Selection of territorial committee. 8. That the rules of the Fifty-first Congress should govern this body; and recommended, that a majority of all the votes cast be necessary for a choice of delegate; that the territorial committee consist of one from each county and have authority to select an executive committee of five.

A number of the Salt Lake delegation moved that three vice-presidents be named, one each from Utah, Weber and Cache.

COLONEL SELLS

came forward and made a speech, after which the convention adjourned until 8 o'clock p. m.

NIGHT SESSION.

Prayer was offered by Chaplain John Henry Smith, after which a Republican quartette, consisting of Messrs. James, Spencer, Bry and Burleigh, sang with spirit a protection campaign song which was applauded to the echo.

RESOLUTION OF CONDOLENCE.

The following resolution of sympathy was read by S. J. Kenyon:

We extend to President Harrison our sympathy in this time of his affliction with the heartfelt hope that Mrs. Harrison, who has for four years made the White House a model American home, may long be spared to share the honors and responsibilities of her husband's public and domestic life.

Adopted by a quiet rising vote.

RESOLUTIONS.

The committee on resolutions reported as follows:

This delegate convention, representing a constituency now fully recognized as a component part of the great Republican party of the nation, congratulates the people of Utah upon the glorious outlook for a continuance in power of this great party which has made the "American home" the longed for goal of the oppressed of all nations of the earth.

A system of protection of American labor, by taxing the competing products of the poor and pauper labor of other countries; its upbuilding of home industries; its fostering care of home markets; and by wise reciprocal relations the gradual but sure extension of foreign markets for the products of this country, commands our endorsement and will receive our undivided support.

We believe in the protective principle of the American Republican tariff laws. We have seen the result of this principle in the cheapened cost to the customer of every article of the domestic production of which has received adequate encouragement at the hands of Congress. The McKinley bill has stimulated manufacturing, lowered the price of hoards of articles, raised the standard of wages, lowered the price of living and put against the entire working force of the country in position to earn good wages.

We endorse the principles of this great national party, as enunciated in its platform adopted at its Minneapolis convention in June last, and hereby reaffirm our allegiance to the party and pledge thereof our best efforts and devotion.

We congratulate the people of the nation at the final manifestation by the Democratic party of the courage of its convictions, in its advocacy of free trade, so long hidden and sheltered under its former hypocritical cloak of "tariff reform." Its true position upon this great economic question, now thoroughly known, may safely be left to the intelligent discernment of the American citizen.

The contest between the two great parties at the present time involves the maintenance of American wages, American homes and general prosperity on the one hand, as against their destructive downfall to the level of foreign wages, foreign homes and prevalent poverty on the other. The policy of the Democratic party, should it become dominant in this country, is destined to impel measureless ruin upon our domestic industries, throw a vast number of men and women out of profitable employment, retard our progress and blight our prosperity.

The song of aindies and looms, of hammers, anvils, saws and of every industrial machine; the hum of the mower, the reaper and thresher; the rumble of the railroad train as it passes through towns and villages, passes forges, rolling mills, factories, mines and smelters, in its grand mission of the interchange of products, are all pregnant with the musical inspiration to maintain the protective system of the Republican tariff.

We unqualifiedly denounce the un-American course of the late Democratic legislative assembly of this Territory in attempting to strike down the great sheep industry, for its failure to further encourage the production of Utah sugar, for the open hostility it displayed to the policy of developing the manufacturing industries of the Territory for its despicable attempt to divert the money appropriated for the use of the Logan agricultural college to partisan uses and purposes, and for its utter failure to legislate intelligently upon questions of vital interest to the people.

We denounce the free wool bill as passed by the late Democratic Congress and demand that the wool schedule be now adjusted by the McKinley bill be maintained in such a way as the increased production will meet the demands of home consumption.

The people of Utah are particularly interested in the maintenance of Republican institutions and Republican principles. Their principal productions, wool, lead, silver and farm products, are probably produced here because of Republican protection. And yet these same productions receive the special, open and malignant hostility of the Democracy.

We are unalterably opposed to the removal of the Indians from Colorado to Utah, but we favor the giving of sufficient lands of the several reservations to the Indians thereof in severalty, and that the balance be made subject to settlement under the homestead laws, and particularly the Uintah reservation in Utah.

We are in favor of the cession of the arid lands of the several States and Territories to such States and Territories respectively.

We are also in favor of such amendments of the land laws as will enable resident citizens of the Territory to take from the public lands the timber so necessary for all domestic purposes.

We endorse the administration of President Harrison, and particularly commend the course pursued by him and his advisers in maintaining the dignity of America and American institutions, both at home and abroad. We particularly commend the President's efforts to enhance the value of silver, and to extend its use as money of ultimate redemption, through the agency of an international monetary conference.

We favor free and unrestricted coinage of American silver, and demand that it be restored to the position it held prior to the demonetization act of 1873.

We reaffirm our loyal attachment to those principles of the Republican party under which it strives to build up the American merchant marine and the American navy, to protect the right of franchise, to maintain free schools, to encourage temperance, to maintain the honor of the American flag, to protect American citizens at home and abroad, and to secure proper and adequate pensions for the veterans of the war and for the dependent families of deceased soldiers.

We assert and recognize the dignity of labor and the necessity of proper legislation to protect its interest; that home laborers and producers, who contribute to the public funds, are justly entitled to the preference in all public works; that Utah work should go to Utah workmen, and that the public works of Utah material and Utah products shall be used, if procurable. We condemn the attempt of the board of public works of Salt Lake City to give the contract of street paving to a foreign corporation using imported material.

We favor the eight hour system of day's work upon all public works.

The Republicans hold that all political power is of the people; that national authority is derived from the people of all the States and State authority from the people of the particular State; that the government of the United States possesses the power named in the constitution and those necessary to their exercise; that the people of the State possess the power not so conferred or derived from any instrument; that the State government may exercise such powers as remain with its people as they have have not in their constitution forbidden the use of; that the national and State governments are sovereign in their respective spheres, and that there can be no conflict between their rights so bounded. And we further believe in the words of Abraham Lincoln, "in a government of the people, for the people and by the people," and that all matters of public concern should be submitted to the people when it can be done.

We declare our hostility to the introduction into the United States of foreign contract labor and Chinese labor alien to our civilization and to our constitution, and we demand the rigid enforcement of the existing laws against it, and such immediate legislation as will exclude such labor from our shores.

We again affirm our opposition to the disfranchisement of any citizen except for crime of which he shall have been convicted by due process of law, and we favor the free exercise of the power of amnesty to all citizens disfranchised on account of polygamy or polygamous relations who do not obey and uphold the laws of the United States.

We recall the policy of the National Republican party that "The government by Congress of the Territories is based upon necessity only, to the end that they may become States in the Union. Therefore, we declare that the condition of the population, material resources, public intelligence and morality are such as to insure a stable local government therein, the people should be permitted, as a right inherent in them, to form for themselves constitutions and State governments, and be admitted into the Union."

We again deny that the Republican party in Utah was organized to unduly hasten statehood. The question of statehood for Utah was not immediately involved in the division of the people of the Territory on national party lines, but in view of the many changes which have recently transpired in our midst affecting the political and material interests of the people, and believing the conditions of the population, material resources, public intelligence and morality of this Territory are such as to insure a stable local government therein, we pledge ourselves to the people of this Territory that our best efforts shall be exerted to form a State government for Utah and to procure her admission into the Union of States.

We regret that in our efforts to redeem the people of this Territory from the yoke of Democratic bondage, and to prepare the Territory for admission into the Union as a Republican State, we have been hampered and beset by the active hostility of certain Republican officials, acting in their capacity of appointees of a Republican administration.

This convention respectfully counsels the President that all future appointments to office in this Territory should be of recognized members of this party. We believe such action by the President will prove beneficial to the party, both Territorial and national.

Jones of Provo arose and offered a minority report amending the original resolutions by inserting the following:

But in view of the many changes which have recently transpired in our midst, affecting the political and material interests of the people, and believing the conditions of the population, material resources, public intelligence and morality of the people of this Territory are such as to insure a stable local government therein, we pledge to the people of this Territory that our best efforts shall be exerted to form a State government for Utah, and to procure her admission into the Union of States.

GOVERNOR THOMAS ENDORSED.

Crane of Millard offered the following, which was adopted:

That this convention heartily endorses the action of Governor Arthur L. Thomas in his efforts to protect and further the interests of the Territory in his recommendations and by his exercise of the veto power.

ARTHUR BROWN.

The question of statehood is an important one. A year ago we pledged ourselves that we would not ask for immediate statehood. Has anything occurred since that time that justifies us to ask for it now? We should be consistent. A little more than two years ago a handful of men went down to Washington asking for statehood with a disfranchisement clause in it. They would disfranchise a majority of the best citizens of this Territory. With the menace of a "Liberal" victory and "Liberal" party in power, a party that resorts to every subterfuge to gain votes and hiremen to work on the street and in dark alleys, and even declare all the week long to Sunday; am I in favor of statehood? Yes, when conditions are ripe for it, not before.

JAMES DEVINE.

I desire to speak against the minority report. I do so because I believe it is cowardly. I do not attribute such feeling, however, to my friend Brown because it does not apply to him. I oppose it because it is contradictory to actions taken by the Republican party in the past and will therefore favor the majority report.

The previous question was called for and voted down, after which S. J. Kenyon was recognized by the chair. He presumed that he belonged to a party of honor. He believed that he was associating with honest men. The so-called minority report was only a motion which embraced the ideas of Mr. Jones. He advised the Republicans to stand by their colors and not advertise themselves as a body of deceptive, dishonest rogues. The enabling act introduced into Congress by the Republicans of Utah last winter should be conformed to.

Jones said he wished to correct a statement that had gone forth that his ideas alone were embodied in the resolution. One other, a gentleman from Millard, agreed with him. It was the Democratic party that first broke the faith made a year ago with reference to not asking for immediate statehood.

Isadore Norris offered an amendment, which carried, calling upon the President to take speedy action on the amnesty measure.

CAMPAIGN LITERATURE.

The committee on campaign literature reported that the national committee and tariff league published a number of books, but that but few of them treated in detail on Utah products that needed protection, and recommended that some works on the subjects of wool, lead ores, sugar, etc., be selected by the Territorial committee. The committee also highly recommended a "Handbook of Republicanism," edited by Calvin Reasoner.

The platform and amendments noted then carried.

NOMINATIONS BEGUN.

A Beaver delegate nominated Presley Denny.

A Sanpete delegate nominated Jacob Johnson.

JAMES DEVINE.

said he presumed that he was living in the year 1892. He rose to nominate a man who was destined to represent the Republican party of Utah in the next Congress of the United States. He knew that he had chosen wisely and well. He had not gone over the Wasatch in the East, nor the Sierras in the West. He had found in the fastnesses of these mountains a man who was a shining jewel, the brightest gem in the crown of young Utah. He first saw the light of this life in this city, thirty-three years ago. He was a bright child and is an able man. At the early age of thirteen by his own industry he left the district school and entered the University of Utah, where he graduated with high honors. Next we find him at the printer's case and then an able and fearless editor; the chief of the greatest Republican paper in Utah. He was the first to come out of the old People's party. He was the diplomat the statesman and orator that should represent Utah. He was the Napoleon of the Republican party, the Moses who would lead the Republican party to victory. His name was Frank J. Cannon. (Applause.)

ARTHUR BROWN.

said the question that confronted the convention was an important one. It was one that should be discussed carefully, calmly, dispassionately. Neither friendship nor hatred should cut any figure in the selection of a delegate who should represent the loyal people of the territory in the councils of the nation. A man should be nominated who would represent all of Utah. A man who could draw heavily from the "Liberal" party was preferable. It seemed to him that a man who could reach out and capture that vote should be chosen. It was not difficult to find such a man. He should be a man that could command influence at Washington, with the Republican influence in the East. If such a man was not selected the appointments would go to "Liberals." The Salt Lake delegation had instructed him to nominate an old man, an able lawyer and wise jurist, a veteran that was with Grant when he was elected to the presidency. He had a national reputation—the noblest Roman of them all. (Great applause.) He has fought for us; should we not fight for him? He has not applied for the office, for he is not an office seeker. It made no difference from whence he came as long as he was a resident of the Territory and a representative of the people of Utah. The speaker nominated Judge C. W. Bennett.

COLONEL BELLS.

said he did not think anyone would question his right to speak because he occupied the chair. He seconded the nomination of Judge Bennett.

HON. JOHN E. BOOTH.

of Provo, made a characteristic speech in which he nominated George Sutherland of Provo.

Hulenki and others of Weber County seconded Cannon's nomination.

BEN E. RICH.

said he would be ashamed to return to his home without paying a tribute to a man whose name would arouse a whirlwind of enthusiasm in this Territory. With the brilliancy and energy of genius he had climbed to the utmost round of the ladder. He was an unconquerable brain worker. His name was Cannon.

JOHN HENRY SMITH said it was not his purpose to reflect upon any candidate whose name had been presented to the convention, but the crisis had arisen when the right man should be selected. He seconded the nomination of Judge Bennett.

Ram Kenyon moved that the first ballot be an informal one. It was, and the first ballot was ordered, each chairman announcing the vote of his county.

When the result of the ballot was announced the wildest scene imaginable occurred. Many of the delegates sprang over chairs and yelled themselves hoarse. It was a veritable pandemonium. Cries of fraud filled the building and after the noise had subsided a second ballot was ordered and resulted as follows:

It was now midnight and cries of escaping gas caused the convention to adjourn until 10 o'clock this morning.

Friday's Proceedings.

The convention re-assembled at 10 o'clock this morning and a quarter of an hour later was called to order by Chairman Sells.

Charles Crane, of Millard, arose and asked the indulgence of the convention. He said that he had introduced a resolution last evening in regard to the veto power of Governor Thomas. He now believed it should be withdrawn.

On motion the action whereby the resolution was adopted was reconsidered and the resolution withdrawn, only one negative vote being cast.

THIRD BALLOT.

The chair now announced that the third ballot would be commenced. It resulted as follows:

COUNTY	Cannon	Bennett	Sutherland	Johnson

"NO CHOICE."

cried the chairman, and again disputes were furious and Colonel Sells became impatient and said that he would declare the convention adjourned unless order was observed.

BENNETT WITHDRAWS.

Arthur Brown took the platform and said that he had been instructed by Judge Bennett to withdraw his name and ask his friends to support George Sutherland. (Deafening cheers for five minutes.)

The chair announced that Cannon was elected, and the Weber County delegates fairly yelled themselves hoarse while they distributed Cannon badges among the other delegations.

Will L. Stuart of Salt Lake succeeded in being recognized by the chair after an effort of several minutes' duration. He moved that Cannon's nomination be made unanimous. The motion was put and carried amid cheers for Cannon, Republicanism and Utah.

Booth—In behalf of Utah County we claim the right to make the motion just carried.

The motion was accordingly repeated and again carried.

The Weber delegation then gave three cheers for Utah county and a like number for Sutherland. Provo then gave three cheers and a tiger for Cannon.

TO WAIT UPON CANNON.

On motion a committee of three, consisting of Messrs. Martin, Crane and Booth, was appointed to wait on Mr. Cannon and inform him of his nomination.

COLONEL SELLS PROTESTS.

C. O. Whittemore offered the following as having been written by Colonel Sells:

I hereby protest against committing the Territorial Republican party in favor of immediate statehood. Coming events will take care of this question. I do not believe that this is the time or the occasion to urge statehood for Utah Territory. I must respectfully ask that this protest against statehood may be made a part of the records of the proceedings of this convention.

Colonel Ferguson—I am proxy for Colonel Sells in this convention. While he has occupied the chair I have earnestly sought to discharge my duties before this convention in an honest and manly way, but I certainly cannot agree with the sentiments of Colonel Sells' protest. We, as Republicans, boast of the education and intelligence we possess. That being the case, we should know how to govern ourselves.

A year ago a distinguished Southern writer, George W. Cable, in an able article stated that Utah had appropriated that year three and a half times as much money per capita as the two Carolinas. (Applause.) Yet would any one dare make the assertion that those States should be made to withdraw and be kept out of the union? No. They belong there and so does Utah. (Great applause.) I am opposed to the protest.

There were numerous cries of "vote it down." When Colonel Sells explained that there was no necessity for a vote either favoring its adoption or rejection. He asked that it be simply filed as a portion of the record of the proceedings of the convention. Parliament was given.

TERRITORIAL COMMITTEE.

The following were then elected members of the Territorial committee:

Beaver—John N. Murdock.
Box Elder—E. A. Box.
Caches—W. H. Snelling.
Davis—Joseph T. Mabey.
Emery—H. A. Nelson.
Garfield—John F. Childster.
Juab—Alma Hague.
Kane—James Lewis.
Millard—Charles Crane.
Morgan—F. R. G. Welsh.
Rich—Wesley K. Walton.
Salt Lake—James Devine.
Sanpete—Anton H. Lund.
Sevier—William H. Clark.
Summit—Alma Eldredge.
Tocoele—A. C. Sheldis.
Utah—L. Holbrook.
Washington—Martin Slack.
Weber—Abbot H. Heywood.

LAND COMMISSIONERS.

James Peterson of Richfield, Joseph T. Jones of Provo and Joseph Howells of Logan were chosen as commissioners to locate university lands.

CANNON AFFAIRS.

At this juncture the committee returned accompanied by Cannon. The latter was given a warm welcome and was introduced to the audience by Colonel Sells.

MR. CANNON

said: This is the first convention of re-constructed Utah to nominate a delegate to Congress. It is eminently fitting and proper that the Republican party should be the pioneer. Gentlemen of the convention, I meet you in the same spirit that you have nominated me. I may be poor in some of the qualities that should go to make up your delegates. But I do not lack in these—love for Utah and Republicanism. (Prolonged applause.) This magnificent convention is only a preface of Republican success. If our hearts and best efforts end this coming campaign as they did this convention, we will sweep this Territory with victory from Logan to Dixie. (Applause.) One thing is certain, Utah will see political truth. The inevitability of Republicanism will be made manifest. Young Utah has been honored; old Utah must not be forgotten. Veterans of Republicanism, when the day for a larger political faith dawned on this Territory, you will not be neglected. You have heard the pledge, and it will not be broken. Republicanism offers no intangible dream. Freedom of thought and ballot and reward for toil are its prizes. It says that it is the duty of the government to provide and protect labor so far as possible. Americans by birth and adoption are best fitted for carrying out these ideas. Republicanism is no longer a mysterious uncertainty in Utah, but a living, moving, progressive and beneficial power. Its destiny is to direct our land until she is politically free. Gentlemen again I thank you.

TUMULTUOUS APPLAUSE.

Three cheers were again given for Cannon, and the latter proposed a similar number for President Harrison and Republicanism. This was responded to with alacrity and the old structure of Thespian art fairly shook. The convention then adjourned.

MALAD STAKE CONFERENCE.

A quarterly conference of the Malad Stake of Zion was held at Portage, Box Elder county, Utah, commencing September 11th, at 10 a. m. and continuing during that and following day.

During conference the stand was occupied by Dr. Karl G. Maeser of Provo, President of Seventies C. D. Fjeldsted of Ogden, and Brother Crandel Dunn of Beaver Dam, as special visitors, and the Stake Presidency, together with a goodly number of Stake officers and Bishops. President O. C. Hoskins presided.

First Stake Counselor John M. McCrary made some appropriate opening remarks, in which he expressed a conviction that the people of the Malad Stake were on the improve in the performance of their duties. Brother Crandel Dunn spoke of the feeling of satisfaction experienced by those who lived up to the requirements of the Gospel, and enjoyed its gifts and blessings.

Principal George Cole, of the Malad Stake Academy, showed that God will hold us responsible for the use we make of our time and talent. President of Seventies C. D. Fjeldsted spoke of the diversified conditions of the human family. He advised all to remember that we are worshipping a God who will reward us according to the deeds done in the body, and to act accordingly. Second Stake Counselor William H. Gibbs dwelt upon the manner in which God had blessed us in our last harvest. Dr. Karl G. Maeser advocated our giving to the youth of Zion a true education. He advised us to teach by example, and to do all in a spirit of kindness. He predicted that many of the youth of Zion who attended the Church academies would become good and brilliant men and women, and showed that a higher education would turn the minds of Zion's youth toward their forefathers by giving them a desire to officiate for them in the Houses of God. Thus would the hearts of the fathers be turned toward them in gratitude, as a fulfillment of prophecy.

The conference was a great success. The house was filled to overflowing. Prof. D. P. Jones' Stake choir rendered excellent service.

Stake Secretary.

THE CHOLERA.

FIRE ISLAND, N. Y., Sept. 13.—A great bustle followed the arrival of passengers from the "Normania" and "Rugia" at the hotel today. Considering the fact that 500 guests arrived within five minutes it was natural that some confusion should result. Such progress was made by the temporary hotel clerk that inside of two hours all were comfortably located. Gray-haired men jumped about on the sand like boys. The second cabin passengers were put in the westerly end and the first class in the easterly. At 8:30 supper was served. It would be difficult to find a happier crowd than that which filled the dining-room. Conventionalities were cast aside and every one knew every one else and congratulations showered from every quarter of the room. No strict quarantine was maintained and all the passengers were thankful that they were not on the "Cepheus" tonight. In reply to an offer of men from Islip to withdraw the injunction if the governor would promise to sell the hotel, Governor Flower sent the following telegram:

"S. A. Jennings:

Your dispatch received and your proposition declined. The conduct of the people of Islip in refusing to shelter the passengers of the "Normania" is a disgrace to our commonwealth. The State accepts no terms from the law-breakers except submission to its authority. Your proposition is an insult to the executive and State.

ROSWELL P. FLOWER."

In conversation with Mr. Palmer tonight, that gentleman said:

"One thing I want to say is that the American public has gone crazy on cholera. Not one American has yet died on any of the infected ships. The disease only takes hold of underfed and unclean persons. I have lived with it for eighteen days and I know."

Late tonight men were circulating among the passengers in the hotel offering to run them across to the main shore for $50 a head.

S. S. Sammls, late proprietor of the hotel, said the trouble was a tempest in a teapot. Some of the Bay men, excited by people who had political measures to serve, became impressed more or less with the idea that the establishment of quarantine at Fire Island would injure their business. This is all both, and they know it is so, and practically admit it. The "Normania's" passengers were all landed and will be made as comfortable as possible. The Sheriff informed Governor Flower that there was no further use for the troops. It is expected that the military will be withdrawn tomorrow, and they will go to Fire Island.

An Associated Press correspondent subsequently interviewed a number of leading men, all classes of residents, Bay men and hotel men, and all join in saying that the views expressed by Sammls are undoubtedly correct in all main particulars. One fact became evident to the correspondent, and that was that the quarantine of people on Fire Island is a farce of the very worst description. At least a dozen boats came from the island to the main land and there landed loads of people whom it seemed from the conversation generally and from the admissions, several had been in close communication and conversation with the "Normania's" detained cabin passengers. The sheriff assured Governor Flower that the people would abide by the law and there was no further need of troops or a posse.

QUARANTINE, N. Y., Sept. 13.—The evening of this day which started with anxiety, troubles and alarming rumors of likely flights and bloodshed concluded with everything calm. No new cases of cholera are on board the steamers not on the island, and the only present worry of Health Officer Jenkins is his summons to appear before the Supreme Court in Brooklyn and Judge Bernard, to show cause by what right he detains the cabin passengers of the "Normania" on Fire Island; by what right he, as Health Officer of the port of New York, detained them when they were out of his jurisdiction in the State of New Jersey on board the "Stonington" or on the "Cepheus" lying in the waters of Suffolk county; by what right he placed them on an unworthy vessel like the "Stonington" and sent them to sea in the "Cepheus" without proper accommodation or provisions and in a vessel unfit and unsafe for the purpose.

PARIS, Sept. 13.—Dr. Proust has reported to the Hygienic Committee of France that the epidemic in Hamburg has surpassed in intensity anything of the kind that ever has occurred. Up to the present time the number of deaths has been far above the published figures. The wards of the cholera hospital, he says, are always full of patients, and hundreds of bodies are daily removed. A large insurance company has suspended operations owing to the heavy mortality.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14.—The law officers of the government are looking up the legal powers of the President in the matter of a temporary suspension or prohibition of immigration. Nothing, however, has yet been done on the subject.

DETROIT, Sept. 14.—The city council has adopted a resolution directing the mayor, in view of the impending danger of an invasion of the Asiatic cholera, to request the President of the United States to prohibit foreign and Canadian immigration for at least 90 days.

HAVRE, Sept. 14.—There were eleven new cases and seven deaths of cholera reported here yesterday. This is an increase of one new case and a decrease of six deaths, compared with the previous day.

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—Now that Asiatic cholera has developed among the dwellers in this city, each may ask his neighbor: "Well, what of it?" This expression implies no overconfidence. It lies within each individual's power to assure his own personal safety almost beyond peradventure. He has but to drink no water and milk except such as has been thoroughly boiled, and to eat no food that has not been thoroughly and fully cooked, and to abstain from butter and cheese, and he may then possess his soul in serenity. Cholera will pass him by.

Ever since the "Moravia" arrived in port, State and local officials have been straining every nerve to prevent cholera gaining a foothold in this city and being spread by various channels to the country at large, but while they were all looking seaward, cholera quietly made its presence felt in our midst and five corpses today mark its advent.

How did it get in? The question is on every one's lips. The health officers are puzzled, but stringent precautions are being taken to prevent its spread. At each of the houses where the patients lived, two doctors have been stationed, to remain constantly on duty, enforcing the most rigid rules of cleanliness, seeing to disinfection, etc. No family must move out of the houses without a written permit. The idea is to overwhelm and stamp out the disease in each house, as was done with typhus upon its first appearance. That this could be done was successfully demonstrated in the cholera outbreak of 1866. The doctors on duty in each infected house will remain there until danger of further outbreak is finally passed. The health officers fully believe this will be before long. Other cases are expected to develop from the scattered centers of contagion, but none in the same building.

That is the way health officers purpose to drive cholera from the city now that it has gotten in, and if the citizens will use reason and not get into

they are sure they will succeed, though they by no means under-estimate the danger. Every possibility, every feature of cholera epidemic has been discounted and provided against. It is hard for the department to trace the cases so far reported, because all of the victims are dead.

The situation is identical with that of 1866, when cholera suddenly appeared in three or four widely separated places in this city after it had been successfully quarantined out the previous fall.

The first case this year was Chas. M. Cavo, a plasterer by trade, who lived on Tenth avenue. The only possible clue was that he may have been working on a wharf, yet none of the pest ships come to wharf. McCavo was seized with cramps Monday evening and the next morning took to bed, dying Tuesday evening. They diagnosed the case as Asiatic cholera, and the house was disinfectant as a measure of precaution. Dr. Biggs, who made the autopsy, declared, however, that its result was "not at all suggestive of Asiatic cholera, while showing familiar signs of cholera morbus." In spite of this statement, however, some of the intestinal fluid was given to sanitary headquarters and cultivated in jellatine produced a crop of cholera bacilli, and the nature of the disease is no longer open to question. Eight days have elapsed since McCavo's death. What caused the long delay in ascertaining the exact facts is not stated.

THE OTHER VICTIMS

were William Wigman and wife of 721 E'venth avenue, Charlotte Beck of 1764 Second avenue, and Minnie Levinger of 411 East Forty-sixth street. There have been other cases of which the board has not yet made an official report.

It was said at police headquarters this evening that the disease was brought into the city by butchers taking meat to quarantined ships, but this could not be supported. There was the greatest excitement in the station tonight when the report was made of the five cases of cholera which had taken place in New York. Dr. Jenkins expressed himself as confident that it did not pass quarantine.

He said the best authorities in the world held that a stringent and complete quarantine could only claim to prevent 70 per cent. of the possibilities of the introduction of cholera into a place. The other 30 per cent. of the possibilities of cholera invading a seaport were open to other means over which quarantine had no control. He said it was quite possible for a person on visiting a cholera patient or hospital to transmit a germ from the first to a third party without feeling any of the effects himself.

He saw no reason why cholera should not be effectually stamped out in New York. The fact that cholera had succeeded in preventing itself in the city, would not, the doctor said, interfere with the restriction now prevailing at Quarantine.

President Wilson said this evening there was no occasion for any excitement in this city. The health department has taken every possible measure to prevent the spread of infection. Sanitary Superintendent Edson said there was no danger of cholera becoming epidemic.

NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—This morning opens bright and frosty and New York is enjoying just the kind of weather to prevent the spread of the cholera.

The few cases which have appeared here and which were concealed by the board of health have in no way alarmed the authorities or citizens. People here have become educated up to a point of having little or no fear of the formerly dreaded disease.

Immigrant passengers of the steamer "Friesland" which arrived here on August 29th, seem to have brought the disease to little Minnie Levinger, who died September 11th. They are traced back to Antwerp which they reached from other cities of Europe, doubtless infected with cholera. When they reached Quarantine there was no illness reported aboard, and after few hours of attention and so-called fumigation they were allowed to proceed. From the steamship pier the passengers scattered over the city and country.

"Four young women went to the house where little Minnie lived. The infection was probably in their clothing, as they escaped attack themselves."

New York, Sept. 16.—The Herald this (Friday) morning says: Another plague ship is in port with another story of disease and death on its voyage. Two more victims are added to the long list of those who have died of cholera between Hamburg and New York. This is the story of the steamship "Bohemia," which reached New York last night and anchored in lower Quarantine. The Herald tug, which had been waiting for her inside of the Hook, drew up alongside as she steamed in and Captain Schroeder came to the rail to tell about the voyage. He admitted the essential facts of the misfortune that had befallen the company.

"We had eleven deaths on board," said the captain, "all little children. There is no sickness on board at present."

"Of what did the children die?"

"Diarrrhea."

"Was it cholera?"

"I can't tell. The last death was five days ago. Nobody has been ill on board since then."

"How long after you left port did the first death occur?"

"About the fourth day. No adult passengers have died or have been sick."

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Sept. 15.—About 7 o'clock this morning an Italian was found writhing in terrible agony in a field on the outskirts of the city. The police were at once notified and when the ambulance arrived, the Italian, evidently a laborer, was exhibiting all the symptoms of cholera. He was removed to a hospital and isolated. The man's name is Romero Rooney, a farm laborer, and this afternoon his brother, Natalie Rooney, who lived with him, was stricken with the same symptoms. He was also taken to a hospital and isolated. The health officer and hospital authorities maintain rigid discipline as to the case.

At the hospital tonight it was stated that the men were not suffering from cholera. The hospital authorities seem to be inclined to reticence, but it is thought that the illness are suffering from a combination of acute mania and colic.

CHICAGO, Sept. 15.—Secretary Reilly of the State board of health had a lengthy conference with the city health commissioner today. Plans have been made to meet any emergency, and everything possible is being done to ward off the epidemic of cholera. The authorities are proceeding on the theory that cholera will, in all probability, reach Chicago. Dr. Reilly, however, does not believe it will become epidemic.

A municipal cholera hospital has been established near the Bridewell, and thirty patients can be cared for there alone. The most rigid inspection of all incoming trains is being made by inspectors, who board them beyond the State line. If a case of cholera is found on any train, the train will be run on a branch line at once to the State refuge camp, which has already been established near the State line. Five hundred tents are already there, and everything is in readiness for the reception of patients. The railway companies have notified the health department that no passengers will be accepted at Eastern points for the West unless each bears a clean bill of health.

QUARANTINE, N. Y., Sept. 15.—Commissioner Allen has just stated on his return from Lower Bay that Dr. Sanborn now believes Mrs. Pearson poisoned her two children, who died at upper quarantine on the "Wyoming" and then committed suicide herself in the same way. She appears to have been married to the man who passed as her husband.

The commissioner reports the death of one child from croup on the "Wyoming." No deaths or new cases of cholera today.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Sept. 15.—J. W. Roth, mining superintendent, arrived here from Monclova, Mexico, today. He says a telegraph operator there died from cholera Tuesday. The town was immediately quarantined, and now no one is permitted to enter or leave. It is reported that others have been attacked by the disease there, and it is further reported that cholera is epidemic in San Luis, Potosi and Vera Cruz.

QUARANTINE, N. Y., Sept. 16.—Dr. Byron telegraphs that he has visited the "Bohemia." There are 633 steerage passengers, 10 cabin passengers and a crew of 77 aboard the vessel, all apparently well. The condition of the vessel as regards cleanliness is first-rate. The dead are Sara Dister, twenty-five years old, died September 6th; Peshe Dister, age three, died on the 6th; Rewke Wessell, age twenty-five, died on the 7th; Jankel Fawkochnik, age one year, died on the 7th; Marianne Rodonsk, two years, died on the 7th; Bohance Friedman, aged five years, died on the 8th; Schrendall Bass, age one year, died on the 8th; Mosche Bass, age four years, died on the 12th; Seilig Lipshon, age one year, died on the 15th; Taube Mendelsohn, age three years, died on the 16th; Lieb Mendelsohn, age five years, died on the 15th.

The "Bohemia" is another "Scandia." The eleven deaths on the voyage are given as due to gastro-intestinal trouble by the director, but according to all appearances they are due to genuine Asiatic cholera. She left the plague stricken city of Hamburg on Sept. 8rd and three days later Sara Dister was taken ill. It was no case of infantile disease as the woman in question was 25 years of age and her little child Peshe was taken off the same day. Rewke Wessell, a grown woman, and two children also succumbed.

So it went on day by day. There were two on the eighth and then a stay of four days, when again a case was recorded. The twelfth day saw only one death, and the pest rested until the day of her arrival, when three children, aged from one to eight years, died within a few miles of port. On her arrival there were four sick on board, and they have been removed to Swinbourne Island by Dr. Byron.

HAYRE, Sept. 16.—There were fifteen new cases of cholera here yesterday, two more than Wednesday, and three deaths, four less than Wednesday.

VRULENT IN RUSSIA.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 16.—Fifty-nine new cases of cholera were reported in this city yesterday as against fifty-five on the previous day. The deaths were nine less than the previous day. The epidemic is still virulent in the provinces of Saratoff, Samara, Simbirsk, Tambof, Kazan, Voronezh, Lublin and Don Territory.

NEW YORK, Sept. 16.—During the last twenty-four hours not fewer than thirty cases of suspected cholera have been reported at the health department.

Mrs. Mary Sposetti, who was reported last night to be suffering from cholera, was examined and found free from the disease.

Dr. Laboucher reported this morning that an Italian in Sullivan street last night was taken with diarrhea and died in two hours. The case will be investigated.

Dr. Edson says there is little doubt that Mary Connelly, taken from 692 Second avenue yesterday, has cholera. She is sinking rapidly.

John McAvary, a street sweeper, was found suffering with cramp today. He was taken to St. Vincent's hospital. His case is being investigated.

The health department bulletin reports that the bacteriological examination of the intestinal contents of the body of Charlotte Beck, who died September 13th, revealed the presence of spirillum Asiatic cholera. So far the board of health has been unable to trace the origin of the cholera cases which have occurred in this city.

The people of Green Point, L. I., are needlessly alarmed over the report that two Russian women escaped from the pest ship "Moravia" and went to join their husbands at Green Point. A search of the records at Ellis Island today revealed the fact that the women came here on the "Gallia" on September 4th.

The health board has appointed twenty-five more physicians as sanitary inspectors and increased the disinfecting corps by six more men. They also asked for a detail of policemen at all houses where there are suspected cases of cholera.

The medical staff of the penitentiary at Blackwell's Island deny the story that one of the convicts is sick with the cholera. They say the prisoner is only suffering from colic with merely dysenteric symptoms.

The chamber of Commerce cholera emergency fund today reached a total of $180,771.94. According to the health board, there have been no cases of cholera in Brooklyn yet. The case of the Polish girl, Josephine Eiker, who died under suspicious circumstances yesterday, is officially announced to have been cholera morbus only.

Thousands of men and women were on the Hamburg company's pier at Hoboken when the "Cepheus" hove in sight with the "Normanna's" passengers today. The vessel was soon tied, and as the passengers ran down the gangplank they were welcomed by friends in waiting.

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.—The second cabin and steerage passengers of the steamship "Wyoming," which has been held in quarantine since Sept. 6th, have issued appeals to the public. They protest against the detention of seven hundred persons cramped in the unwholesome quarters aboard the ship, when the vessel came in with a clean bill of health, save the indisposition of a baby who had been delicate since its birth. They state that the detention resulted in the death of four children and a serious shock to the mother; that many other children aboard were threatened with sickness, due to foul air of the ship; that though no cases of cholera have appeared since the ship left Liverpool, twenty days ago, yet, the close proximity to the infected ship is a constant menace to the health of the passengers. In view of the above facts, the signers to the appeal demand immediate release of the ship from quarantine.

QUARANTINE, Sept. 17.—The passengers of the steamer "Wyoming" positively refuse to be transferred to Fire Island this morning, stating that the vessel was not infected.

QUARANTINE, N. Y., Sept. 17.—Dr. Sanborn, who returned from Lower

Quarantine tonight, reports that a new case has developed on board the "Scapdia." The patient, Regina Weleskoop, is 65 years of age, and Dr. Byron transferred her to Swinburne Island today. She was very sick with cholera and unlikely to live through the night.

Dr. Byron has received news of a case of cholera on board the "Bohemnia." The patient's name is Jeanette Chalmowilkey, 28 years old. She was removed today from the steamer and taken to Swinburne Island.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 17.—The United States minister to Norway and Sweden cables that Sweden declares United States ports on the east coast to be infected. It is presumed this means a quarantine.

VALPARAISO, Sept. 17.—Sept. 17.—The steamer "America" has arrived at Buenos Ayres from Genoa. She had on the voyage twenty-four deaths from cholera and has been quarantined.

FIRE ISLAND, N. Y., Sept. 18.—Not the slightest opposition was offered by the health authorities or Baymen to the landing of the "Wyoming" passengers today. Dr. Voight and Manager P. B. Wall had arrangements so complete for quietly and pleasantly locating the new arrivals that within an hour after landing every one had possession of a room and had dined. No sickness among the passengers is reported.

CAMP LOW, N. J., Sept. 18.—The unfortunate steerage passengers of the steamers "Normania" and "Rugia" were landed here today. No sooner were the passengers landed than General Hamilton, on hearing that they had had nothing to eat today, ordered dinner served to them. That the poor emigrants were hungry was plainly evidenced by the rush they made for food. Women and children were looked after by a corps of women attendants.

Nearly all the passengers were loud in their denunciation of the officials on the Hamburg-American line on account of the treatment they received on the steamers.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J. Sept. 18.—James Carr, a canal boat captain, was stricken with cholera this morning and this evening is very low. The case is pronounced Asiatic cholera by Baldwin, inspector of the board of health.

Later—Carr died this evening. He suffered little during the four hours he lived. Dr. Eason of New York will make an examination of the body. By order of the mayor the body was wrapped in antiseptic blankets and deposited in a six-foot grave. A guard was placed at the pethouse, where Carr died, because of threats to burn it. Tomorrow six inmates of the house where Carr was taken sick will be sent to the pethouse and kept isolated.

CAMP LOW, Sandy Hook, Sept. 20.—12:15 a.m.—It is officially announced that at this late hour Asiatic cholera has broken out here. Francisco Morenzi, a "Normania" passenger who was landed here Sunday morning, died of the disease in the tent where he has been isolated, at 10 p.m. The body will be cremated at Swinburne Island.

A widow, name unknown, accompanied by her four children, was taken ill with every symptom of the disease shortly after 11 p.m. and Dr. Rauch, the cholera expert, immediately had the family removed to an isolate tent. The man's death is said to be due to the excess in which he indulged on Monday night. Great excitement prevails among the officials of the camp, and fears are entertained of a stampede of people here from fear, when the fact is made public. The dead man and the infected family were passengers on the "Normania," and had been in quarantine for eighteen days past. Mrs. Scheldt, who was ill from the effects of premature confinement on Hoffman's Island, died tonight in the hospital outside of camp.

NEW YORK, Sept. 19.—Louis Wein-hagel, a coachman, was removed tonight by the health authorities from the boarding house at 4-6 Exeter Place to the receiving hospital at the foot of West Sixteen street. He is believed to be suffering from an attack of Asiatic cholera, and the physician in attendance passed the opinion that Wein-hagel could not live through the night. The houses, which contained over two hundred other boarders, were quarantined.

THE "FURNESSE"

arrived here today from Glasgow with 828 passengers on board; 221 in the first cabin and 408 in the second. There is a report down town that the "Furnesse" is carrying steerage passengers as cabin passengers in order to avert the twenty days' quarantine regulations. It is said that many of the 408 supposed second cabin are really steerage passengers, and when the lists were examined the names of eighty-two were missing. At the office of the company it was denied that steerage passengers had come over in the cabin. The authorities will likely investigate the matter. The steamer is still quarantined.

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 19.—Dr. Irving A. Watson, chairman of the International Quarantine Committee, recently appointed by the International conference of the board of health, who has just returned, said in an interview today that there was not a single port on the North Atlantic coast supplied with all the requisite means and methods of modern maritime sanitary science. At no single port was there found a suitable plant for quickly and efficiently disinfecting a plague-stricken ship. Antiquated methods are strictly employed.

"While many of our ports are deficient as regards quarantine stations cholera is not very likely to be admitted through those ports during the coming year although danger is ever present of its introduction and all immigration from cholera-infected countries should be absolutely suspended for a year or more. The commission found the port of Philadelphia the best equipped of any port examined. Thus far there has been no reason for alarming this country, nothing that should interfere with domestic travel.

"The lateness of the season is in our favor for this year, and Congress and other legislative bodies should furnish the necessary means to strengthen the weak points in the defenses required to prevent the introduction of cholera or any other disease."

SCANDINAVIAN CONFERENCE.

On the 18th of September, 1850, the first branch in Scandinavia of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized by Apostle Erastus Snow, at Copenhagen, Denmark. The conference celebration of this auspicious event was this morning commenced in this city.

Hundreds of Scandinavian Saints from various parts of the Territory arrived last night and this morning via the railroads. Those who came on this morning's trains were welcomed at the depot by the Provo military band.

At 10 a. m. the Scandinavian Saints assembled at the Tabernacle, which has been neatly decorated with flowers and evergreens in honor of the occasion. On the stand were seated President Fieldstad, of the first seven presidents of Seventies, Patriarch O. N. Liljenquist, Bishop J. P. R. Johnson of this city, Elder C. C. Christensen of M. Pleasant, Elder Andrew Jensen, of Salt Lake City, Elder O. H. Berg and others.

Bishop J. P. R. Johnson, by virtue of a letter received from Apostle A. H. Lund, presided. All the veterans of the Church in the congregation were invited to take seats on the stand. The invitation was quite generally complied with.

A letter regretting his absence was received from Apostle Lund. The letter was dated at St. George, and gave as a reason for his inability to attend conference the fact that he, in company with Apostle Lyman, still had several of the southern States to visit before returning.

A brief historical sketch of the Church, special attention being paid to the Scandinavian mission, was given by Elder Andrew Jensen. He gave as the date of the first baptism in Scandinavia, July 19th, 1850, in Sweden; and on August 12th fifteen persons were baptized at Copenhagen, Denmark. The speaker gave many other interesting Church historical data.

Elder Fjølster, a veteran of seventy-seven years, and one of the fifteen baptized at Copenhagen, bore a strong testimony to the truth of the Gospel, and felt to thank God for having been permitted to embrace it.

The meeting closed with singing by the Scandinavian glee club of Logan, and benediction by Elder Jens Hanson.

A number of interesting speeches were made in the afternoon.

Elder N. Isaacson, of Mantli, Elder Martin Christofferson, of Salt Lake City, and Elder O. H. Berg, of Provo, who had received the Gospel many years since, in Norway, spoke briefly, all bearing firm testimonies.

Elders Lovendahl and Johnson, of Salt Lake county, gave interesting accounts of their conversion to the truth.

Patriarch O. N. Liljenquist related the incident of his first acquaintance with the Gospel message in Copenhagen. He spoke of the great responsibility resting on the Saints in doing work in the Temples for their dead kindred, and admonished all to faithfully perform their portion of this important work.

The choir sang and benediction was pronounced by Bishop Peter Madsen, of Lake View.

INTOLERANT DISCRIMINATION.

THE Rev. R. G. McNeice is greatly exercised over the criticisms on the movement for the closing of business houses on Wednesday to boom the "revival" now in progress in this city. He has written a long letter to the Tribune which that paper prints, but describes it as childish and some of it "absolutely infelicitous in its bigotry and littleness."

We do not care to elip the effusion, as it is too frivolous for these columns, but we will notice one of its closing paragraphs because it contains a vicious, untruthful and unchristian fling at the "Mormons." As to the most of the other parts of the letter, they are simply a petulant and puerile attempt to draw a parallel between the alleged "revival" with the funeral services of a nation's fallen hero, a national Thanksgiving, Christmas and other general public observance. No argument is necessary to show the immense difference between them and a preaching meeting in a tent, so we offer none.

But Mr. McNeice says the Hebrews and the "Mormons" would have "no just grounds to ask or expect such a proclamation" as that issued in this instance by the Mayor, "for the sufficient reason that the United States Supreme Court has decided by unanimous decision that this is not a Hebrew, nor a 'Mormon,' nor a Mohammedan, but a 'Christian nation.' Hence it is entirely legitimate for Presidents and Governors and Mayor to issue proclamations in promotion of the Christian morality and Christian institutions on which our nation is founded."

The insinuation in this is to the effect that a "Mormon" is not a Christian, and the "Mormon" religion is not a Christian religion, and further that the Supreme Court of the United States has virtually so decided. We are not much surprised at anything that a man will say who has been proven to have deliberately misrepresented both the "Mormon" people and the "Mormon" religion. But we would like to see the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which contains the assertion made by this minister, so that it may be shown how much truth there is in his words and how much he has drawn upon his imagination.

The Supreme Court of the United States has never rendered any decision concerning the religious character of this nation. The Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land, and it utterly forbids the enactment of anything that would tend in that direction. That body has rendered decisions to the contrary of the preacher's assertion. If it has used the term Christian in any way, it has been in a social and not a religious sense. It has upheld in several opinions, notably in the Reynolds case, the Jeffersonian doctrine which in terms excluded the use of the word "Christian religion" in law and constitution. It was opposed also by Madison, who maintained that "religion, or the duty we owe the Creator, is not within the cognizance of civil government;" the Supreme Court also endorsed this. And further, it approved of the action of the Virginia Assembly, which repudiated in the State bill of rights, all reference to the Christian religion attempted to be endorsed, and adopted that which, as explained by Jefferson, "meant to comprehend within the mantle of its protection the Jew and the Gentile, the Christian and the Mohammedan, the Hindoo and Infidel of every denomination."

Therefore the proclamations of Presidents and other public officers for Thanksgiving days and other public holidays, while recognizing Almighty God, do not have any special reference to a particular religion. If they did they would be out of place and contrary to the genius of our national government, and insulting alike to the Hebrew and the Mohammedan, the Infidel and Hindoo who may be citizens of our country.

But if a "Mormon" is not a Christian then there are no Christians in America. This is not meant to draw a comparison between the life of any individual and that of another, though we would not shrink from that, if it meant the course of the Rev. Presbyterian and that of "Mormon" men in this community. But it refers to the religion classed as "Mormon" and any of the so-called Christian sects of the age. A member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is at least as fairly entitled to the appellation of a Christian as a member of the Presbyterian Church. The organization, doctrines, ordinances, discipline and general characteristics of the former can be shown to compare closely with those of the primitive Christian Church, where the comparison with the other would demonstrate a great dissimilarity.

Therefore the "Mormons" on the supposition that only Christians have any right to recognition in such proclamations as that issued by the Mayor, stand on the same plane with the Presbyterians and the Baptists, the Methodists and the Congregationalists and all the rest of the multifarious sectaries of modern Christendom.

But the term "Christian" as designating a special form of religion, has no right to a place in a public proclamation from President or Governor, Mayor or other civil officer. The Hebrews have just as much right to call for a closing of the stores on any occasion connected with their efforts to smelt-rate mankind, as have the Christians of any particular creed. And the "Mormons" have as much rights either to ask for a general suspension of business during their general conference, when the general public are invited to attend for their moral and spiritual welfare.

Bigotry and intolerance, narrow discrimination and sectarian spleen are anachronisms in the nineteenth century. We have nothing to say against Mr. Mills nor his efforts to awaken religious interest and moral sensibility here or elsewhere, and wish him only good things and success in his legitimate ministry. But we think he will agree with us that such efforts as these put forth by a self-constituted champion in today's Tribune, will only tend to damage him and the work he is endeavoring to perform.

THE HAGUE, Sept. 14.—There was a death from Cholera yesterday in Maasland, South Holland. One case of the disease was reported at Elburg on the Zuider Zee.

LETTER FROM MEXICO.

The long-continued drouth has ended at last, to the joy of people and range stock; many of the latter have died for want of grass during the past season. For two years there has been but little rain, causing small streams and springs to dry up and rendering the prairies brown and bare. But in spite of all this the people raised some grain near Casas Grandes, and we in Juarez have produced quite an amount of peaches, apples, plums and other fruit. I never saw finer peaches, apples and grapes in any country. Arrangements are being made to establish a fruit cancery here, and a small beginning will be made this season. There is but little land in this settlement suitable for grain, but considerable that is adapted to fruit culture, and we hope to build up quite an extensive fruit and canning industry here.

Our quarterly conference just closed was largely attended by people from Diaz, Dublin, Juarez, Pacheco and Cave valley, also by some from the new settlement in Sonora; and it was a time of rejoicing with all. The instructions given were wise and comforting; and the Juarez choir, under the able leadership of Brother Walser, added greatly to the enjoyment of all. We learn by brethren from our new settlement in Sonora that Colonel Kosterlitzky, military commandant in northern Sonora, had lately returned from the City of Mexico with very generous concessions of government for the settlers in Sonora. He stated that President Diaz was much interested in the welfare of the Sonora colony, and that he gave it the name of Oaxaca, in honor of his birthplace. He also gave great concessions to the settlers in Sonora, in addition to those granted in the general colonization law, as follows:

Authority to import, free of duty, for one year, corn, 15,000 pounds; barley, 5,000 pounds; wheat, 5,000 pounds; beans, 10,000 pounds; flour, 30,000 pounds; meal, 5,000 pounds; alfalfa seed, 3,000 pounds; garden seed, 50 pounds; rice, 2,000 pounds; potatoes, 5,000 pounds; coffee, 1,000 pounds; tea, 75 pounds; salt, 30,000 pounds.

The Sonora colonists are exempt for ten years from all military service, State duties (import and export); expense for consular papers and legalization of papers; all kinds of contributions and taxes except man/gel and stamps; the right to import free of duty all breeding and work animals, farm tools, machinery, building materials, and furniture. And the government gives premiums on all notable or new industries.

The new settlement of Oaxaca was granted a full civil organization of our brethren, as follows:

President, John U. Rencher; Judge, J. H. Larcford; Recorder, Peter A. Dillman; Constable, M. H. Martineau; Stamps, William Maxwell.

A professed Latter-day Saint (whose name is known here) took a letter some time previous to President Diaz, hoping to injure the new settlers of Oaxaca, saying they had already obtained colonization rights in Chihuahua and were now trying to do the same in Sonora. But President Diaz, said to Colonel Kosterlitzky, "The Mormons have not had their rights as colonists in Chihuahua, but they shall have their rights in Sonora," so this intended shaft of malice fell short of its mark, even if it does not finally pierce its sender.

We who dwell in peaceful Mexico, where freedom and liberty of conscience exist, where mobs, strikes and lynchings are almost unknown, view with deep interest and concern the prevalence of mob law and anarchy in the United States, once the home of liberty and equal rights; and pray that heaven may bless this republic, so generous to the stranger, and preserve it from similar evils for many years to come.

J. H. MARTINEAU.

COLONIA JUAREZ, Mexico, September 23, 1892.

CITY COUNCIL.

The City Council met in regular session Tuesday, September 13th, President Looftrow in the chair. The members present were: Rich, Folland, Hardy, Horn, Moran, Bell, Lawson, Evans, Wantland, Karriek, Simondi, Helm.

STILL UNOCCUPIED.

Roll called showed that S. F. Walker, Ewing's successor, was not present, to fill the councilman's chair recently made vacant by the resignation of Mr. Ewing.

The competing paving companies and a large number of friends and sympathizers and curious spectators occupied every available inch of room in the auditorium of the council chamber.

The minutes of the previous session were read, amended and approved, after which the recorder read the account of the proceedings of the recent board of equalization and review meetings. These were also approved.

TAX ROLL APPROVED.

On motion of Folland the city tax roll, as returned by Assessor and Collector Leonard and passed upon by the City Council sitting as a board of equalization and review, was accepted and the board adjourned sine die.

Regular Proceedings.

It was 8:30 when the regular business of the evening commenced.

PETITIONS

were read and referred as follows:

The Ladies' Literary Club asked that the Council appropriate $135 per month to the Pioneer Library instead of $38 a month—the amount already paid to that institution by the city.

Wantland moved that the request be granted.

Horn said he wanted further light on the matter.

Rich said that originally $300 per annum only was applied for, but the Council felt generous and gave $1000 to the literary people. He moved to amend by referring it to the committee on claims.

Wantland spoke in favor of the petition.

The motion to refer carried.

PITTS' RESIGNATION.

The resignation of Policeman Pitts was accepted.

S. A. McDowell asked to be reimbursed for taxes paid in 1891. Committee on claims.

WANT THEIR MONEY.

Lewis M. Cannon, who has paid $500, and A. H. Cannon, who has paid $2371.70 for watermain extensions which have not yet been made, sent in the following communication which was referred to the committee on waterworks:

We, your petitioners, beg to represent that we did on the 14th day of July, 1892, pay to Collector F. L. Leonard the sums set opposite our names in consideration of a promise that the watermain would immediately be extended from Seventh to Tenth South streets on Eighth West, the petition for such extension having been favorably acted upon by your honorable body. The tax for the said extension of mains was to be levied without delay upon the property to be thus benefited, and there was to be refunded to us from such collections an amount equal to that which we had paid, less the amount of tax due on our property on the street named. Since this payment was made no effort has been made to collect the watermain tax, nor have the mains been laid; we therefore ask that you refund to us the amounts we have paid into the city and for which we hold receipts. We still hold ourselves in readiness to pay our proportion of the expense for the extensions of the mains, but we do desire to have our money placed where we receive no benefit therefrom. We therefore ask for your early and favorable action on our request for the return of our money.

STREET OBSTRUCTIONS.

B. Pettit asked that a nuisance in the shape of Union Pacific cars, loaded with freight, standing in front of his premises, be abated. Folland moved that it be referred to the mayor. The chair was of the opinion that such action would be eminently proper. The chief executive should go down there with his organized army of policemen and abate the nuisance. The question was a serious one and required heroic measures. It should be handled without gloves.

Folland said the matter had once before been considered.

On motion of Horn it was referred to the mayor with power to act.

REDUCED ASSESSMENT.

A petition was received from 1112 property owners, asking that a reduction of 25 per cent. be made in the city assessment. The assessment, they claim, is that much higher than the fair cash value of the property. The lines they complain are hard and money scarce and the high tax a great burden. Laid on the table.

PAVING PETITIONS.

A petition signed by 110 names, representing 680 feet on Main and First and Second South streets, abutting the district to be paved, was read, asking that the paving contracts on said streets be awarded the Culmer-Jennings Company. Laid over until paving contract comes up.

A petition signed by 300 citizens was read, praying that the contract for paving Main and First and Second South streets be awarded to some of the home companies instead of the Barber Company, and that the home companies be instructed to employ citizens of Salt Lake, and that home asphaltum be used. Laid on the table until the paving question comes up.

G. E. Ellerbeck asked that he be reimbursed for damages done to his property on North State street by public grading. Committee on streets.

William Thompson asked for $500 damages on account of manure pile on his property. Committee on streets.

MORE EXECUTIVE VETOES.

Mayor Baskin sent in the following:

SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 13, 1892.

To C. E. Stanton, Esq., City Recorder:

Sir—I herewith return unapproved ordinances number 224, 225, 226 and 227, for the following reasons:

Section 11 of the act of the legislature relating to municipal charters, page 63 of statute of 1890, provides that the board of public works shall superintend such work and the erection of such improvements, except the city halls, market houses, jails or other public buildings, as may be ordered by the City Council.

This authority of the board applies as well to work on improvements done by workmen employed directly by the city, as to work on improvements let by contract. This authority can not be limited or taken away except by the body which grants it, to the board and any ordinance or other act of the city which attempts to do this is negatory and void. Each of the ordinances in question contains a clause to the effect that the construction of the sewer and the making of the improvements respectively authorized and directed in said ordinances, shall be under the direction and supervision of the superintendent of sewers. This duty being imposed by a statute of the Territory upon the board of public works it cannot be conferred by ordinance upon any other person. With the clauses conferring upon the superintendent of sewers the direction and supervision of the proposed improvements stricken out, these ordinances meet my approval.

Moran—I move that the communication be laid on the table until next meeting. Carried.

FROM THE BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS.

The board of public works reported favorably on the cancellation of special sidewalk taxes against Joslin and Park and Charles Crane. Adopted.

THE ANNEXATION SCHEME.

The city attorney sent in a favorable report of the proposed annexation scheme which was received and filed.

GARNISHMENT QUESTION.

The city also reported adversely on the garnishment resolution recently introduced by Councilman Rich. Adopted.

PROPERTY TRANSFER.

The same official reported favorably on the Brigham Young company's transfer of property for street purposes. Adopted.

ROAD TO MORGAN.

The city engineer submitted a report stating that it would cost from $4500 to $5000 to construct a wagon road up City Creek canyon as far as the city lands extend, a distance of about three miles. He also suggested that the purity of the city water supply be taken into consideration before the Council act on the matter. Laid on the table until later in the evening.

APPOINTMENTS CONFIRMED.

The committee on police reported favorably on the appointment by the Mayor of Patrolmen Estes, Hills and Walker; also the appointment by the same official of Chief Paul as city marshal. The appointments were confirmed. In the matter of the appointment of Mr. Davenport as Liberty Park policeman, the committee also reported favorably, with the exception of Mr. Folland, who had been informed that Mr. Davenport was a non-resident. Adopted.

HE DON'T WANT IT.

On request of Patrolman Caution his appointment was not confirmed. Adopted.

CROSS WALKS.

The committee on streets recommended that cross walks be repaved on East South Temple streets, where said thoroughfare connects with North State, B, C, D, E, F and G streets. Adopted.

GAS COMPANY FRANCHISE.

The committee on municipal law submitted two reports on the request of the Indiana Natural Gas & Pipe company. The majority report signed by Messrs. Looftbourrow, Horn and Hele, recommended that the franchise be granted. The minority report signed by Messrs. Hardy and Simondt, recommended that the franchise be denied until such time as the company had gas in commercial quantities. Both reports were laid on the table.

TO EMPLOY "LIBERAL" VOTERS.

The committee on streets recommended that sidewalks be constructed on both sides of East South Temple, First and Second South streets as far east as Twelfth. The estimates of the engineer accompanied the report. They were:

Brigham street—
Abutters' proportion.....	$6782 00
City's proportion.....	816 00
Total.....	$7598 00
First South street—
Abutters' proportion.....	$692 60
City's proportion.....	412 80
Total.....	$1105 40
Second South street—
Abutters' proportion.....	$2256 10
City's proportion.....	412 80
Total.....	$2668 90

Folland said he understood that property owners on East South Temple street were willing to have sidewalks constructed. But as to the First and Second South street that was simply a suggestion of the committee. It was an ominous move. He was not prepared to act favorably on the committee's recommendation.

Considerable discussion followed and that portion of the report referring to the first named street was adopted. The remainder was the cause of considerable discussion.

Wantland objected strenuously to the mutilation of his report. So did Lawson who said some people preferred to walk in the mud. It was more in harmony with their natures than cement sidewalks.

Horn also made a moonshine talk about the mud, dust, mosebackism, non-progression and a miscellaneous lot of synonymous questions.

Moran was not in sympathy with Wantland's scheme. The property owners should be consulted.

Folland raised the point that the unadopted portion of the report was out of order. On his motion the matter went over until miscellaneous business was reached.

SEWERAGE MATTERS.

The committee on sewerage reported as follows: That the Folland resolution relative to boiler and engine was being carried out; that sewer improvements and repairs were going on on Fifth West street; that the Hardy resolution with reference to the purchase of pipe was being complied with. Adopted.

THE MAYOR "ROASTED."

The committee on waterworks sent in the following on the water pipe purchasing question, which has been a bone of contention between the committee and the Mayor:

SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 13, 1892.
To the Honorable President and City Council, Salt Lake City:

Gentlemen—Your committee to whom was referred the communication of Superintendent Ryan relative to the purchase of 850 tons of 6-inch pipe for the extension of water mains, would report as follows:

Your committee had this matter before them some time in the latter part of July and fully investigated the same, saw the necessity of the purchase being made, and, to facilitate business, sent letters and telegrams to thirteen leading manufacturers and dealers in the United States, requesting bids from parties as follows:

D. Long.....	per ton $39 50
Howard Harrison.....	37 50
Detroit Pipe company.....	41 25
Adyston Pipe company.....	38 00
Utah Montana Machinery Co.....	43 50
Lake shore.....	40 75
Rhodes Bros.....	49 10
George M. Scott.....	No bid

The above prices were to be, for 6 inch standard pipe, 34 to the foot, each and every piece placed under hydraulic pressure, guaranteed, F. O. B. cars, Salt Lake City. The above prices will show that the Rhodes Brothers were $350 lower in their bid than the next lowest bidder, and $404.75 lower than the highest bidder.

These bids with all communications from the above parties were pinned to your committee's report and placed before the Council for their action on August 9th.

Through some misunderstanding, either relative to the powers of this Council, or to the power placed in the hands of your committee, it was not acted upon until September 6th, when the said report was adopted and forwarded to the mayor for his approval and with authority to purchase the pipe from the lowest bidder, which he positively declined to do, stating that the committee had pursued unusual and unauthorized methods in procuring the said bids without first asking his authority, also declining to sign for those bids as by so doing he would place his honor to perform a mere clerical act, he also stating that to a certain extent your committee had withheld from him his duty of inquiring into the validity or the reasonableness of the above contract.

We, your committee understand that said matters referred to the Mayor, either for his approval or rejection, give him full power to inquire into, and investigate the validity and proper expenditure, not requiring any resolution or motion of this council for him to act upon in each individual transaction; we take it that as a salaried officer he is hired for that and not to be the advocate or vanguard of the department by petty and frivolous excuses. The clerical act which his honor objects to, is what the law demands of him, after his proper and judicious judgment is used, for the welfare of the city government.

It would seem to be a misunderstanding in this matter as your committee believes that all business pertaining to the building up and the welfare of the city, first originates and emanates from this Council; to facilitate its workings, committees are formed to oversee the several departments of the city government, to see to its wants and requirements, for its successful operation, with powers to bring the matters to as near a consummation as possible, that it may then be referred to this council for its final action. This, your committee did, in connection with the requirements of the water department for the 850 tons of 6-inch pipe so that there would be no delay in the workings of the water department, knowing full well that the citizens who had petitioned for the extension of mains had already paid the amount into the hands of the assessor and collector for the purchase of said pipe.

To show you that we have not been misled as to the high prices placed on pipe, we herewith submit your report of pipe purchased in 1891 and 1892, showing to you conclusively that we have done far better than was done heretofore:

May 18, 1892, Harrison & Howard, 5-inch pipe.....	$39 00 per ton
June 17, 1891, Harrison & Howard, 4-inch pipe.....	37 75 "
June 16, 1891, Rhodes Bros., 12 & 6-inch pipe.....	37 85 "
September, 1891, Harrison & Howard, 6-inch pipe.....	37 75 "
October, 1891, Rhodes Bros., 12-inch pipe.....	36 40 "
November 9, 1891, Harrison & Howard, 4-inch pipe.....	4 84 "
December 15, 1891, Rhodes Bros., 6-inch pipe.....	42 25 "

In 1892 purchases were made as follows:

January, 1892, Harrison & Howard, 5-inch pipe.....	$38 00 per ton
January, 1892, Harrison & Howard, 4-inch pipe.....	35 01 "
April 1, 1892, Rhodes Bros., 3-inch pipe.....	35 00 "
July 4, 1892, Rhodes Bros., 8-inch pipe.....	81 85 "

In the same month (July) 16 and 18-inch pipe was bought at $2.17 per foot laid in the ground, or $33.65 per foot F. O. B. cars, Salt Lake City.

We would wish to call your attention to the report of the executive of this city, in which he says: "In the former purchase of pipe which was made by myself, in conjunction with the water works committee, the prices paid to Rhodes Bros. was much lower than the bid upon which I am now required to purchase. For the 585 tons of 16-inch pipe purchased on May 30th from Rhodes Bros., their bid per ton was $33.65, or $2.17 per foot laid in the ground; this included digging, trenching, laying, back filling, and everything pertaining to that work."

As this price is much lower than any pipe has been heretofore purchased at, during the years of 1891 and 1892, we, your committee, wish to lay before you the reason why such low prices were obtained for the above pipe: Nearly all amount of pipe that was purchased by this city at that time, was pipe that had been sold to the People's Water Works company of the city of Denver, who, we understood, had gone into bankruptcy and the pipe was in the hands of the receiver. The 16-inch pipe being very much sized and could not readily be disposed of in Denver, it was, figuratively speaking, a dead loss upon the hands of Rhodes Bros., the interest on the principal being a great item, the above firm did deliver this pipe in Salt Lake City at less than the original cost with freight added; also, allowed the city that would not pass the inspection of the superintendent of water works when it arrived here, should be cut off, thrown out, or culled and deducted. How many pieces were cut or thrown out, your committee is unable to state, but we believed that Rhodes Bros. allowed the city all amount of pipe that was needed, to the extra expense of the extra joints, filling and tamping. The price of the pipe, if bought and ordered direct (instead of as above), would have been from $35.00 to $40.00 per ton.

Your committee would also respectfully submit that at all times the extra charge at rate of $1.00 per ton more for small 6-inch pipe than the 10 or 16 or 18-inch, as the difference in the manufacturing of the article would amount to that much.

So far as the present bid was $36.50, we have nothing to say, but that we used the best judgment at our command for the best interest of the taxpayers of this city, as the above bids will easily show.

Relative to the farther matter of his honor that there would be a difference of $2,422.50 in the price under the present market, and the covert insinuations of the Mayor that this would be sufficient to arrest further action until this was explained, we can fully say that it is a matter too contemptible for your committee to answer; such a communication should never have emanated from the Executive of this city to cause the public press to believe that your committee was not honest and honorable in their transactions. We wish to do everything that is right in this and all transactions working for the welfare of our city and the constituents that we represent, and do not wish to take away any rights or prerogatives of the executive department, but as the gentleman has so positively stated that he declined, with emphasis to yield, we feel that this matter, in connection with others, as to the rights of the Council and the rights of its committees, and the rights of the executive should be at once defined if possible, so there will be no clash in the municipal government of our city.

We again recommend that the 850 tons of 6-inch iron pipe be purchased as quick as possible.

Respect fully submitted,

P. J. MORAN,
J. L. LAWSON,
H. F. EVANS,
E. E. RICH.

Moran—I move that the report be adopted.

Hesse moved to amend by referring the matter to a special committee with the Mayor associated.

Horn moved as a substitute that it be received and filed. Carried.

THE PAYING QUESTION.

The special committee on paving reported that the bids for the Main, First and Second South streets paving were all right, and the committee recommended that the whole matter be with petitions and protests referred back to the board of public works until Friday night. Adopted.

THE VETO MESSAGE.

The Mayor's veto of the sewer ordinance was then taken up.

Lawson—I am sorry that we have such a mayor as Mr. Baskin. He is like an iron or a steel beam. His reputation has been known for years. He is a hard biter and while he talks about non-progression he takes delight in blocking the wheels of improvement, public and otherwise. I regret that we cannot remould or recast him and rather than thwart or prevent sewer construction it was better to yield, even though right, to the mandates of a notorious autocrat.

Hardy—I take it that the mayor is right on this proposition. The city ordinances on this matter are in conformity with the Territorial statutes.

Moran—If the Council is wrong on this matter now it has been wrong for two years.

Horn (interrupting)—That is no reason why we should continue in error.

Karrick—I move that the ordinance in relation to the question be amended to conform to the Territorial statute.

The chair now ruled all of the motions out of order, and said the question now returned on the question of whether or not the ordinance should be passed over the mayor's veto.

Lawson—I am unalterably opposed to further postponement. If it is necessary to pass it over the mayor's veto, then let us do it.

Horn concurred with Lawson. He was opposed to readvertising.

Bell—I agree with Hardy and Lawson. Let us do right. We cannot break the "iron beam" or the gust of wind. (Laughter.) The motion to pass over the mayor's head was defeated on the following vote:

Noes—Beardsley, Bell, Evans, Folland, Hardy, Karrick, Loo burrow, Simondi,—8.

Ayes—Hesse, Horn, Lawson, Moran, Rich and Wantland,—8.

On motion of Karrick the ordinances were amended in accordance with the suggestion of the mayor.

Moran moved to adjourn.

Beardsley sprang to his feet in defense of the garbage ordinance saying that a custom had been established by the council to at least bring that matter up once every session. He thought this should be no exception.

The recorder then proceeded to read the sewer ordinances when Bell fancied that Moran was not listening, and he thought that when a member was so persistent he should be compelled to pay his attention.

This aroused all of the characteristic combativeness of the gentleman from the Fourth precinct, and he almost yelled, "I am listening sir, and with all of the ears I have got. I can recite the measure backwards, and that is more than any conceited colleague can." (Laughter.)

Considerable bombastic parliamentary talk was indulged in, and innumerable motions to adjourn put and defeated.

The Council then adjourned.

An adjourned session of the City Council was held Sept. 18th, President Loo burrow in the chair. The following councilmen were in attendance: Folland, Rich, Hardy, Karrick, Horn, Moran, Beardsley, Hesse, Lawson, Bell, Wantland, Simondi, Evans, Representatives of the contending paving companies were again in attendance.

WALKER STILL UNQUALIFIED.

Councilman Ewing's chair in the council chamber is still unoccupied, his successor, Mr. Walker, not having qualified. His failure to do so is attributed to the serious illness of his wife.

The Proceedings.

The minutes of Tuesday night's session were read, amended and approved, after which Hesse moved the appointment of a special committee to be associated with the Mayor to purchase 850 tons of water pipe.

Moran moved to lay the motion on the table. Carried.

MORAN'S METHOD.

Moran introduced a resolution providing that the City Council purchase 850 tons of 16-inch water pipe from Rhodes Bros. as per their bid of August 30th, at $36.50 per ton.

Wantland said the resolution showed bad faith on the part of someone. He wanted an explanation. It looked like ten votes had been secured to carry it over the Mayor's head.

Lawson said inasmuch as the Mayor did not want to perform the clerical labor the committee had decided to relieve the gentleman of what he was paid $2500 per year for.

Hesse—I call the gentleman to order. The Chair—State your point of order.

Hesse—Well, he is constantly abusing the Mayor. I think the chief executive of this city should be given some consideration.

The Chair—State your point of order, I again state, Mr. Hesse.

Hesse—That is my point of order.

Lawson—This gentleman has a peculiar understanding. He grasps blindly at everything. The people's money has been laying idle for some time and we should act at once.

Horn spoke in favor of the resolution.

Moran said he had introduced the resolution in good faith.

Rich—A good deal has been said in regard to this matter pro and con. And a good deal has been said that is not and never has been true. Some one has a splendid adaptability for tattling and carrying tales to the mayor and telling him that the committee was constantly ignoring him. That is not true. The committee has been ignored by the mayor. It is true that a great indifference has existed, but it is not the committee's fault. The committee has been honest. For one he did not propose to have insinuations cast against him or any of his acts. The committee had labored openly and above board at all times. It had not gone out three or four miles to gravel and grade streets for their individual benefit.

Hesse—If the gentleman means me, I would like to know it.

Rich—if he hat fits, put it on.

The Chair—Come, come, gentlemen; these personalities must cease.

The resolution was defeated.

THIS ONE CARRIES.

Moran then offered a resolution empowering the Mayor to purchase 850 tons of 6-inch water pipe, the same to be delivered within thirty days from time of order. Carried on the following vote:

Ayes—Bell, Evans, Hesse, Horn,

Karrick, Looftourow, Moran, Simondt, Westland.

Noes—Beardsley, Folland, Hardy, Lawson, Rich.

THE PAVING QUESTION.

The board of public works sent in the following communication in relation to the paving question:

SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 16, 1892.

Hon. President and City Council:

Gentlemen: In the matter of awarding the contract for paving Main, First and Second South streets, under bids opened by this board on the 29th day of August last, which was referred back to us for further consideration, we herewith return you all petitions and papers in connection therewith and beg to represent:

That an act of the legislature creating the board of public works clearly defines its duties, which are simple and easily understood. The law contains no provision prescribing the use of any material or the employment of any particular contractor upon the work. The duty of determining the same is imposed by law upon the City Council. The Council also has power, in conjunction with the Mayor, to appoint the members of this board and to remove them for cause as well as to enact all ordinances relating to the paving of streets, sidewalks, &c. It is also within its power to restrict the use of materials to home products and to award the work to local companies if such a course is by them deemed best. They also have the power to hear and grant petitions. The board possesses none of these powers but is restricted by law to advertising for and receiving bids, making specifications for the work, letting contracts and submitting the same for your approval or rejection.

In the case in question, the board has exercised all its lawful powers and performed all its duties and the result is that the bid of the Barber Asphaltum Paving company has been accepted by us and all other bids rejected, and we again recommend that the contract we have made be confirmed, believing, as we do, that our action is in the best interests of the property owner, who have voted to pay for the work.

The advertisement as published boldly invites all to participate and to now exclude anyone upon the grounds not indicated in the invitation to the bidders would reflect upon the reputation and honesty of our fair city and would be disreputable and dishonest.

Our reasons for rejecting the lowest bid are made to appear in the questions and answers which were asked by the board and answered by the bidder, and which are as follows, to-wit:

[Extract from minutes of board of public works.]

Q.—Mr. Griffin, have you ever done any kind of work?

A.—I have done almost all kinds of work; we are general contractors.

Q.—Have you ever done any work like this?

A.—Yes, I have done rock pavement but never did any asphaltum work. I have paved blocks quite extensively.

Q.—Where do you expect to get your asphaltum from?

A.—I offer three kinds here.

Q.—You say you have three kinds here. I think there is only one kind here.

A.—Yes, I have three kinds of samples, one of Utah and one of California.

Q.—What is the large slab?

A.—That is California.

Q.—Is that manufactured—was that disintegrated and then pressed?

A.—Yes sir, that is a sample of the manufactured form, not the sample but a sample.

Q.—Was that made from the refined asphaltum?

A.—From the refined asphaltum, yes sir.

Q.—Is that the material that the Stradman people used here?

A.—I think it is that same material, yes sir.

Q.—It comes from the same vicinity?

A.—Yes, it is from the same vicinity. Our bid is such that it is optional with the city engineer and the board of public works, what they want us to do.

Q.—What facilities have you, Mr. Griffin, for doing this work?

A.—Everything that is necessary, including one hundred odd head of mules, wagons, grader, for grading and hauling and all other things.

Q.—What facilities have you for treating asphaltum?

A.—The asphaltum plant is the same plant that probably you folks have noticed the Culmer Brothers have been using, and we are only men, Mr. Haines.

Q.—What is the capacity of it?

A.—Why, it is—in fact I don't know what the exact capacity of it is.

Q.—Well, approximately; is it the one they had on Richards street?

A.—Yes, sir; the same one that is up there. I will furnish you with that in full tomorrow, by receiving our man, Mr. Haines, early enough to take that into consideration. As I have here stated, I have not given much attention to the asphaltum portion of it.

Q.—That is the most important part.

A.—I will say further that our plant is set upon the ground. It is all here. Twenty-four hours' notice is sufficient to get it on the street.

Q.—To get it on the street?

A.—Yes, sir; that is, the portion that has got to go first; all that precedes the material.

Q.—Have you looked up the matter sufficiently to know that you can get your asphaltum?

A.—Yes, sir. If we have to obtain it from old sources, we can get it. Yes, sir.

Q.—Has this man of yours, Mr. Griffin, had any experience with California asphaltum?

A.—Yes, sir; that is his principal experience.

Q.—Has he ever laid any Trinidad asphaltum?

A.—I don't know. He has laid asphaltum in the east and has been recommended by California parties to us and his recommendation was forwarded by good responsible parties to us.

Q.—You think his experience has been principally with the California product?

A.—Yes, sir; that is all right.

Q.—You say that cake you sent here is manufactured?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—That is not the natural bluish-grey rock?

A.—No, sir; that is a manufactured form; I will say that it is a compressed form; it is not manufactured from any special formula; it is put up so as to show what it is when compressed.

Q.—Is it manufactured after the formula of the Stradman?

A.—Generally, yes sir.

Q.—Our experience with the Stradman has been very unsatisfactory?

A.—Well, while I brought that in as a sample, I did not bring it in as the only one—I brought it in as a sample of the stuff. As I said before, we let the persons buying the article suit themselves. We claim to be able to supply any form of it that is generally used. We are in the business because we are general contractors.

The above is taken from the record of this board and was taken down by our short hand reporter.

In conclusion we desire to submit that we are in favor of the use of home material, whenever consistent with the public good, and have and will at all times encourage it in public works. At the same time it is our opinion that the designation of home material to the exclusion of all others will be attended with some danger, inasmuch as a restriction of bidders or materials to a particular locality would leave the taxpayers at the mercy of a monopoly, although it might have the distinction of being a home company.

Awaiting your final action in the matter, we are,

Respectfully,

L. C. HAINES,

Chairman;

J. C. CONKLIN,

GEORGE M. DOWNEY,

SPENCER CLAWSON,

Board of Public Works.

Lawson, Evans, Moran, Folland and Rich spoke at length in favor of letting the contract to a home company, providing they could comply with all of the requirements.

Lawson said that some months ago they were elected to office. Their constituents wanted them to do their duty. For one, he was for Utah, first, last and all the time.

The Chair—The board of public works cannot let the contract without the consent of the City Council, neither can the City Council let any contract without it emanates from the board of public works.

Wantland said if the contract was rejected as contemplated in the motion made by Mr. Folland at the last session of the City Council, and which was still pending, no paving would be done this year. He moved to postpone further action until Tuesday night next. The proposition that confronted the council now was to pave or not to pave this fall. Eight blocks at least should be paved before winter. A campaign was coming on and there would be three members who would take particular delight in showing up the broken pledges of the "Liberal" party. The cry that there was a thousand men out of employment and a quarter of a million dollars in the treasury will be heralded abroad.

Moran—I object to the gentleman making political speeches.

Wantland—I am not making political speeches. As to what Mr. Lawson said about pleasing his constituents I want to reply that many of them are hard up and hungry. I know whereof I speak.

Moran—How many men are there idle in this city?

Wantland—More than you wish to give employment to.

Moran—I am opposed to giving this contract to the Barber Company. I want to call attention to Mr. Wantland's attention to his wonderful mathematical calculations. He says that one thousand men will be thrown out of employment for ninety days if this contract is not let tonight. Now one thousand men at $2 per day means $180,000. The contract calls for $140,000. The labor portion of it is estimated at $36,000 which would only employ two hundred men for sixty days. I tell you this Council is sinking lower and lower into insignificance every day.

Rich (with fine sarcasm)—"Salt Lake work for Salt Lake workmen." (Laughter.) There has been a good deal of galley talk about this matter.

Moran—The gentleman means me. I object to this galley talk business.

Rich—The question is between the three companies. The board of pub-lie works have done the best they can in the premier. The Barber Company will only bring in three per cent. of material and perhaps a dozen men all told. Remember gentlemen ninety-seven per cent. of Utah material and Utah workmen is all we can consistently ask.

Folland—I move to reject this contract on account of the many complications that have arisen. The contract cannot be carried out this fall.

Folland's motion carried on the following vote:

Aye—Evans, Folland, Hardy, Horn, Carrick, Lawson, Moran, Simpson—8.

Noes—Beardsley, Bell, Helsa, Leofbourn, Rich, Wantland—6.

WAIVER OF GARNISHMENT.

The city attorney sent in unsolicited an opinion on the resolution of Mr. Rich, providing that the city could waive its right of garnishment between itself and employees. Hoge held that the resolution was legal, but advised that it be not adopted and that the matter be left to himself and the Mayor.

Lawson—I move to adopt the resolution. The city attorney has given very liberal advice. It is generally very difficult to get an opinion from him, but in this case he volunteers his advice, which is not worth much any way. I would like to tell him that he had better not to give his advice until called upon.

Rich spoke in favor of his resolution. It would injure no honest man.

Wantland said he was in favor of the theory but not the letter of the resolution.

Leofbourn offered the following, which Rich accepted as a substitute for his resolution and moved its adoption:

Resolved, That in all cases where garnishments are sought to be laid upon lands in the hands of the city officer on whom such garnishment process is served be requested to at once report such attempted garnishment with all the facts in his possession bearing on the same to this Council for the determination of the Council as to whether the city will submit itself to such garnishment process.

Adopted.

THE GARBAGE ORDINANCE.

The new garbage ordinance came upon its final reading and caused the regulation discussion, after which it passed. The measure will go to the mayor, who, it is said, will veto it. It now stands:

A bill for an ordinance establishing garbage districts, providing receptacles for and the removal of garbage and ashes; for the protection of gutters and ditches; for the disposition of night-soil and manure, and for regulating scavenger service; also for the removal of all privy vaults and cesspools within Sewer District No. 1, and requiring all owners or agents to connect their premises with the sewer within said sewer district.
